
LIBRARY
OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

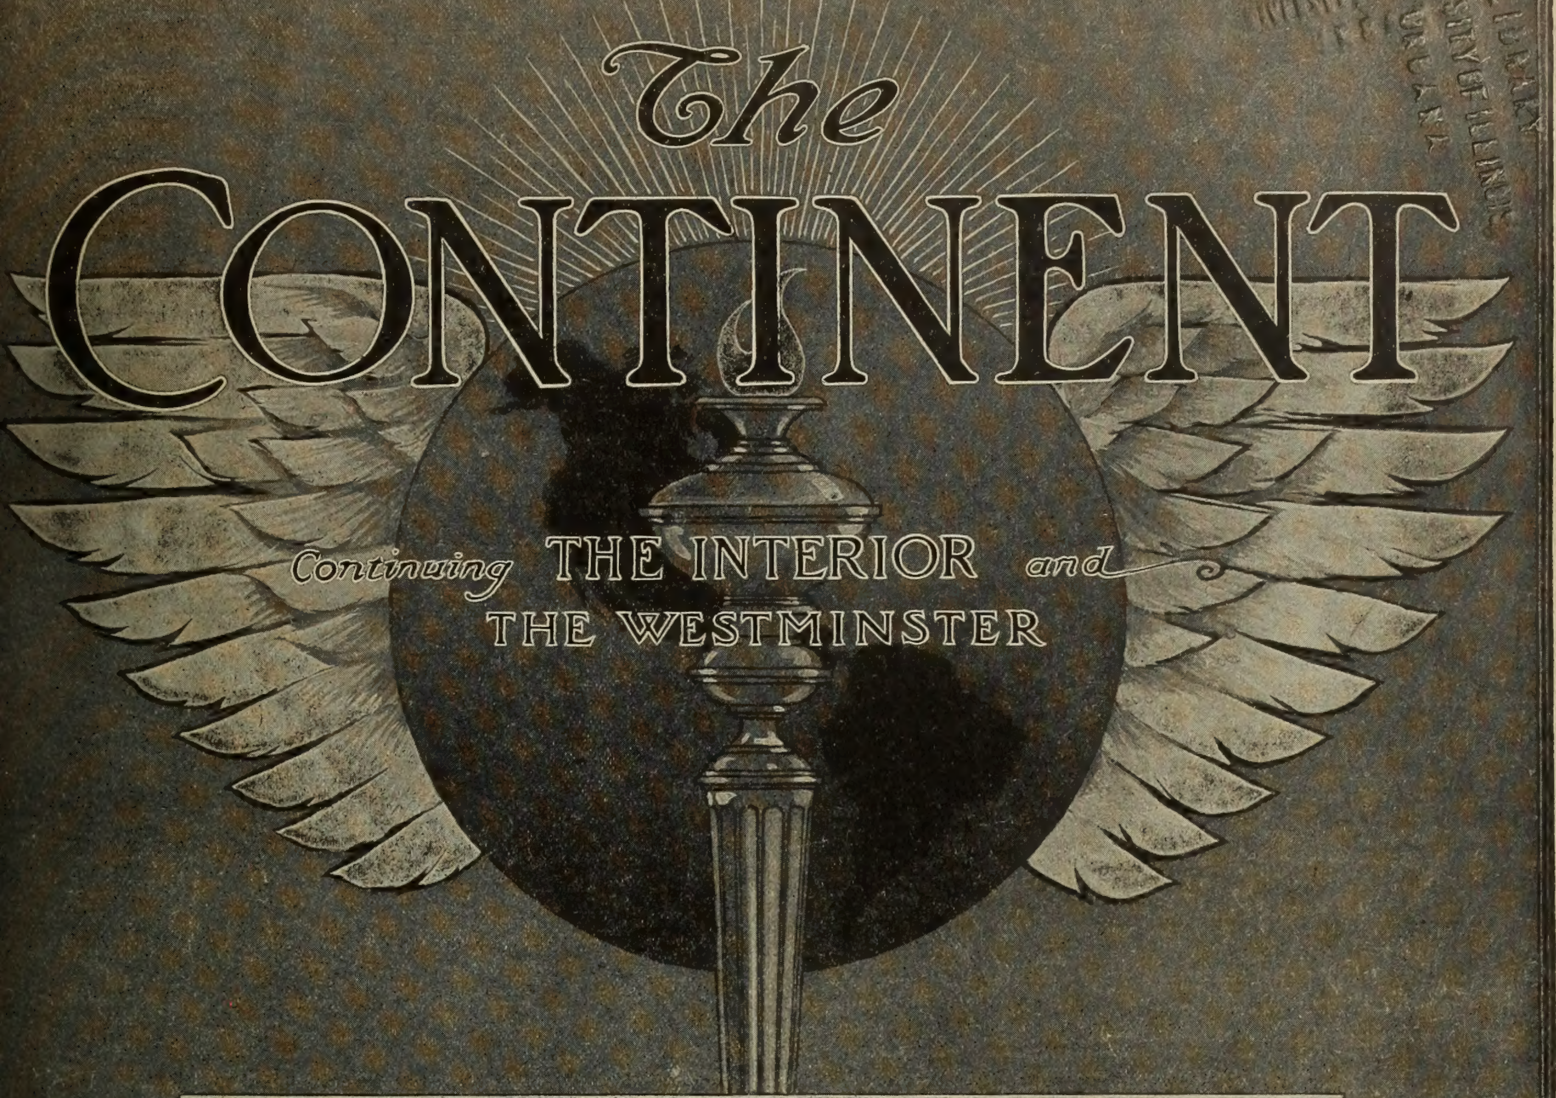
285.105
CO
v.44

LIBRARY UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS URBANA



The CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR and
THE WESTMINSTER

JANUARY 2, 1913

V.44 #32 Aug 7
#40 Oct 2
Bind Sluls

21912
108

Is Churchgoing Worth While?

WILLIAM P. MERRILL

"For God and Country"

EDITORIAL

New Year's Resolves That Count

G. A. JOHNSTON ROSS

Maud Younger of San Francisco—Harriett Weston
City Men Help in Rural Problems—Gerrit Verkuyl

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

BELLS, PEALS, CHIMES
Made only of best selected Copper and East India Tin. Well known for their full rich tone and durability. Write for catalogue.
E. W. VANDUZEN CO. Prop'r Buckeye Bell Foundry (Estab. 1837). 559 E. Second St., CINCINNATI, O.

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone
Far Sounding
Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

Church Chime Peal BELLS
Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

Pastors & Building Committees
Write Today For Our "Catalog B"
An Authoritative Guide on Church Seating. Gives valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc Please send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements.
Pews, Pulpit Furniture, S. S. Seating
American Seating Company
218 S. Wabash Avenue CHICAGO

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Faber Folding Organs
14 sizes. ARTS AND CRAFTS, Parlor Organs, 8 sizes. Prices $10.00 up. Write for Circulars. Geo. C. Ewart, Agt., Granville, O.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only

C105 Church F'rnit're	School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture	Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture	Office Desks D105

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat, or Acetylene Generator, $29,00. Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus. Get our latest catalog and terms.
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

WEDDING
INVITATIONS
ANNOUNCEMENTS
CALLING CARDS
FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

PIPE AND REED ORGANS
AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., PEKIN, ILL.

PRACTICAL and HOMILETICAL

THE PREACHER: HIS LIFE AND WORK: By Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.
The Yale Lectures on Preaching
Dr. Jowett stands for the power of prophecy in the modern ministry—prophecy in the sense of spiritual leadership by force of spiritual insight. Overflowing with visions and counsels which kindle both mind and heart to enthusiasm, the main travel-ways of thought and conduct are mapped out and the danger points are marked. 12mo, Net $1.25

EXPOSITORY PREACHING: PLANS AND METHODS
By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.
Broad in its appeal, extraordinarily apt in its unconscious but direct evangelism, this powerful argument for expository preaching is a searching examination of the comparative efficiency of the different preaching methods. 12mo, Net $1.00

THE ORDINARY MAN AND THE EXTRAORDINARY THING
By Harold Begbi
Author of "Twice-Born Men," "Souls in Action," etc., etc.
These narratives are true stories gathered from the lives of men. They are typical of the profound and extraordinary changes of soul which may be experienced by the ordinary man. Mr. Begbie has gone for his materials to that wonderful brotherhood, the Y. M. C. A. In the conversions here recorded, he reveals the romance and mystery which invariably result when the individual becomes keenly conscious of eternity. 12mo, Net $1.25

THE WOMAN OF TACT By Rev. W. Mackintosh Mackay, B.D
and Other Bible Types of Modern Women
Author of "The Man in the Street," etc.
A timely work in view of the rapid development of the question of woman's place in the economic world. Dr. Mackay draws his portraits from Bible types and applies the picture to present-day conditions. 12mo, Net $1.50

THE MASTER OF REPARTEE By Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, LL.D
and Other Preachments, Long and Short
A Volume of Pulpit Utterances in Four Parts: I. The Master of Repartee; II. Discussions of Hard Texts; III. For Various Occasions; IV. Brief Considerations of Weighty Matters. The secret of Dr. Brady's power as a preacher lies in his discussion of sacred subjects in a manner extremely human. 12mo, Net $1.25

EFFICIENT RELIGION By Rev. George Arthur Andrew
That Religion must express itself in action rather than in thought if it is to convince the world of its necessity, is the keynote of Mr. Andrews' volume. A valuable, practical piece of thinking, extremely up to date. 12mo, Net $1.00

THAT BOY OF YOURS: A Study of Responsibility By James S. Kirtle
A sympathetic study of boyhood, which gives parents and teachers a proper understanding of the motives and ways of thinking which are common to all boys. The power of religion in a young life is emphasized and advice given as to the use that can be made of it in shaping manhood. 12mo, Net $1.00

THE AFTERGLOW OF GOD By Rev. G. H. Morrison, M.A
Author of "Unlighted Lustre," "Floodtide," etc., etc.
In this new Volume Dr. Morrison returns to the work of his larger parish with all the vigor and freshness of his previous books. 12mo, Net $1.35

ABIDING HELP FOR THE CHANGING DAYS By Rev. G. H. Knigh
A book of true devotion by a writer who has brought comfort and cheer to many thousands of devout readers. It strengthens faith and courage, and gives security to the Christian heart amid the constant vicissitudes of life. 12mo, Net $1.25

THE ESSENTIALS OF CHRISTIAN BELIEF By Rev. David Fyffe, M.A
The purpose of this book is to state the vital elements of belief as these have attested themselves in modern experience. 12mo, Net $1.25

THE MARVELOUS PURCHASING POWER OF HALF A DOLLA
We have just issued a new catalogue of the "H. & S. Library of Standard Religious Authors." This Library carefully edited from the works of great leaders which have sold at prices ranging from $1.25 to $2.00. Now procurabl in this splendid library edition at 50 cents. The catalogue is gladly sent free upon request.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY, New York
Thirty-eight West Thirty-second Street
PUBLISHERS IN AMERICA FOR HODDER & STOUGHTON
H&S H&S H&S H&S H&S

Did You See Lincoln?

Perhaps you were a small boy held up on your father's shoulders to catch a glimpse of the great man who was speaking words that you afterward learned were making history. Perhaps you were one of the groups of soldiers who, passing through Washington, stood before the White House, to hear words of encouragement from the man who bore so vast a burden on his soul. Or possibly you saw him in a less serious moment, when his humor was given play.

We want to print, in Feburary, 300 words each from six readers who saw Lincoln—just what they saw, and where. For each of these paragraphs we will pay $3. You ought to put such a cherished memory on record. Why not send the note to us? It may be one of the six that will interest all our readers. January 25 is the very last day. The Continent, New York or Chicago or Philadelphia.

285.105
CO
v.44

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE MCCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
EVERETT SISSON, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE: THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1913

CONTENDING AGAINST REVOLUTION......... 5
EDITORIAL—
  Fifty Years of the Freedom of a Race.. 8
THE WORLD.......................... 6
RELIGIOUS WORLD—
  Week of Prayer Topics for 1913........ 7
SHOULD I GO TO CHURCH?...W. P. Merrill 10
A NEW YEAR ADJUSTMENT
  ....G. A. Johnston Ross 11
FINDING THE MISSIONARY HORSE
  ....John B. Donaldson 11
CITY LAYMEN AT WORK ON RURAL PROBLEM
  (with Portrait)..........Gerrit Verkuyl 12
MAUD YOUNGER: SAN FRANCISCO'S HELEN GOULD (with Portrait)...Harriett Weston 13
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter IX.—Continued..........Richard Sill Holmes 14
THE HOME COUNCIL—"If I Were in His Place——"................Ethel Colson 16
YOUNG AMERICA—A Visit to the Doll Doctor....................Frank R. Arnold 17
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL
  ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 18
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE.........E. A. Wicher 19
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE.......W. T. Ellis 19
MISSIONAY WORK....................... 20
NEW BOOKS—
  G. Stanley Hall on Modern Education... 21
  New Religious Works.................. 21
  Recent Fiction....................... 21
THE OPEN HEARTH—
  The Pulpit and Suffrage.............. 22
  Commends Colonel Maus's Statement... 22
  Would Leave Data to Individual....... 22
  Should Really Learn to Sing.......... 22
  Seconds Bryan for Moderator.......... 22
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS WORLD—Beginning 24
FINANCIAL SITUATION.................. 29
CALENDAR AND RECORD.................. 31

Around the Shop

One advantage Continent folks have—we mean those whose time is devoted to "making" the paper—is that wherever they go they are among friends. The subscription list of The Continent is a bluebook of "best people" to whom life is a matter of heart and conscience, not of shallow snobbishness. To them there is no more potent introduction than the magic words, "The Continent." Happy indeed are we in such a relationship.

—

It is when we meet face to face members of our family whom we have previously known by correspondenec only, or perhaps not even by name, that we hear of many ways in which the paper has borne its part in the Christian homes of America.

"One of my recollections dating back farthest," we are told, "is of the Sunday afternoons and weekday evenings when mother or father would read to the family from The Interior. I remember one story——"

And so on. In one way or another the growing lads or lasses came to feel that the paper was a proper part of the home life. Wherever they have gone into the busy life of mature years that memory has clung to them; and in hundreds of instances not only has the memory clung to them but they have clung to the paper through all the years.

—

Letters, too, tell us the same story. They come from judges, lawyers, bankers, merchants, manufacturers, farmers, salaried men, educators, women who are home makers and women who are successful in professional pursuits

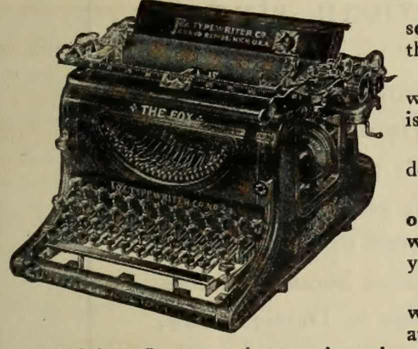
—

Thus far not one of these letters has come to us written on a penitentiary letterhead. The Continent is read in penitentiaries by grace of thoughtful givers, but it has not been called on to follow any Presbyterian there, unless he went as warden or chaplain.

WHY DON'T YOU BUY A FOX TYPEWRITER?

To Our Friends, the Ministers:

It is an established fact that the advertising pages of all high grade publications, such as The Continent, contain a vast amount of valuable information and advice concerning the selection of an article such as advertised.



In this heart to heart talk with Ministers I am going to try to forget that I have something to sell which I have spent the best of my life in perfecting, and look at this typewriter proposition from the Ministers' standpoint.

Every reader of The Continent belongs to one of two classes—the Minister who owns a typewriter or the Minister who does not. The first class is subdivided into two more classes—the Minister who has a really satisfactory typewriter and the Minister who has an unsatisfactory one.

If you belong to the class who have secured typewriters that are entirely satisfactory you are indeed to be congratulated, and the balance of this advertising talk will not interest you.

If you belong to either of the other classes you have probably wondered, after reading the extraordinary claims of superiority made by the various typewriter manufacturers in their advertising, just what you ought to do in order to get the greatest amount of typewriter value for your money—for you, of course, have definitely decided to some day, if not immediately, own a typewriter.

First of all do not be misled by the "something for nothing" advertisements. High grade typewriters cost a lot of money to build, and the manufacturers who offer you a so-called $100.00 typewriter at a low price should never be sent any money in advance. If offered a special proposition because you are a Minister I suggest that you investigate carefully why the offer was made—you may find that even a lower price is being made to others who are not Ministers. Write to some pastor in the home city of the advertiser and ascertain if that advertiser is in the habit of giving of his time and of his money for the support of his local church—if he is not the probabilities are that he belongs to the class mentioned above.

Fifteen years ago I commenced manufacturing the Fox Typewriter and I have manufactured it right here in Grand Rapids, Michigan, ever since. The first day I began selling typewriters I decided to let any regularly appointed Minister have one at a reduced price and on the easiest payment terms that I could afford—and I have never deviated from this policy and can see no reason for doing so in the future. More than this, too, I have for fifteen years sold my typewriters on the "Free Trial" plan—no money down—no obligation to buy. Use my typewriter ten days absolutely free, at my expense, in your own home, and then buy it or send it back as your judgment dictates. I have never knowingly allowed a single misleading statement concerning my typewriter to be published, and today they are used by thousands of Ministers in every civilized country. Even in the remotest corners of heathendom the Fox Typewriter has followed our Christian Bible and our Christian Religion and helped to make lighter the work of the Missionary.

My Sales Department will be glad to correspond with any Minister contemplating the purchase of a typewriter and will tell you about our special offer. At this writing we have a few typewriters that our salesmen have used on the road as samples—these I have asked to have offered to any Minister at less than half the regular selling price.

I will be pleased to hear personally from any Minister at any time.

W. R. FOX, President.

FOX TYPEWRITER COMPANY, 4912-4922 Front Avenue, GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Sign This Coupon Now ☞

Coupon from The Continent, 1-2-1913

NAME ....

ADDRESS.......................................

497818

Registered Trade Mark

Established Half a Century

ANNUAL SALE

At "The Linen Store"

Our Annual Sale means to experienced shoppers the opportunity to buy many of the choice treasures of our collection at exceptionally attractive prices.

Some idea of the variety of the goods may be gathered from the fact that in Table Linens alone there are 194 designs in this Sale. There is not an old or undesirable pattern in this lot.

The goods are offered at very substantial and bona fide reductions from our customary retail prices.

The Sale includes Table Cloths, Napkins, Towels, Blankets, Bed-spreads, Sheets, Pillow-cases, French and Domestic Lingerie, Corsets, Suits, Coats, Dresses, Waists, Ladies' Neckwear and Hosiery, all at reduced prices.

The Sale will continue throughout the entire month.

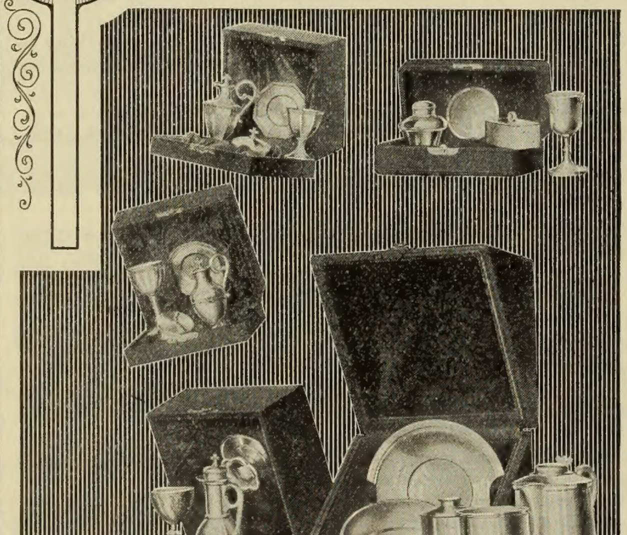
32-page booklet describing these goods in detail mailed free on request.

Mail orders receive our prompt attention.

James McCutcheon & Co.,

5th Avenue & 34th Street, N. Y.

Communion Sets



Pocket or Missionary Sets are of great convenience to clergymen. Those shown above are very compact. The various pieces fit one within another, taking up very little room. An appropriate Morocco Case is furnished with each set. These sets, together with the conventional kind in many artistic patterns, are illustrated and described in "Special Communion Catalogue A-80," a copy of which will be sent upon request. These sets are sold by leading dealers.

INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO., MERIDEN, CONN.
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.

Bulgarian soldier—American student

Nine years ago the Turks were engaged in another struggle with the hardy people in the Balkan hills. A young man who then helped repel the invaders of his Macedonian home town today is studying in Dubuque, Iowa. He intends to be a minister. With his ancestry and his American training he will be able to reach his countrymen in a peculiar way.

Dubuque German College and Seminary has many interesting students. It is a Prebyterian institution and doing an interesting work. More information will gladly be sent on request to President C. M. Steffens, D. D., Dubuque, Iowa.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 1 JANUARY 2, 1913 WHOLE No. 2223

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

Contending Against Revolution

"NO GOD, NO MASTER!" or—
"FOR GOD AND COUNTRY!"

No more serious problem in America passes over unanswered from the year just ended to the year just begun than the question which of these two conflicting mottoes shall come uppermost.

It was Lawrence, Massachusetts, which visualized the issue in this particular form. The first of these contrasted "slogans" was on the banners of a great parade marshaled in that city by the Industrial Workers of the World. The other was on the banners of the much greater demonstration mustered in favor of civic order.

But Lawrence is by no means the sole scene of the problem. The forces which pitted revolutionary agitation against stable government there are at large in other parts of the land, looking for other chances to make the same sort of trouble—and more.

The lines were drawn in 1912 in Lawrence; in 1913 the crisis may come anywhere else—or everywhere.

Patriotism ought to study Lawrence's experience as an immediate lesson for every city in the United States.

◆

Lawrence did not do well all though its turmoil, but in the autumn when the essential issue had to be defined to the public mind, it set a wise example.

The first strength of the position taken by its loyal citizenship was in upholding safety for persons and possessions, all and singly, rich or poor, as the primary requirement of civilization.

Undoubtedly there prevail in America many intrenched wrongs against which protest ought to be loud, continuous and long.

But there is nothing so wrong in this country as to justify or even excuse the destruction of lives or property as a means of cure. America still spells evolution and reform—not revolution yet.

Therefore the first thing to stand for in the United States, in face of any social, industrial or political complaint whatever, is this principle without compromise or exception:

Every man under protection of law must be secured against lawless harm to person, home or belongings before there is time or place for any other social consideration. Public and private safety first always!

◆

Again, Lawrence was wise when it coupled with the appeal to patriotism an outright challenge to men's inwrought faith in God.

"God and country" was just the word for Lawrence's situation. The agitators who boasted their intention to uproot the whole existing order in that town counted shrewdly when they called on their followers first to repudiate God. For they knew that men who trusted God would not make killing and burning revolutionists.

Therefore the firebrand leaders of the Industrial Workers of the World expelled God from their program the instant they set fell designs afloat, and proved anew that the atheism of a wicked purpose is the only atheism that has any vitality in the world.

But the voice of the conservative appeal brought God back—and for that time and place at least frustrated revolution.

Better still, the name and thought of God gave to Lawrence an effectual rallying center amid its welter of conflicting interests, its tumult of partisan hatred and its chaos of strange nationalities.

When the call went out to those who believed in God and in government as God's institution, all sorts of differences among the people of Lawrence gave way to that one persistent likeness which constitutes the real solidarity of the human race—its God-tendency.

For the sake of God and of such a country as God can own, the overwhelming multitude of Lawrence from all races and from all creeds and from all walks of life came to join the banner of law.

The lesson here is for the nation:

No democracy can persist anywhere without some vital tie to join in one its several elements. And the only tie which can possibly hold together the stupendous diversity of American citizenship is the tie of a common desire, surpassing all lesser differences of belief, to meet the expectations of the Governor of the world.

◆

Lawrence seized on the right remedies for its perilous situation. But has there been any clear sense of the responsibilities which these remedies impose on those taking advantage of their power?

If, for example, it is insisted that first of all every citizen must be made safe from evil deeds done to his hurt by those who hate him, then even those who are trying to hurt others must be themselves protected from all save legal punishment.

Lawrence forgot that when, to get rid of trouble-makers, it charged certain men with crime for which they were not responsible. Happily that mistake has been atoned for by just acquittal.

But still more important than this is the imperative duty of taking care, when all men are protected behind the law from illegal interference, that the law shall not permit them in that refuge to continue with impunity the oppression of their fellow men.

To stand for law incurs ineffaceable obligation to insure every citizen through the law complete redress for every wrong which he is forbidden to redress by violence beyond the law.

◆

A still more solemn reminder remains to be added:

If the name of God is invoked to unite the people for the safety of the nation, those who invoke it must be ready to receive in simple Christian brotherhood all who are thus drawn to unity with them, no matter how alien otherwise.

The atheistic blasphemy of these revolutionists would be totally vain among the immigrants, if the churches they knew in their homeland were not in spirit aristocratic churches—churches, that is, whose concern for law and order is mainly an anxiety to keep the common people from upsetting the privileges and comfort of the great and pious.

The God these European peasants have been asked to worship must have seemed to them a God interested only in maintaining a comfortable world for the upper classes.

But America cannot ask them to be patriotic in this country for God's sake unless it makes them know a different God. This aristocratic God is what they came here to escape.

A friendly God—a God who bends down to help the struggles of the poor and means that life shall be something abundant to every man who lives it right, even the humblest—that God introduced to the immigrant in America will make the immigrant the nation's right-hand stay.

But there is only one way for that introduction to be effected—through friendly Christians, showing this same divine friendliness.

The World

The Years 1812 and 1912, with a Look to 1913

The year just closed, like the corresponding one a century ago, witnessed some epoch-making events, for 1912, like 1812, was anything but colorless. A hundred years ago there was war between the United States and Great Britain, and war between Napoleon and Russia, later involving the whole of Europe in general turmoil. In Europe there was clash of emperors and kings battling for power, with little thought of the development of democracy; but all the time democracy was growing, just as it has grown, slowly and steadily, ever since the beginning of the Christian era. There were changes made in the map of Europe as the result of happenings in 1812, and there will be changes in the map of Europe as the result of wars in 1912. Turkey in Africa has been wiped out by the Turko-Italian conflict, and Turkey in Europe will be largely reduced and contracted as an outcome of the Turko-Balkan struggle. Best of all, in the war-swept region, the cross will be in the ascendant over the crescent and all the inhumanity, cruelty and barbarity for which the crescent stands.

Within the same twelvemonth the Chinese republic has finally emerged as a nation, fully accoutered and ready to take its rightful place in the world. Great Britain has set on foot some broad plans of social and governmental reform; France has, under an able premier, enjoyed domestic prosperity and gained ascendency in Morocco; Germany has continued her industrial conquests; Russia is as always pushing for more territory, but confronting restless subjects in Poland and other parts of the empire; Austria-Hungary is living on the edge of a volcano which may explode with the passing of the aged emperor, Francis Joseph.

On this side of the world Cuba has held its first unassisted presidential election, but Mexico is still in a state of anarchy, with no sign of improvement. Our own country has seen the launching of the Progressive movement in politics and the victory of a time-worn political party under a leader of a new type. Real democracy has advanced immeasurably during the last century and notably within the last year. Material prosperity such as seldom falls to the lot of any nation, accompanied by moral and intellectual alertness—these are some of the assets of 1912 with which the world goes forward to meet the liabilities of 1913.

* *

Thirty-Eight Held Guilty as Dynamiters

All but two of the alleged dynamite conspirators who have been on trial in Indianapolis were last Saturday found guilty of complicity in the McNamara dynamite plots, including the wrecking of the Los Angeles Times building over two years ago. Among those convicted, who now face long prison terms, are Frank M. Ryan, president of the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' Union; Herbert S. Hockin, secretary-treasurer of the union; John T. Butler, the first vice-president; seven members of the executive board, two former business agents and twenty-six others held to be accomplices and tools.

Thus ended one of the most notable trials ever held in this country. In number of defendants, their importance and the importance of the outcome, together with the far-reaching moral and educational effect, the proceedings have hardly been equaled outside of the Camorra hearings in Italy. Organized labor has received a lesson in law and order, and the fact has been brought home that individuals acting for an organization may not with impunity commit unlawful acts from which a normal man in his private capacity would shrink.

Following slowly after the Los Angeles explosion in 1910, by which twenty-one persons lost their lives, the federal authorities began considering prosecutions for the illegal transportation of explosives, and last February the federal grand jury indicted fifty-four union officials and members. Deaths, dismissals and one confession reduced the number to forty, who faced the jury of farmers and merchants in Judge Anderson's court in October. Ortie McManigal, confessed dynamiter, was brought from Los Angeles to testify against his former associates. The defense utterly failed to combat the hundreds of witnesses and the mass of evidence which the government prosecutors produced. It was shown that a warfare existed between the union and nonunion employers, and that picketing had passed into slugging and murderous assaults and then came the use of dynamite and nitroglycerin. Evidence obtained but not used in the trial of the McNamara brothers, who admitted the California outrage, was introduced at Indianapolis to trace the history of the dynamite plots which began in 1905 and continued until a hundred explosions had taken place, all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

By the convictions the iron workers' union was left with only two international officers out of jail. Detective William J. Burns, who assisted in gathering the evidence, declared that the trial showed that "no man can be above the law."

* *

Wilson Celebrates Birthday; Gives Views

The next President has been busy celebrating his 56th birthday at Staunton, Virginia. As Woodrow Wilson will be the first president Virginia has had since long before the civil war (though the eighth beginning with George Washington), the state made a great occasion of the anniversary last Saturday. Special attention has also been attracted to an article by Governor Wilson in the current World's Work, wherein he warns of perils in the present organization of the business of the country. He regards it as a system which aids the strong and established enterprises as against weaker undertakings or beginners. He specially objects to governmental favoritism, but he says there is no use denouncing "anybody or anything except human nature," and he believes society is ready for a radical reconstruction, amounting to a peaceful revolution.

In his address at Staunton the President-elect issued a warning that all business would be required to show service rendered before being permitted to take any reward to itself, summarizing in this significant sentence: "The men who serve will be the men who profit." In a casual reference to the Philippines, which nevertheless has attracted wide attention, he predicted the early independence of the islands.

* *

Women Attack the High Cost of Living

One of the most interesting activities of the American woman since she has gained political and economic freedom and a realizing sense of independence, is her practical effort to reduce the cost of living. The problem was definitely attacked by selling millions of eggs at a reasonable price—24 cents a dozen—in Philadelphia, Chicago and elsewhere. This is followed by a threat to deal with butter, fruit, vegetables, fish and other foodstuffs later. Philadelphia dealers hid their discomfiture by a report that the women had been imposed on by speculators, who unloaded quantities of cold storage eggs. Be that as it may, the result was to put the price below 24 cents, which means a good deal in December. The National Housewives' League in New York, the Clean Food Club in Chicago and the Housekeepers' League in Philadelphia may be the opening wedge of a system of rational, cooperative retailing which will help bridge the present wide gap between producer and consumer. It is also proposed to take advantage of the new parcels post by establishing registry bureaus in the principal cities to list farmers having produce to sell to consumers.

Meantime the Elgin Board of Trade, after seventeen years of fixing the price of butter, has dropped its price-fixing committee—alarmed by a federal suit against it and doubtless influenced by public opinion, just as in the case of the Chicago Butter and Egg Board. The price of butter has not, however, responded to the public declarations of the boards.

* *

Movement to Fight Price Maintenance

A legal action which will be watched with interest by hundreds of manufacturers of the country as well as by consumers anxious to fight the high cost of living all along the line was recently instituted in Detroit. The United States government has filed an action in equity directed against a toasted corn flake concern charged with fixing retail price of the product, creating a monopoly and preventing competition. Into the case also enters the patented carton used as a retail package. The principle of price maintenance is one which manufacturers who seek to push their good through national advertising campaigns cherish strongly as tending to stability in financial returns. The manufacturers of many commodities keep a uniform price by refusing to sell to those retailers who cut prices, and they depend on the force of their advertising to impel customers to call for particular brands.

* *

War on Graft Continues in New York

Pursuit of graft and grafters in and out of the police department is going steadily on in New York City, and under Prosecutor Whitman's persistent hammering victories are being won by the forces of civic decency. First came Lieutenant Becker and the "gun men," then City Chamberlain Hyde; now it is the turn of the bloodsuckers of "protected" vice. A policeman and two go-betweens were indicted last week on charges of extortion and bribery made by women, and strong hopes are entertained of identifying and punishing the men "higher up" who have profited by the astounding system of organized villainy lately brought to light. The nation's metropolis seems fortunate in this its time of misfortune to have a public prosecutor at once keen and courageous, who is not to be turned aside by the blank wall of indifference which he has encountered in the municipal administration. Police Commissioner Waldo defied the investigating committeemen under Alderman Curran, who turned to him for information. The commissioner himself, responding last Friday to a subpœna, took the stand, and after asserting that the investigation was started only "to create a sensation," consented to allow one of the committee's attorneys and an invesigator to look over the police records. But the police department is obviously out of harmony with the municipal legislators.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who a few years ago became definitely interested in social and civic betterment while serving as foreman of a grand jury, has given $20,000 to assist the aldermanic committee, with a promise of a further gift if needed. The contribution was made through the bureau of municipal research, to be used in paying for the services of expert investigators.

✣ ✣

Turkey Fails to Play a Conquered Role

Negotiations between the Turkish and Balkan representatives took an unpromising turn at the conference last Saturday, when Rechad Pasha presented a surprising series of proposals, apparently with the intention of causing a deadlock or an open break, which might bring on intervention or mediation by the great powers. If the powers were to intervene it would place the Turkish government in the attitude of yielding to the pressure of all Europe, and thus the present Ottoman administration might stand in a better light with the Moslem world than if it gave way before the Balkan delegates alone. The ambassadors of the triple alliance and the triple entente are to have another "conversation" this week and they may work out a settlement independently of the peace conference, which the belligerents will be compelled to accept.

Instead of partitioning Albania or making it an independent state, as has been talked of, the Turks proposed to retain their sovereignty there, only slightly lessened; Adrianople province they would continue under the direct administration of Turkey; Macedonia a principality under the suzerainty of the sultan, governed by a prince chosen by the Balkan allies but nominated by the sultan; the Ægean islands to remain Turkish and the status of Crete not to be determined by the conference. Premier Venezelos of Greece, Dr. Daneff of Bulgaria and others of the Balkan plenipotentiaries characterized the Ottoman suggestions as "astounding," "preposterous" and "a mockery." However, another sitting was appointed, with the expectation that new terms would be presented.

✣ ✣

Publicly Operated Street Railways in Toronto

Toronto, Ontario, one of the most important cities of Canada, inaugurated a system of public operation of street car lines ten days ago, which is locally referred to as "a notable event in civic history." Says The Toronto Globe: "After a trial of private operation extending over fifty years the people have come to the conclusion that the public operation of civic services is the only satisfactory method." Prediction is made that before the Toronto Railway franchise expires in 1921 the civic system will be thoroughly established in the outer circle, and the change from private to public ownership within the inner city limits will be made almost as a matter of routine. It is said that probably not 20 per cent of the electors could now be brought to the polls to oppose public operation.

In Canada control of steam railroads has been more prevalent than in the United States. The Intercolonial Railway, an important line, is owned and operated by the dominion.

✣ ✣

—Berlin will put into force some new police regulations next spring in addition to the many already in vogue, all designed to make the streets quieter and more orderly by day and night. Canes or umbrellas must not be swung; persons must not walk more than three abreast; shouting, singing and whistling are forbidden, and the doors and windows of houses and restaurants where music is being played must be kept closed. Nerve-shattering noises are to be reduced to the minimum.

Religious World

Week of Prayer Topics for 1913

The dates for the annual week of prayer appointed by the Evangelical Alliance run this year from Sunday, January 5, to Sunday, January 12. Contrary to the custom heretofore, Secretary Chamberlain does not seem to have suggested sermon topics for the second Sabbath, but the following program is proposed for texts of sermons on the first Sunday and for the topics of prayer meetings on the six weekdays following:

Sunday, January 5—"Where there is no vision the people perish" (Prov. 29:18); "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Esther 4:14); "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33); "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family . . . is named" (Eph. 3:14, 15).

Monday, January 6—"Thanksgiving and Humiliation."

Tuesday, January 7—"The Church Universal—the 'One Body' of Which Christ Is the Head."

Wednesday, January 8—"Nations and Their Rulers."

Thursday, January 9—"Foreign Missions—Praise and Prayer."

Friday, January 10—"Families, Educational Establishments and the Young."

Saturday, January 11—"Home Missions and the Jews."

✣ ✣

Southern Men Summoned to Memphis

All items of influence taken together, the men's conventions of the Southern Presbyterian Church have doubtless been the most successful church assemblages of that character since the idea of men's conventions became popular in religious work. The scene in the Chattanooga convention of last February, when Motte Martin called for volunteers for Africa and for money to send them to the field, appears to have been the most impressive result from a single speech ever known in a religious meeting in America. The statesmanship and earnestness of Charles A. Rowland and his colleagues on the executive committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Presbyterian Church are not excelled in any other American denomination at the present hour. These men have set a standard of efficiency and activity which should certainly provoke the men of other denominations to like good works.

On such accounts there is special interest in the announcement that Southern Presbyterian men are to hold another general convention in Memphis February 18-20. The preceding conventions of the men's movement in that church have been devoted to foreign missions, but the last General Assembly asked that the next of its gatherings should be devoted to problems of the home land—especially those problems falling under the heads of home missions and evangelism. The program for Memphis is therefore being made up along these lines with great breadth and variety. Thus far no speakers are announced, but the statement of main topics is put alluringly. The themes which it is proposed to discuss in the convention are Romanism; the negro question; the country church; immigration—its advantages and evils; federation; the Anglo-Saxons of the mountains; the source and supply of the ministry, and evangelism—pastoral and personal.

✣ ✣

Two Like Denominations Negotiating Union

It will be well remembered by those who follow the movements of Christian unification in this country that a few years since there was afoot what looked like a promising project for uniting the Congregational, United Brethren and Methodist Protestant denominations. After success seemed almost certain, difficulties arose which broke off the negotiations. But the many likenesses between the Methodist Protestant and United Brethren Churches have kept alive the feeling that these two bodies should at least be consolidated. The last General Conference of the United Brethren Church, meeting in 1909, appointed a commission to approach its sister denomination with a proposal for union, and the Methodist Protestants in General Conference last May responded cordially to this advance by naming a corresponding commission.

These two committees, holding a joint session recently in Columbus, Ohio, voted unanimously that, so far as they could see, the way was open to proceed toward union. They first considered a name for the consolidated church, and chose finally the title of "The United Protestant Church," and adjourned to March.

Editorial

Fifty Years of the Freedom of a Race

ONLY MATURE men can now recall that September day in 1862 when the emancipation proclamation was issued. In the preceding July President Lincoln had told his cabinet that he had determined on this step and could not ask their counsel about it. On their urging he delayed the proclamation until after Antietam. Then September 22 he issued it, saying: "I must do the best I can, and bear the responsibility of taking the course which I feel I ought to take." The proclamation became effective on January 1, 1863, fifty years ago. Its first effect was "to unite the South and divide the North." To this day there are two minds about the method and time of the emancipation. But it would be monstrous to suppose that there are two minds about the emancipation itself. However the discussion may go about the "negro problem," slavery is never discussed. The great, sad, splendid man whose pen kept the vow his heart had made to his Maker and declared the negro race free wrought a work which half a century has approved.

Of course the first and larger effect of the freeing of the black race was the fuller freeing of the white race. The familiar saying of a negro leader is true, that no man can hold another down except by staying down with him. No race can keep another in bondage without danger and injury to itself. The very feeling that there are whole races of men in such sense our inferiors that we may command them against their will puts us at wrong angle toward life and in the weaker ones of us will early work deterioration of character. So the largest profit of the emancipation proclamation was to the true freedom of the white people of America.

Naturally our minds turn now, however, to the race which has had its first fifty years of American freedom. There are heavy-hearted negroes who feel that the years have been a mockery. The freedom has been political, yet there have been limits of their political rights. The freedom has been economic, yet they have not been privileged to enter the same doors of opportunity as have the white race. The freedom has been mental, yet the opportunities of education have not been commensurate with the need, great as they have been. The freedom has been religious, and the churches have been dealing now lavishly, now dolingly with the souls of the race.

But this is as sure as any fact in history: Never did another race show such progress in fifty years as have the negroes under American freedom. The very odds have been made favorable. Numerically the rate of increase has been greatly lessened, yet in the past decade the increase was nearly 1,000,000. January 1, 1863, there were in the whole country only four and a half millions; there are now 10,000,000, though the death rate is still much higher than among the whites. This is easy to understand when it is remembered that the negroes are forced to live generally in the poorest parts of our cities, where sanitary conditions are of least concern, that the toil of parents often leaves the children with insufficient care, and that so many of the race are still ignorant of the commonest laws of health.

The economic gain cannot be fully expressed in figures, though these are encouraging. The negroes are going back to the farm. In the South while negro population has increased only 10 per cent, negro farms have increased 20 per cent. Nearly a million negroes own or rent farms for themselves, one-quarter of these being owners. Where they were slaves fifty years ago, they now own and cultivate over 15,000,000 acres of land, which, with the buildings on them, are worth almost $1,000,000,000. This is a solid foundation for racial development. "The king himself is served by the field." Every strong race has started at the soil and no race remains strong which leaves it too far or for a long time. Other industrial progress is familiar also. There is increasing hope as the race becomes master of itself physically.

The intellectual progress of the half century has been so marked that it is easily deceptive. Schools headed by whites or blacks are seen everywhere. Names famous from General Armstrong and Dr. Rendall down are coupled with a movement which is inspiring. Private enterprise has been most noticeable, specially in the great "funds" for negro education, but public provision is increasingly made. Sentiment has divided needlessly regarding the line which education should follow; higher education has been scouted in the interests of industrial and "practical" education. Manifestly adherents of both lines are right. If the race is to come to itself it must have its own intellectual leaders; they must be highly trained. For the great mass of the race at this time a simpler education with a practical turn is obviously the need.

The religious progress of the race has been the concern of the churches for more than this half century. Most of the denominations have had their separate agencies to provide for education in industry and also in morals and religion. Every Presbyterian ought to look with pride upon the results of the work of our own Board of Freedmen. It has been true that the religion of the negro is emotional and exerts but a moderate influence on his morality, but it is decreasingly true. It has been the task of the church to give substance to the emotional faith of the negro race without robbing it of its warmth and earnestness.

The past half century challenges us to a deep and abiding concern with the future of a race whose advance increases the complication of adjustment of racial relations. As the negro race finds itself it grows increasingly important that both races take toward each other the Christian attitude of sympathy and cooperation.

"Vocation Day" as a Movable Feast

The pressure on the church for "days" to be celebrated in the interest of religious and moral concerns threatens to burst the calendar, and presses hard, too, on the patience of pastors and church officers who frequently, for local reasons, want to do something very decidedly different on the day when a big board or society is pounding at the door and demanding right of way. In contrast with all this, the Board of Education in Philadelphia has hit on a happy expedient that will undoubtedly get entrance for its idea in a good many places where more dictatorial applicants are shut out.

The Board of Education wants a "day," too, but its modest petition does not stipulate any time to which the local church must conform. "Have it any time you please," says the courteous Board of Education; "only please do have it." And this gentle generosity will no doubt persuade most of the congregations in the board's constituency, for the idea is an excellent and appealing one. "Vocation Day" is what Secretary Cochran and his colleagues propose, and their thought of using a whole Sunday to put up to the young people of a congregation the solemnity of choosing a life work in the fear of God has an urge about it to which certainly thoughtful Christian leaders cannot fail to respond.

Of course the Board of Education expects more young ministers to be produced from an observance of this kind, but that after all is only secondary, as the board itself knows, to the much larger effect of making all young people realize that a Christian boy or girl ought not to enter upon any occupation or course of life without a sense of the summons of the Master to service therein. By all means let there be at least an annual "Vocation Day" in every Presbyterian church.

—The postal clerks and letter carriers who regard the Sunday closing law for city post offices as about the biggest boon that Congress ever conferred on them are worried to discover, as they say they know by unmistakable evidence, that the United Commercial Travelers have set up a scheme to get the law repealed. The plea on the part of the traveling men is that they often are dependent on Sunday mail to learn from their home offices where they are to go on Monday. But the post office employees point out that there is an arrangement in force now by which a man temporarily in town over Sunday can get his mail that day if he actually needs it, and since this much consideration has already been shown to "men on the road," the clerks and letter carriers consider it a gratuitous piece of "butting in" for the commercial travelers to start an effort for the repeal of the whole law. Certainly if the traveling men really mean to practice the golden rule, they, with their Sunday rest almost invariably assured to them, ought to bethink themselves of what one Christian letter carrier writes: "Those who don't have to work on the Sabbath do not know what a burden it places on those who do." The postal employees fought hard for this Sunday rest, and are now enjoying it without any real inconvenience to any business interest; and disinterested people who love a fair deal ought to stand up straight with them in defense of their rights in this particular. It would be wise for alert citizens to keep an eye on Congress to see that no repeal law is put across "unbeknownst."

—It is pleasant news to report that Dr. E. B. Sanford, corresponding secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, is rapidly recovering from the severe operation for which he was carried away to the Presbyterian hospital in New York City at the time when he meant to start for Chicago to attend the council's quadrennial sessions there. The good doctor will soon be at liberty again for the goings and comings which his active spirit prompts; but at his age of 70 years they will not again be such strenuous goings and comings as have been habitual to him heretofore. But Dr. Sanford should, and doubtless will be, content to crown with the old man's function of counsel a life which has been so plentifully filled with action in its earlier years. As The Continent has frequently said before, Dr. Sanford will never be forgotten in American church history. The structure of federal unity among the evangelical denominations of the United States is doubtless destined to be built by younger men much higher than Dr. Sanford has been able to rear it, but no building by Secretary Macfarland or any other later successor will change the memorable fact that Dr. Sanford laid the foundations. At a time when other conspicuous church leaders were busy with denominational affairs Dr. Sanford made it his business to insist and keep insisting on the common faith and relations which make all churches truly one church. And the way that success has met his ideal in the providential outworkings of things certainly proves that he was a God-appointed man for this task.

—The subcommittee named by the General Assembly's special committee on the subject to propose revisions of the graded lessons consists of Dr. Marcus A. Brownson of Philadelphia, Dr. William R. Taylor of Rochester, Dr. Robert S. Inglis of Newark, Vice-Moderator James Yereance of New York and Dr. George W. Bailey of Philadelphia. Observers to whom these names suggest personality will recognize that this committee is admirably fair and well balanced, representing both liberal and conservative viewpoints, and also wide knowledge and experience of Sunday school teaching. Certainly from the deliberations of such a committee there is strong hope of results which will satisfy everybody broad enough to value the admixture of varying minds and temperaments in the work of the church of Jesus Christ. Through misunderstanding the statement has been circulated that the committee directed the Board of Publication to recall immediately from sale the intermediate and senior graded helps. The fact is that the action of the committee expressly provides for the sale of those two grades to continue along with the other three until the last of next September, which, of course, allows the General Assembly to pass on the question before the lessons are discontinued. All the change thus far is that the board at the committee's request has ceased to advertise the two upper grades.

—The style in which Tom Lawson has been going after stock gambling in Everybody's Magazine is fearsome for atrocious rhetoric and for astonishing notions of political economy. But none the less, he is getting at something in which righteous American sentiment must be in accord with him. Betting on which horse can run the fastest has already been stamped as disreputable in this country, and betting on which card the other fellow holds in his hand is rapidly coming under the same ban. But betting on whether a speculative stock is going up or going down is every whit as demoralizing to individual character and sound business habits, and it ought to be tabooed for the very same reasons that have long since tabooed gambling in forms more gross and more paltry.

—The Presbyterian Banner warmly commends the example of four congregations in a Missouri town who have joined in an arrangement to work and worship together. The Banner says: "Each church will retain its ecclesiastical existence, be connected with its own church organization and courts, and will retain all its denominational rights unhampered, as will also the minister." This is all very well and good in The Banner's opinion, and yet at the very same time it is opposing the adoption in the Presbyterian Church of a law meant to encourage this very sort of thing. What is the answer? Why is The Banner contradicting itself in this fashion?

—People who magnify the mistakes and shortcomings of American labor unions may at least take to themselves the comforting reflection that the labor movement in America is vastly more ethical than it is in Great Britain. A strike on an English railway has just been fought and won on the declared principle of maintaining for the engineers "the right to get drunk." Such a labor fight would be impossible in the United States, and Americans ought to give thanks that this is so.

—There is a wholesome, cheerful, optimistic young Presbyterian preacher doing pastoral work in the little "upstate" town of Kirkland, New York, whose example ought to cure the blues of the dourest and sourest "grouch" that ever was. Clarence B. Post is his name, and though he preaches very excellent sermons, indeed, by word of mouth, he is preaching a better sermon, wherever he goes about his parish, by his buoyant superiority to what others would call dire ill fortune. For Mr. Post's particular chance to preach by his manner of living comes to him through the settling down of total darkness over his eyes. His sight was poor from boyhood, but he managed to complete successfully a college course at Clinton and a seminary course at Auburn before "his light was spent," as Milton phrased it. Of course this affliction has hampered him; parishes to which his talents would be otherwise equal are not apt to want a blind pastor; but neither that nor any other limitation can force the young man to complain. He still walks his darkened way steadfast to the faith that the things for which God wants his service must be things that a blind man can do. In that faith he ministers to his rural parish, whose loyal people find their pastor all the dearer to them because like his Master "in all their afflictions he is afflicted." The whole circumstance of Mr. Post's situation is much like that of the late Dr. George Matheson of Scotland, and he promises to honor the grace of his Lord as highly as Dr. Matheson did.

—Brotherhoods in the churches are often condemned scornfully as being of no account except to get men together for banquets. But they would well justify themselves at that if all the banquets they gave had anything like the effect of the remarkable public dinner held in Dubuque on the occasion of dedicating the Severance dormitory in connection with the German Theological Seminary in that city. President Steffens brought together in the gathering practically all of the influential men of his town, and the addresses by Secretary Halsey of the Foreign Board and others went so straight home that three diners at the table were influenced deeply enough to induce them to join the church immediately afterwards. Generous Mr. Severance was not counting on this kind of effect when he gave the dormitory to Dubuque, but doubtless he would regard its result as worth the whole price of the building.

—At a recent meeting of the joint committee on arrangements for the quadruplex Presbyterian rally at Atlanta next May, Dr. William H. Roberts was authorized to invite Dr. Woodrow Wilson, who will then be president of the United States, to attend. Dr. Wilson has replied that he must postpone his answer until he knows better what his "liberty will be in May next." But he adds: "You may be sure the invitation makes a strong appeal to me." The President-elect says further that he is "deeply interested in the meeting and delighted that it is to have such a character."

—Collier's Weekly remarks anent the prohibition vote in West Virginia that the liquor people themselves furnish stronger arguments for the amendment that all the reformers and evangelists. The Weekly says: "In many of the counties of the state the liquor interests have done more to corrupt local politics and politicians than all other causes combined." Come to think of it, how many counties in any of the states does Collier's think it could find where that same thing is not true?

—President Taft will have the Utah electoral vote when the returns of the electoral college are made up. But he is not going to need to stand the shame of being voted for by a polygamist. E. D. Woolley, who was on the Taft ticket in Utah, resigned and made way for a less objectionable person when it was pointed out that his name was to be found in the official list of polygamists submitted by the Mormon Church at the time of the Smoot investigation.

—As The Continent remarked some weeks ago, The American Friend of Philadelphia is to be taken over and published as an official organ by the new Quaker Publication Board. It will be issued from Richmond, Indiana, instead of from Philadelphia, and its editor will be S. E. Nicholson, who had been prominently connected for many years with the National Anti-Saloon League.

—The Stewart brothers of Los Angeles, who are the "Two Christian Laymen" that publish the widely distributed series of pamphlets entitled "The Fundamentals," have put more than $125,000 into the work and circulated well over 10,000,000 copies of the nine volumes in the series which have thus far appeared. Rev. Louis Meyer is now serving as editor of the series.

Jots and Tittles

—If the Bible is true as a whole, it must be equally so in part. For this reason the preacher who feels called upon first to prove his text might as well look for his subjects in some other book.

—Law never changes one's character. It is at its best only a wise provision by which many a rascal is made to appear honest.

—The bread of life is essential to the strength of a church. No amount of oyster suppers can take its place.

—No one ever backslides in going down hill.

—The wedding garment may not have been a dress suit.

BY WILLIAM PIERSON MERRILL

Should I Go to Church

A RECENT NUMBER of one of our best monthlies aroused large interest by a discussion of the question, "Should Smith go to church?" Smith, of course, meant "Everyman," the average man. A good many seem to share the opinion of the popular novelist who wrote the article that, as things are, it is hardly worth Smith's while to go to church—that he does not get any good commensurate with the cost of churchgoing.

Is there then a real value in attendance at public worship? It may be well to look at some of the positive and definite advantages it offers. Let us lay aside all question of duty, and, so far as we can, all religious beliefs and doctrines that would enforce our attendance.

Beginning with the most obvious and outward of the advantages of churchgoing, how many of us appreciate the cultural value of attendance on worship? Education has been well defined as the bringing to bear upon us of the accumulated wisdom of the past. Where else does the sacred and powerful past press upon us as in the services of the church? Grant that the prayers and the sermon are often ineffective; yet you cannot attend the worship of the church without being brought into contact with two wonderful collections of the expressed thought and feeling of man—the Bible and the hymnal. They are full storehouses of noble aspiration and pure expression.

When all George Matheson's sermons and books of devotion shall have been laid aside and forgotten, the souls of men and women will still be thrilled by his matchless hymn, "O Love that wilt not let me go." Exquisite as is the style of Newman's prose, it will not live as will "Lead, Kindly Light." You have fellowship with great souls when you open the hymn book.

Beyond the beauty and power of the hymns, what an educational value is in the music of the church. Just because music "breaks through language and escapes," it has a value for us where words fail. Sidney Lanier defines music as "love in search of a word." We, children of an age that has begun to realize the vastness and complexity of life, the impossibility of reducing it all to a system, surely need no argument to show us the value of music, to comfort the heart, challenge the will, inflame the emotions and cleanse the soul by stirring its sluggish current into a deeper and richer flow.

And it is in the church that we get music as its best. In the simplest worthy setting of hymn or anthem there is the same essential grace of form that charms us in symphony or sonata. And music, like manhood, is greatest when humbly devoting itself to serve truth and goodness.

Bible Reading an Education from the Pulpits

Greater even in cultural value than hymns and tunes is the Bible, always read in public worship. There is a wealth of testimony—so well known that it needs no repetition—to the educational value of the English Bible. Charles Dudley Warner was only giving expression to the thought of many of the best writers when he said that the Bible is the one book of which no man who wants to be intelligent can afford to be ignorant. Where else than in church do you come into touch with that great book? It is not read in our schools, or brought into play where men and women meet in social intercourse.

Of course you may say, "I can read the Bible for myself." So you can; but do you? Most of us need external helps for any steady study. For most of us the reading of the Bible at the services of the church is the chief if not the only contact we have with this great book, which lies at the foundation of our language, our literature, our social and political institutions, no less than of our religion.

Thus, through the common worship of the church there is brought to bear upon us the power of the great and sacred past. It is no less an authority than Huxley who says that the Bible is of unique value to us in that, as no other book, it gives the individual a sense of being a link in a great chain, of standing between two eternities, with power to use or abuse the great past, and to help or hinder the great future.

But great as is the cultural value of churchgoing, it is only its most obvious worth. It is worth your while to frequent the church because it is the best regular and definite expression of community life and feeling.

All of us tend to live too much as individuals, or as members of a class. No one is living wholesomely who is not conscious of himself as part of a community. Now what is there better than the church, indeed what is there except the church, to express that common life? Every church is meant to be a house of prayer for all people, a center for the common life, a place where ordinary distinctions fade in the one fact of neighborliness, in the consciousness of like nature, needs and hopes.

It is easy, of course, to accuse the church of carrying into its very services the distinctions, the pride of wealth and place, that mar and hinder brotherhood outside the church. God only knows how painfully true that accusation is in some cases. Yet I dare assert that the church knows her ideal to be that of a common ground for all people and that, on the whole, she is true to the ideal. At least this is sure—no other institution so stands for the community life as does the church. The stores minister to the individual. The clubs are by nature exclusive. The libraries do not unite the people in common expression of life. The schools are for the children. But here is the church, opening its doors to all, saying, "Come, meet together in recognition of common needs and ideals." And wherever the church is separative, exclusive, dominated by the spirit of caste or theological bias, it is a traitor to its history, its ideal and its Lord.

Upon any sensitive, thoughtful man or woman the church must powerfully impress not only that his life is rooted in the past but that his life is rooted in the common life. The New England fathers called their churches "meeting houses"; and, homely as the word is, there is a splendid strength in it. It is what the church should be, what the true church is, a meeting house, where things that divide fade from sight and the things that consolidate humanity are seen in their greatness.

Souls Who Sense Human Brotherhood in God's House

Someone expressed to Ralph Waldo Emerson surprise that he so faithfully attended the little church in Concord, where there was little to minister to his great mind. He replied very simply that he valued the church service as an expression of the community sense and felt it worth while to attend that he might share in that common life of the neighborhood. Jane Addams has stated the same motive quite as strongly and simply in telling how and why she became a church member. "What was I," she asks, "with my dreams of universal brotherhood, to withhold my fellowship from the one institution which, with all its faults, has always upheld that brotherhood as its ideal?"

This also is an advantage—though classed by some as an objection—that he who attends church regularly is kept in touch with much of the noblest and most worthy work in the world. It is true that appeals for personal service and for contributions of money Sunday after Sunday grow wearisome. Yet do you not see, in the fact that the first tendency of need is to turn to the church, a mighty tribute to the truth that the church is in reality the strongest practical expression of the brotherly heart? Is it not worth one's while to know of the needs that exist, and of the efforts making to relieve them? These needs are real. People are hungry and homeless, and ignorant and vicious. It is a solemn but glorious privilege to have some place where you cannot hide from these conditions, but must face them squarely and meet the fact of personal responsibility which they bring to every honest man.

We must pass through a host of elements that deserve recognition in the worth of churchgoing, and come to the chief of them all—the fact that churchgoing renews and refreshes the secret springs of your true personal life.

Worship Yields Strength for the Inner Life

Your greatest problem and task is to keep yourself a true man, just, kind, humble, loyal to God and man. It is the supreme end of public worship to help you in that great endeavor to be right. It fails, very badly sometimes; yet on the whole there is nothing else you can find that will so steadily and really keep alive the true life within you, as will the worship of the church. How often, at a crisis, Jesus was sustained by some memory of a word heard at the simple synagogue services of his youth! However you phrase your faith, whether in the definite positions of a Christian creed, or more vaguely, you know that your soul needs contact with what we call God. The world shouts at us and bustles about us every day, till we forget the reality of unseen things and the cheapness of this glare and rattle of the world. We need some time and place to remind us regularly that the unseen things are eternal and real.

Every one of us needs to draw near to God in the silence of his own private life. But there is an added value when we meet with others to worship. Our faith is strengthened by contact with their faith; God means more to us for meaning something to them. Is not that what Jesus meant when he said he would be in peculiar power where two or three met in his name?

That man expressed a great truth who said, "The function of religion is to give zest to life." In the rush of work, in the grind of routine, faith weakens, hope languishes, love grows cold and God seems far away. Then comes a blessed day, the function of which is to give zest to life. By hymn and psalm and sacred lesson and prayer and earnest word it draws us away from the loud and bulky presence of things, and makes us see the eternal and hear the "still, small voice." And faith revives, hope springs up afresh and love puts on her beautiful garments.

"Strength and beauty are in thy sanctuary," said the old singer. That is what we need, to see the beauty of God and to feel his strength throughout our life. Weakened and defiled as our common worship often is by human imperfection and selfishness, you can find in the worship of God's church, as nowhere else, the strength and beauty your soul craves. God does manifest himself with peculiar grace to those who seek him in the sanctuary. They go from his house rejoicing in the beauty and strong in the strength which ever await those who worship him in spirit and in truth.

A New Year Adjustment

BY G. A. JOHNSTON ROSS

WE ARE NEAR enough to New Year's Day to be within the zone of its peculiar stimulus to good resolves; and it may be worth while to try to help our memories by one more grouping of the resolves that matter most.

Bishop Westcott reminds us that for us there are three final realities—self, the world, God. What should be our attitude to these?

1. SELF. Jesus said we should deny ourselves. What does he mean? Self-denial is surely not harsh self-starvation; self-denial is the opposite of self-assertion, of self-consciousness. It was finely said of the late Dr. Percy Bunting, "He wasted no energy in self-assertion." To the mind untaught by experience it seems as if self-assertion were the strongest weapon with which a man may cleave a passage for himself in this modern world; it is not so. Success lies in absorption in great causes; in getting the wind of thought to blow away from self to interests outside of one's self. I have noticed that the men whose thought has thus been habitually driven off from self are not only unhampered in their work by vanity but also are free from a paralyzing self-depreciation, from the exaggerated modesty that is akin to cowardice. Let us get away this year even from self-judgment—he that judgeth us is the Lord.

2. THE WORLD. Roughly our world has two great elements, which confront our moral natures in two different ways—there is, first, the world of our fellow men, and second, the world of animals and things; what we call nature.

Now about our fellow men, from our nearest and dearest out to the circumference of humanity, I think the most important fact we have to remember is that we are here not to destroy but to fulfill; our gifts are meant not for breaking but building; not for destruction but for edification. In our homes we are to be builders of character, of the moral unity of the home; among our mates we are to stand for brotherhood and the cooperations of good will; in our view of races and other nations, of creeds and churches, of classes and interests, we should be guided by the idea of construction. I do not mean that we should lose sight of moral distinctions—not a bit—but that nothing that is negative, critical, divisive, denunciatory, destructive, should in itself satisfy us, and that our eyes should be upon ideals that are positive, affirmative, unifying. St. Ignatius called himself "a man knit together for unity," as though every muscle were tense for the work of building into harmony the broken notes of God's discordant world. Shall we this year be builders and helpers rather than critics of men?

And what about our relation to nature? Have we not left this too much out of our religion and our New Year's resolves—the whole subject of the morality of our handling and use of things—of animals, fabrics, nature's resources? Each of us has to handle things in order to earn his daily bread. Do we do this carefully, without waste; tenderly, without cruelty; honestly, without graft; holily, without immoral design—because the things we handle are not ours but God's? Come, let us this year traffic in the things about us as in God's world, and the very stuff we touch will be as the material of a holy sacrament.

3. GOD. "If a man can only believe in God," said Marcus Dods, "I cannot see what more he needs." "If a man can only believe!" How is it done—what does it involve? To begin with, realizing freshly that if there be a God he is there before we pray, or work, or think, there in all that is of worth to us, we do not create him nor create moods in him. Could we begin each morning by an "act of faith"—a resolute recalling of this simple fact that God is before we pray, 'waiting to be gracious'—the color of our days would be rosier, and our step more buoyant and light. Then, surely, upon this would follow intrustment of ourselves to God—that means not merely asking him to take care of us but subscribing without a word to his judgment of us, putting all our future into his hands, allying ourselves with what we believe to be his designs and consciously running our lives in under the current of his. And this again would mean determining to see him at work—such patient work!—in the world today. It is actually said that he loves the world! What if it be, after all, true? His love must have rigid iron it it, and a tremendous purpose before it; and sometimes in the roar of life's wheels we have to say under our breath, "Lord, increase our faith." But what if it be, after all, true? Men, it is evident, do most justice to the biggest facts, when they believe in it; they live their own best lives when they believe in it; they are in the same ship with Jesus Christ when they believe in it; and that is best of all.

For self, then, let us cultivate this year a resolute and busy aloofness; for the world of men and things, the reverent tenderness of the honest builder and the steward; for God, the faith which Love deserves and claims. (But, God! help us to believe!)

Finding the Missionary Horse

BY JOHN B. DONALDSON

"DRIVER, LET ME out here," was the imperative demand from a stage interior in the winter of 1846. "What do you want?" "I want to stay here the balance of the night. I am half frozen and pounded to a jelly on these corduroy roads. I cannot stand it any longer." The Jehu argued, with an oath for emphasis: "That's not a public house. They won't take you in." But the shivering, aching traveler insisted: "I will risk it, and release you."

It was so that Rev. John Whitfield Cunningham found himself standing by the road, ten miles from Indianapolis, to which his fare was paid, and it was midnight. His saddle bags were on his arm. He knocked at the cabin door he had seen, but no answer. Finally, he got in, and denied that he was going to La Porte to buy land. In the conversation it developed that both were from the South, where the preacher had married the granddaughter of Sevier; both were Presbyterian; and both were New School. That made them as sworn brothers. Then the missionary told his story.

He had written for work up North. Rev. H. W. Beecher was then assisting in special meetings at Madison. He had preached in La Porte, and between the text and benediction had helped put out a fire. He wrote the brother to come to La Porte, and Dr. Henry Little added that "a missionary horse" would carry him.

In six weeks Cunningham reached Madison, but the home mission agent was away for a three months' tour. The Little family knew nothing about the missionary horse. So he took the railroad to Edinburg, but the church men there could tell nothing of the consecrated horse. He drained his purse, taking the stage to Indianapolis to consult Mr. Beecher, but was compelled to stop before he reached the city.

When he told his quest the host broke out in laughter. Perhaps Dr. S. E. Wishard could tell. He lived at Greenwood and said: "The horse is here, sir. He is in my barn. The last missionary who rode him brought him to my house and requested me to keep him for the Lord until he was called for. I have done so, and now he is at your service, sir."

Mr. Cunningham laughed and wept by turns at the strange providence which had led him, blindfolded, to the very place where the horse was, and in gratitude he rebaptized the home "Jehovah Jireh; the Lord will provide."

City Laymen at Work on the Rural Problem

BY GERRIT VERKUYL

Dr. Verkuyl, who is educational superintendent of Sunday school work in Wisconsin and Minnesota, in this helpful article on town and country cooperation in both states has in special view the situation in the smaller cities

John Watson
A young Wisconsin elder who fathers a church and Sunday school

THEY WILL not solve it completely, nor will that be necessary; for the rural folks are gaining their bearings all the while, learning to cope with conditions. But while they are still at school, just during this transition period in our semi-pioneer of the Northwest, where the improvement of his acres looms so big to the man with the plow, the more advanced brother of the city has the God-given task of buoying up his brother of the country and seeing him through.

Whatever our problem may be in dealing with rural conditions, to the country folks themselves the religious problem can be expressed almost completely in terms of dollars and cents. To come to the issue in all its bareness: If the farmer were as willing to take his financial share in the religious work of the community, he could have just as healthy and enjoyable a church home as the man of the city. It is true that some pastors greatly prefer the city, but by no means all. In this age of nervous exhaustion the country has strong attractions for many an able man. But a pastorate in the country seems impossible, because the salary is usually not sufficient for the care and education of a family. In our Wisconsin membership we count men that are sole owners of 600 acres of land, all productive, but whose annual contribution for the pastor's salary is $5. In the famous potato section we have three rural churches, well attended by farmers with ample means—themselves enjoying the modern luxuries—that without shame of face receive $100 annually from our Wisconsin home mission contributions to pay their pastor, unitedly, $700. Volumes can be written on the rural problem; but to us it appears centered in the farmers' proverbial "tightness."

To tell these people of their mammon worship has no benevolent effect. Some of us have tried it. The one who seemed most successful has quietly left the state. To deprive them of all religious services is not conducive to character building. They must be somehow served into truer views of life; and yet, when they are found unwilling to afford those who serve a livelihood, there is considerable of a breach in the system somewhere.

Laymen's Work Never Before So Timely

That laymen of the city should leap into the breach is the most proper thing imaginable. They are debtors to the country. Many of them were born and raised in the country, though not in this part of it. The country made them; then the city used them. Why should not the country get some returns for capital invested?

Never since the first century of the Christian era—except, perhaps, during the reformation—was there a time when laymen's work was as timely and acceptable as today. Our laymen of the city are getting a liberal share of the general education which modern times afford. They have a good supply of religious weeklies, among which The Continent appeals to most of us as the most educational. Religious books and magazines are at their disposal. Not a few of our men have pursued definite courses of Bible study, and some even training work for teachers. The young people's meetings in which the present generation has been raised have trained them in the art of public speaking. No matter how up-to-date the farmer may be, the man of the city is more immediately in the current of the times, and, religiously, has enjoyed far superior advantages.

The work of our laymen is exceedingly successful in this northern country. From the church at Oshkosh one elder goes out every Sunday afternoon to the outskirts of the city where he leads a Sunday school and teaches a class. Another elder makes his way to the little village that has grouped itself around the state hospital, several miles north of the city. A third goes even farther north, to a chapel which the Germans use on alternate Sundays. Both these men conduct the Sunday school and speak to the people afterwards. There is no other English-speaking service in these communities and one of the points is not even a hamlet. It is country, pure and simple.

Laymen of our Neenah church have achieved fame among the churches for the way in which they have shouldered religious work in their community. The Sunday school is of exceptional power, and during the week men of means are constantly at work with the boys. But while the leading laymen are busy with the city problems the pastor of that large church drives out nine miles on Sunday afternoons to preach at a little hamlet, while the women have honeycombed the entire rural environs with home department stations.

Elder's Sunday School Becomes a Church

A young elder of our Appleton church, John Watson by name, has for many years taken care of the work at Kimberly, three miles away. His Sunday school has grown into a church; but he continues his work. And when the church is without a pastor they look to him for similar ministrations. Another layman, not an elder, conducts a work where city and country meet.

The Marinette church has developed one layman into an almost full-fledged preacher, who supplies three rural points in the vicinity.

One must be ignorant of Presbyterianism in Wisconsin if mentioning these things he should omit Wausau. For more than twenty years laymen there have worked in the country on every side. Four churches have grown from that voluntary work; two of them under the pastorship of one of these laymen, who is now giving his entire life to it. There they go out every Sunday, the men of wealth and the men from humbler walks. There is no difference between them. Three men take care of the work "beyond the river." Another with his daughter leads the work at Hull Memorial, three miles northwest of the city. Another with his wife has charge of Underwood Memorial; while a woman has begun work among a settlement of Russians.

For a Wisconsin man it is a matter of grace, not of nature, to point out that the most systematic service rendered the country by a city has been inaugurated at Mankato, Minn. There the various denominations, including Lutherans, have federated for extension work. The Presbyterian Sabbath school missionary, Rev. James M. Bain, visited all the districts about the city and organized six Sunday schools, thus bringing their number up to ten. Then the federation, composed of laymen and pastors, secured twenty volunteers to man those ten points, not only for Sunday school teaching but especially for preaching. These men, two by two, are not assigned to continuous work in one place. They serve one month at one point, and are then assigned a different place. For the great problem on the part of those laymen is the production of sermons. They never knew how much of a job it was until they tried. But by this arrangement they need only four sermons in ten months, though if they have inspiration enough for more they are at liberty to use it.

Beneficiaries Are Learning How to Give

It is true that herein lies a lurking danger of pauperizing the farmers; yet it is equally true that heretofore those farmers gave not a cent for religious purposes, while now they put at least their mite into the box. The gift of giving will certainly not grip them where no services are supplied; it may get hold of them by means of these influences. The pastor of the Neenah church drove out for years nine miles every other Sunday; just recently his hearers there have met the expenses of his conveyance. The minister at Chippewa Falls went out without money and without price; but it was not long before the people at both of his points contributed from $4 to $5 a Sunday. The minister at Barneveld experienced similar willingness.

Time was when the country surpassed the city in moral backbone and religious fervor. That comparison no longer holds in the matter of our cities of from 6,000 to 60,000. Those favored cities have their splendid high schools and well organized churches. To their Christian manhood let this be an appeal and a challenge, so that with Saul of Tarsus they may say: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Maud Younger: San Francisco's Helen Gould

BY HARRIETT WESTON

THE EIGHT HOUR labor law for women which passed the California legislature last year was very largely due to the work of one woman. She gave three months of steady attendance to that fight—she had given twelve years to preparation for it. And yet she is a woman of position—one of San Francisco's large property owners.

San Francisco's introduction to Maud Younger—not Miss Younger, the daughter of the pioneer, but Maud Younger the Socialist—came two years ago. Staring headlines announced the fact that a waitress, a young widow, had shot and killed her child and attempted to kill herself. And the papers added in considerable stupefaction that as soon as she was out of the hospital the girl, Laura McDonald, would be taken to the home of Miss Maud Younger.

The authorities had been no less astonished. The waitress was utterly without friends. Her associates in the restaurant had been able to offer only one suggestion.

"See Maud."

"Maud" as the president of the waitresses' union was evidently the proper person to see, and the authorities called upon her and told her that the girl would recover and must stand trial for murder. She heard their story, and then she quietly stepped down from behind her desk and became Miss Younger, who knew what to do and had the means to do it.

It was not only in the visiting of the girl in the hospital and the securing of lawyers that she devoted herself to the case. She stood beside the prisoner on the witness stand and told her story. And she added what the girl would have lacked the courage and the ability to tell, the picture of the long days made up of steps and heavy trays and the constant temptations to which the waitress is subject.

The jury did what any other twelve men might have been relied upon to do—they cleared their throats and exonerated the girl.

She was free. Free to go home with Maud for months of rest and care before she went to another pleasant home and took up the burden of self-support again. She would have been dragging out a life sentence in San Quentin had Maud Younger not stopped in New York twelve years ago when she was on her way to Europe. She stopped to visit a friend who was doing social service work for children and became deeply interested. Her week at the college settlement lengthened into months, and she finally took up her residence in a near-by tenement.

Miss Maud Younger
Sometimes called "the Helen Gould of San Francisco"

Gradually her work brought her into touch with older girls and she became immersed in their problems. She had no theories then, and no specialties, but the more she saw of these girls, the more convinced she became that there must be some intelligent outside effort to better the conditions under which they lived and worked.

The difficulties that beset young waitresses—the long hours, poor pay and temptations—particularly aroused her sympathy, and she finally went to work as a waitress, to assure herself that the handicaps were as bad as they were painted. She wanted to understand what made these girls so suspicious of any class but their own. She was already one of the early members of the Woman's Trade Union League, but she felt that she must get nearer to the work itself.

So during a whole hot summer she worked in different restaurants in New York City—Dennett's, Childs', and others. She stayed but a day or two in each place, talking to the girls as she could about her plan to organize a union. Her diary, kept during those long days, was afterwards published in a magazine.

The proprietors were naturally unfriendly to any union scheme, and all discussion of it was forbidden. She was forced to pass notes under napkins and hide lists of names under trays, for as soon as her purpose was discovered she was discharged.

The first waitresses' union had only nine members, but it was the harbinger of better things for these burdened girls. Miss Younger worked on patiently and the membership increased, but the restaurant proprietors have given the union their steady opposition. It has, however, achieved a measure of independence for its members.

She was still toiling over this problem after a seven-year residence in New York, when the San Francisco earthquake called her home to look after her property. As soon as things there were reorganized she presented her membership card to the San Francisco union. But the officers had to be shown. She didn't look like a waitress, and they had to see her management of a tray before they were convinced.

Their confidence was restored, however, and they unsuspectingly sent her to a restaurant in one of her own buildings. That confidence has never since been shaken. They know her now. Besides being president of the waitresses' union, she has been three times its delegate to the Labor Union Council. For her friends and coworkers in the union have learned to respect her because of her executive ability and common sense. But she declares that she has gained more than they—that she is proud of her waitress friends—not one of whom has ever asked her for money. She is no longer actually working as a waitress, but she is toiling for the waitresses, nevertheless. The passing of the eight hour labor law for women may have seemed easy and natural to outsiders, but only those who were in Sacramento during the session of the legislature know of the bitter opposition of the manufacturers, and the labors of the friends of the bill.

Miss Younger had made the suggestion in the Woman's Union Label League. The indorsement of the State Federation of Labor was then secured and this body took the bill to the legislature along with other labor bills.

In order to be ready for the discussion of the bill, Miss Younger spent the fall of 1910 in the East gathering statistics in states where similar bills were in force, for she remembered the desperate opposition that the Oregon ten hour law had encountered. Armed with this information, and ready to tell from her own experience of the long day of toil which she was trying to shorten, she went back to face the legislators who might condemn women to work as long as their employers pleased.

The legislature faced a battery of not one but three labor bills, and the friends of these bills quickly joined hands, accepting one identical with the Oregon bill which had received the stamp of one state's approval. The words "eight hour" were substituted for "ten hour," and the fight was on.

The best lawyers in the state argued for or against the bill, and a mass of first-hand testimony was introduced. But the charge that won was Miss Younger's own—for with the help of the San Francisco unions she brought factory girls, laundry workers and waitresses to face their unsuspecting employers in the employers' open meeting held one night in the senate chamber. One girl, unprepared and untaught, rose after her employer had told of the contentment in his factory and exposed the true conditions, telling with such eloquence of the slavery of overwork that existed there that the employers were entirely routed. The next "employers' night" they sent their lawyers, but these wordy gentlemen were unable to cope with girls doomed to toil but seeing the dawn of hope. The bill passed.

Miss Younger has not rested upon her oars. She believed that women ought to have the power to demand their rights instead of being forced to beg for them, and very early in the suffrage campaign which gave the vote to the women of California she organized the Wage Earners' Equal Suffrage League. She herself spent another long hot summer in Sacramento working among the members of the legislature, and on the bright October day that the bill came before the voters every one of her girls was at the polls. After it was all over and they knew they had won, a perfect snowstorm of letters came to tell the much beloved president that not a single workingman had refused a working girl's plea for equal rights for equal toil. But among the thousands of rejoicing workingwomen the happiest was the one who considered it her greatest honor to be counted among them, and who had not hesitated to labor with her mind and her heart as well as with her hands.

Though she was the most ardent of suffragists, Miss Younger is a ludicrous refutation of the type pictured by the opposers of her theories. In the presence of her cameolike personality the most determined advocate of the old order hesitated to say "bold" or "unwomanly." Her very methods of giving her arguments invested them somehow with the charm of an older generation of women and seemed to carry their indorsement. When she declared that the grandmother who had dared to cross the desert in a prairie schooner would be a suffragist were she alive today, the adversaries were left weaponless.

It became so much a custom for every opponent of her theories to include among his remarks an apology to Miss Younger, and she was such a successful lobbyist, that she was finally excluded from the floor of the senate or the assembly whenever her favorite bills were up for discussion. But the impression her personality had made upon the legislators remained. As one of her opponents declared, "she herself is her own best argument—and the one which nobody can refute."

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters—Bradford Horton is working his way through the Prestonbury Theological Seminary in opposition to his mother's wishes. He is soloist in Second church, does indexing for Preston bank and tutors the grandson of Richard Elmore, the bank's president, to whose daughter he is greatly attracted. A fellow student, Austin Sleighton, becomes his loyal friend, but jealousy has made him a bitter enemy in Oren-Toole, bank employee. "O.-T." evolves a plan for Horton's undoing. He makes up a package containing $2,000 in banknotes, replaces the amount in the bank's safe with a similar package containing strips of paper, and hires an old beggar to hide the money in Horton's bedroom. Horton discovers the man, who proves to be his own father, angrily forces the package back upon him, buys a ticket for New York and starts him off on the train. In an anguish of self-accusation and regret, Horton finally confesses to Sleighton that he is only the adopted son of the Hortons. He is arrested for the theft of the banknotes, but his case is dismissed when no one appears against him. In the meantime his father, discovering the contents of the package he is carrying, gets off the train at Albany, registers at the Albemarle hotel, deposits all but $200 in the hotel's safe and indulges in a day's debauch, ending in the smashing of a plate-glass window, which lands him in the workhouse to serve a three months' term. Oren-Toole, in accordance with a plan of Mr. Elmore's, goes on a fruitless search for Horton's father. Life for Horton, in the meantime, moves on quietly. He declines all invitations and devotes his time to study and practice. His work in "The Messiah" wins him profound admiration, and a carnation dropped at his feet by Miss Elmore's hand reveals the source of others found in his room. Mr. Elmore, however, has learned from Mrs. Horton that the young man is a foundling, and is convinced that he is a liar, and the taker of the $2,000.

CHAPTER IX.—Continued

THE ELMORE carriage was very silent on the homeward drive. The father was planning the course to take with his daughter. The mother knew her husband's mood, and held her peace. The girl was living over the evening, with its heart-stirring enjoyment.

"Eleanor," said her father as they stepped into the hall, "I want to see you a moment."

"All right, father." They stepped into his office.

"Eleanor," he began, "you were exceedingly indiscreet tonight."

"Was I?" she said surprised. "How?"

"The whole house saw you throw that white carnation, Eleanor."

"Of course. They couldn't help it. What was indiscreet about that?"

"Can you not see? Had you thrown single flowers to each soloist it would have been right enough. But you singled out one, and that one a man."

"Sure, daddy. He was the only one singing and the only one worth it. I couldn't throw four flowers to four singers when there was only one."

"Eleanor," said her father gravely, "we must not quarrel. I fear we will if you evade. You meant that flower as a particular mark of favor to that particular singer, and I saw the look he gave you. I know a little about hearts, dear child. Let the folly end here. Take with you from this room no sentiment regarding the man who calls himself Bradford Horton."

"Calls himself?" The girl caught the insinuation in her father's emphasis. "Do you not call him so?"

"Yes, I suppose I shall call him so, if I have occasion to speak to him, but that is not his name."

"What is his name?"

"I do not know; no one does. He does not know himself."

"What makes you say that?"

For answer he turned to his desk. "Read that, Eleanor," he said, as he handed her Rosalie Horton's letter.

She read it without comment. Displeased at her continued silence he resumed, "Well, daughter?"

"Well, father?" was her reply.

"What do you think about that letter?"

"I think the writer is less than a woman." There was deep scorn in the low, cold, deliberate answer.

"How less than a woman? What is less than a woman?"

"A homicide," she said.

"That is intemperate language, Eleanor."

"No, father. It is sober, calm, judicial. Why did she not kill the baby that she never loved? Why does she wait until he is a man among strangers? She cannot kill him now, so she damns him. Who is she?"

The father did not fancy the mood his daughter was displaying. He was being drawn further into the matter than he had meant to go. His answer was pitifully weak.

"She is the writer of that letter, Eleanor."

"You knew her once, did you, father?"

"Yes, yes! I knew her once."

"When did you know her?"

"When I was in college."

"Oh, was it a college love affair?"

The girl had turned the table on him. He was thoroughly uncomfortable.

"Why, yes, dear. You might say it was."

"Were you and she engaged?"

"Yes, I suppose we were."

"And she broke it?"

"No, she did not. I did not. It—well, it—it lapsed."

"Is that what she means by faithlessness, father?"

"I suppose it is."

"Well, I am glad she was not my mother. Do you know what she thinks? I do. She hates you, and has for years. You wrote to her about Mr. Horton, and this reply of hers is not aimed at him but at you. She means to stab you in your tenderest spot—your sense of honor. She wanted to make you feel you'd been taken in. She's a coward, and no woman."

The father was glad to end the interview. "Good night, dear. We will let the past go, but for the future remember you are to have nothing to do with this man."

"Why, daddy, I never have had anything to do with him. He would not come to my party. The girls say he shuns society. He makes no calls. Don't be unfair because I threw him a flower. Don't be unfair because of that woman from whom you happily escaped. There's some mistake or mystery about this. She has not told it all. Good night, father." She kissed him and was gone.

By themselves, the father and mother talked for an hour, but got no farther than Mrs. Elmore's first remark, which was also her last: "I told you, Richard, when you wrote to that Rosalie that she would be furious."

By post the next day there came to Eleanor Elmore a letter in an unfamiliar hand. Its contents were brief.

"Dear Miss Elmore: I have not known until tonight to whom I was indebted for the white carnation that was on my hymn book at Second church last September, nor to whom to feel grateful for the sympathy manifested by the same token at the time of my arrest. The white carnation of tonight has established the identity of the hitherto unknown giver. Please accept the sincere thanks of one who is and must remain a stranger. Yours sincerely,

"BRADFORD HORTON."

CHAPTER X.

THE SNARE SET AGAIN

"BERNARD!" "Yes, sir." At the call Oren-Toole entered the office of the president, elated and with elastic step. Never before had Mr. Elmore called him by his Christian name. "I've been thinking it's nearly time for that old man to be released from the jail. What did you say was his name?"

"Drum—Andrew Drum. The hundred days will be up on Wednesday, sir."

"Go to Albany tomorrow. When he is released, if he proves to be your old man, bring him here. I shall go to the bottom of this money story. If Horton stole it and gave it to the old man to take away I'll send them both to state's prison," Mr. Elmore concluded grimly.

The bank teller had an unhappy day. To bring that old man back to Prestonbury and have him tell the truth, as he probably must if Mr. Elmore questioned him, was the thing farthest possible from his intentions. But he could not escape the trip to Albany, and how to lie his way out of the entanglement did not at once appear.

"I'll go to Albany tomorrow. Well! Old Drum will come out Wednesday. If I can manage a way to stay away until Saturday night I can work it. While Horton is singing Sunday morning Drum and I can hide that money in Horton's room, and then I'll have Nancy boy. Won't I? I guess! But how can I keep away until Saturday?"

So he worried all day long. Circumstances, however, were shaping to play Oren-Toole's game for him better than he could play it himself.

The Prestonbury papers next morning announced: "Our new student, Bradford Horton, the singer who so surprised and pleased everyone by his work in 'The Messiah,' will appear in the same oratorio in Albany on Thursday night of this week."

Oren-Toole read that at breakfast, and could scarcely believe his eyes. Then he said, "That will be the unluckiest engagement you ever made, Nancy boy. I'll bottle you up now." His plan was formed in an instant.

He was at the jail next morning in good season and was told Andrew Drum would be discharged at 10 o'clock. Not thinking it best to meet Drum in the presence of the officials, he went into the street, where he walked up and down near the gate.

Andrew Drum left the prison in high spirits. "I'll go to the Albemarle," he thought, "get my money and leave Albany on the first train. I'll——" His thought was stopped abruptly by a hand on his shoulder.

"Hello, Horton! How are you? Didn't expect to have company waiting for you, eh?"

"No, I didn't. My name's not Horton, and I don't know you," was the reply.

"You don't? Well, what is your name?"

"Drum—Andrew Drum."

"Drum, eh? Drum's good. You beat me once, and I was no drum. Now, drum or bugle, I'll be blowed if I don't beat you. Where's that parcel I gave you?"

"I tell you I don't know you," insisted the other.

"Oh, yes, you do. I gave you a parcel to hide in a room in Prestonbury, and you didn't do it. I want that parcel."

The old man saw denial was useless and changed his tactics. "Yes, I recollect now. You're the man with the surprise."

"Exactly. I want that parcel."

"Do you want to hide it in the man's room? Is the girl getting anxious?"

"Don't you be insolent, you old rip," Oren-Toole answered harshly. "Come here." He seized his captive roughly by the arm and led him to a cab. "Get in," he ordered. "Drive to the Albemarle," he called to the driver. "Now what's your name?"

"I told you Andrew Drum. I hid that parcel just as you said in that man's room."

"Stop your lying," said the teller. "You name's not Drum. You registered at the Albemarle as Bradford Horton."

"Well, suppose I did," was the defiant answer. "What business is that of yours?"

"Business? You hadn't a cent the day I picked you up in Prestonbury. You had a big pile of money at the hotel, and left it there. That money was in my parcel, and I'm going to have it. You'll hand it over to me or I'll send you to state's prison."

The answer to that threat surprised Oren-Toole. "You send me to state's prison? Not much! But I can send you there. Handkerchiefs, were they? Now you say money. See here, you smart Aleck! I'm a lawyer. You stole that money. I thought when you offered me $10 to do such a little thing it was queer. Now I see through it. For some reason you wanted that money found in that man's room. You let me alone, or I'll go back to Prestonbury and tell the whole story, and you'll go to state's prison."

Oren-Toole was quick to see the advantage the old man had, and in his most persuasive way he replied, "Mr. Drum, if you hid that parcel in Bradford Horton's room, how did you get it again?"

"I didn't hide it in Bradford Horton's room. I hid it in William Drum's room. That young man is my son."

The reply was too much for Oren-Toole. In spite of his anxiety he laughed. "He? That Nancy boy your son? Quit your lying. If you hid that parcel how did you get it again? That's what I want to know."

"I'm not lying. He is my son, and I hid that parcel. I went to Prestonbury hunting my son. I wanted him to take care of me. You helped me find him, though you didn't know it. I hid the parcel in a drawer in William's room, and was just going out when he came rushing in again. I heard him coming and got under his bed before he saw me. He stayed an awful long time, and I went to sleep. I must have snored pretty loud, for the first I knew he had me by the leg and dragged me out, and abused me horribly. I saw right off that he was my son, but he pretended not to know me. He was too proud to know his own father. He called me a thief and searched my clothes. I told him I was no thief and had only come to hide a surprise present for him. He made me pull it out of the drawer, and he crammed it into my pocket and told me I could have it. At midnight he shipped me off to New York, just as if I was a hog and not his father. I didn't know what was in that package, and William didn't; but you did."

"Never mind what I knew, or didn't know. Here we are at the Albemarle. You get your money. Then we'll go to my room at the Delavan for a talk."

The old man received his money and counted it carefully. Oren-Toole watched the operation closely and his practiced eye saw that but $1,800 remained. He knew now that the old man had taken out the missing amount before going on his big spree.

Arrived at the Delavan, he locked the door of his room and once more began to bluster. "Now, Drum-Horton, or Horton-Drum, or whoever you are, I've got you. Send me to prison, will you? Go back to Prestonbury, will you? Charge me with robbery, will you? Where's the $200 you took out of that parcel?"

"I didn't take——"

"Stop your lying. You did. While you were counting it I was using my eyes. I haven't been a bank teller for years for nothing. You're going to Prestonbury as you said, but you're going with me, and you're going to do there just as I tell you or I'll land you in state's prison for stealing $200. That's what you did. When you found that package contained money you should have said, 'That fellow made a mistake and gave me the wrong package, and I'll go back to Prestonbury and give it to him.' Instead you stole $200 and went on a spree."

"How did you know I went on a spree?"

"In the morning after I hired you to do the job for the girl I found I had given you the wrong package. You hadn't come back for your $10, though I waited under that tree a good long time. When I found my mistake I naturally concluded you'd found it, too, and made off. I told the bank officials of what I'd done, and my error, and they put a detective on the case who located you right away. Now hand over."

Andrew Drum laughed. "See here, my friend," he chuckled, "I may be old, but I'm not a fool. It's you that's been doing the lying."

Then, growing more serious, "You didn't make any mistake. You haven't been a bank teller, as you say, for years without knowing when you give away money. Girls don't do up handkerchiefs in brown paper wrappers. You meant to ruin my son. I don't know why. You thought you'd played a winning card, but my son held a better hand. Now you're in a hole of some kind. I don't know your name, but I know your game. I've not been a lawyer forty years for nothing." (To be continued)

But Not "Down and Out"

"And how is your mother?" inquired the parson, who was calling at the home of one of his wealthy parishioners.

"She is in her room, upstairs. She is very ill," replied his hostess.

"You don't say so!" exclaimed the clergyman, whose tact was not always reliable. "Well, I sincerely hope that she will soon be down and out."

THE HOME COUNCIL

"If I Were in His Place—"

BY ETHEL COLSON

"IF I WERE in his place I'd do very differently!" Would you, indeed! How do you know? In your place, of course, with your own particular tastes and disposition and safeguards and temptation, you may be able to tell something about the probabilities—by no means the certainties—of the other person's situation. But in his place——

Only God knows!

A good woman, truly good woman, trying to help a sister less spiritually stanch, impulsively exclaimed when she heard of a grave moral lapse:

"Oh, how could you do it! I could never have done that!"

"Small credit to you," came the instantaneous response, "since you've never been tempted! It isn't in your nature to be tempted that way."

For a moment the other drew back, hurt, offended, but a moment's honest reflection changed her attitude.

"You are quite right," she admitted. "I have no right to judge you in such connection, for I don't know anything about it. It is my place to give sympathy instead of censure."

Do any of us ever really "know anything about it" when we judge another? Is it possible for us to "step into another's shoes" so completely as to understand that other's thoughts, difficulties, temptations? Can we ever, no matter how closely connected or intimate, know all that is to be known of the things that make for another's state of soul or mind?

I, we will suppose, speak sharply and thus earn your censure. Well, sharp speaking, of course, is always regrettable, and you do well to deprecate the practice. But—you may not know how overstrained my nerves, how sad my heart, how troubled the spirit that thus overleaps the bounds, it may be after long and sincere effort toward patience.

You, on the other hand, have your tongue under good control, but sometimes it seems to me that you are too silent, that you fail, now and again, to say the kind things that might help or comfort your fellow. But I, of course, know nothing concerning the real reason for your silence. It may be that only by sternly maintained silence can you refrain from saying too much. Or, again, yours may be one of the birth-bound natures that find anything like "free speech" impossible. Or—but a dozen reasons for your quietude and for my unjudgingly respecting it might be advanced.

A thousand temptations toward the sin of judging another, a thousand opportunities for the grace of charity, of doing as we would be done by, occur daily through this soul searching "put yourself in his place" problem. Of course it is possible that, set down in our neighbor's life nook, we might till his field much better; it is easily possible that he might keep our bit of life's road in better condition than we do. But such questions are not for mere humans to decide, and most of us have all that we can do to sit in judgment on our own thoughts and actions, without attempting to censor those of our brother as well.

"If I were in his place" should I do as well as he is doing?

Until the questioning soul can return an emphatic "Yes!" to this query, and be quite sure of good and sufficient grounds for the affirmative, "If I were in his place" would be done away with.

Women Prisoners of Algiers

IT IS QUITE impossible for an American woman, living her life of untrammeled freedom, to picture to herself the restrictions placed upon the Mauresque women of Algiers—poor prisoners of whose pale, half-hidden faces the visitor to the North African coast towns sometimes gets a glimpse at the barred window of a harem, or meets at nightfall hastening home from their sole diversion, the weekly excursion to the cemetery.

You can see them for yourself any Friday afternoon, says E. Alexander Powell in "The Last Frontier" (Scribner's), if you will loiter without the whitewashed gateway to the cemetery of Bou-Rabrin, on the hill above Algiers, for they believe that on that day—the Moslem Sabbath—the spirits of the dead revisit the earth, hence their weekly pilgrimage to the cemetery to keep them company. When the sun begins to sink behind the Atlas these white-veiled pyramids of femininity reluctantly begin to make their way back through the narrow winding lanes of the native city, disappearing one by one through doors which will not open for them until another Friday has rolled around. Picture such a life, my friends—six days a week encloistered behind jealously guarded doors and on the seventh taking an outing in the cemetery!

That many of these Mauresque women of the coast towns are very beautiful—just as many others are exceedingly ugly—there is but little doubt, though they are so sheeted, shrouded, veiled and draped from prying masculine eyes that a man may know of their beauty only by hearsay. Not only is a Mauresque woman never permitted to see a man—or rather, the man is not permitted to see her, for despite all precautions she sometimes manages to catch glimpses of people through the lattices of her harem windows—but she may not receive a visit from her father or brother without her husband's permission.

When she is ill enough to require the services of a physician—and she has to be very ill indeed before one is summoned—incredibly elaborate are the preparations. All the women of her household are ranged about the bed, while her servants hide her under the bedclothes almost to the point of suffocation. If her pulse has to be felt a servant covers her hand and arm so carefully that only an inch or so of her wrist is visible. If she has hurt her shoulder, or back, or leg, a hole is made in the bedclothes so that the doctor may just be able to see the injured place, and nothing more. Should he have the hardihood to insist on looking at her tongue, the precautions are still more elaborate, the attendants covering the patient's face with their hands and just leaving room between their fingers so that her tongue may be stuck out. A French physician in Tunis told me that he was once called to attend the favorite wife of a wealthy Arab merchant, and that while he was conducting the examination the lady's husband stood behind him with the muzzle of a revolver pressed into the small of his back.

At the Threshold

BY L. L. BINGHAM

The page we finished yesterday
Was sadly soiled, and grave mistakes
Made it less fair to look upon
Than we had hoped a year ago.
Pride humbled and with contrite heart
We knelt and asked to be forgiven.

And now we take Life's book once more
And on the New Year's page all white
And pure will write as best we may
From day to day. "As best we may"—
No ease inviting phrase, but stern
As Duty's mandate, calling all
The man within to knightly deeds
Against the enemies of right;
To blaze fresh trails and pioneer
Where new domains in ethics wait
Humanity's slow onward trend;
To steady, strong, persistent work
With spade or plow or brush or pen
Along the lines of one's career.
Though stern, not harsh, it calls as well
To gracious wayside ministries
And love's forgetfulness of self.
"As best we may"—God grant us all
True vision of its meaning vast—
A vision that the passing weeks
And drudgery of daily life
Shall not efface. For only so,
When comes again the closing year,
Shall we have loyal proved and true
In adding something to the store
Which totaled means the world's advance.

Superiority of the Nonsmoker

Much of the sermonizing to boys on the subject of smoking is ineffective because it is illogical and unfair. Warnings are drawn from isolated and exceptional instances of the evil effects of smoking, and comparisons are made between smokers and nonsmokers that, when analyzed, prove nothing.

Perhaps it was knowledge of that fact, says The Youth's Companion, that led Dr. Pack of the University of Utah to attempt an investigation that should have definite and trustworthy results. He gathered his facts from the football squads of various colleges and universities, through the physical directors who have charge of them. He selected the football squads because they are made up of young men of at least fair scholarship, for at all the institutions considered, the eligibility rules bar men of low standing from the teams. Socially, too, the football men are more alike than the members of any group could be if taken at random from the whole student body.

Dr. Pack received detailed figures from six colleges. Of 210 candidates for positions on the first elevens of these six colleges 117 were nonsmokers and ninety-three were smokers; that is, men who habitually smoked when not in training. One-third of the smokers and two-thirds of the nonsmokers "made" the teams, and the ratio was about the same for each of the colleges taken singly.

The lung capacity of the smokers was found to be on the average about thirty cubic inches—9 per cent less than that of the nonsmokers.

In every one of the colleges the smokers ranked lower in scholarship than the nonsmokers; the average mark of the smokers was 74.5, of the nonsmokers 79.5. Moreover, the smokers had twice as many failures and conditions as the nonsmokers.

Thus, from as fair a test as could well be devised, it appears that the young man who does not smoke has twice as good a chance as the smoker to make the eleven, has better lungs and ranks higher in scholarship. Any boy who wants to make the most of himself will find in the results of this investigation something worth thinking about.

Handbags

The handbag that the lady wore
  Was wide and deep—immense;
And in said bag the lady bore
  One spool of thread,
  Fourteen hairpins,
  Eight perfectly good buttons,
  One thimble,
  Three car tickets,
  One recipe for sponge cake,
  One manicure set,
  Six samples,
  One handkerchief,
  Two yards of ribbon,
  One powder puff,
  One chamois skin,
  Three headache powders,
  One bunch of keys,
  One package of chewing gum,
  One mirror,
  Two postage stamps,
  Fifty-seven varieties of dingbats
  And seven cents. —Milwaukee Sentinel.

YOUNG AMERICA

A Visit to the Doll Doctor

BY FRANK R. ARNOLD

I WAS WALKING along Bourbon street in New Orleans one day last January when a fearful sight made me stop suddenly. There in a shop window was a pan full of little pink legs, another pan was overflowing with arms, all around were rows of heads without bodies, and bodies without heads, while strewn in long lines were heaps of eyes—blue eyes, brown eyes, gray eyes, even green eyes. Waving above all this were rows of flaxen and brown scalps. But most fearful of all were the injured individuals that gazed on this scene from behind the pans of legs and the heaps of eyes. Some had great holes gouged in their stomachs or backs, others had smashed faces, while still others were nursing dislocated shoulders or twisted ankles. It was a scene most painful to gaze upon.

The first glance made me shiver, but the moment I looked at the sign over the door I felt better. "Dolls' Hospital," it said. I went inside, expecting to see a row of tiny white beds with a lot of little New Orleans mothers crying over the sufferings of their doll children—dolls stuffed with sawdust who would have to be sewed up before their mothers could carry them home. Not at all. It was one of the happiest, sunniest, most cheerful hospitals I ever saw. There were no weeping mothers there—just two nurses and a doctor.

The nurses, nice little girls of 8 and 10, met me in the reception room and asked me to walk into the operating room and see their papa, who was the head doctor. Edith, the older nurse, opened the door. "Papa," she called, "here's a man that wants to know all about the dolls' hospital so he can tell his little girls about it." And there I was, face to face with the famous Dr. Voitier, the man who can make broken dolls whole again, and if they are old, make them young.

How do I know he can do that? Because I saw him do it. He couldn't shake hands with me at first because he was right in the midst of restoring a suffering doll lady to health and beauty. She was stretched out before him on the table. I knew she felt dreadful, because her teeth were set, but she didn't say a word. She just lay there and looked up at the ceiling without letting so much as a tear squeeze out of her lovely blue eyes. The doctor told me all about her case while he worked.

"This is Miss Jenny," said he. "She belongs to a little New Orleans girl named Victoria who lives up on St. Charles avenue. She used to live with Victoria's mamma and before that with her grandma, so you see it's not astonishing that she should have to come to the hospital after having had three mothers. She told me last night that they'd been lovely mothers to her, but that she had had a great many unfortunate falls. For a long time her ribs have been broken, and now the break is extending down into her stomach. Now I am going to give her a new body. Her old arms and legs are as strong and pretty as ever, and her face is too lovely to be changed."

I could not bear to watch the operation, so turned to the counter to look over the stock of doll parts, all of which came from Germany, so the doctor said. Pretty soon he called to the head nurse, "Come, Edith, take Jenny and dress her so she'll be all ready for her mamma when she comes for her this afternoon." I was surprised to see the happy look on Jenny's face as Edith took her up. She knew that she was as good as new and would perhaps live to see Victoria's grandchildren and help bring them up.

Then the doctor turned to me. "Now I can tell you about our hospital," he said, "though you can see what lots of patients I have waiting to be treated." And with a wave of his hand he showed me the sofa and shelves all piled up with unfortunate dolls who had lost some part of their anatomy and were waiting for the kind attentions and healing art of the doctor.

"You find me right in the midst of my rush season," he went on. "You know little boys and girls often have epidemics of measles, or grip, or scarlet fever. Well, most dolls are sick right after Christmas, and then's when I'm busy. I suppose the new mothers who get dolls at Christmas don't know how to handle them just right. And with a doll an accident comes so quickly. It takes an experienced mother to keep a doll from breaking. My wife and I have been here thirty years, and each year it's the same. Lots of operations right after Christmas.

A Boy I Know

BY REBECCA B. FORESMAN

I know a boy who has a watch,
But never thinks to wind it;
And when he ought to be on time,
He's always just behind it.

And when he has a task to do,
He says, "Wait till tomorrow";
And when he cannot find his things,
He simply says, "I'll borrow."

That boy may make a business man—
I know he wants to do it—
But he must mend his careless ways
Or he will live to rue it.

That boy must do his work today,
And plan work for tomorrow;
Good habits, everybody knows,
Are something boys can't borrow.

"Sometimes dolls who are passing through New Orleans in charge of the express companies come to us for repairs, if they have met with an accident on the journey. Of course the express company wants to deliver them safe and sound to their mothers and so they come to us for help. Then, too, our hospital is sometimes swamped with dolls that come from the stores. One day recently 490 came in at once, and another time 200. It made my heart bleed to see the poor motherless, broken sufferers. For you know department store dolls are always waiting for a mother. I fixed them up all right and I hope Santa Claus found a mother for each one. They were lovely dolls, and any little girl would have been proud and happy to get one.

Sawing Wood in India

This picture illustrates the way carpenters saw wood in India. These two men are working near the Allahabad Christian College (henceforth to be known as Arthur Ewing College) on a big piece of teak wood.

It seems rather a slow method, doesn't it, compared with the way the work would be done in one of our sawmills? The carpenters will receive 8 cents for their day's work. Pretty small wages, you will say, but 8 cents means much more to these Indian workmen than it would to you.

"I work for all kinds of people. Sometimes autos bring the sick to my door. Sometimes a little negro girl will bring me her black baby and ask my advice about a new leg or back. Here is a letter from a little girl in Kansas City."

He handed it to me and I read:

"Dear Doll Doctor: My dolly has lost her eyesight and her hair is getting awful thin. If I send her to you, how much will it cost for her to have new eyes and hair? Yours truly, VERA J. WATSON."

(Continued on page 23)

New Year in Japan

The Japanese celebrate the coming of the new year for seven days, and commence to prepare for it weeks in advance.

Large and small white flags, with red suns in the center, fly everywhere, says The Mother's Magazine, and tall bamboo poles are topped with great gilt balls, from which float long streamers with "Good wishes" written on them, and "Better luck for the new year."

"Mochi," the New Year's dainty that everyone eats, is made of a sort of dumpling dough in great quantities, beaten and pounded with big mallets, wielded by strong men. They swing these clubs in rhythm to a Japanese song about New Year's Day.

This day of all the year is a great gift-giving time. Everyone who has done the least service through the year is remembered with a gift from his mistress. Around each gift, besides a piece of cloth, must be a piece of white paper, ends uncreased, and the package tied with a white and red string in a peculiar style of knot which means that it calls down blessings of their gods, an equivalent of "God bless you" in our language. Always tucked in one corner will be found a bit of dried fish for luck.

The pine tree enters importantly into the observances of New Year's Day. If pine trees are not growing at the gateposts, the dwarf variety are set out in tubs. These are known as Kado Matsu pine decorations and the new year is supposed to pass through them. The origin of this interesting custom dates back more than a thousand years.

The pine tree on one side of the gate has finer needles than that on the other, and is meant to represent the woman in her purity and virtue. The prickly variety, representing the man, signifies long life and health.

During the New Year's festivities the fronts of the houses and verandas are festooned with ropes of straw intertwined with small branches of pine, to which are attached strips of white paper called shimenawa—"good wishes." Tufts of straw, bitter oranges, ferns, persimmons, charcoal and chestnuts have each their significance as a good or bad luck emblem.

The orange-daidai means "good luck," the fern "hope," the charcoal "May your good fortune be as changeless as the charcoal's hue." A little table in every guestroom is gayly decorated with pine, bamboo and flowers. On it are more significant articles, such as a saucer of black beans, meaning "Success to you"; a lobster has this rather doubtful interpretation, "May you live to be so old that your body will be bent like the lobster's."

The New Year's souvenir gift is a bit of salted salmon wrapped in a piece of paper and tied in the national colors, red and white, with a bit of pine run through the knot of the ribbon bow.

Decorations are everywhere. Symbols of strength, of courage, of long life, hang from every pillar and post, and the temples are gay with floating flags and dancing prayers for the wooden bronze gods.

Everybody makes calls, and there is a great general feasting time.

Had Read the Sign

The Johnsons had an old hen who insisted on laying her daily egg in the coal, a rather uncomfortable nest, one would naturally think.

"Joe," said Mrs. Johnson one day, "why do you suppose that hen persists in laying in the coal bin?"

"Why, mother," Joe replied, "that's easy to explain. I think she has seen the sign, 'Now is the time to lay in your coal.'"

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

January 12, 1913—Man the Crown of Creation

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 1:26-27; 2:4-25; Psalm 8. Golden Text, Genesis 1:27: God created man in his own image.

There appear to be two stories of creation, or rather, two phases of the same story. The first is continued over into the second chapter and closes with the third verse. Language must always be adapted to the comprehension of the hearer. As one of our modern poets says:

"For every fiery prophet in old time,
When God made music through him, could but speak
His music by the frame and the chord."

The frame was necessarily limited. A recognition of this fact would have left the world poorer by a thousand libraries, but quite as rich in knowledge of the truth.

The Creator is represented as standing in the midst of his own works. The seas teemed with life, and beasts roamed the earth, but there was not one that bore his own likeness A new order enters his purpose; something far in advance of all that he has done. "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the heavens, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. Here the plural is used instead of the singular. For this many reasons have been assigned, but none with perfect satisfaction. Some have seen in it a recognition of the Trinity, others a conference with the angels or higher beings, while others would regard it as the Deity taking counsel with himself.

God Stamps His Likeness Upon New Creation and Calls It Man

So far creation seems to have gone on by a succession of fiats. "Let there be and there was" has been the order of procedure. But now a new step is added to the stairway. God stamps his likeness upon the new creation and calls it man. This likeness is in the spiritual nature. It separates man from the life of the world about him. This fact is amplified in the second chapter. Man was formed—not created but formed—from the dust of the ground. Dust is the primary element in our physical being. "Dust to dust" is no poetic figure but a scientific fact. But even in this respect man is the crown of creation. He walks erect; and no climate can close its gates against him.

"What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals!"

But there is in man that of which dust forms no part. God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" and man became a part of himself. Man is now a living soul. He is related to earth on his physical side and to the heavens on his spiritual.

No weapon ever formed against this truth has prospered. Evolution was thought at one time to endanger its existence, but the evolution of today is a very different theory from the one of which the world first heard. The thing itself has evolved. The theory of spontaneous generation, once regarded as the origin of life, died with the generation that gave it birth.

And yet there was from the very first a class of evolutionists who accepted the doctrine with the limitations of Genesis. They conceded the development of the race on its material side. But man was more than material. He had a spiritual nature for which human theory could give no reason. Moses knew the secret and embodied it in the word. It was the breath of God. This was the result of no previous process, but an accession direct from the Creator.

Spiritual Nature Dividing Line Between Man and Lower World

That idea has never been refuted. It is the line of separation between man and the lower world—the "missing link" for which science has scoured the earth and without success. Viewed from every side and tried by every test, the bridge built by Moses in yon far-off distant age is still firm, and will be while Genesis 2:7 remains the foundation stone.

Man's mission was in part to subdue the earth. God glanted a garden and told him to dress and keep it. This was Eden, the birthplace of the human race. But Adam was alone. The earth was a farm, and he its only farmer.

The beasts of the fields marched in long procession before him. If it be true that man once walked in the same procession, what, we ask, has wrought the change? To that question science is dumb. The procession goes by, while man looks down from the very heights of God. He has become a living soul. The Creator lives in him.

Man is naturally a social being. One may own the whole world and yet be poor. There must be someone with whom to share, else space becomes a dungeon. God was interested in the first man, as he has been in every succeeding man. So Adam slept and awoke to find himself two in one.

Creation Teaches Equality of Sex and Common Level of Race

This part of the narrative, whether literal or allegorical, embraces an eternal truth. It teaches the equality of sex, and the common level of the race. As someone has wisely observed, woman came from the side of man, therefore she is his equal. Had she come from his head or feet she might have been his mistress or his slave. Universal comprehension of this sentiment would restore Eden to what it was. There are no rights peculiar to either man or woman. There may be privileges or duties growing out of circumstances, but a right is something common to both.

Where this garden was no one knows. The country only can be identified. The locality is largely speculative. But Eden is a name with which all have become familiar. There man was first intrusted with the responsibility of moral service. There the first home was established, and there the race began its onward march toward God.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—Man is the distinct creation of God. He is created in the image of God. He is the heir of God's spiritual nature. Woman is identical with man in all that constitutes humanity. These truths lie at the base of our faith and of our civilization.

Our faith rests upon our conception of God as related to man's origin, purpose and destiny. No one can change his view of man's origin without that change affecting his whole creed and his ethical basis. Professor Haeckel is perfectly logical in rejecting all belief in man's freedom, duty and immortality when he rejects all belief in the divine origin of man. Man may be created immortal, but he cannot develop into immortality by insensible degrees. A thornless cactus is still a cactus; and an improved brute fails to possess the possibilities of even a fallen angel. Faith in man's destiny rests and must always rest upon belief as to his origin, and immortality "is not a thing of gradations." A fallen man may be the subject of redemption, but a rising ape can neither sin nor be saved.

Man Was Created Directly by God in His Own Image

Verse 26—There never was a nobler conception of the origin of man than this which tells us he possesses a spiritual nature, a moral perception and freedom of will, all because God created him in his own spiritual likeness. We have of late years discovered various fragments of Oriental literature preserved in buried libraries or inscribed on recovered altars, but those most familiar with such finds know that nothing has been brought to light which for simplicity, vigor and dignity compares with this. It is just because of his different nature that man can subdue to his will and purpose the wild and mighty creatures which preceded him. He is less swift than the horse, less strong than the elephant, but he dominates them and their fellow creatures and they serve him. In verse 26 we are given the reason for man's sovereignty in his likeness to the divine, and in verse 27 is taught the equality of the sexes in all that constitutes the vital things of life.

To this day the East has never accepted this fundamental teaching of the Old Testament. The Bible is the only religious code which starts man and woman together as heirs of the same hopes and bound by the same moral obligations. Wherever the Bible goes the harem disappears and the home is discovered. Woman is as truly and in every respect a child of God, so says the word, as is the man.

Chapter 2:7—Man and his body are separate entities. The writer once said to a child of 5 who was complaining that her arm "hurt her," "Why don't you say your arm hurts? Your arm is you, isn't it?" To which the 5-year-old replied, "No, my arm isn't me." "Where are you then?" The reply came without a minute's hesitation, "I am inside." The child's consciousness of personality was as clear and unshakable as that of the philosopher. When the dead body has been subjected to the processes of decay we find—opening, for example, a crypt in some ancient catacomb—a faint sprinkle of dust marking the outlines of a vanished form. The dust is indistinguishable from the dust shaken from our garments. But the living soul is, as this verse tell us, something distinct in nature and not to be confounded with the body which returns "dust to dust."

Man's First Home a Paradise; His First Estate Holiness

Verse 15—No one knows the exact location of man's first home on our earth, yet every clew leads toward central Asia, the valley of the Euphrates. But that section has been changed even since historic time, so that what were rivers have become dry land and the sites of ancient capital cities are now covered by almost impenetrable swamps.

It is nevertheless a section where paradisiacal conditions might be restored by the renewal of those plantations which have been ruthlessly swept away and the restoration of those water courses which have become mere morasses. Here man might yet find a home, such as certain islands now offer, free from pressing physical needs and possessed of grateful abundance in response to pleasant activities.

Verses 9-17—The language of these verses is obscure but the meaning is plainly that man and his helpmate, woman, were "made after God's own image, in knowledge, righteousness and holiness, having the law of God written in their hearts and power to fulfill it." But if, on the other hand, man is only a brute seeking larger life and greater freedom, sin as sin no longer exists. Christ as a Saviour disappears. This story is not simply a story, it is the basis of all biblical, of all Christian, belief and doctrine.

Man Cannot Ascend Far Save by God's Redemptive Measures

If man has ascended he has not ascended very far except in individual cases by God's redemptive measures. Man is more ferocious than the lion. No other animal makes war upon his species with such relentless cruelty as man exhibits in his wars even to this day. No other animal converts vast portions of the earth's natural increase into intoxicating liquors which only degrade and infuriate. Man is the one drunkard of the animal kingdom. If we can institute moral comparisons at all between man and the brute, man has fallen, not risen.

The Fall Was Transgression of a Distinct Command of God

Verse 17—The "tree" appears to be a metaphorical euphemism for some sin not named. It may be such a sin as were those which called down the divine wrath upon the Israelites in the wilderness, such sins as those which Paul indicates in the first chapter of the epistle to the Romans. The "tree" itself, as a sort of pictorial reminder of sin, appears on the monuments both of Egypt and Babylon. If we could know the real fact, only in part revealed by the figurative speech, we should no longer jest about the "apple," since the forbidden fruit doubtless stands for a transgression heinous and odious, and not to be named.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning January 5, 1913

Topic—The hid treasure. Matthew 13:24-30.

The parables are, in form, the most characteristic utterances of Jesus. They take us directly to the heart of his conception of his kingdom.

—

No one of the parables tells the whole truth about the kingdom. Each of them reveals but one great lesson, which is the point of the comparison. It is often a great mistake for us to attempt to press a meaning into details which are simply intended to heighten the impression of the central feature.

—

In the parable of the hidden treasure it is no part of its teaching to make known how it comes that the kingdom is a treasure. This is simply assumed. The main purpose of the parable is to show that the kingdom is so valuable that a man will give up every other thing in order to possess it.

—

The kingdom of heaven is a treasure. It is the supreme good of human existence. It is the life of God in the soul of man; it is the will of God being increasingly realized in human society. It is the grace of God, which bestows righteousness upon man and enables man to do righteousness. This is the supreme attainment of the personality of man.

Thus the good of the kingdom is of higher value than any other good. It is better than any advantage of material wealth or comfort, which is transitory and does not reach to the center of satisfaction. It is better than any acquisition of knowledge concerning the world and its constitution; for this knowledge does not bestow the highest qualities of character, the qualities of self-control and peace, without which life is never at rest. Indeed no other good has any value whatsoever apart from the good of the kingdom; that is, righteousness in the soul of a man. Righteousness is the supreme quality of character—righteousness such as God can commend and man can contemplate with satisfaction. This righteousness exists only in the kingdom.

—

But this kingdom was hidden from the eyes of men even while Christ was speaking to them. It was there, in the midst of them, but they did not recognize it. The Pharisees were seeking for righteousness, here and there, through all the world, in places where it could not be found; but they did not seek it in Jesus.

They were seeking for a kingdom and a king, here and there, through all the world, where they could not be found; but they did not seek them in Jesus. He was the Christ, but he was hidden from their eyes.

—

This was precisely what their own traditions should have prepared them to expect. One of the most clearly enunciated doctrines of the Talmud was that the Messiah would be in the midst of the people for some years, working and moving among them, and altogether unknown by them, until he should suddenly be manifested. Malachi had said: The Lord, whom ye seek, will suddenly come to his temple (3:1). And it was in reference to this belief that the Jews, at the feast of tabernacles, said concerning Jesus: Howbeit we know this man whence he is: but when the Christ cometh, no one knoweth whence he is (John 7:27). Such was the doctrine of the Pharisees, and it found a terrible exemplification in their treatment of Jesus. Their conception of the kingdom was so external, so materialistic, and Jesus' conception was so spiritual, so inward, that they passed by this treasure, day after day, and never even suspected its existence.

—

"He came unto his own, and they that were his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name."

—

But some men found the treasure; some men stumbled upon it, as it were. And there were men who were not blinded to the indications of its presence by a doctrine which taught them that the treasure must be somewhere else. They were, for the most part, unlearned and ignorant men. They were sometimes publicans and sinners, the outcasts from the kingdom of the Jews. They were men like Zacchæus, who had had no expectation that they ever could possess the kingdom, when lo! it was theirs. They were women who believed themselves to be utterly wicked and abandoned of God, when lo! they were called upon to rise and follow Jesus. And before they had seen Jesus they would have believed that it was impossible for them ever to be good again; but when they saw him, when they once looked into his face, they knew that there was hope. They had unexpectedly come upon the knowledge of the treasure hidden in a field.

—

In order rightly to grasp the significance of the parable we must remember that the Jewish people in the time of Christ did not commonly put their savings in banks for safe keeping. They were accustomed to hiding them in a cave, under a rock, beneath a wall or in a corner of a field. And sometimes the owner of the treasure would die without anyone knowing that he had ever owned it. It was not such an uncommon occurrence for a man to find a treasure in a field. And according to Jewish law, all that was in a field belonged to the owner of the field. Jesus is neither approving nor disapproving the law; he is simply using it to illustrate his point. The man who learned that the treasure was there used all his substance to purchase that field and obtain that treasure.

—

He purchased it. He gave all else that he possessed in order to obtain it. He cared for nothing else in this world in comparison with that treasure. So it is ever with the kingdom.

There are men who have spent their whole lives amassing money, getting it any way, rightly or wrongly, only getting it. And they never have discovered that the pressure of two soft baby arms around their neck was worth more than all the heaped-up gold this world contains. There are other men who have spent their lives poring over an ant hill, and never lifting their eyes from their miscroscope to behold the glory of the sky. Of what use is their ant hill unless they can connect it with the stars?

—

The kingdom of God, with its sense of social joy, its throb of the heart of humanity, its conscious pressing upward and onward to its high destiny, its enthusiastic loyalty and devotion to the king—this kingdom contains within it a worth that makes all other goods seem poor. One thing is needful, only one.

He who would obtain the kingdom must pay for it. We are simply saying in other words what Jesus said elsewhere: If thou wouldst be perfect, go, sell that which thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me (Matt. 19:21). We must surrender living in order to gain life.

But the whole transaction is to the accompaniment of joyous music. The man sells all that he has with joy; he buys the field with joy; he digs out the treasure with joy. He rejoices; and he rejoices again.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

January 12, 1913

THE GREAT DECISION

Topic—Become a Christian! Why not? Matthew 4:17-25.

Even a crowded life holds few really notable events between the great adventures of birth and death. Commonly these are but two—the meeting with God in that definite, personal experience called conversion; and the meeting with the other life whose being becomes merged with one's own in love and wedlock. Not everybody is given to know these two conscious experiences, which are the mountain peaks between the unconscious events of entering and leaving this mortal life. Some persons go through their earthly existence without ever knowing that all-embracing, all-transforming experience which we call becoming a Christian. Conscious relationship with God is entirely out of their experience. Which means that they have never looked upon life from its highest mountain peak, that of realized fellowship with the Father through his Son. And to miss this is to miss the best that earth holds for a human being.

—

Most of the essential and abiding questions of character and conduct are commonly decided before a person reaches the age of 21. The greatest of questions, "What shall I do then with Jesus, who is called the Christ?" should be answered once for all in youth.

—

To become a Christian is to become Christ's man—to accept his will as life's law and his work as life's mission.

—

A rough but workable classification of people is "the putters-off" and the "do-it-nows." The former usually graduate into the class of "never-do-its." Every reason that should constrain one to become a Christian operates in behalf of immediate decision.

—

A new estimate of two worlds is given to the person who sincerely tries to see through the eyes of Christ.

—

A looking up, a giving up, a taking up and a going up—these are progressive steps in the experience of discipleship.

—

Ships that drift oftener find rocks than havens. The life that merely drifts along, leaving the question of becoming a follower of Jesus to take care of itself, is likely to strike disaster that may be all but irretrievable.

Sound judgment dictates that one should give careful, deliberate and thorough thought to the subject of his relationship with his Creator. Every person owes it to himself to enter, baresouled and alone, that awesome chamber of decision where God and man meet to settle the profoundest concerns of the soul.

—

What has made the Scotch such a potent people? The traveler finds Scotsmen wherever in the world civilization has penetrated. They are leaders among men, and in all fields. Why? Assuredly one reason is that the people of this little northland have come to maturity and stability of soul-fiber through religion. God is the most present of all realities to the Scot. The concerns of the eternal life have ever engrossed him more than the activities of this—and nobody ever accused him of being indifferent to this present world. But religion, the sense of God, the condition of the spiritual nature, is surely the deepest factor in the life of Scotland.

—

Without pessimism it is to be confessed that our day is laying undue stress upon mere things. We care particularly for appearances. We give more thought to what we shall wear and eat, and how we shall live and enjoy ourselves, than our American forebears ever did. Now the principal objection to all this is that it shifts the emphasis to the wrong departments of life. Over and over again we need to be reminded that while man has a body, he is an immortal spirit. Supreme thought should be given to supreme things. Whatever in us is of God should receive first and highest consideration. To put one's clothes ahead of one's spirit is to impeach one's own soundness of judgment. Give God the right of way in life and all lesser concerns will fall into their proper relations.

—

One day I was in the office of a famous New York banker. Like many of the busiest men of this metropolis, he takes more of his time than the world ever dreams for the concerns of human welfare and of religion. We talked of an appeal to the city, in the name of Men and Religion, and he said, "Urge people to take time to think about God. That is what we most need—really to think about God. We take time for everything else; now if we really take time to think about God, all these other questions of social service and our many problems would be solved. For the root question is altogether that of man's relationship to God."

MISSIONARY WORK

Foreign and Home Missions Hand in Hand

Some exceedingly interesting experiments in promoting the missionary education of the church have been in progress during the recent autumn months. Just before Christmas Rev. George H. Trull, secretary of the Foreign Board for Sunday schools, returned to his office in New York from a ten weeks' tour of the farther western states. After visiting several sessions of synods meeting in the early autumn, Mr. Trull joined Rev. Ernest F. Hall, field secretary for foreign missions on the Pacific slope, and together they traveled through Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon and California, holding in the principal cities institutes into which were gathered the leaders of missionary activity in as many congregations as could be reached.

Three days—occasionally four—were devoted to each city visited, and sessions of the institute were held daily. Mr. Hall lectured and taught in a study class, taking up the new textbook "The Call of the World," by W. E. Doughty, a secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Part of the time Mrs. Hall was with her husband and taught a class of women studying the same textbook. Mr. Trull in the afternoons gave his lectures on methods of stimulating missionary interest in the Sunday school and on the study of the Bible for missionary incentive.

It is significant of a new cooperation between foreign and home missions that these institute leaders, though both officers of the Foreign Board, laid constant emphasis on home mission work also; indeed, Mr. Doughty's textbook, which they chose for the starting point of instruction, is a volume distinctly covering the home mission as well as the foreign mission appeal. And the "follow-up committees" which they formed in all the institute cities before proceeding to other points were carefully constituted to include representatives of home mission and Sunday school interests along with foreign mission enthusiasts. These committees are to hold other institutes at outlying points on the model of those which the deputation conducted at the centers, and are especially expected to work for the establishment of an active missionary committee in every congregation.

Another cooperative enterprise of a different form, but with the same object, was carried through successfully at the other end of the country by David McConaughy and Rev. E. L. Johnson for the Foreign Board and Dr. W. M. Paden and Rev. Jay S. Stowell for the Home Board in the Presbytery of Hudson of the Synod of New York. On the six successive days of a single week this party of workers held six one-day conventions in as many towns from Haverstraw to Middletown, and reached in this way 500 "key" men and women from thirty congregations. Dr. Paden and Mr. Johnson in the morning with maps and figures outlined the extent and urgency of the missionary field, both at home and abroad. In the afternoon Mr. McConaughy conducted a model missionary committee meeting, and Mr. Stowell gave an example of an efficient mission study class. The evening was the occasion of a dinner with inspirational addresses. Mr. McConaughy by this campaign demonstrated that the methods which he used last winter to awaken city presbyteries like Newark and Washington can be worked in country presbyteries as well.

Higgins Returning to the Adirondacks

Frank E. Higgins, the "sky pilot of the lumberjacks," spent the Christmas holidays in his home at Delano, Minn. Just before going home to stay over Christmas with his invalid wife, Mr. Higgins, as The Continent has already stated, was in the Adirondacks, and his impressions of the importance of the work to be done there decided him to return to that region for perhaps two months between the middle of January and the middle of March. His original work in the lumber camps of Minnesota is now so well established in the hands of men whom he has trained for the task that it will not suffer in any wise in his absence, and he has offered to spend his time developing a like mission in the mountains of New York state.

On the December visit Mr. Higgins addressed two interdenominational audiences convened under Presbyterian auspices in Lake Placid and Saranac, and aroused a very great local interest in his project. On his return he expects to travel among all the lumber camps of the mountains, which are said to include not less than 10,000 workingmen. After preaching in the camps and carefully studying conditions, the "sky pilot" will meet with the Adirondack committees of the three presbyteries of Utica, St. Lawrence and Champlain and present the results of his survey. If he deems the field ready for it, and has a man to recommend for the work, the presbyteries are prepared to support a missionary for that region.

Mission Compound One Man's Gift

The accompanying cut is a panoramic view of the compound and new buildings for the Presbyterian mission station in the city of Tengchow, China, on the coast of the Yellow sea, thirty-five miles northwest from Chefoo. The buildings were all erected at one time and were provided by the generosity of Louis H. Severance of Cleveland and New York. The group includes two missionary dwellings, a hospital, a girls' school and the dormitory for it. At the dedication services, held a few weeks ago, Dr. Corbett, Dr. Elterich and a number of other missionaries came over from Chefoo to join in the rejoicing at the completion of what is, all things considered, probably the finest group of mission buildings in China. Mrs. Yu and Mrs. Lan, two Chinese ladies from Chefoo, were also in attendance. These are two of the first graduates of the girls' school. Four local Chinese officials also had places on the program. The day was perfect and the attendance was large.

Tengchow Mission Station

The girls' school is now prepared to accommodate eighty pupils. The hospital is equipped with thirty-five iron beds, and all its furnishings are in the most modern style. This will be the scene of the medical practice of Dr. W. F. Seymour, who is the senior missionary at the station. The compound is located on a sightly knoll just outside the east gate of the city and commands a fine view of the sea. It is an ideal place for either a school or a hospital.

Home and Foreign Workers Confer

At the last meeting of the Women's Board of Home Missions prior to Christmas there was an interesting scene of neighborliness between the workers for home and for foreign missions. Mrs. Robert E. Speer led the devotional exercises and the addresses of the morning were made by Miss Henrietta W. Hubbard, the treasurer, and Mrs. William E. Waters, a secretary, of the Women's Board of Foreign Missions located in New York. There was a consensus of judgment that the two lines of work present much the same problems and that exchange of ideas and methods should be more facilitated.

Chinese Mission Made Independent

The list of stations on the roster of the Presbyterian Foreign Board at New York has just been increased by one new name, which does not, however, represent an entirely new work. But the board has, by executive order just passed, erected the work at Kochau, heretofore dependent as an outstation on the station at Yeungkong, and made it an independent work attached to the South China mission. This is a well deserved recognition of the splendid service which Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Patton have been doing on the Kochau field. They now become the senior missionaries in charge of the station, and will no doubt rapidly extend the work of planting chapels in the surrounding villages, at which they have been already very successful, operating in general on the plan so successfully exemplified by that indefatigable chapel builder, Dr. A. A. Fulton of Canton.

Making Kochau a separate station is also a natural recognition of the importance of the field. Kochau is a Fu city, standing approximately in the center of the Kochau valley, which embraces about 5,000 square miles of land, with a population of a million and a half and including six walled cities of 30,000 to 50,000 people, five towns averaging perhaps 15,000 each, more than 150 market towns with a thousand population apiece, and over 3,000 villages of lesser size. Presbyterian missionaries have preached in the place for twenty years, but until 1908 it was not a place of missionary residence. Nearly all the work there has developed since that time, and there are now in the field nineteen chapels, five Chinese preachers, twelve theological students and 500 communicants. Mrs. Patton, who is a practicing physician, has also developed a remarkable medical work. The principal building at Kochau was erected by the Collingwood Presbyterian brotherhood of Toledo, Ohio.

Mohammedan Children Studying the Bible

Miss Annie W. Stocking, missionary at Teheran, Persia, estimates that there are now at least 1,000 Moslem boys and girls attending the thirteen Christian mission schools open in Persia. Figures have not been accurately kept on this point in the past, but Miss Stocking thinks there is no doubt that this number is twice what it was five years ago. The education of Moslems in Christian schools is in fact a very recent development, but the ambition of Mohammedan parents to get good education for their children is rapidly overcoming all religious prejudices. Of this thousand nearly 700 are paying tuition, so that the movement is no pauper scheme to get something for nothing. And there is no concession on religion to these Moslem scholars. They are required to attend school on Friday, which is the holy day of Islam, and all of the schools require the Bible as a regular study in the curriculum. So far, however, from there being any prejudice aroused by this method of teaching the Bible lesson is distinctly popular among the Mohammedan children in most of the schools.

Missionary Brevities

—Rev. Melvin Fraser of the West Africa mission writes of the missionaries at Elat that the immense numbers have ceased to be a novelty either in church attendance or school attendance. The missionaries feel their present danger to be a peril growing out of their successes—the danger of dealing with masses instead of individuals personally.

—The allotment of territory to different missions does not seem to have the approval of all mission workers. Some of the Presbyterian missionaries in Hunan urge that they should be allowed to establish a new station in Changsha, the provincial capital, in spite of the fact that there are already seven or eight Christian missions located there.

Board Notes and Announcements

—"We shall have strength to mount up as the eagles if we wait on the Lord," was the keynote given Friday morning by the leader, Mrs. Campbell, in Room 48, Chicago. Mr. Bandy of Fatehgarh spoke, showing how that promise has been fulfilled in India. First telling of over 1,500 per cent increase witnessed in his own station, in the very heart of India, during fifteen years, then giving a panoramic view of the whole empire, he described growth that if seen in America "might give us to such enthusiasm as would not be wholesome." The wonderful story confirmed Miss Monk of Sapporo in her statement make a week before that "Japan is less evangelized than India." Mrs. Coulter introduced a friend from China, a University of Chicago girl, Miss Nourse of the Baptist mission in Hangchow, who told how union of the Baptist and Presbyterian forces in school work had trebled their strength. In Hangchow, a city of 600,000 or 800,000, a union school is the only one to meet the very critical opportunity to train for leadership the many girls who say they want to be of use.

NEW BOOKS

G. Stanley Hall on Modern Education

EDUCATIONAL PROBLEMS, by G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University. After twenty-five years of active leadership in American educational thought, President Hall has begun, within recent years, to gather together the final results of his long study and experience, and to present them in permanent published form. In these two large volumes he discusses the nature and purposes of the various new educational movements which are springing up in all portions of the country. He says these volumes might well be entitled "The Pedagogy of the Future," since the movements discussed are educational labors to the need of which communities have only recently awakened; or to which they are even now just awakening. They are the beginnings of readjustments of our scheme of work in public education which appear to be bringing about a very complete reconstruction of education in the subjects taught, in the methods employed, in general organization, and in general community support, cooperation and participation.

Since these many movements are new, at least in large part, each of them bristles with countless unsolved problems—what to do, when to do it, how to proceed, how long to continue the work, how to adapt it to the nature of the child, how to adapt it to the conditions of the community, how and where to find the money for its support, teachers who can teach it, and the necessary materials, buildings and appliances. In this connection President Hall discusses moral education, the religious training of children, industrial education, sex education, training for wise and effective citizenship, educational values of folk dancing and pantomime, kindergarten training, high school training, the general reconstruction of public education, the various child welfare agencies outside of the school, the pedagogy of music, history, mathematics, reading, drawing, geography and foreign languages.

Dr. Hall's presentation tends to be somewhat popular in tone and always practical in aim rather than merely pedagogic. He presents countless concrete illustrations of the ways the various movements are being worked out in different parts of the country. His book is a well-organized force in the modern educational crusade. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $7.50 net.

New Religious Works

THE HISTORIC JESUS, by Rev. David Smith. It is the testimony of many competent judges that Dr. Smith's "The Days of His Flesh" is the best life of Christ since that of Canon Farrar, surpassing it in critical acumen. This new and small volume is a pendant to the larger one, but has its own purpose. Professor Smith contends that "the question of the historicity of the evangelic narratives is more than academic." "The sole foundation of the faith is the historic Jesus, and the gospels are the only sources of our knowledge of him. If they fail us he is irrecoverably lost." Faith is imperiled when we declare that whether the gospels are true or not, we have Christ. If we come to believe that the gospels are not true, we shall soon cease to have Christ. After a thoroughly honest chapter, stating the critical contention, with Schmiedel and the Hegelian T. H. Green as accepted types, Dr. Smith goes on with four strong lectures, asserting the historic value of the evangelic records of Jesus. One lecture shows what happened when men of his time did idealize our Lord, and the contrast between these apocryphal idealizations and the evangelists is weighty argument. Dr. Smith is professor of theology in the McCrea-Magee College, Londonderry, Ireland. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.

THE RELIGIOUS FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES, by H. K. Carroll, is a convenient compilation of the history of all denominations in the United States. For one who is seeking recent figures, however, the book is not happily arranged. It is announced as being revised and brought down to 1910; but in the body of the book the number of communicants in the Presbyterian Church (North) is given as 788,000, which was the total in 1890, and 600,000 short of the total in the last Minutes of General Assembly. A number of presbyteries are not listed at all. The results of the United States census of religious denominations in 1890 are given, as well as those of 1906; and the statistical summaries for 1900 and 1910 are gathered by the author from denominational sources. These are in special tables in the back of the book. The date of statistics in the various tables is not so clearly designated as to prevent confusion. Figures on the number of church buildings and their seating capacity are arranged in convenient shape. Charts showing comparative number of members of various denominations in each state will surprise many Presbyterians. In all but three or four states Roman Catholic churches include more than a quarter of all church members. [Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $2 net.

JESUS, by George Holley Gilbert. Since the publication of his "Student's Life of Jesus" Dr. Gilbert has experienced a considerable change of mind. He believes that his new standpoint is shared in by scholars in general, and that it is due to a better understanding of our sources of information about Jesus. In looking over his former work with a view to modifying and harmonizing it with his present position he has come to the conclusion that it would be easier to rewrite than to revise; accordingly, this volume appears as an independent work unrelated to the "Student's Life of Jesus," and yet in a sense substitutive to it. To understand Dr. Gilbert's attitude it is only necessary to know that he divides his work into three parts, treating first of the sources, second of the historical Jesus and third of the legendary Jesus. His treatment of the sources is radically critical. Under the title "The Legendary Jesus" he groups together "Legends of the Birth and Infancy of Jesus," "Legends of the Ministry of Jesus" and "The Legend of a Material Resurrection." Needless to say that in the class of legends he includes all the miracles except those of healing. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

THE HEART OF THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE, by George Aaron Barton, is a second and revised edition of a volume published three or four years ago and consisting of lectures delivered by the author at a Friends' summer school in Sagamore, Mass. The object of the lecturer was to put before his hearers the successive transformations of the gospel as first preached by Jesus Christ. The first lecture presents the message as it came from the lips of the Master; the next two give it as it was clothed in the Pauline epistles and in the Johannine writings; and the next three reproduce the forms given to it by the eastern church, the western church and the Reformers. Then comes the interpretation by the early Friends, and the series closes with a new interpretation for the twentieth century. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

MEN WHO WERE FOUND FAITHFUL, by Robert E. Speer. The fifteen men described are from the modern day, seven of them recent graduates of Yale, Princeton, Beloit and Leland Stanford, Jr. The older men include General Armstrong and Dr. Arthur T. Pierson. It is a good book to put into the hands of young people in or near college life, who need to be reminded that it is feasible to be strongly Christian today in our great colleges. It is in Mr. Speer's best vein and will refresh anyone who reads it. We do not know anything in Mr. Speer's writings finer than his closing papers, the ones on Dr. H. Clay Trumbull and Dr. William R. Richards. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1 net.

CREATION AND MAN, by Francis J. Hall. Strictly speaking this volume is a section of an old-fashioned treatise on systematic theology. Other sections of the same work have already appeared, and still others are announced. The author is sufficiently modern and practical to see that in form at least his work does not suffer by being encumbered with the older technical divisions or by being put before a public unused to large treatises on theology. Each section, for this reason, appears in a separate volume. The present one deals with the subjects of creation and man from the viewpoint of modern physical and biological science. The author accepts substantially all that investigation in natural science has brought into view. He even assumes that the results of these investigations are universally accepted. Yet he is faithful to the creeds of his church (which happens to be the Protestant Episcopal communion) and discusses the topics of Christian theology so as to exhibit their harmony with such a modern theory as evolution. Altogether, his attitude is that of a conservative, progressive Christian thinker. [Longmans, Green and Company, New York. $1.50 net.

THE MASCULINE POWER OF CHRIST, by Jason Noble Pierce. It is good to find in the ranks of the younger ministers who are pushing to the front men who put their thinking into literary form and give to the reading public some of their messages to their own congregations. Mr. Pierce is pastor of a large church in Oberlin, having in his congregation a great number of college students. Without in any way compromising his own high estimate of the divinity of Christ he here sets forth in an attractive little book the substance of what may originally have been a sermon. It glows with something of that fine feeling that was in Thomas Hughes's "The Manliness of Christ." [Pilgrim Press, Boston. 50 cents net.

Recent Fiction

AT THE SIGN OF THE REINE PEDAUQUE, by Anatole France. To this translation by Mrs. Jackson there is prefixed an appreciative introduction by William J. Locke, who finds in the inimitable hero of this tale, Maitre Jerome Coignard (a dissolute church man of the latter eighteenth century), something of the spirit—but not, of course, the practice—of Anatole France himself. The story of the latter career of this ecclesiastical scholar and lover of wine and women is told by Jacques Tournebroche, his pupil, who worships him with a devoted fidelity and sees in him a figure of heroic proportions, unparalleled charm and unsurpassed wit. All of this the gay old humanist and scholar undoubtedly was, but at the same time he lied, cheated at cards, stole, connived at a lady's seduction and fell into all sorts of scrapes. Then when the clouds of his folly settled over him, he would pull out a pocket copy of Boethius's "Consolations" and fortify himself with its ancient wisdom. If we can read this book without prejudice, if we can remember that it is written by a Frenchman of Frenchmen of an earlier and freer day, we shall close it, despite its occasional lapses from what we consider decent reticence, with the tribute of a moistened eye for the Christian death of that scholarly old vagabond Dominus Hieronymus Coignard, who, if he were pure in nothing else, at least kept "an unshaken faith." [John Lane Company, New York. $2 net.

THE REEF, by Edith Wharton. There is as much scope for power in the analysis of a conventional woman as there is in that of a New England farmer. For this reason, our critical judgment of Mrs. Wharton's new novel is not based upon its departure from the material that made notable that beautiful and terrible story of last year, "Ethan Frome"; nor have we any patience with the type of criticism that relegates to the ash heap such themes as "The Reef" exploits. Criticism concerns itself with methods and on this basis alone is the new story a disappointment. There is not the same passionate intensity, the same sense of immense inevitability about it that one felt in "Ethan Frome." The title symbolizes the wrecking of a woman's happiness on the rocks of a man's unconventional "past"—an episode which involves a girl of striking personality and which plunges the woman into the hideous self-torture peculiar to people of highly cultivated sensibilities. There is tremendous material here, and Mrs. Wharton, exercising all her fictional magic, makes a book of it that is nearly tremendous. Were there in it the larger art expended upon "Ethan Frome" it would be wholly so. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.30 net.

The Open Hearth

The Pulpit and Suffrage

In Ohio last summer we voted on the question of equal suffrage; and the vote was against it. We think the pulpit failed to improve a great opportunity and that the church is losing its power for good through a mistaken conservatism. "He that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." If women were given the ballot it would prove a great reenforcement to the army that is striving for civic righteousness, morality, temperance and the public welfare. In our Ohio fight for equal suffrage the Catholic Church was against us; its bishops instructed their people to vote against the suffrage amendment. We hardly knew where the Protestant pulpit stood.

A general, in a battle, who would permit his army's defeat rather than call on his best corps to help him would be stripped of his command and disgraced. Women were given the same inalienable rights as man by our Creator. They have the same rights to protect their lives, their children, their happiness, that man has. In organizing government to protect and maintain these rights she is entitled to an equal voice with man in forming that government. The history of the race is that a woman's rights have always been safest in her own keeping. That is why God placed them there; and why our fathers, in the declaration of independence, said that "all just governments derived their powers from the consent of the governed."

It being woman's right to have equal suffrage with man, and her influence being so much needed on the side of temperance and morality, why should not every good citizen vote for it and every Protestant minister, following the example of John Knox, instruct his people on their civic obligations as well as on their religious duties?

J. Q. A. CAMPBELL.

Commends Colonel Maus's Statement

The daily newspapers under the head of "Alcohol Hit as Deadly Foe to Army and Navy" print a statement of a report of Colonel Merwin Maus, chief medical inspector of the Eastern Division of the army. This report I hope may have great weight.

From my experience as a member of the national guard for thirteen years and in that time meeting many regular army officers as well as those in the ranks, I have been persuaded from time to time that the one great hindrance to the greater efficiency of our army and navy, particularly the army, is the curse of drink, and its accessibility at or to army posts is a temptation which the government should remove.

J. A. R.

Would Leave Data to Individual

As a perplexed stated clerk, I am led to wonder if the committee on vacancy and supply is contemplating a denominational "rogues' gallery." With a genius which presupposes the ingenuousness of stated clerks it has appealed to them to furnish the material. I suppose we should feel flattered at being appointed official photographers of a long list of our brethren handed us under the complimentary caption of "unemployed ministers." But I doubt not that the subjects may consider themselves justified in asking a change of venue.

I take no umbrage. But I have enough respect for the unemployed minister to persuade me to question the warrant of the committee in taking steps to secure information that should be secretly and sacredly his own until such time as he has made a voluntary application to be received into the proposed gallery.

M. H. MACLEOD.

Should Really Learn to Sing

Do you think that the church of today is abreast of the times in educating the young people how to really sing sacred music? My experience has been that the average singer of today has absolutely no knowledge of expression, the result of feeling, and that the church is losing this great art of expression. In other words the great heart songs of a few years ago, that meant so much to the church and were sung in the streets, in the office, and in the shop, are being replaced by those little foolish popular songs that express nothing and mean less. The musical instinct of the people I think is just as great as ever, as they will turn out in mass for a sacred concert when they will not come out to the regular preaching, regardless of the effort made. I would like to see a real revival the country over of the old-fashioned gospel singing. What do you think about it?

G. W. D.

Seconds Bryan for Moderator

The nomination of Hon. William Jennings Bryan for the position of moderator of the next General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A., which convenes in Atlanta, Ga., on the third Thursday in May, is most timely. I therefore second the nomination and move that nominations now close and that this most distinguished private citizen of the world be elected by acclamation.

J. P. HICKS.

Immortality's Hope in Christ Only

I arose from reading a recent article by Professor Tweedy of Yale University on "Why I Believe in Immortality" dissatisfied. To the intelligent reader and believer in the New Testament there can be no doubt either of the immortal life of the righteous or of the eternal death of the impenitent, and any hope held out to anyone in the future life outside of a simple faith in Jesus Christ is not only unwarranted but indulges a false hope. Of course to the Christian those grand and thrilling words of the Master to Martha are enough: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." And we should not forget that he who uttered these words also uttered those other words: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Speculation, therefore, on the immortality of the soul is idle, and all the learning of the ages amounts to nothing when weighed in the balance with the declarations of holy writ.

Job in the ancient days, hedged about as he was by "miserable comforters," asks the question, "If a man die shall he live again?" And he afterwards answers it in the fullness of faith which God gave him, and out of the secret inner consciousness which he gives to every loyal, seeking soul: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, whom I shall see for myself."

Tennyson, in his wonderful poem, "Crossing the Bar," says with entire confidence:

"For though from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar."

One of the sweetest promises of the Saviour in the Testament, which is a book of transcendent joy, is this: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." And nothing in the universe of God shall ever be able to pluck from the believer this faith, this hope, this immortality, which begins here and which shall run parallel with the years of God himself.

HENRY A. LAVELY.

An Old Testament Textbook

About the Bible in the public schools, why not prepare a textbook from the Old Testament, made up of texts, precepts, rules for living. So much can be found there—even the beautitudes have their counterpart in the Old Testament. Let the pupils every one learn one text at home and recite it first thing in the morning—every class to have its own exercise. Would they not know more about it than by hearing these passages read from the Bible in a humdrum way, with no thought of its meaning? Teachers and families would be educated also.

A. A.

Men Study Bible in Topeka

A scene suggesting at once a brotherly feeling between the men of two denominations and at the same time answering the question whether men really go to Sunday school is furnished from Topeka, Kan. The brotherhood classes of First M. E. church and First Presbyterian church of Topeka are gathered for a joint session, with Dr. Pettyjohn of the Methodist church as teacher. He was chairman of the Men and Religion committee of one hundred and is national medical director of a large fraternal insurance order, with headquarters in Topeka.

Among the men attending class on the day this picture was taken was the treasurer of the Santa Fe railroad, a United States marshal, a former lieutenant governor, a sheriff, two bank presidents, physicians, lawyers and men looking for jobs.

The brotherhood of First Presbyterian church, of which Dr. S. S. Estey is pastor, has a membership of about seventy-five and is taught by E. W. Rankin, business manager for a Topeka paper. They occupy a room in a new $30,000 Bible school house and take an active part in the work of the church. They often sing together at the closing exercises of the school and during the two summer months when the church quartet takes a vacation the brotherhood class furnishes a chorus for the church services. From this class has come the chairman of the social service committee of the city federation of churches, which is undertaking a social survey of Topeka.

Topeka Brotherhood Bible Classes

Bankers, lawyers, politicians and men out of work are in this joint meeting of Presbyterians and Methodists

Specimen of Brotherhood Work

Minneapolis has eighteen Presbyterian churches to serve its 300,000 population. Several of the weaker ones have had to depend upon the stronger in part for their support. The brotherhood committee of presbytery, headed by Rev. T. W. Graham, in casting about for a local objective big enough and vital enough to appeal to every man, decided to show a brotherly interest in the work of these churches. A banquet and rally of men was held in Westminster church Dec. 3 to start a campaign for $20,000. Such work as this will soon silence the question, "Is the brotherhood accomplishing anything vital in the church?"

J. T. H.

What the Men Are Doing

The men of First church, Coraopolis, Pa., have undertaken to abolish six saloons and two wholesale liquor houses in that town.

The men's club of the church at Fond du Lac, Wis., is undertaking a campaign to wipe out the vice district in that city.

Men of Joliet, Ill., at a union meeting of laymen of the four Presbyterian churches set on foot a movement to establish a mission in the northwestern portion of the city. The four congregations intend to work together.

The men's club of First church, Joplin, Mo., is taking a prominent part in advertising the church. An electric sign has been erected indicating the church's location. Cards are used in the street cars also. Dr. W. M. Cleaveland, pastor, says that his brotherhood is doing excellent work in stimulating church attendance.

The brotherhood of Carmel church, Edge Hill., Pa., last year found employment for fifty men through a committee of the organization.

A Visit to the Doll Doctor

(Continued from page 17)

I had hardly finished reading Vera's letter when an agonized father came rushing in with a doll's body in one hand and the head in the other. "Can you help me?" he cried. "My little girl had this doll on Christmas Day. She calls it her Baby Bunt. She is sick in bed and this morning the doll slid onto the floor. Just look at her now! And my little sick girl is crying at home for her Baby Bunt. Can't you fix her for me right away? I'll pay you anything."

Immediately Dr. Voitier took down from a shelf a box of heads, selected one just like Baby Bunt's, sewed it on tight to her kid body, and, behold! before we knew it Baby Bunt was born again and the happy father departed to carry her home.

"That's one of the urgent Christmas cases I told you about," said the doctor as he pocketed his fee. "Between Christmas and New Year's is the time for broken heads. Now in the summer I don't have enough cases to keep me busy.

"Wherever there are French people you'll find doll doctors. There's one in St. Louis and several in New York, but I am the only one in the South. I don't believe folks know much about us doll doctors, for last November when there was a convention here in this city, and people came from New York and other places in the North, we had a steady stream of visitors. They all said they'd never heard of a dolls' hospital, and ever since we've been getting the most old-fashioned looking dolls you ever saw to fix up. I suppose they all looked up their grandma's dolls when they went home and sent them to us to have their systems strengthened and toned up in general. And they needed it. They were relics from 'way back, I tell you."

I was as bad as the bankers. I, too, until then, had never heard of a dolls' hospital. But now I know that the little girls in New Orleans are the happiest doll mothers in the land, because they know that no matter what happens to their children they can always send them to the doctor and he will make them as good as new.

Examples of Church Union

The woman's society of Sutherlin, Ore., church held a bazar recently, uniting with the women of the Episcopal denomination and using the parish house of the latter church.

The building formerly occupied by the Congregationalists at Owego, N. Y., may become a social center, that congregation having united with the Presbyterians. Baptists and Methodists are also interested in plans for this new work.

The Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists and Disciples of Alma, Mo., have decided to unite in one congregation and support a nonsectarian church. Most of the inhabitants are German and individual efforts to support an English church have been unavailing.

At the December meeting of Portland Presbytery the committee on home missions was authorized to enter into an arrangement with the Oregon Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church by which the Presbyterians vacate the field at Knappa in favor of the Methodists and they vacate the field at Fairview to strengthen the Presbyterian church there.

Stray Shots at the Liquor Army

Army and navy officers expect that orders will soon be issued forbidding the use of intoxicating liquors by aviators attached to these two branches of the service. It is said that officials of the departments feel that drinking has a bad effect on the men engaged in this risky work.

According to The Messenger, the organ of Guatemala mission, the same amount of money spent annually in the United States for intoxicating liquors could build 3,000 churches costing $5,000 each and as many parsonages worth $3,500 each. In addition every other church could have a chapel worth $1,000. There could also be 500 girls' seminaries with 1,000 acres each, 500 Y. M. C. A. buildings costing $50,000 and as many similar buildings for girls. The same 500 towns could have libraries worth $20,000 apiece and there could be erected fifty-one hospitals in each of the five Central America republics. There could also be homes for the crippled, the blind and the feeble-minded, in addition to ministers, teachers, nurses and doctors to manage the various institutions. There would then be left $825,000,000 for endowment.

The steady advance in the revenue from liquor from 23,000,000 rupees in 1874-5 to 40,000,000, 55,000,000 and 80,000,000 respectively in the three following decades and further up to 105,000,000 in 1910-11 and to 118,000,000, the budget estimate for the current year, is a movement in an antisocial direction, and contrasts unfavorably with the rapid sentiment and advance of total abstinence legislation in the United States of America, says The Bombay Guardian.

The city of Portland, Ore., has installed twenty public drinking fountains at a cost of $10,000. They are located on prominent sidewalk corners in the retail district. The fountains were donated by S. Benson, a millionaire timber operator. The saloonkeepers are complaining, declaring the beer trade has fallen off 30 per cent since the advent of the fountains, says The American Issue. People quench their thirst for nothing now who formerly drank several glasses of beer daily.

Has Organized 144 Sunday Schools

During the last seventeen years Samuel A. Blair, Sunday school missionary in Duluth Presbytery, has organized forty churches, of which twenty-four are Presbyterian. He has also aided in building twenty Presbyterian churches and six manses. Much of the traveling he has done has been on foot visiting many out-of-the-way places in his efforts to establish the 144 Sunday schools organized during his service. He has also reorganized a number of schools and has held sixty-one Sunday school institutes. It is estimated that he has traveled at least 180,000 miles. The population of Duluth Presbytery is growing rapidly and it covers a territory equal in area to two Vermonts.

Clergy and Laity

Rev. Howard W. Johnston, who resigned from Ackley, Iowa, after a successful pastorate of four and a half years, is now studying in Glasgow and preaching regularly at the Pollokshields Trinity United Free church.

Augustus V. Hamburg, the new president of the Board of Trade, Newark, is an elder in First church and a teacher for many years in the Sunday school. His daughter, Miss Mabel Hamburg, is one of the best known volunteer Sunday school workers in Newark. Mr. Hamburg succeeds Curtiss R. Burnett, who is an officer in Belleville Avenue Congregational church.

Dr. Joseph N. Hallock, the venerable editor of The Christian Work, is confined to his bed at his home in Brooklyn. The good doctor's mind, however, continues active, and even from his sickbed propagates his favorite "hobby"—simplified spelling. He has recently prepared a half-humorous pamphlet entitled "Bad Spells: A Dialogue Between an Old-Fashioned Conservative and a Simplified Speller," which he offers to send free to any-one curious to see his arguments for the revision of English spelling.

The second annual celebration of Founder's Day was held at Coe College Dec. 10. Following a banquet in the dining hall of Sinclair Memorial chapel, an address was made by Professor J. Ralph Jewell of the Kansas normal school. Professor Jewell is a grandson of Daniel Coe, whose original gift brought this college into existence. The recent success of the local financial campaign lent a new glow to the celebration of Founder's Day this year.

"The Pension Habit"

(Editorial from The New York Mail)

"The Telephone Company has followed the fashion in instituting a pension system for employes. We are getting quite in the pension habit. A great many big business concerns in some way share their profits with employees, or bestow reward for long and faithful service.

"Nearly everybody, it would almost seem, lives and works in the happy advance rays of a sunset of 'retirement.' The soldier and sailor are to retire on three-quarters pay. Considering their troubles, the hello girls ought to be worth as much consideration.

"An irresistible law, the higher law of the eternally just, has compelled all this. And we have yet seen only the beginning.

"Who would have dreamed of this pension tendency fifty years ago? The clergymen did not, as they went out to preach righteousness on pitiful pay. And it is noteworthy that these very preachers are about the only workers now left without adequate pension. The school teacher, the college professor, Mr. Carnegie has pensioned. It might be worth while for the Church, the richest institution in all the land, to do the right thing by her old preachers.

"These men, however, who did so much to bring about this new day, are not advancing their claim."

Does the Church care?

Does the Presbyterian Church care?

Does your Church care?

Do you care?

If interested, consult your pastor, or write to

MINISTERIAL RELIEF AND SUSTENTATION
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

Sixty Churches in Campaign

W. A. Sunday Starts Services in Columbus—Interest Aroused in China Fund—Presbytery Discusses Evangelism.

COLUMBUS—The new tabernacle to be used during the campaign led by Dr. W. A. Sunday has been completed. It occupies the former site of the old Goodale Street auditorium and is estimated to have a seating capacity of fully 10,000. To comply with building restrictions the sides have been constructed of sheet steel. The dedication of the tabernacle took place Thursday evening, Dec. 26, the address being delivered by Rev. Ernest Bourner Allen, pastor of Washington Street Congregational church of Toledo. Friday evening the choir of 2,000 voices was organized and Sabbath, Dec. 29, the campaign was formally opened by Dr. Sunday, who, with his family, had been resting at Winona Lake, Ind., after a very successful campaign in McKeesport, Pa. About sixty churches are united for the Columbus meeting. Cottage prayer meetings have been held throughout the city for several weeks.

The visit of representatives of the Foreign Board awakened among local churches a new interest in the work of the board in China. The addresses of Doctors Hays, Pentecost, Bible, Mr. McConaughy and others portrayed with telling effect the present wide open door through which the church cannot consistently fail to pass in executing her mission to evangelize the world. It is hoped that the special contributions from local Presbyterians will reach $6,000.

The winter meeting of presbytery was held in Broad Street church, most of the day being devoted to an evangelistic conference. The speakers were Reverends W. A. Perrins, J. A. Liggitt, Hugh Leith, W. M. Hindman and J. T. Britan, and H. M. Shelbarner. Rev. Walter H. Houston presided at the forenoon session and Rev. S. S. Palmer at the afternoon.

Presbytery held an adjourned meeting in Central church Dec. 23. W. J. Zuck, D. D., was received from the East Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren in Christ.

During the period of vacancy Nelson Memorial church has been supplied for several Sabbaths by Rev. J. L. McWilliams of Wilmington. W. H.

All Sects in Cleveland Church

Old Stone Edifice Becomes Central Rallying Point for Religious Gatherings—Miles Park Has Eightieth Anniversary.

CLEVELAND—A stranger entering the Old Stone church recently might have been at loss to know just where he was, for the walls of the chapel were decorated with pictures of Methodist churches and statistical tables setting forth the work of that sister denomination in northern Ohio. This situation was due to the wide popularity of the church as a central place for religious gatherings. There is an instinctive prayer in the hearts of all local Christians that the pioneer location of this beloved church may long be maintained. Following the recent Presbyterian exhibit, Cleveland Methodists prepared a somewhat similar educational and inspirational display of their churches and benevolent institutions, and the Old Stone church was selected as the place of conference. The Federation of Churches likewise holds its business meetings here. Dr. A. B. Meldrum, pastor, and his assistant, Elder Livington Fewsmith, have arranged for a number of Sunday afternoon rallies in behalf of "Good Citizenship." At the first meeting addresses were delivered by Rabbi Wolsey, Hon. James R. Garfield and Superintendent Jackson of the Associated Charities.

At the winter meeting of presbytery Edward V. Belles, formerly an elder in Bethany church and at present a senior in Lane Seminary, was examined for licensure and then dismissed to Cincinnati Presbytery to accept a call to Richmond church. The pastoral relation between North church and Rev. Alexander Mackenzie Lamb was dissolved. At a banquet given in North church in honor of the retiring pastor he was presented with a fine gold watch, the loving gift of the men of the congregation.

The last Sunday of December Miles Park church celebrated its eightieth anniversary. In the morning the pastor, Arthur C. Ludlow, D. D., delivered an historical discourse and a platform meeting was held in the evening. New Year's evening there was a social gathering in connection with an exhibit of pictures and charts showing the history of the church. Miles Park church was originally First church of Newburg, which is now a corporate part of the city. The first sermon was preached in Newburg 110 years ago by a Connecticut home missionary and there were stated services prior to the formal organization of the church in 1832. The service of the present pastor, now in his twenty-seventh year, and that of his predecessor, Elroy Curtis, D. D., have extended forty-six of the eighty years of the existence of the church.

All the Protestant churches in the part of the city commonly known as the West side have united in a tabernacle campaign, which will commence in January under leadership of Evangelist Lyons, who has conducted successful meetings in various Ohio cities. Bethany church, of which Wilber C. Mickey, D. D., is pastor, is the only Presbyterian society in the section of the city where this campaign is to be waged, but the meetings will doubtless wield an influence not confined to the West side. ARTHUR C. LUDLOW.

School and College

R. M. Stevenson, D. D., president of Westminster College, Salt Lake City, has resigned.

Park College will be represented in the next Congress by P. D. Becker of Joplin, Mo., recently elected.

Huron College has an increased number of college students this year, a stronger faculty and triumphing football team, but is struggling to secure sufficient funds for current expenses until the income from the endowment funds is all available.

News of the death of Professor Emeritus Sarah Skinner at Washington, D. C., has come to the Western College. Professor Skinner was connected with Western College as head of the Latin department for thirty-two years. In 1907 she was retired on the Carnegie Foundation pension fund.

Rev. R. E. Flickinger, after giving eight years to educational work among the Choctaw freedmen in southern Oklahoma as superintendent of Oak Hill Academy, Valliant, has returned to Rockwell City, Iowa. His last work has been the preparation of an attractive bulletin on fruits and sweet potatoes that is intended to carry the educational work of the academy in a definite and permanent form to the homes of the people. Rev. W. H. Carroll of Garvin, who has been an assistant during the last six years, becomes his successor. The institution is under the Freedmen's Board.

Links Church to People

An interesting community congress in a country church was held not long ago in St. John's chapel on the prairies near Alliance, Neb. Although the church is seventeen miles from a railroad and neighbors live from one to three miles apart, there was an attendance of 125 at the meeting. On the Friday evening preceding the main program the pastor-evangelist of Box Butte Presbytery gave a stereopticon lecture. On Saturday there were songs, speeches on practical subjects, out of door sports and the awarding of premiums to those who had won them in the contest for prize vegetables and grains. Home missions was given a place on the program and the church as a whole took on a new significance to the country people round about.

Church Advertising in Dakota

First church, Castlewood, S. D., under the pastor, Rev. W. Robert Coventry, who lately came from Seymour, Iowa, is forging ahead. The session believes that still larger congregations are possible, and will begin to advertise in the local papers. At the last meeting of the committee on advertising Elder H. H. Curtis reported sufficient material completed or in outline for display advertisements for the next three months.

Prohibition State Is Rich

The Epworth Herald says that the last census shows that Kansas is the second richest state in the union, and that while the per capita wealth of its neighbor, Missouri, is $300, that of Kansas is $1,700. When a banker of another state asked for an explanation why Kansas had so much larger per capita bank deposits than his own state the reply was that "Kansas puts her money in the banks, while you put yours in the saloons."

Pears'

Pears' Soap furnishes all the skin needs, except water. Just how it cleanses, softens and freshens the delicate skin-fabric, takes longer to expound than to experience. Use a cake.

Sold in every quarter of the globe.

WILDE'S BIBLE PICTURES

The Greatest Supplementary Aid to the Study of the Sunday School Lessons Published

Beautifully printed on heavy coated paper, 6x8 inches in size; 800 subjects. Price, one cent each. No order for less than ten received.

PICTURE SETS

Illustrating the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons for 1913. Consists of sixty (60) pictures. Enclosed in an attractive portfolio, 50 cents postpaid.

W. A. WILDE COMPANY, 120 Boylston St., Boston Western Office 509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Civic Hosts Cite Law to Mayor

Parade of Men Protests Against New Year's Orgy—Farewell Service in Old First Church Is Impressive.

CHICAGO—The civic forces of Chicago under the lead of organizations for ministers and laymen have been aroused over the license given cafes to remain open until 3 o'clock New Year's morning. As a demonstration in favor of closing the cafes at 1 o'clock, as the city ordinance prescribes, a number of men marched from First Methodist church to the city hall Monday noon to appeal to the mayor and chief of police to enforce the law and prevent the saturnalian scenes which have come to be a disgrace to most large cities. The Law and Order League and the Christian Endeavorers took the lead among the laymen and made arrangements to investigate actual conditions on New Year's Eve by engaging tables in prominent cafes. The city officials relied on "precedent."

TWO CONGREGATIONS NOW UNITED

The last preaching service in the present building of First church last Sunday, in which the congregation of Forty-First Street church joined, was peculiarly impressive. Monday night the two congregations met in what is now the new First church edifice at 41st street and Grand boulevard and elected officers and transacted other business incident to the union of the two societies. Dr. John Newton Freeman, who has been supplying First church for two years, preached Sunday and Dr. W. C. Covert, Forty-First Street pastor, spoke on the significance of the merger of the two churches. The music in connection with the last service under the direction of Philo Adams Otis, choirmaster for forty-two years, was noteworthy. The organ as well as the memorial windows will be removed to the building henceforth to be occupied and next Sunday communion will be celebrated. Dr. Covert will officiate, assisted by Dr. Freeman.

A portion of the pageant of "Darkness and Light," one of the great events of "The World in Chicago," was given in the Coliseum Monday night before a large gathering of those who will be workers in the missionary exposition in May. This pageant was first given in connection with the exposition in London in 1908, and will be reproduced on a very large scale here. Addresses were made by a number of the prominent missionary and church leaders of the city.

The annual day of prayer for home and foreign missions under the auspices of the interdenominational committee of the Central West will be held in the woman's building of Moody Institute Thursday, Jan. 9. Mrs. O. R. Williamson, chairman of the committee, will preside at the morning session, which opens at 10:30 o'clock. The afternoon meeting will be at 2 o'clock.

ASSISTANT PASTOR AT FOURTH CHURCH

Fourth church is adding to its force of workers in preparation for its enlarged work in connection with the new church plant now under construction on Lake Shore drive. Rev. Claude Porter Terry, for the past four years pastor of East Genesee Street church, Syracuse, N. Y., has accepted a call as assistant pastor. Mr. Terry was an assistant to Dr. John Timothy Stone in Baltimore and has been very successful in Syracuse. Fourth church now has no ordained assistant, although there are several helpers in charge of special departments. H. A. Dalzell will come Feb. 1 from Portland, Ore., to assist in the work of the men's club, and additional help in connection with the music of the church is planned. Mr. Dalzell has been student secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for Washington, Oregon and British Columbia.

Thomas E. D. Bradley, a Presbyterian, is the newly elected president of the Chicago Church Federation Council. He has been vice-president.

The men's club of Second church is planning aggressive work for boys and is also conducting gatherings for men Friday evenings as well as on Sunday afternoons.

Founder of Mills College Dead

Missionary and Educator Passes Away Near Oakland—Churches at San Jose Are Active —Talk on Turkish Conditions.

SAN FRANCISCO—California has lost one of its ablest educators in the death of Mrs. Cyrus F. Mills on Dec. 12 at the age of 87. Mrs. Mills was born in Massachusetts in 1825. She graduated from Mount Holyoke in 1845 and taught there with Mary Lyon for four years. With her husband, Rev. Cyrus F. Mills, she then went as a missionary to India and afterwards to Hawaii until 1865, when they returned to America and conducted a young ladies' seminary in Benicia for a few years. In 1871 they established Mills Seminary for young ladies in a suburb of Oakland. Dr. Mills died some years later, but Mrs. Mills carried on the work until it became the leading institution for the education of young women on the Pacific coast, later known as Mills College. In May, 1909, Mrs. Mills resigned as head of the college, but continued as president emeritus until her death. For forty-seven years she was engaged in imparting Christian education to thousands of young women, over whom she had a wonderful influence. Dr. and Mrs. Mills were Presbyterians, and the college is distinctively Christian, though not denominational. The funeral services were conducted at the college by Rev. George G. Eldredge of St. John's church, Berkeley, and Dr. F. L. Goodspeed of First church, Oakland.

Fifty miles south of San Francisco lies San Jose. It has a population of about 30,000, with two flourishing Presbyterian churches. First church was organized in 1849 with six members. It has had three houses of worship, the second of which was destroyed in April, 1906, by the earthquake. The present building was erected in 1907-8 at a cost of $72,000, including the lot and furnishings. Rev. Harmon H. McQuilkin was called to the pastorate in 1906, and during his service the work has greatly prospered. The carefully pruned membership now numbers nearly 900 and is well organized for work. Over forty men are members of the "Pocket Testament League." In 1891 First church sent out 121 of its members, who formed Second church. It now has a membership of over 500. The present pastor, Rev. George I. Long, was installed in 1908.

Rev. H. K. Sanborne, pastor of Brooklyn church, Oakland, was for four years a professor in Robert College, Constantinople. At the ministers' meeting in San Francisco recently he gave an interesting account of Turkish conditions. Forty-five colleges there, he said, have 3,000 students, and 400 mosques in Constantinople have been changed into Christian churches.

JAMES CURRY.

STEADY HAND

A Surgeon's Hand Should Be the Firmest of All

"For fifteen years I have suffered from insomnia, indigestion and nervousness as a result of coffee drinking," said a surgeon the other day. (Tea is equally injurious because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee).

"The dyspepsia became so bad that I had to limit myself to one cup at breakfast. Even this caused me to lose my food soon after I ate it.

"All the attendant symptoms of indigestion, such as heartburn, palpitation, water brash, wakefulness or disturbed sleep, bad taste in the mouth, nervousness, etc., were present to such a degree as to incapacitate me for my practice as a surgeon.

"The result of leaving off coffee and drinking Postum was simply marvelous. The change was wrought forthwith, my hand steadied and my normal condition of health was restored."

Name given upon request. Read the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavor is always uniform. Sold by grocers—50-cup tin 30 cts., 100-cup tin 50 cts.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Hymnal

REVISED

is already in use in the following fifty important churches:

Philadelphia,	Calvary
"	Second
"	Germantown, First
"	Walnut Street
"	Bethany Temple
"	Frankford
"	Bridesburg
"	Holmesburg
"	Ontario
"	North Tenth Street
"	Wissinoming
"	Calvary Mission
Pittsburgh,	Shady Avenue
"	North
"	Central
"	Grace
"	Knoxville
New York City,	First
"	University Place
"	West Park
"	Broadway
"	Rutgers
"	Woodstock
"	Woodlawn Heights
"	Olmstead Avenue
Buffalo, N. Y.,	Westminster
Troy, N. Y.,	Lansingburgh, Olivet
"	" First
Utica, N. Y.,	Olivet
Baltimore, Md.,	Second
"	Lafayette Square
Detroit, Mich.,	Fort Street
Cincinnati, Ohio,	Norwood
Zanesville, Ohio,	Central
Emporia, Kans.,	First
Eugene, Ore.,	Central
Knoxville, Tenn.,	Second
Newport, R. I.,	First
Ogden, Utah,	First
Plainfield, N. J.,	First
Davenport, Wash.,	Presbyterian Church
Modesto, Cal.,	Presbyterian Church
Des Moines, Iowa,	Cottage Grove Avenue
Muskogee, Okla.,	Bethany
Rockford, Ill.,	Westminster
Vinton, Iowa,	Presbyterian Church
Topeka, Kans.,	Second
Wilkinsburg, Pa.,	Second
Wilmington, Del.,	Westminster
Bozeman, Mont.,	First
Washington, D. C.,	Gunton Temple Mem.
Wenonah, N. J.,	Memorial
Vernon, Texas,	Presbyterian Church
Webster Groves, Mo.,	Presbyterian Church
Winona, Minn.,	First
Wheeling, W. Va.,	First
Oil City, Pa.,	First

and in over 200 churches besides.

PRICES	8vo.	Cloth,	$1.00
	12mo.	"	.75
	Words Only,	"	.65

Special rates on introduction orders.

Send for sample copy.

Presbyterian Board of Publication
Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia

Attractive Sunday Evenings

With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

Mutual confidence

Has it occurred to you that every advertisement in this paper expresses a profound compliment to our readers?

When a business house a thousand miles away chooses to pay the price of our space to present its goods to you—this in itself is a sign of discrimination.

It is presumed that you read and think—that you have ideas and tastes above the average—that you are of the class who may pick and choose of the good things of life.

We are proud of our following. We are proud of our advertisers. We are proud of the privilege of presenting each to the other. And we feel that both are benefited thereby.

THE ADVERTISING
MANAGER

Find Successor to Dr. McAfee

Dr. Albertson of Rochester Called to Lafayette Avenue Church—Church Men Help in Sane Celebration of New Year's.

NEW YORK—Lafayette Avenue church, Brooklyn, Dec. 26 sent a unanimous call to Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson, at present pastor of Central church, Rochester. It is understood that Dr. Albertson will accept. At the congregational meeting, after a unanimous vote indorsing the committee's choice, some admirer distributed copies of a Christmas hymn written by Dr. Albertson. He will succeed Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, who left the church last fall to become a professor in McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago. The founder of Lafayette Avenue church was the late Dr. Theodore F. Cuyler, whose fame was so great that ever since the society has been known as "Dr. Cuyler's church." Danied W. McWilliams was chairman of the committee on new pastor. Dr. Albertson has been pastor at Rochester for eight years and was a Methodist pastor prior to his call there. He has a fine reputation as an author. Among his books are "Safe Counsel and Sweet Comfort," "The Gospel According to Christ," "Many Voices," "Death and Afterwards," "College Sermons" and "Distinctive Ideas of Jesus." He has also written many poems and essays. Dr. Albertson was born 47 years ago in Plainfield, Ind., and was educated as a lawyer, but afterwards studied for the ministry in Garrett Bible Institute. He married Miss Florence Edith Romer of Buffalo in 1899. His pastorates before going to Rochester were Goshen, Ind.; Jamestown and Buffalo, N. Y., and Philadelphia. He received his degree of D. D. from Allegheny College.

New Year's was celebrated by a number of churches. At old First there was a choral watch night service from 11 to 12 o'clock New Year's Eve, with a short talk by Dr. Howard Duffield. Dec. 29 Dr. Jonathan C. Day spoke at the Labor temple on "Resolved, That——" On New Year's Eve there was a watch night party at the temple. Many were in costume and represented notable persons.

FAREWELL TO FRED B. SMITH

Fred B. Smith, who was the leader of the Men and Religion Movement in this country, will start Jan. 4 for a tour around the world to conduct a similar campaign in Japan, China, India and Australia. Sunday afternoon, Dec. 29, Mr. Smith gave a farewell address at a mass meeting of men in Calvary Methodist church. At the Hotel Astor Friday afternoon, Jan. 3, the national committeemen of the Men and Religion Movement will hold a reunion, at which "Godspeed" will be said to Mr. Smith, Mr. Robins and their traveling companions. In the evening Messrs. Cannon, Marling, Post, Speer and Woodward will give a dinner to the company.

Presbyterian churches entered heartily into the plan to celebrate the dying of the old year and the birth of the new in a sane manner rather than with the indecent hilarity of the last few years. The men of Brick church gathered in Herald square and joined in the singing of hymns and patriotic songs.

The regular monthly meeting of the ladies' auxiliary to the Board of Home and Foreign Missions was held in the chapel of Fifth Avenue church Dec. 27. Home missions was considered and Miss Crane, chairman of the committee on Porto Rico, talked.

DR. JOWETT'S CALENDAR UNIQUE

The unique little calendar prepared by Dr. John Henry Jowett and found every Sunday in the pews of Fifth Avenue church goes to many cities of this country and even across the water. There is a prayer by Dr. Jowett on the front page and an extract from his sermon of the preceding Sunday on the last. These take the space most congregations employ to tell the names of church officers. There is not a name on Dr. Jowett's calendar.

Under the auspices of the International Peace Forum there was a service and conference in Madison Avenue Reformed church Sunday evening, Dec. 29, in the interest of international peace. The former pastor of this church, Dr. William Carter, is now the general secretary of the forum. Dr. Henry van Dyke, who is the morning preacher here, is drawing large audiences.

The Christmas festival as celebrated each year by the Bible school of the Church of the Covenant under the direction of Superintendent J. Cleveland Cady and Organist R. L. McAll is famous for its remarkable musical and devotional character. They are demonstrating that children from even the most neglected homes, where musical taste seems to be entirely absent, can be trained to sing well. The Christmas of 1912 was celebrated at a morning service on that day lasting from 11 to 12 o'clock. The program consisted of songs, carols, chants and hymns.

Beginning Monday, Jan. 13, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery will teach a mission study class on China six successive Monday afternoons at 3 o'clock in the auditorium of the new Y. W. C. A. building, 600 Lexington avenue. Mrs. Montgomery is the leader who achieved such power in the national movement of the women's missionary jubilee, and she comes to New York under the auspices of the continuation committee of that jubilee. Mrs. Dewitt Knox, 1748 Broadway, is secretary of this committee, and from her tickets may be obtained.

Rejoice Over Defeat of Saloons

Oakmont, Pa., Decides to Remain Dry—Mayor of McKeesport to Close All Dives—Dr. Matthews to Speak.

PITTSBURG—There is general rejoicing among the ministers and Christian people of Oakmont over the victory against licensed saloons. Oakmont has never had saloons, but certain men conceived the idea that they should be installed to prevent, as they claimed, the money of the town being spent in neighboring places. The question was submitted to the people and the campaign waxed warm for several weeks. The vote was dry 268, wet 194.

A pleasing feature of the McKeesport meetings is the fact that the mayor of the city and many of the leading politicians are making an effort to clean up the town and reduce vice to a minimum. The mayor, who was one of the converts, has issued orders that all places of vice shall be closed and that all Sabbath violation shall cease. So far no arrests have been made, as the mayor declares every possible effort will be made to persuade the proprietors of illegal places to close without prosecutions.

Rev. George H. Sehlbrede, who for five years has been pastor of the Monaca Presbyterian church, Beaver Presbytery, announced his resignation Dec. 22. Mr. Sehlbrede will be one of the assistants in University Place church, New York, in charge of Emanuel chapel. During the pastorate at Monaca Mr. and Mrs. Sehlbrede have endeared themselves to the people and have greatly strengthened the church. A new parsonage was purchased and a large number added to the church. They expect to take charge in New York Jan. 12.

The executive committee of the Presbyterian Union met Dec. 23 and decided to hold a dinner for the men of the union Jan. 21. Dr. Mark A. Matthews, moderator of the Presbyterian Church, is to be in the city at that time and will be invited to address the meeting.

P. W. SNYDER.

Layman Given Additional Work

W. H. Scott of Working Body of Federal Council Engaged in Many Church Activities—Several New Pastors Charged.

PHILADELPHIA — Presbyterians of this city are gratified in having upon the new executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches as one of the five Presbyterian representatives William H. Scott, Germantown elder and chairman of the summer evangelistic committee, member of the Presbyterian Board of Publication and other important ecclesiastical bodies.

At the installation of Rev. Z. H. Capp as pastor of Cohocksink church Dr. W. D. Roberts of Temple church, Dr. W. P. Fulton and Dr. William Greenough took part.

Following such pastors as Doctors Z. M. Humphrey, Charles A. Dickey and J. Sparhawk Jones, whose term of service extended over forty years, the installation of Rev. William Muir Auld over Calvary church was attended with much interest. The preacher of the evening was Dr. Cadman of Brooklyn.

Thomas C. Moffatt, D. D., superintendent of

6%

Invest Your January Funds in 6% Bonds

EVERY year increases the number and variety of investments from which you must choose. It is desirable, therefore, to confine your selections all the more closely to established types of demonstrated value. You can do this and secure the return your money is worth.

Good Bonds provide the best adjustment of the many factors entering into the ideal investment. Bonds backed by 25 years of successful business in the most valuable commodity of its kind in the world, and that commodity an absolute necessity, are investments of such merit as to demand your consideration.

Such are the 6% Gold Bonds of the American Real Estate Company. They are based on the Company's holdings of select realty in New York. For 25 years they have paid 6% and matured at par without loss or delay, returning to investors more than $10,000,000 in principal and interest.

They are issued in these two convenient forms.

6% Coupon Bonds

In denominations of $100, $500, $1000 and upward, paying interest semi-annually, and maturing principal in ten years.

6% Accumulative Bonds

Purchasable by instalments of $25 and upward and maturing $1000 or more in 10, 15 or 20 years. Interest compounded at 6%.

Complete descriptive matter and map of New York City showing location of our properties will be sent on request. Write today.

American Real Estate Company
Founded 1888 Assets $24,134,240.39
Capital and Surplus $2,076,587.35
Room 642
527 Fifth Avenue New York

EGYPT
THE HOLY LAND

Tours to the Orient, including the Mediterranean Countries. Leave New York, Jan. 22 and Feb. 19.

OTHER TOURS: South America. Jan. 25th, Feb. 8 and Feb. 20; Round the World, Jan. 22; Japan, Feb. 15 and Mar. 15; Mediterranean Lands, frequent dates, Jan. to May.

Send for book that interests you.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB COMPANY
306 Washington St., Boston 225 Fifth Ave., New York
1005 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

Advance Ideas in

STEREOPTICONS and SLIDE RENTING
GEO. W. BOND & CO.
20 E. Randolph St.
Dept. B. Chicago

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of Th Continent by mentioning this paper when answering vertisements

Nearly Two Million Copies
Have Been Sold

Peloubet's Select Notes

On the International Sunday School Lessons for 1913
39th Annual Volume

Its constituency grows ever wider and more enthusiastic because it maintains its perennial freshness and solid worth; and its authors, Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D.D., and Amos R. Wells, Litt. D., LL.D., pack into every new volume an enormous amount of up-to-date information, novel illustration, etc.

Cloth, Price $1.00, net; $1.15 Postpaid

W. A. WILDE COMPANY
Chicago Office - Boston
509 S. Wabash Ave. 120 Boylston St.
For Sale at all Bookstores.

15,000 CHURCHES USE THE
THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box I, Lima, Ohio.

MEMORIAL WINDOWS
reach their highest excellence in the examples of color harmony and drawing, in our productions. Whether you desire simplicity or elaborateness in design or coloring, write to us before ordering. Shipments made anywhere. We submit designs and estimates on request.
Sent on application our 48-page book for Memorial Windows.
The Flanagan & Biedenweg Co.
Est. 1883. 318-322 W. Illinois St.,
CHICAGO

HELP PAY YOUR CHURCH DEBT
Have your congregation save up old magazines, periodicals and newspapers. Solicit old office records from manufacturers, scrap papers from printers and general stores. We pay the highest market prices. Write us for quotations.
PIONEER PAPER STOCK COMPANY
1-11 East Ohio Street - CHICAGO, ILL.

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect
Minneapolis, :: Minn.
Will be glad to send church booklet to churches intending to build, upon receipt of 6c postage stamps.

We have HYMN-BOOKS FOR ALL SERVICES
Let us know your needs.
The Century Co., Union Square, New York City

the Indian department of the Board of Home Missions, is announced to speak on the Indian at the monthly meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Societies of Philadelphia and Chester Presbyteries in the Witherspoon building Jan. 8 at 11 a. m.

SIX HUNDRED MEMBERS IN FIVE YEARS

Christmas Sunday marked the fifth anniversary of the coming to Bethany temple of Rev. Asa J. Ferry. Special services were held, Rev. James M. Dunham preaching in the morning and Rev. Charles R. Erdman of Princeton in the evening. This is Mr. Ferry's first pastorate. During it 600 members have been received and the Sunday school has grown to 1,000. A new stone church costing $70,000 has been erected. A Sunday school building is in contemplation.

Fifty Presbyterian ministers and laymen attended a recent inspection of Berean Industrial School for Colored Youths, Dr. Matthew Anderson principal. A luncheon was served them by the young people of Berean church.

Northern Liberties church, Rev. William M. Holderby pastor, whose session for some time has consisted of elders appointed by the presbytery from other churches, recently elected three from its own membership—Harry Barry, George Dellow and George Avery. Upon their ordination and installation on New Year's Eve a reception was given them by the congregation, which was followed by a watch night service. W. P. WHITE.

One New Member for Each Year

Coincidence in Twenty-Fifth Anniversary of Omaha Church — Ministers Will Invite Dr. Sunday—Sunday School Packed to Doors.

OMAHA—Lowe Avenue church celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary the last Sunday of 1912. The anniversary sermon was preached by Stephen Phelps, D. D., of Bellevue. J. K. Fleming, an elder from the inception of the church, gave the historical sketch. The day was signalized by the pastor, Nathaniel McGiffin, D. D., receiving twenty-five members.

The Omaha Church Federation has instructed its evangelistic committee to negotiate with Billy Sunday with a view to his coming to the city for meetings. The last quarterly meeting of the federation was in North church.

Presbyterians are speaking with much satisfaction of their newly acquired headquarters rooms in the Paxton block. Here conference, committee and ministers' meetings will be held. The personal efforts of Rev. Julius F. Schwarz are making possible the fitting up of these rooms.

Sixty men of First church gathered at luncheon in the Commercial Club rooms the Tuesday before Christmas. The men's Bible class planned the occasion in honor of their teacher, Edwin Hart Jenks, D. D. He was the recipient of a valuable gift from the class.

Robert M. Donaldson, D. D., field secretary of the Rocky mountain district, was with Westminster church the Friday before Christmas and gave his illustrated lecture on "The Trail of the Cross in the Rockies."

A reception to their new pastor, Rev. C. C. Meek, by the Castellar Street church was planned and executed with fine effect.

Parkvale church in being unable to receive more pupils into its Sunday school because of congestion in its auditorium is putting forth one of the strongest possible claims for a new building.

Omaha church leaders look forward with pleasure to the entertainment Jan. 23 of the China missionary propaganda commission from the Foreign Board. RALPH H. HOUSEMAN.

Korean Trial Resumed Jan. 9

News from Seoul indicates that the court of second instance, trying the appeal of the Koreans convicted of seditious conspiracy there, has agreed to remedy the crowning injustice of the court below and to call witnesses for the defense. The court adjourned for the holidays and will reconvene on Jan. 9, when the defense is to be heard.

Smith Granite
Monuments
Statues, Crosses, Mausoleums
by their perfection of proportions, artistic and exclusive details, and the famous Westerly granite in which they are cut, prove in truth, creations of beauty, absolutely distinctive. Two-thirds of a century we have specialized.
Booklets Mailed on Request
The Smith Granite Co.,
Westerly, R. I.
Representatives in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Syracuse

CHURCH MONEY
Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their
OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER
This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.
Write us at once for information and prices.
THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., .: CHICAGO

The Modern
Individual Communion Service
Made by Reed & Barton, has many advantages over the old style. Ask us for illustrations.
REED & BARTON, Silversmiths
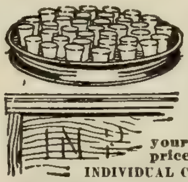
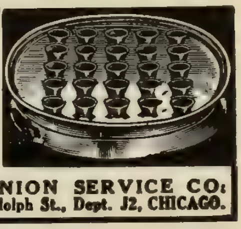
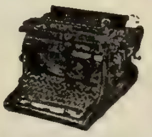
Established 1824 Represented at TAUNTON, MASS.
Fifth Avenue and 32nd Street 4 Maiden Lane
New York



The Best Way
The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago



INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO:
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.



TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED
Samples at Wholesale
Get in Business for Yourself
Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.
Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.
MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

"A FAIR FACE MAY PROVE A FOUL BARGAIN." MARRY A PLAIN GIRL IF SHE USES SAPOLIO

From Various Fields

Colorado

The brotherhood Bible class of Central church, Longmont, during the last few months has been studying the workingman in relation to social problems.

La Junta church and community experienced much spiritual refreshment and uplift from a three days' session of the Rocky mountain Bible conference. The program was given by clergymen from Denver and represented the work that the conference association is doing to extend the blessings that have come to the Denver churches from their gatherings. Dean A. C. Peck of the City temple, Denver, opened the program Dec. 8. On Monday and Tuesday addresses were given by Rev. F. W. Starring of Judson Memorial Baptist church and Rev. Perry V. Jenness of Twenty-Third Avenue Presbyterian church. The subject of the Lord's return was the main thought of the conference. The bringing of the conference to La Junta was the outgrowth of the Bible work that has been carried on by the pastor, Rev. Otis G. Dale, for the past two years. At his Wednesday evening meetings he has been giving a series of lectures on the Bible. The attendance has been more than threefold that ever before gathered at a midweek service in this church.

New Jersey

Five pupils in the Sunday school of Forest Hill church, Newark, received Bibles at the Christmas exercises, rewards for being present at Sunday school 100 Sundays and learning 100 Bible verses.

Calvary church, Camden, has recently been rededicated after extensive repairs. The steeple has been removed and the main auditorium renovated. Rev. Samuel D. Price has been pastor for the last six years, during which time the membership has been increased by 225.

Alexandria First church, Mount Pleasant, Dec. 20 gave a reception to the pastor, Rev. A. B. Jamison, and his wife. During the year improvements consisting of remodeling the Sunday school rooms, the belfry and the heating arrangements and plumbing at the parsonage have been made. The Boy Scouts and a mission study class have been organized.

Illinois

Under the auspices of the brotherhood of First church, Kankakee, Graham Taylor of Chicago recently spoke on some of the ways to handle the social evil in a city. A strong campaign is in progress to drive out the resorts.

On the evening of Dec. 12 100 men of First church, Dixon, attended a banquet given under the direction of the brotherhood. Dr. J. B. Shaw of Chicago, Rev. Floyd Barr of Sterling and the pastor of the chuch, Dr. Ralph Crissman, spoke. After the banquet a popular lecture was given in the auditorium of the church by Dr. Shaw. This is one of a series of lectures to be given this winter.

New York

Rev. J. Milton Thompson of Ninth church, Troy, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Sage Memorial church, Far Rockaway, L. I., built and endowed by Mrs. Russell Sage to perpetuate the memory of her husband. The Far Rockaway congregation has a permanent resident membership of about 200, but is greatly reenforced every summer by a host of summer visitors.

Massachusetts

First church, Worcester, had a notable gathering Dec. 17 to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the coming of the pastor, Rev. McLeod Harvey. The people presented him and his wife with both verbal and floral bouquets, a purse of gold and many wishes for a long continued work in the church.

Michigan

As a Christmas gift it was announced that funds to pay the debt of $3,200 on the church at Petoskey had been raised.

The week of prayer will be observed in Calvary church, Detroit, with preaching by the pastor, Rev. D. I. Sutherland. The annual Christmas festival was held New Year's Eve and was followed by a watch night service.

The Oklahoma House

$70,000 TRAIN LOAD
OF COTTON BEING SHIPPED TO COMPRESS

Cotton, Corn, Wheat, Oats and Alfalfa are the "Interest Payers"

Our Service to Investors

¶ In the past 20 years a trained organization has been built up. Our salaried Examiners know land values. Title Attorneys pass on the mortgage papers and abstracts. An efficient Collection Department sees that the Eastern Investors get their interest checks promptly when due. We do the worrying. We have established a reputation in Oklahoma which can be investigated. Look us up for yourself, or ask your Banker, Pastor or Lawyer to do it for you.

If your funds do not earn 6 per cent clear of expense, why not write for Mortgage List No. 707—Also our Booklet

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co. (Inc.)
OLDEST AND LARGEST MORTGAGE HOUSE INCORPORATED UNDER LAWS OF OKLAHOMA
Oklahoma City, U. S. A.
Business Founded 1892 Capital and Surplus $145,000.00

WE CAN CONVINCE YOU of the desirability of our high grade farm and city loans. To each person who has seen our advertisement in THE CONTINENT this year and answered it we have sold mortgages. These readers were satisfied as to our record and reliability and as to the safety and good profit in our securities. We feel sure we can satisfy you. Let us know about how much you have to invest at this time or in the near future, and we will be greatly pleased to tell you about our offerings and give you references and complete information about our methods. Our many years' experience in this field gives us exceptional opportunities to secure the choicest securities. No investor has lost a dollar through his investment in these mortgages, which are carefully selected in one of the best investment fields in the Northwest.

Drop us a line today.

Idaho Title & Trust Co.
BOISE - - - IDAHO

Your Money Should Make 6 to 7 Per Cent

The most conservative investors are no longer satisfied with a small return on their capital. They demand a profitable income. To such we gladly recommend our list of First Mortgages on Improved Georgia City and Farm Property. These loans yield 6 to 7 per cent, and the payment of both interest and principal is regular and unfailing. Our list of loans, literature and business record should be of interest to you. It will be mailed immediately upon request.

Sessions Loan & Trust Co.
MARIETTA, GA.

GOOD 6% Farm Mortgages
The BEST and SAFEST Investment on Earth.
Write us for information regarding our Farm Mortgages on lands located in the fertile James River Valley, North Dakota. We guarantee to look after collection of interest so that the investment will net you 6%. Write us for lists.

H. J. JOHNSON LAND AND CATTLE CO.
OAKES. - - NORTH DAKOTA

COLONIAL TRVST AND SAVINGS BANK
La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.
3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

6% 7% We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request
JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

5% FARM MORTGAGES
ON IOWA and MINNESOTA FARMS are the SAFEST FORM of INVESTMENT—Tested by our customers for 40 years. We collect and remit interest wherever investors desire. Write for booklet and list.
ELLSWORTH AND JONES.
IOWA FALLS, IOWA.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $300,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

Financial Situation

Workers Have Pay Raised—Steel Orders Are Large—Liquidation on Wall Street Continues—One Way to Invest at Home.

There are no statistics on the number of boys and girls who received a savings bankbook with a substantial deposit as a Christmas present, but it is safe to say that those who did were given one of the best presents possible. Over the country a number of different industrial concerns announced increases in wages. From the standpoint of the money market the increase in wages of unskilled employees of the United States Steel Corporation is perhaps most significant. Orders are flowing to the steel mills in increasing volume, and this year promises to be a large one in amount of output.

The announcement of the public service company of New Jersey that the minimum wage of its women employees shall be $9 a week is also significant to the workers for welfare of employees and may go far toward fixing a minimum wage for workers in other large concerns.

Stocks May Be Much Lower

Liquidation of securities on Wall street continues and it is expected that stocks will be much lower before there is an upward turn in the market. The monetary situation on the European continent is said to be worse than a year ago, as a large amount of coin has been withdrawn from circulation in Austria and France. Interest has centered on action of English and German financial centers in relation to the rate of discount, but it is generally agreed that the conservative action of these bankers has been beneficial to the situation in general. In connection with the present slump on Wall street the letter of Professor E. A. Ross, the sociologist and a graduate of Coe, a Presbyterian college, in Everybody's Magazine is interesting and illuminating to those to whom Wall street is a deep mystery. Dr. Ross comments on the remedy for stock gambling proposed by Thomas E. Lawson and shows how the opportunities for investment by local capitalists have changed with the formation of trusts. Formerly a man with his savings could take an interest in a soap factory, a cracker factory or other local concern and have some personal supervision over the plant which was using his money. With the amalgamation of industrial enterprises the money is invested far away and is controlled by people he has never seen. In buying stock in these corporations he often pays for the added value assumed to have been given the concern because it has united with several smaller ones.

Start in Savings Important

This letter of Dr. Ross's might be used to good advantage by the people who have farm mortgages to sell. When money is loaned on land the investment can be controlled after the fashion of people who formerly put their money into local factories. With many peo-

A Farm Mortgage Specialist

The requirements: Carefulness, good judge of land values, legal proficiency, financial responsibility, experience and honesty—these are a few.

Successful, shrewd business men, men of large financial affairs, are buying my Farm Mortgages. Enough said.

Write me today for Booklet "C," list of offerings and references.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker
ARDMORE, OKLAHOMA

Our First Mortgages on Oregon and Washington Farms will net the investor 6% to 6½%. Every mortgage we sell is secured by an improved farm worth from two and one-half to five times the amount of the loan. We have invested our own money in every mortgage we offer. Write for list and booklet.

THE DEVEREAUX MORTGAGE COMPANY
1014-1017 Spalding Bldg. PORTLAND, OREGON

8% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Income sure. Our mortgages never exceed 30 per cent actual value of security. Every farm is examined by our salaried inspector. We collect and remit interest free of charge, and net you Eight per cent. Our field is the rich agricultural valley of Eastern New Mexico. Diversified crops; prosperous farmers. Write for information and sample application of $500.00 loan on improved 160 acre farm.

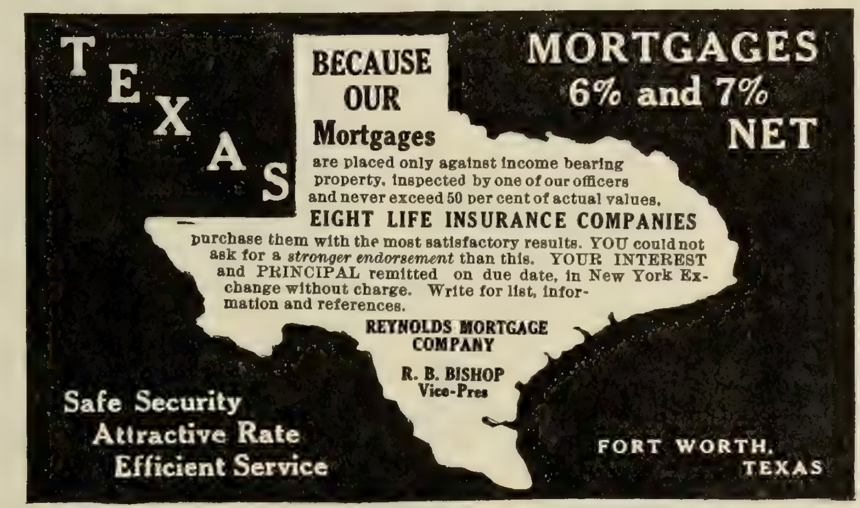
THE UNION MORTGAGE CO.,
105 West Grand Ave., Clovis, New Mexico

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidations of Other Banks

CAPITAL, SURPLUS and UNDIVIDED PROFITS
$14,500,000.00
LA SALLE ST. and JACKSON BLVD.



TEXAS

MORTGAGES
6% and 7%
NET

BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values. EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY
R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres

Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

7% 20 Years successful experience placing LOANS in the Southwest 7½%

Choice FARM LOANS in the RED RIVER Valley in S. E. Oklahoma, N. E. Texas and S. W. Arkansas, on improved farms at not to exceed 33⅓% actual value of security. The home of long staple cotton, corn, oats, alfalfa, fruits and vegetables. Average annual rainfall 45 inches and good soil, insuring certainty and fulfillment. Diversified farming; prosperous community. Write for information, booklet and map.

THE SECURITY MORTGAGE COMPANY
Individual responsibility over $1,000,000. Broad St., Texarkana, Ark.-Texas

Place Your Funds in Safe Securities.

No matter if you have a large or small amount for investment, a well placed First Mortgage upon an improved or cultivated farm can always be depended upon to yield a liberal rate of interest with the assurance of prompt payment of interest and principal at maturity.

My offerings range in amounts from $500.00 to $5,000.00 bearing 5½% and 6% interest. All loans carefully inspected and closed with our own funds before being offered for sale. Interest and principal collected without charge. Correspondence invited and detailed information with references and list of offerings will be mailed upon request.

G. W. HART, President Merchants' Bank, Bryant, S. D.

Farm Mortgages 6%

Capital and Surplus, $350,000.00
Send for pamphlet "C." Interest and principal collected free. Highest references. Clients in 32 States. Established in 1883

E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St. Chicago.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
Incorporated 1908
LENDERS ON FARMS SINCE 1873
FARM MORTGAGES IN ALBERTA

with Government Guarantee of Title and our special agreement, net 6%. Address Kingman N. Robins, Treasurer, Granite Building, Rochester, New York.

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

ple, however, the saving habit is what is lacking rather than places to invest.

Although railing at the high cost of living has quieted for a time, the cost is still going upward, or was on Dec. 1, according to Bradstreet's. The index figure then was the highest it has been since the civil war. Breadstuffs and live stock were lower than on Nov. 1, but provisions soared and leather, textile and coal were higher.

Many Revivals in Progress

T. F. Mitchell, pastor of the church at Rising Sun, Ind., has recently held evangelistic services.

W. E. Gray, assisted by Dr. Grossman, synodical superintendent of Sunday school work, held evangelistic services at Aurora, Ind.

Rev. H. A. Brown of Emerson, Neb., assisted by Rev. R. B. Budd, pastor of Verdel, Neb., church held special services for revival extending over seventeen days.

Calvary church, Camden, N. J., has united with near-by Baptist and M. E. churches in a series of meetings, which began Dec. 27 under the leadership of Rev. Henry Ostrom.

Evangelist J. C. Beitel of Wichita, Kan., recently closed a two weeks' series of meetings at Eskridge, Kan. Five husbands and their wives are among new church members.

Evangelistic meetings were recently conducted at Mount Nebo, Kan. Rev. Clay Babbitt, minister in charge, was assisted by the pastor-evangelist, Rev. D. C. Smith, part of the time.

Rev. S. E. McDonald of Vandalia, Mo., has held his meetings at Central Union, Walnut Grove and Antioch. He held the first two alone, but was ably assisted in the third by Rev. C. S. Adams of the Home Board.

Dr. Francis E. Smiley of Denver has just closed a week of special services at Timnath, Colo. Several heads of families were baptized, among them a grandfather and grandmother, their daughter and son-in-law, who brought their three children for baptism. Rev. James Miller is pastor.

Rev. Frederick Tonge has just completed a series of special meeting for Rev. F. H. Newton of Creston, Wash. Each night the congregation grew in numbers, and the interest was unflagging from the very first. In October Mr. Tonge also assisted Rev. H. Livingstone in three weeks' meetings in the new church at Garfield, Wash.

C. G. Jordan, D. D., who has been holding a five weeks' series of evangelistic meetings at Cherokee, Iowa, under the auspices of all the Protestant churches, concluded his work Dec. 15. Out of this work have come movements one of which will probably result in a Y. W. C. A. Another is among the men, who have organized a men's Christian union for the continuation of personal work and improvement of the town morally and spiritually. Dr. Jordan begins his next meeting in Caldwell, Ohio, Jan. 5.

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853
Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges
A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.
Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Glendale College Glendale, Ohio Suburban to Cinctnnat
Young women may enter the second semester February 3d, to their advantage. Liberal arrangements and superior teachers in every department.
MISS R. J. DEVORE, President.

Tennessee

Greeneville and Tusculum College
Strong Faculty. Healthful climate. Broad and liberal courses. Positive Christian influences. Expenses reasonable. Pres., Rev. C. O. GRAY, D.D., Greeneville, Tenn.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

EDUCATIONAL EDUCATIONAL

Pennsylvania

B For Young Women
BEECHWOOD
A Cultural and Practical School
JENKINTOWN, PA.
Has a twofold aim: to discover and develop each pupil's aptitude for some definite life-work; and to seek true culture through academic and social training. These are of equal importance. And both are successfully accomplished here. College Preparatory, College Departments, Conservatory of Music, Art, Arts and Crafts, Oratory. Courses in Domestic Arts and Sciences, Secretaryship, Normal Gymnastics, Normal Kindergarten, as electives.
Free, healthful country life near Philadelphia. Unusual buildings. Rooms with private bath. Moderate terms. Apply for catalogue to
M. H. REASER, Ph.D., President. :: Mrs. THEODORA B. RICHARDS, Associate

Tennessee

WARD SEMINARY for GIRLS and YOUNG WOMEN
IRA LANDRITH, D.D., LL.D. PRESIDENT — NASHVILLE, TENN. FOUNDED 1865 — J. D. BLANTON, LL.D. VICE-PRESIDENT AND CHAIRMAN OF FACULTY
Sincere pretensions, true culture, honest work
Ward Seminary, the oldest of Nashville's non-sectarian institutions of learning for young women, has annually far the largest number of local patrons, the leading educators of the community among them. Seminary, Special Academic and College Preparatory Courses taught by college trained teachers of successful experience. Certificates admit, without examination, to leading universities and colleges—Vanderbilt, Chicago, Vassar, Wellesley, Smith, Randolph-Macon, Etc. All but one of the teachers in Piano, Voice, Violin, and the other departments of the Ward Conservatory have had several years' drill under European masters. Expression directed by an artist educated in America, Canada and England. Art a specialty. Home Economics scientifically presented in all branches. Swimming, boating, horseback riding, tennis—all kinds of indoor and outdoor physical education—led by two experts. New and modern buildings, with private bath in every room, hygenic ventilation, hardwood floors, 300 feet of lovely sun parlors, roof gardens—half a million dollars being invested—on large forest campus in the city's university and palatial residence section; ready for use by September, 1913. Every needed comfort now. Boarding students admitted and easily classified any week of the current school year. Allowance made for time lost.
Address WARD SEMINARY, Nashville, Tennessee

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR
Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Illinois

The School That Makes For Manly, Self-Reliant Men
BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY
The Headmaster and Instructors are all men of wide experience in the "Boy Problem"—all University Graduates. BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY is ideally located in a town of 1500, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college; Graduate Courses in Academic, Normal, Commercial, Instrumental and Vocal Music. Have a fine military band The ideal school for YOUR boy. For information, write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILLINOIS.

BIBLE STUDY BY CORRESPONDENCE
Four Courses: Bible Doctrine, Practical Christian Work, Chapter Summary, Synthetic Bible Studies; each independent. Begin any time. Certificate at end of any course. Students all over the world.
THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE, 153 Institute Place, Chicago.

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.
They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

LAKE FOREST COLLEGE
offers a liberal training under experienced professors and excellent provision for the physical and social welfare of its students, in a beautiful environment. For information address
JOHN S. NOLLEN, President, Lake Forest, Illinois

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS
An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE
OFFERS
To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.
IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.
38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Kansas

Oswego College Oswego, Kansas | Vocational-Cultural for young women

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School
Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place. Catalogue mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.

Ten Helps for All Laymen
in This Issue

Men who read The World review each week in The Continent find there just the beginning of interest in the paper for laymen. This selection of typical helps is for them:

1. Do You Own Property You Want Protected? Read the first page editorial and tell yourself if the fear of God has a cash value.
2. What Is Your Opinion of Tom Lawson? The editor has a comment, first column, page 9.
3. Are Meetings of Men Worth While? One was held at Dubuque recently, page 9.
4. One Need Not Be a Preacher to Preach: See the stimulating suggestions in Dr. Verkuyl's article, page 12.
5. Did You Ever Visit a Social Settlement? See what a casual visit of a young woman has done for a city, page 13.
6. To Draw Your Boy to You as a Chum: Show him the picture on page 17 and tell him how you used to saw wood.
7. To Strengthen Your Faith: Get an idea from Dr. Wicher's comments and say something in prayer meeting next week, page 19.
8. To Help You Over a Reluctance About Going to Sunday School: See on page 22 how Topeka men study the Bible.
9. To Answer the Man Who Says Prohibition Doesn't Prohibit: "Prohibition State Is Rich," page 24.
10. To Urge the Advertising Campaign for Your Church: Tell your trustees what a South Dakota church is doing, page 24.

Vacancy and Supply Secretary Is Compiling Figures

The work of the Assembly's permanent committee on vacancy and supply is being carefully organized under the new secretary, Rev. Walter H. Houston. This department is an entirely new agency of the church. It starts out with no established precedents, no blanks or office equipment of any description. All of these must be acquired. The committee has simply received from the church a definite commission to undertake a difficult task. The secretary has undertaken a careful survey of the entire church, seeking to ascertain the exact number of ministers who are available for regular service and the present needs of the church as indicated by the number and character of the vacancies.

Communications have already been sent to all the presbyteries, and reports from these are being received daily. They furnish a fund of information which, when properly tabulated, cannot fail to be of immense value to the church at large. When the survey is completed it is expected that the central office will not only have a register of the men available for service, but will be able to compile a list of the churches vacant throughout the country with appropriate information in regard to each.

Communications should be addressed to the secretary, Rev. Walter H. Houston, 87 14th avenue, Columbus, Ohio, where the office will remain for a time.

George N. Luccock, Chairman.

Dr. Culbertson Remains at Emporia

President Henry Coe Culbertson of Emporia College, who recently received a call to a New York City church, has decided to remain with his present work.

Dr. W. H. Hubbard of Auburn, secretary of the Assembly's Executive Commission, has been confined to his home by illness for several weeks. He is now, however, again able to attend to business in his home, but not yet able to travel to New York for a meeting of the general executive committee.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Dayton—Springfield First, Jan. 15, 2:30 p. m.
Omaha — Presbyterian headquarters, Paxton block, Jan. 6, 9:30 a. m.

Calls

New Jersey—Phillipsburg First: W. B. Johnson, accepts.
Minnesota—Warroad: J. T. L. Coates, accepts.
Pennsylvania—Evans City: George C. Miller, accepts; Morningside: P. R. Harvey, accepts; Round Hill: H. C. Calhoun; Scranton Second: A. B. Carver, assistant, accepts.
South Dakota—Alexandria: H. P. Gage; Rapid City: Henry McClenahan, accepts.
Washington—Davenport: Frederick Tonge, accepts.

Ordinations

Washington City—Howard J. Bell.

Resignations

Indiana—Indianapolis East Washington Street: H. C. Calhoun.
Massachusetts—Fall River: Joseph F. Langton.
New York—Campbell Hall First: W. B. Johnson.
South Dakota—Bridgewater and Canistota: Albert C. McCauley.

Installations

Colorado—Monument and Table Rock: John N. Carnine, Dec. 17.
Iowa—Milo: W. H. Islsey, Dec. 18.
Indiana—Liberty: O. R. Newcomb, Dec. 9.
Michigan—Deckerville and Bridgehampton: Harry A. Simpson, Jan. 14.
Minnesota—Ely: J. C. Mapson, Jan. 3.
New York—Ithaca First: John A. McIntosh, Dec. 18.
Pennsylvania—Leisenring: A. L. Medcalf, Dec. 19; Vanderbilt East Liberty: E. C. Musselman, Dec. 20; Dunlap's Creek: R. J. Shields, Dec. 20; Pittsburg Shields: Henry R. Browne, Dec. 17.

Supplies Arranged

Colorado—Las Animas First: W. K. Weaver; Allison: G. S. Lake.

Vacant Pulpits

New York—Campbell Hall First: J. K. Egbertson clerk.
Washington—Odessa.

Change of Address

Bedickian, S. V.—Revere, Mass., to Honesdale, Pa.
Brown, W. S.—Averill Park to 394 Quail street, Albany, N. Y.

Accessions

Colorado—Timnath, 35, Dec. 15, James Millar pastor.
Indiana—Rising Sun, 5, Dec. 15, T. F. Mitchell pastor.
Illinois—Chicago Crerar Memorial, 23, Dec. 1, J. W. Nicely pastor.
Kansas—Mount Nebo, 10, Dec. 15, Clay Babbitt pastor; Vesper, 3, Dec. 15, H. C. Bradbury pastor.
Nebraska—Verdel, 6, Dec. 15, R. B. Budd pastor.
New Jersey—Trenton Third, 35, Dec. 15, A. T. Taylor pastor.
Ohio—Cincinnati Walnut Hills, 21, Dec. 1, F. N. McMillin pastor; Cleveland Westminster, 50, R. R. Bigger pastor.
Pennsylvania—Germantown Summit, 24, Dec. 15, R. P. D. Bennett pastor; Germantown First, 16, Dec. 15, W. B. Jennings, pastor; Germantown Second, 22, J. H. Lee pastor; McKeesport First, 112, Dec. 22, W. F. McCauley pastor.
South Dakota—Kadoka, 8, Glenn H. Shaw pastor.

Churches Organized

Ohio—Plainville, 35 members.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

Morey—Mrs. May D. Morey died in San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 17, 1912. She was born in Macon, Ga., in 1849 and married in 1872 to Rev. L. H. Morey. Their exceptionally happy ministerial service was rendered in Pittsford and Seneca Falls, N. Y.; in Oshkosh, Wis.; Stillwater, Minn., and from 1892 to 1904 in the Madison Square church of San Antonio, Tex. Mrs. Morey had been a suffering and nearly helpless invalid for several years, but still commended her Christian experience to all who knew her by her habitually patient and cheerful spirit. Her art of endurance was in her instinctive and constant thoughtfulness for the comfort and happiness of others. As a telegram of sympathy expressed it, "The comfort and the deep bitterness are in the knowledge of her goodness." She leaves her husband, still in the active ministry, and three children, Captain L. S. Morey, U. S. A., Fort Robinson, Neb.; Miss Elizabeth M. Morey, in charge of the history department of the high school in San Antonio, and Attorney Harry M. Morey of Spokane, Wash. All were present during her final illness. Funeral services were held in the home under the very tender and sympathetic ministries of an old and beloved friend of the family, Arthur G. Jones, D.D., of the First Presbyterian church of San Antonio, Tex.

An
editor's
advertisement

¶ The Editor Afield of The Continent, who for more than a dozen years past has been writing religious articles weekly for a large number of daily newspapers, seeks introduction through local churchmen to other dailies which are at present not printing religious features.

¶ Mr. Ellis would appreciate the privilege of corresponding with interested ministers, newspaper men, and laymen.

William T. Ellis, Swarthmore, Pa.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to The Continent and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

PRESBYTERIANS—COME TO "SELMA, CALIFORNIA, the Home of the Peach." Excellent soil, climate and people. Address W. T. Howe, Pastor.

MEMPHIS, TENN., COURT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN church, Charles M. Collins, minister.

THE BOOK OF MORMON; WHAT IS IT? WHO Wrote It? Pamphlet, 96 pages, 25 cents. Lectures: "What is Mormonism?" "The Book of Mormon;" "Inroads of Mormon Missionaries;" "Tent Campaigning Among Saints." Terms moderate. Rev. T. C. Smith, 237 West First Avenue, Denver, Colo.

WANTED—PRESBYTERIAN FAMILY LIVING IN New Jersey would like orphan girl to assist with home work. Address "M," care of The Continent, N. Y.

OPPORTUNITY FOR UNDERTAKER. ADDRESS George Greenfield, Elko, Nevada.

WANTED—SINGING EVANGELIST OR PASTOR'S assistant to help in meetings at Oxford, Ind., about Jan. 20. E. L. Zeis, clerk.

ORGANIST, CHOIRMASTER, CHRISTIAN, EXPERienced, desires appointment. Boy, mixed and children's choirs. Address S, Continent, New York City.

REAL ESTATE

FOR SALE—SPOKANE VALLEY CHICKEN, FRUIT and truck ranches at bargain prices. Write for pamphlet. Cryor & Co., 432 Old National Bank Bldg., Spokane, Wash.

ARKANSAS BARGAIN. 120 ACRE FARM TWO MILES from railroad town. 26 acres in cultivation. More tillable. Apple and peach orchard. 4 room house, barn, smoke house, well, etc. Worth $10 per acre. $5 per acre cash buys it now. No trades. Ringland, McAlester, Okla.

TOURS

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WILL CONDUCT A select company to London for a month. For particulars inquire of Rev. J. E. Day, Butte Falls, Oregon.

EUROPE and ORIENT. 32nd Year. Limited Parties. Comfort and Leisure. Thorough Sight-seeing. Expert Guidance. Strictly first-class. Special Tours for Private Parties. PAINE TOURS, Glens Falls, N.Y.

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

The Women, Too,

Have a voice in The Continent

NOT merely because they are women, or because thousands of other women read The Continent, do we include in our staff of contributors the writers whose names appear on this page. Our woman readers appreciate the work of the other sex quite as heartily and intelligently as any among the great body of thinking, acting men whom we are proud to have associated with our family.

These Christian women have something to say in their articles that no one else, man or woman, could say with quite the same grace and force—that is why we need them. And what we believe our Continent family needs we try always to get!

There are the stories, too, for the children, from women who know how to reach the child heart and to lead the child fancy in wholesome ways. And the stories for older folk—some of the best we print—are often by women who know how to weave threads from the heart of life into the incidents of fiction.

MARION HARLAND

All the Folks at Home

Marion Harland may not know you "at first hand," but it is pretty certain that she knows you as she knows so well many thousands of others in this wide land—as one whom in some way she has helped by her books or her more intimate counsel. No other woman has served the homes of America more directly and sensibly than she. We are proud to say over again that The Continent is the only religious paper for which she will take time from an overbusy life to write. Several articles from her will appear during the year.

MRS. MONTGOMERY

In the Province of Missions

Wherever women are interested in missions—and what would be the missionary interest of our churches without the women?—Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery is known and loved. There is nothing of the wishy-washy element in her platform addresses—she believes in responsibility, aggressive work and efficiency. In a series entitled "Let's Talk About Our Work," she is to give our readers some very helpful counsel. Be sure that the women of your church miss none of the articles.

PRISCILLA LEONARD

Christians Away from Home

Certainly no reader of the best periodicals has failed to note the excellence of the frequent contributions appearing over this signature; and Continent readers, young and old, need no introduction. She has been watching keenly, in her travels, to discover how Christian people conduct themselves; and the articles she writes, while kindly in tone, may reveal some of us in rather startling fashion.

MISS McKEE

Getting at th [illegible]

Some time ago the [illegible] torial office of The Continent a young woman with some manuscripts to submit. This is a common occurrence; what was uncommon was that when she returned we wouldn't let her take the articles back. One of them we have printed—"The Heart of the Rose"—with the result that many appeals for reprints have come to us. This bright Indiana woman will have another story before many weeks.

SparksMarionE †jan13
1205 Springfield av

Some other women who are occasional contributors to The Continent:

ELIZABETH PRICE
NORA A. SMITH
HERMA N. CLARK
BEATRICE HILL
CLARA N. FOGG
FREDERICA BEARD
ETHEL COLSON
HELOISE E. HERSEY
HILDA RICHMOND

MRS. HILLIS

The Young Woman (of the House)

The growing girl—almost before you have realized it she is a young woman, wanting to solve more and more of her problems for herself. Then is the time of all times when the counsel offered her must be tactful. We doubt if any living woman has succeeded better than Mrs. Newell Dwight Hillis in sensing the girl's questionings and perplexities; certainly none succeeds more admirably in giving her message the peculiar appeal it must have to reach the girl's heart. Her articles will appear early in the year.

MISS McDOWELL

Reaching Down to Zero in Life

As readers of The Continent well know, Miss McDowell has the knack of revealing the hearts of the less fortunate folk, to whom she is devoted, without being mawkish or patronizing. She'd a great deal rather do her work than tell about it; but when she does write it is as genuine as the Kohinoor—and it is written for Continent readers. There will be more from her during 1913.

MRS. KIRKWOOD

From the Home Outward

The widow of a Presbyterian minister who was engaged in home mission work; a successful newspaper worker and magazine writer; mother of a live boy and mistress of her own household—here is a combination which warrants that Mrs. Edith Brown Kirkwood's discussion of home topics will not be empty theorizing. She will write from the viewpoint of "the average woman." What would America be without her?

MISS FOX—and Others

Stories for All Ages

We feel a special claim upon two bright young woman writers for children whose earliest work was done for us. They are Frances Margaret Fox and Sarah Cory Rippey. There are many others who like to write for our Continent children. Ada Melville Shaw, Frances B. Dillingham and Harriet Lummis Smith are among contributors of short fiction. Ada Patterson, a well-known New York journalist, has done some notable sketches of interesting women and will prepare others.

Perhaps you have not yet told us you want The Continent to come each week in 1913 with its forceful message of inspiration and helpfulness from men and women. This coupon is for your convenience.

THE CONTINENT, 509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 156 Fifth Ave., New York City. Enclosed is $.......to renew my subscription for....years.

Name...

Street...

Town...

Would you like to have two friends see several copies of The Continent? Will you invest three minutes and two cents to help us add them to the big Continent family?

THE CONTINENT, 509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 156 Fifth Ave., New York City. Please send a recent issue of The Continent to:

Name...

Address...

Name...

Address...

Add more names if you care to. You might mail this with your renewal.

The CONTINENT

New York Chicago
Philadelphia

THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1913

Published Weekly
$2.50 a year.

An
editor's
advertisement

The Editor Afield of The Continent, who for more than a dozen years past has been writing religious articles weekly for a large number of daily newspapers, seeks introduction through local church men to other dailies which are at present not printing religious features.

Mr. Ellis would appreciate the privilege of corresponding with interested ministers, newspaper men, and laymen.

WILLIAM T. ELLIS, Swarthmore, Pa.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND
177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich

Pastors & Building Committees
Write Today For Our "Catalog B"
An Authoritative Guide on Church Seating. Gives valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc Please send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements.
Pews, Pulpit Furniture. S. S. Seating
American Seating Company
218 S. Wabash Avenue CHICAGO

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Memorial Windows
Beautiful in design, highest quality in materials, best workmanship in execution. We number many Presbyterian churches among our patrons. Let us tell you what we can do for you. Write today for particulars.
FLANAGAN & BIEDENWEG CO., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOKS

THE PREACHER: HIS LIFE AND WORK: The Yale Lectures on Preaching
By REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.
Overflowing with visions and counsels which kindle both mind and heart to enthusiasm.
Net, $1.25

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT
By REV. M. SCOTT FLETCHER.
An earnest and careful study of the New Testament in terms of modern thought.
Net, $1.50

PRAYER and THE HUMAN PROBLEM
By THE REV. W. ARTHUR CORNABY.
The philosophy of prayer in relation to its dynamic efficacy. Net, $1.50

THE AFTERGLOW of GOD
By REV. G. H. MORRISON, M.A.
By the author of "Sunrise," "Floodtide," "Footsteps of the Flock," etc. Net, $1.35

WHY DOES NOT GOD INTERVENE? and Other Questions
By REV. FRANK BALLARD, D.D.
Answers to many searching religious questions which arise in the personal religious life.
Net, $1.50

THE ORDINARY MAN and the EXTRAORDINARY THING By HAROLD BEGBIE
Author of "Twice-Born-Men," etc.
These narratives are true stories gathered from the lives of men. Net, $1.25

ST. PAUL IN THE LIGHT of SOCIAL and RELIGIOUS HISTORY
By PROFESSOR ADOLF DEISSMANN.
An emphatic protest against the old view of St. Paul. Professor Deissmann sketches a personality instead of searching for a non-existent system of Pauline theology. Net, $3.50

THE HISTORIC JESUS
By THE REV. PROFESSOR DAVID SMITH, M.A., D.D.
By far the most important work of Prof. Smith's since "The Days of His Flesh."
Net, $1.00

The AUTHORITATIVE LIFE OF GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH: Founder of the Salvation Army
By G. S. RAILTON. First Commissioner to General Booth with an introduction by General Bramwell Booth. With 5 portraits.
Net, $1.00

FAITH, FREEDOM and the FUTURE: The Problem of Personal Religion
By REV. PRIN. P. T. FORSYTH, D.D.
Herein the author defines and states a system of faith which is sufficiently liberal to be all-embracing. Net, $1.50

THE WOMAN OF TACT and Other Bible Types of Modern Women
By REV. W. MACKINTOSH MACKAY.
Dr. Mackay draws his portraits from Bible types and applies the picture to present-day conditions. Net, $1.50

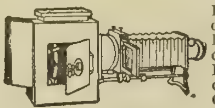
EFFICIENT RELIGION
By REV. GEORGE ARTHUR ANDREWS.
A valuable, practical piece of thinking, extremely up-to-date. Net, $1.00

THE ESSENTIALS of CHRISTIAN BELIEF
By REV. DAVID FYFFE, M.A.
The purpose of this book is to state the vital elements of belief as these have attested themselves in modern experience. Net, $1.25

THE MASTER of REPARTEE and Other Preachments, Long and Short
By REV. CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY.
The secret of Dr. Brady's power as a preacher lies in his discuss on of sacred subjects in a manner extremely human. Net, $1.25

A CATALOG OF IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS
Our new books are now in the hands of your denominational publishing house from whom also may be obtained our NEW BOOK BULLETIN, containing full descriptions of a really remarkable list of books. Or we will promptly send the list upon request.
AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY, New York
Thirty-eight West Thirty-second Street
Publishers in America for HODDER & STOUGHTON
H&S H&S H&S H&S



Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat. or Acetylene Generator, $29.00. Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

PIPE AND REED ORGANS
AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., PEKIN, ILL.

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

STEREOPTICONS
CHRISTIAN EDUCATION · MISSIONS · EVANGELISM
THE CHRISTIAN LANTERN SLIDE AND LECTURE BUREAU, 30 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

EDUCATIONAL

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE
OFFERS
To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.
IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.
38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853
Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges
A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.
Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Kansas

Oswego College Oswego, Kansas | Vocational-Cultural for young women

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School
Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place' Catalogue mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN. President.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
Everett Sisson, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.
Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE: THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1913

ARBITRATION OR DISHONOR—WHICH? 37
EDITORIAL—
  Why No More Gain? 40
  The Heavy Hand of the Associated Press 40
  New Year's Revels and the Whole Year's Safety 40
  People Should Know About Committee Reports 41
THE WORLD—
  President Taft for Toll Arbitration 38
  Million Dollar Bail for Dynamiters 38
  Crucial Stage in Peace Negotiations 38
  Would Recognize China 38
  Western Calendar in China 38
  Russian-American Treaty Lapses 38
RELIGIOUS WORLD 39
VISIONS AND DREAMS ...... J. H. Jowett 42
NEW YORK'S UNIQUE "TRY-OUT" SUNDAY SCHOOL ...... Frederica Beard 43
HERO-EXILES OF THE PURPLE ISLAND (with Portrait) ...... John W. Eltzholtz 44
THE BIG SISTER TO A CITY'S GIRLS (with Portrait) ...... Herbert H. Smith 45
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter X.—Continued ...... Richard S. Holmes 46
A BIDDLE IN ACTION ...... The Wayfarer 47
THE HOME COUNCIL—Risks as Courage-Makers ...... Helen A. Hawley 48
YOUNG AMERICA—How Bobbie Acted His Part ...... Frances Bowman 49
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ...... J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 50
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE ...... E. A. Wicher 51
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE ...... W. T. Ellis 51
MISSIONARY WORK (with Illustration) 52
NEW BOOKS 53
THE OPEN HEARTH 54
FINANCIAL SITUATION 61
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS WORLD—Beginning 55

Around the Shop

Oratory is not one of the Around-the-Shop Man's specialties. His is a sympathetic nature, and when he rises to his feet before an assemblage his sorrow for the victims upon whom his remarks are to be afflicted simply overwhelms him. His only zeal is to terminate the affliction as speedily as possible.

In this laudable zeal he is usually encouraged by the fact that preceding speakers have said everything that he thought of saying—not said so effectively, of course, but even in its own feeble way sufficient to take the fire out of the sentences that were to inspire his auditors.

Even here in his own corner he sometimes finds one of our alert Continent readers delivering his goods first—and no "feeble effort" at that. For example, we were just preparing to record our admiration of a certain pastor and congregation in New Jersey when the following came under our vision:

"To the 'Around-the-Shop' Man: Beyond words to express I admire a man who can so tame this wild English language of ours as to make it feed docilely from his outstretched hand. Let me supply you with another worthy theme.

"Some months ago you proclaimed one of the Newark (N. J.) churches The Continent's champion so far as number of subscribers, compared with number of members, was concerned. Then a doughty western warrior leaped to the fray, smiting Newark under the fifth rib and sending forth a cheerful challenge. But New Jersey springs again to the fore, avenging Newark's downfall, unhorsing the western hero bold, seizing his banner and waving it defiantly aloft. His name is Lambertville, and the new inscription reads, 'One subscriber for every two and seventh-tenths members. Beat it ye who can.'

"Such a theme may well inspire you to some more taming. I'd do it myself, but haven't the knack. You have. To me it seems worthy of your best Bostwickian effort. Go to it."

—

'Rah for Lambertville. Who's next?

What The Continent Says About "Sociological Study of the Bible"

By LOUIS WALLIS

"The book is full of suggestions, and for the most part carries conviction"

The account of the sweeping conquest of Canaan in the Book of Joshua is now known to be UNHISTORICAL. The Hebrew nation really arose at the point of contact between two races, the Amorites and the Israelites, as narrated in the books of Judges and Samuel. The Biblical account of the warfare between "Yahweh" and "Baal" is an epic, representing the social struggle between customs which the Hebrew nation inherited from both sides of its double ancestry.

Professor Charles F. Kent of the Chair of Biblical Literature in Yale University writes as follows: "You have blazed a comparatively new and exceedingly important trail, which modern students of the Bible will follow with keen interest and great profit."

"It affords one more proof of how fruitful and illuminating is the modern interpretation of the Bible."—Homiletic Review.

"A remarkable piece of work."—Religious Education. "Stimulating throughout."—The Athenæum, London.

"Of quite exceptional interest."—The Christian World, England.

Demonstrates the sociological nature of the Bible, and shows how the Biblical religion was evolved out of heathenism. Commended by professors, clergymen and laymen of many denominations.

XXXV plus 308 pages, 8vo, cloth Postpaid, $1.68

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS
CHICAGO ILLINOIS

"A PIECE OF GOOD FORTUNE"
HAND SAPOLIO

"You have just come into a piece of good fortune, Miss, and you will hereafter get more out of life. You will have better health, a fair soft skin, and will be welcome among the best people."

HAND SAPOLIO IS A PERFECT TOILET ARTICLE.
ITS USE IMPARTS AN AIR OF DAINTINESS AND GOOD BREEDING.
A TOILET NECESSITY A BATH DELIGHT.

---

54 Books in One Great Volume

FREE

To Continent Subscribers

℄ In a year The Continent gives its readers in quantity of reading matter the equivalent of fifty-four copies of Ralph Connor's story book "Black Rock.". Bind up your fifty-two issues of The Continent for a year into a complete and permanent volume by

THE EMERSON BINDER—"A Binder That Binds"

Each issue may be inserted week by week as it arrives.

"It's as simple to insert a weekly issue as filing papers and requires but a few seconds."

℄ How often have you wished to read an article or story in some back copy of The Continent only to find that copy lost or mutilated? You can now have your Continents in the form of a durable and attractive bound book, ready to refer to at any time, and a handsome addition to your library. After the volume containing the entire year is completed, you may either remove the copies, to be bound in the usual way, or you may simply place the binder and contents on your library shelf. The words "The Continent" will be stamped in gold on the front. It is bound in full black cloth.

℄ By special arrangement we will send this binder absolutely free and postpaid to any present subscribers who will send us a new yearly subscriber for The Continent at the regular $2.50 yearly price. Here's a chance for you to get that friend to subscribe or, if you prefer, send the paper to him as a present. If you cannot do this, we will, as a special courtesy, send the binder to you postpaid at its regular retail price of one dollar.

Address THE CONTINENT

509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. 156 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

EDUCATIONAL EDUCATIONAL EDUCATIONAL

Tennessee

WARD SEMINARY for GIRLS and YOUNG WOMEN

IRA LANDRITH, D.D., LL.D.
PRESIDENT

NASHVILLE, TENN.
FOUNDED 1865

J. D. BLANTON, LL.D.
VICE-PRESIDENT AND CHAIRMAN OF FACULTY

Sincere pretensions, true culture, honest work

Ward Seminary, the oldest of Nashville's non-sectarian institutions of learning for young women, has annually far the largest number of local patrons, the leading educators of the community among them. Seminary, Special Academic and College Preparatory Courses taught by college trained teachers of successful experience. Certificates admit, without examination, to leading universities and colleges—Vanderbilt, Chicago, Vassar, Wellesley, Smith, Randolph-Macon, Etc. All but one of the teachers in Piano, Voice, Violin, and the other departments of the Ward Conservatory have had several years' drill under European masters. Expression directed by an artist educated in America, Canada and England. Art a specialty. Home Economics scientifically presented in all branches. Swimming, boating, horseback riding, tennis—all kinds of indoor and outdoor physical education—led by two experts. New and modern buildings, with private bath in every room, hygenic ventilation, hardwood floors, 300 feet of lovely sun parlors, roof gardens—half a million dollars being invested—on large forest campus in the city's university and palatial residence section; ready for use by September, 1913. Every needed comfort now. Boarding students admitted and easily classified any week of the current school year. Allowance made for time lost.

Address WARD SEMINARY, Nashville, Tennessee

Illinois

The School That Makes For Manly, Self-Reliant Men

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

The Headmaster and Instructors are all men of wide experience in the "Boy Problem"—all University Graduates. BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY is ideally located in a town of 1500, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college; Graduate Courses in Academic, Normal, Commercial, Instrumental and Vocal Music. Have a fine military band. The ideal school for YOUR boy. For information, write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILLINOIS.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Illinois

A BOY'S WHOLE TIME

Must be profitably occupied if he is to receive the best kind of education: the kind that stands for moral strength, intellectual alertness, physical fitness. LAKE FOREST ACADEMY merits the serious consideration of those who understand the manifold needs of a boy.

Address WILLIAM MATHER LEWIS,
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph. D., :: :: :: President

Tennessee

Greeneville and Tusculum College

Strong Faculty. Healthful climate. Broad and liberal courses. Positive Christian influences. Expenses reasonable. Pres., Rev. C. O. Gray, D.D., Greeneville, Tenn.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 2 JANUARY 9, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2224

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

Arbitration or Dishonor—Which?

WILL AMERICA ARBITRATE?

The question is up again by reason of Great Britain's protest against the new American law providing that vessels under the American flag, when sailing from one United States port to another, shall go through the Panama canal free, while all other shipping must pay toll.

The British government claims that this law violates the treaty between itself and the United States, which promised on the American part that there should be no discrimination between ships of various nationalities in this new interoceanic waterway.

America in answer claims that there is no discrimination, since the vessels allowed this free passage will be engaged only in the coastwise trade, in which federal laws have long forbidden foreign ships to compete.

There is much to be said for that argument, if the merits of the case were under debate. But the sole and simple fact in view here is that Great Britain is not satisfied with the argument and wishes to discuss the matter further.

And if no agreement proves possible from friendly negotiation, the further British request is that the whole subject shall be sent to The Hague international court for arbitration.

✠

Diplomatic discussion is now in the first stage thus suggested. And there for the interval the whole affair might be quietly left without public concern, if meanwhile the nation were not being discredited by an amazing outbreak of jingoistic pseudo-patriotism, attempting by clamor, both noisy and nasty, to forestall in any case the reference to arbitration.

Already by concerted dispatches from Washington to daily papers in all parts of the country has gone out this dogmatic assertion:

"The senate will never submit the Panama question to The Hague."

And that is the reason why the fairer and squarer sentiment of real patriotism—the patriotism which knows the nation is strong enough to be honest—should at once and emphatically make itself heard with as determined a declaration:

"The senate shall submit the Panama question to The Hague if it is not settled in direct negotiation."

✠

It is risky to try to line up the churches on any public question. Protestant principles of private judgment and American principles of separating church and state both warn against the hazard of it.

Only the clearest-cut moral issue, on which conscience speaks so plainly that disinterested dissent is practically impossible, can justify the churches in rising unitedly to demand some specified action of government. It must be a straight case of right against wrong.

But The Continent does not hesitate to say that such an instance is now in hand—an issue where the dictates of righteousness are unmistakable, the demands of morality too evident to be disguised.

Therefore The Continent declares its profound belief that the time has come for a strenuous movement among Christian citizens to impress on the senators of this country this fact:

Church sentiment of the United States insists that the request for arbitration of the question of Panama tolls, if made, must be granted, in order to save America from colossal national sin.

The vital reason for proclaiming such an uncompromising judgment on the moral quality of this question is quickly stated.

With the nation as with the individual man the first and most binding requirement of honor is that a pledged promise once solemnly given shall be sacredly kept, no matter what loss or detriment may be thereby incurred.

To anyone receiving the Bible as a rule of life, this principle can be clinched by just one ringing word from that stalwart psalm—the fifteenth—which analyzes the rudiments of righteous character. Among the supreme virtues which it enumerates this stern requirement stands out distinct:

"He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not."

No man who swears a pledge of fealty to a friend and repudiates it afterwards for financial profit to himself, can ever again stand as a gentleman among those who know of his unmanfulness.

And there is no way by which a nation can be less disgraced by the same conduct than one man would be.

What is sin to the individual soul is equal sin in the nation.

✠

The United States made a treaty with Great Britain promising that it would take no advantage for its own shipping over foreign shipping in the Panama canal. Whether that was a wise promise or not is at this late day entirely beside the mark; it was at least not a dishonorable or wicked promise, and therefore the only thing possible to any honorable people is to keep it.

But it is a debatable question whether the United States, by its law as now on the lawbooks, has broken that treaty. No indisputable point of honor can be made on that statute.

The question, however, goes back one step beyond that to a sharper, plainer crux than this. There is another treaty with Great Britain. In that the United States has promised in most explicit terms that if it ever gets into a difference with Britain over the interpretation of a treaty, it will leave the dispute for final decision to The Hague court.

And there can be no blinking the application of that promise to the case in hand. Nobody can befog it. To refuse to arbitrate the relation of this Panama law to the treaty it is said to disregard, would be a flat, outright and deliberate repudiation of the older and simpler treaty for arbitrating disagreements about the sense of treaties.

And the national shame resulting from such a defiant and graceless breaking of international faith—a craven breach prompted only by fear of losing certain money advantage not in the remotest degree associated with the vital interests of the nation—would be a blot on the great seal of the republic that would not be erased in a thousand years.

The ancient sneer, "Punic faith," would disappear from literature. The phrase "American honor" would supplant it as more significant of mean and sordid treachery.

Such a shadow must not be cast across the banner of the United States. The churches of the nation must rise and prevent it—prevent it by making the moral meaning of the proposed perfidy so clear that only the veriest dastard would still dare it.

Are the churches on guard? Will they be ready to speak when the time comes?

The World

President Taft Declares for Toll Arbitration

Arbitration of the Panama canal toll question was definitely favored by President Taft in an address to the International Peace Forum in New York on Saturday. Coming so soon after Great Britain's formal protest against the exemption of American coastwise shipping the unlooked-for declaration of the President has naturally attracted attention on both sides of the ocean, and the effect will doubtless be happy. Even though it could be foreseen that this country would lose, said the President, he was still for arbitration, adding: "I am willing, and indeed I would be ashamed not to be willing, to arbitrate any question with Great Britain in the construction of a treaty when we reach the exact issue which there is between the two nations." His attitude was similar to that previously taken by The Continent, and again indicated on the first page of this week's issue.

In the course of the same speech the President vigorously criticised the senate for defeating the proposed treaties of arbitration with Great Britain and France.

The same day Mr. Taft attended a Republican "reorganization" dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria and presided at what he styled his own political wake, and contragulated his auditors that the nation had been saved from "the dreams of demagogues and theorists." His other references to the Progressive party were much less mild.

* *

Million Dollar Bail for Dyamiters

The United States court of appeals, sitting at Chicago, last week decided to admit to bail the labor leaders convicted at Indianapolis of dynamiting, pending an appeal, and fixed the amount of bail at $10,000 for each year of the penitentiary sentences imposed by Judge Anderson. This made a range of security required in each case from $70,000 to $30,000, with a total of $1,070,000, which friends of the prisoners and labor unions in various parts of the country promptly set to work to furnish. Of the thirty-eight men found guilty by the jury, five were released under suspended sentences, but thirty-three were rushed to the federal prison at Leavenworth by special train. No application for bail was made for H. S. Hockin, the former official of the structural iron workers who admitted that he had furnished information to detectives employed by the prosecution, but it is stated that he will be released upon the same terms as the others if bonds are forthcoming.

* *

Crucial Stage in Balkan Peace Negotiations

Peace or war seemed again to hang in the balance last week after a deadlock had been reached by the Balkan and Turkish representatives at London. The Balkan allies insisted that Turkey must give up Adrianople, the Ægean islands and its rights in Crete, besides all territory west of the Tchatalja forts, but the Ottoman delegates argued that some of the islands were necessary to protect the Dardanelles and others were properly a part of Asia Minor, and that the disposal of Crete was a question in which other nations were involved. But above all the Ottoman spokesmen stood for the retention of Adrianople, the ancient capital of the empire and a Moslem city especially dear to the hearts of Mohammedan Turks, apart from its commercial importance. But without Adrianople the Bulgarians declared they would resume fighting, and in this stand they were supported by their associates.

It appeared probable that the ambassadors of the great powers may command the allies to do without Adrianople and order Turkey to give up the islands, at the same time exerting pressure to quiet the angry and excited feeling reported from the five capitals of the belligerents.

* *

Would Recognize China; Big Loan Arranged

On the reopening of Congress last Thursday Senator Bacon of Georgia introduced a resolution for the recognition of the republic of China. This may mean that the new-old nation is before long to receive the friendly reception from America which should long since have been accorded it. Twelve years ago the United States under the able and aggressive diplomatic leadership of John Hay, secretary of state, saved the ancient empire from partition, and later this country returned a substantial part of the Boxer indemnity, thereby earning and deserving Chinese confidence and friendship. But this kindly feeling has not been retained as it would have been had this government made the same sort of effort to preserve the territorial integrity of the republic that it did to check international land grabbing in the days of the empire. England has made herself paramount in Tibet and Russia has done the same in Mongolia without a protesting word from this side of the Pacific.

Recognition of the republic may, however, be hastened by the expected success of the $125,000,000 loan from bankers of the six-power group—England, France, Germany, Russia, Japan and America. Announcement was made last week that the protracted negotiations had at last been concluded. The banking interests are to be represented by Herr Romp of Germany, who is to supervise the Chinese audit department and overlook the expenditure of the loan. The republic is embarrassed by its inability to make payment of certain arrears of the Boxer indemnities. The government applied to the powers for an extension of time, but received no reply. Russia is reported to be unwilling to grant any extension, and threatens to foreclose on some source of revenue, such as Manchuria or Mongolia, and in this course is supported by France.

* *

Western Calendar and Western Styles in China

New Year's Day was officially celebrated in China on January 1 instead of February 6, as the government of the republic has adopted the Gregorian calendar. Two thousand New Year's callers visited President Yuan Shih Kai at Peking. In Canton all the government offices were closed, and a number of Chinese graduates of American and European colleges, with their wives, celebrated New Year's eve, though the people generally declined to recognize the new date.

Dress reform as well as changes in the calendar have been formally decreed in China, according to advices from San Francisco. The Chinese consul there received a copy of an edict issued by President Yuan doing away with the ancient robes and flowing trousers and prescribing Occidental skirts for the women and sack suits for the men. The latter are to wear derby or silk hats and high or low leather shoes. Women are asked to wear high shoes, but nothing in the way of millinery is suggested.

* *

Flogging for "White Slavers" in Britain

America took the initiative in exposing and fighting the unspeakable "white slave" traffic, but the British parliament has taken the lead in drastic legislation. An act has just been passed prescribing flogging as a punishment for men convicted a second time of pandering. For the first offense the same punishment is optional. This penalty will have a deterrent effect upon those vicious male creatures who dread nothing but physical pain, but women of the same species are not to be thus punished. Mrs. Humphry Ward, the author, is quoted as advocating the lash for all panders, male or female, but parliament refused to go further in the direction of reviving the legal brutality of the past. The whipping post is a debatable revival even for the lowest of crimes. Other provisions of the law permit a constable to arrest without warrant any person he suspects of being a procurer. Men living on the immoral earnings of women, if convicted a second time, are liable to be flogged. In consequence of the new law, which became immediately effective, a number of noted procurers have fled from London.

* *

Russian-American Commercial Treaty Lapses

With the close of the year the commercial treaty of 1832 between the United States and Russia expired, and no new one has been made to take its place. This country insisted that there must be no discrimination against American citizens because of race or religion, and Russia refused to recede from her regulations against Jews. The Russian government argued that it could not do anything more for Americans of Jewish birth than it did for Jews of other nationalities or even for its own Jewish subjects, and consequently it refused to honor passports issued to Jewish travelers by the Washington authorities. So long as Russian Jews do not have equal political and economic rights at home such rights could not be accorded to Hebrews from abroad—many of them, of course, former Russian subjects. But this policy was made the basis of American protests and led to the "abrogation" of the old treaty. There are several subordinate treaties still in existence, and a modus vivendi has been arranged at Washington, continuing diplomatic relations.

American citizens in Russia are now subject to local laws, with only the general principles of international law to fall back upon. There has been some talk of a tariff or trade war, but neither nation has anything to gain by such a course. Although Russia controls one-seventh of the land area of the globe, it happens that she and the United States are economically almost wholly independent of each other. Only a trifling percentage of American exports go there as yet.

Some day a Russian duma, less complaisant and docile than the present body, will insist on removing all the Jewish "pales" or barriers and destroy other existing restrictions to democracy and progress.

Russia Wipes Out All Serfdom

Serdom is finally at an end in Rusia, by virtue of a law adopted by the council of the empire last week, following its passage by the duma. Although most of the serfs were emancipated in 1861, the Caucasus region was excepted from the scope of the rescript because of special conditions prevailing there, and transitional measures of a supposedly temporary nature were adopted, but only after the lapse of more than fifty years was the transitional stage terminated. Thus passed another relic of ancient barbarism, but even at this late day it is reported that opposition was encountered when the premier urged its abolition.

Enlarged Assuan Dam Is Opened

Twenty-six feet were added to the height of the great Assuan dam in Egypt by works which were opened by the khedive last month. Lord Kitchener, the British agent, read a congratulatory message from King George. A million acres of land will be made fertile and it is estimated that the cotton crop will be increased $20-000,000 annually by this more than doubling of the storage capacity of the dam at a cost of $7,500,000. When the dam was first built 350 miles south of Cairo near the first cataract, the island of Philæ, just above it, was left unharmed. The greater height will cause the island to be submerged for part of the year, much to the regret of archæologists. Here are the famous relics of Ptolemy's temple and other buildings of architectural beauty and interest.

Reforestation in Wisconsin

Wisconsin is one of the states where conservation has been carefully studied and practically worked out. To be sure, the pine and hemlock and cedar have nearly disappeared before the great sawmills, which are now themselves disappearing because of lack of raw material, but there is still much timber remaining, most of it hardwood, and there are hundreds of wooded lakes and streams which have both practical and æsthetic value. The state has laid out a policy of reforestation and has acquired nearly half a million acres in the northern district, and is still buying. In some cases the state has bought the standing timber as well as the land. A thorough system of fire protection and fire fighting is planned and an end will be put to the old-time destructive forest fires. The work of tree planting has been begun and a nursery established where pine seedlings are being raised. Within fifty years it is estimated these trees will be large enough for lumber, and in the meantime cut-over and burned-over lands will be vastly improved from a scenic point of view by the growing trees. A similar policy has proved profitable in the forests of Germany. As a side issue of interest to summer tourists and campers the state will lease small tracts suitable for tents and cottages.

* * *

—William Rockefeller, a brother of the famous John D., created almost a national scandal by continuously evading service of summons to appear before the Pujo committee of Congress, which is investigating the money trust. The sergeant at arms of the house and scores of deputies sought him in vain, but finally Mr. Rockefeller's attorney came forward a few days ago and accepted service in behalf of his client, who is reported to be ill.

—Some effort to care for the immigrant after he or she leaves Ellis island will hereafter be made by the government if the senate passes the bill which has just gone through the house appropriating $75,000 to establish an immigrant station at Chicago. The station is planned to be a headquarters for new arrivals, where they may be guarded to some extent against dishonest or vicious exploitation.

—Senator Joseph W. Bailey of Texas, with the opening year, made a long speech of farewell to the United States senate, following up the address with his resignation. The Texas veteran savagely scored certain modern tendencies in government, notably the initiative, referendum and recall, and made a sweeping attack on the newspapers and on W. R. Hearst.

Religious World

Top-Notch Missionary Figures for 1912

The annual compilation of missionary statistics presented by The Missionary Review of the World in the issue of that magazine for January shows remarkable advances in foreign mission giving and foreign mission results from the statistics of a year ago. The statistician for this year is Dr. Louis Meyer, who takes up a task that Dr. D. L. Leonard has carried for many years. Dr. Meyer's method is more elaborate than that of Dr. Leonard, and it is possible that some of the apparent increases are due to a different compilation of figures. But there can be no question of an enormous gain.

A year ago the total missionary benevolence of the churches in the United States and Canada was computed to amount to $12,290,000. In the year just closed that sum was increased to $15,590,000, a gain of better than 18 per cent. Of the American total, $14,940,000 comes from the United States. The British churches, which a year ago appeared to have fallen off more than half a million dollars, have in the past year recovered that loss and more by rising nearly $900,000 above the record of 1910, reaching a total of $9,889,000.

The continent of Europe contributes $3,727,000 to the world total, which, when the churches of South Africa and Australia are counted in, piles up to a sum for all Christendom of $30,404,000. Inasmuch as Christendom's high-water mark of giving in this interest hitherto has gone but slightly over $25,000,000, the wonderful forward stride of the year 1911 can readily be realized.

The membership gains on the field itself have, however, not been so large as the year before. The number of adult communicants baptized is reckoned in the 1912 report as only 116,000. A year ago this number was 152,000. The present total of communicants in the foreign mission churches is set forth to be 2,644,000, which is 240,000 more than last year. It is obvious, however, under all the circumstances, that this cannot be net gain, but must represent in large part a more complete gathering of statistics. Dr. Meyer's figures for the total Christian community in non-Christian lands stand at practically five and one-half millions. This body contributes about $8,000,000 to Christian work. The foreign mission force on the field, reported last year at 22,000, is reported this year at 24,000. The number of native workers engaged in missionary labor has not increased in anything like the same proportion, advancing only from 110,000 to 112,000.

Missionary education is reaching in its primary forms about a million and a half children, and in the higher schools 130,000 young men and women.

Japanese Daily Exposes Censorship

Allusion has already been made in these columns to the fashion in which The Jiji Shimpo, Japan's most influential daily, criticised court methods in the Seoul conspiracy trial. To this the same paper has since added an even more violent condemnation of General Terauchi's administration for the way in which it has strangled newspapers and press agencies at Seoul and compelled them to print nothing but what is agreeable to the authorities in charge there.

The Jiji Shimpo permits an anonymous correspondent to say of journalistic conditions in Seoul under Terauchi's iron hand:

"Most of the journalists are now vehemently laudatory not only of the government policies but of the noble personalities of high officials—an attitude which gives one a highly nauseous sensation. . . . As regards the publication of the court reports, the papers took elaborate pains in detailing the arguments of the judges, the explanations of the authorities and other matters favorable to the government general, but concerning the statements of the accused, the speeches of counsel for the defense and the scenes witnessed in court, full reports of which would have been prejudicial to the government general, the correspondents dealt with them in the most summary manner. That was the reason that even the Tokyo papers failed to obtain full and accurate reports of the entire proceedings. The hand of the government general was plainly in evidence here as elsewhere."

* * *

—Even when it is granted that some dancing is innocent for pure-minded young women, the serious fact still remains that a pure-minded young woman is precisely the sort who cannot tell when the dance gets past the innocent stage. In accounting for the astonishing invasion of decent social circles by forms of vulgar dancing, one father remarked: "I will wager that not one girl in a hundred grasps the significance of these dances."

Editorial

Why No More Gain?

THERE ARE YET only three months remaining of the Assembly's year. At the end of March the report must be sent in which will indicate as fully as such a report can do what work has been done during the year. We know very well the unavoidable defects of such reports. The best work of any church can never be put into figures. The elders of a Scotch church raised the question whether their minister was not losing efficiency because in a given year only one lad was received into the church. That lad was Robert Moffat, however, who spent fifty years in Africa and doubtless advanced the kingdom of God more than any score of members received by that church in its history. We also know the peril of mere figures. No session which works for figures is on a safe road. Churches are not measured by bigness, and many a church roll is larger than it ought to be or would be if it were fairly treated. Whatever else there is to say against statistics, we will consider said and agreed to.

It yet remains true that every pastor and session ought to look carefully to the statistical report. Figures do not tell everything, but they do tell something. They indicate one form of results and that not unimportant. Fully 1,000 churches holding regular Sabbath services reported last year no additions on confession of faith. Make all the discounts possible in that and it is still an astounding fact. Other churches with pastors and elders reported such minute gains that they made net losses. It is common enough to bluff that off as though it indicated real gain. As a matter of fact it indicates a poverty of spirit and a feebleness of energy which ought not to go unregarded. No one can properly say what is adequate gain for a church, but every session ought to have some ideal toward which it works. When the reports come in and it is known what the church has done during the year, there ought to be a period of heart-searching on the part of the pastor and session. Is there cause for rejoicing, or ought the mood to be that of fasting?

Granted that your church made real gains last year, why did it not make more gains? First of all, was it for lack of opportunity? Is the world not pressing on your church so that there were souls in sufficient numbers who ought to have been sought and won for Christ? If your church had taken the place which it ought to have taken as a force in the community, would it not have won to it a larger number than it did? Has it been for lack of direct concern for the growth of the church? Have the people of the church come to take it for granted that things will always be as they are, and that the unsaved will go on being unsaved? Have they become satisfied with a progress which in itself is absurd?

Has there been lack of appeal in the method of the church, in its pulpit or out of it? There is opposition to evangelistic methods. The session does not believe in extra meetings and the pastor does not believe in evangelistic sermons. What is the effect of that upon the actual winning power of the church? Has your church lost its assurance of the necessity for conversion? Does it feel that the passing of a communion season without new confessions of faith is a call to great heart-searching and perhaps to tears?

Wherever it lies, it becomes instantly an obligation for correction. Presbyterians U. S. A. added to their churches last year on confession of faith 79,432 members. But there are 40,000 elders in the church; this is less than two new members for each elder! There are 10,000 churches; this is less than eight new members for each church! There are 9,000 ministers; less than nine new members for each minister! Is this satisfactory?

There is time in these next three months to change the whole complexion of our work and to lay hold on the world as we have never done. Here we are with our magnificent power and unsurpassed equipment, and with three months more in which we can set out to seek new strength for the church. There is no use in pretending that we cannot do it. It is only because so much church life has settled down into dull drab that we can grow enthusiastic over 79,000 additions in one year. We ought to multiply that number, and we will do it when we all take our full share in the enterprise. It is certain that God is ready.

—The Anti-Saloon League of Maryland has done the right thing in organizing a department of its work for colored people. Upright colored people everywhere are desperately humiliated by the way liquor men trade on the weakness of degraded members of their race, and it is only fair that they should have white help.

The Heavy Hand of the Associated Press

Many thoughtful Americans have looked gravely at the editorial "crawl" in which The New York Herald apologized to the Associated Press for saying that "Associated" dispatches from Seoul were an insufficient account of the trial of a hundred Christians there for alleged conspiracy against the life of Count Terauchi. The Herald says that it is now convinced that "the Associated Press reports were truthful and adequate." Nobody ever said that the Associated Press was untruthful about the trial in the sense that its reporters wired anything false in direct statement. But The Herald very well knows that the Associated Press did not furnish any account of the trial which did justice to the defendants in respect to the total lack of independent evidence against them and the refusal of the court to hear evidence in their behalf. When therefore The Herald consents to say that the Associated Press reports were adequate, it virtually apologizes for sending its own distinguished and able correspondent, J. K. Ohl, to report the trial in a way which demonstrated that the Associated Press was less than fair to the Koreans and a little more than fair to the Japanese. To make it take such shame to itself and cast such shame on its eminent representative, Mr. Ohl, The Herald must certainly have been put under exceedingly great stress; and the external appearance of the case strongly indicates that the threat bringing The Herald thus to its knees was some intimation that its own news franchise in the Associated Press was in jeopardy of being revoked.

This ignominious retraction, however, though exasperating, is now of small account as far as Korea is concerned. Mr. Ohl's great service to the Koreans has already been done. His dispatches have been broadcast to the world and the merits of the case at Seoul are widely understood. But the serious aspect of the affair lies in the far larger question suggested by such an exhibit of power and disposition on the part of the Associated Press to control the editorial conduct of the papers to which it is serving news. If the Associated Press management can make such a powerful metropolitan daily as The Herald "eat crow" for the offense of taking sides with the Koreans against Japanese officialdom, what can it not do by way of dictation and repression with others of its constituent papers, which, to say the least, cannot be more capable of resisting it than The New York Herald is? And if the Associated Press will thus discipline The Herald for a matter of foreign and external interest, how much less truculent can it be supposed to be with papers that may traverse its ideas in regard to American public affairs? All sound constitutional law holds that a state must not interfere with the freedom of the press. The people must be guaranteed sources of uncontrolled information. But control of the press by popular government would be several shades less intolerable than control of the press by private organizations; and the newspapers which have built up this tremendous worldwide news gathering agency are craven indeed if they will accept from it limitations of their individuality and freedom.

New Year's Revelry and the Whole Year's Safety

The silly custom which marks out the night when an old year ends and a new year begins as a time for unbridled revelry in the public streets and in liquor-selling resorts, had its way more wildly than ever this season in many American cities, but in Chicago and New York especially. Jacob Riis's plan for music and singing in the parks of Manhattan was approved and aided by a great many decorous souls, but in the seething multitudes of New York they were but a tiny group compared with the noisy throngs who went the other way for their New Year's celebration. Nevertheless, the excellent idea that Mr. Riis has planted may grow to more overshadowing size in later years.

In Chicago the soberer-minded citizens were mostly concerned with the question of why law should be weaker on New Year's eve than at other times in the year. The city's ordinances say liquor selling must stop at the hour of 1 a. m. every night in the year—albeit it does not fully stop on any night—but for the morning of January 1 Mayor Harrison let it be understood that the ordinances would not count at all, and very naturally the crowd took that to mean "Everything goes!" This Mayor Harrison tacitly acknowledges as his ideal of city administration—no law enforced if there are any considerable number of people who would prefer otherwise. But whatever indulgence might be accorded to this sort of city government if its effects stopped with one night of revelry a year, it becomes a subject which no disinterested citizen can count of small consequence when relaxation of the law's hand results, as it is now resulting in Chicago, in a frightful multiplication of murders and robberies, with a police force well nigh paralyzed in the hands of the criminal classes. A mayor who says that some laws mean nothing inevitably advertises to the underworld that no laws in an anything. American city government must be an alternative between all law and whole anarchy. There is no halfway stopping place between zenith and nadir on this proposition.

People Should Know About Committee Reports

The Continent is not always able to agree with The Christian Instructor of Philadelphia, but it is a pleasure to agree with it when we can. And we do agree most emphatically with its opinion that the committees negotiating union between the United and Southern Presbyterian Churches would foster the object they have in view much more successfully if they made public just now, for the information of everybody interested, the basis of union on which they agreed between themselves at Washington. The theory that a General Assembly committee is bound in courtesy not to let anybody else know its conclusions until it reports to the body that appointed it is pretty deeply intrenched in precedent in all Presbyterian denominations. But The Continent holds that it is poor Presbyterianism because it is poor democracy. The people ought to know what a committee is going to report, and they ought to have a right to elect their representatives to Assembly on that issue if they choose. The Instructor is quite right about this, though it is not strange in this case that the committeemen on their own responsibility do not feel like defying precedent.

Speaking of The Instructor, by the way, reminds us to observe that it has just been purchased by the United Presbyterian Board of Publication, and is henceforth to be published from Pittsburg. The United Presbyterian, which has held the Pittsburg field in its denomination for seventy years, doesn't like this. With its long independent service to its church, it feels that it should not be put in competition now with an official organ on its own ground. And it seems to have pretty strong reason for protest in the fact that the Assembly of the church, less than two years ago, refused to authorize the publication of an official organ. The Board of Publication has apparently gone ahead on its own ideas in the teeth of this Assembly action.

—The appointment of Dr. W. J. Darby of Evansville as field secretary for Ministerial Relief and Sustentation in the southern district is a singularly appropriate action on the part of the reorganized board at Philadelphia. It means that Dr. Darby is to give the crowning years of his working life to the interest which, amid multifarious services to the church, has been always nearest to his heart. While he was pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Evansville, which was in many respects the most influential pulpit in that denomination, Dr. Darby brought about the organization of the Cumberland Presbyterian Board of Ministerial Relief thirty years ago. Afterwards his denomination called him to do important work in publication and educational interests, but he still continued a member of the Relief Board, and when impaired health compelled him to do just one thing instead of a dozen, he became the Relief Board's secretary. Thornton Home for Aged Ministers near Evansville is a monument to his devotion to this cause. Now that he is to go out into the field to plead for the same sacred cause under larger relations, it will be a task in which all his heart's enthusiasm will reenforce Dr. Darby's eloquent tongue.

—It is said in college that no fellow is popular until he has acquired a nickname, and the same sort of thing holds pretty true in life outside of college. It certainly seems to apply in the case of the present moderator of the U. S. A. General Assembly, who has been known everywhere as "The Tall Pine of the Sierras" ever since Dr. Charles L. Thompson named him so at Winona in 1905. And now Peter Clark Macfarlane, writing in Collier's, has dubbed the moderator by another title, which will likely stick as close to him—"The Black-Maned Lion of Seattle." The magazine man also calls Dr. Matthews a totem pole, but admits that that is not quite fair. Marfarlane has struck a new journalistic vein in writing of preachers, and his practice as he progresses is improving his style. He has two more Presbyterians on his list for promised writeups—Frank Higgins and Wilbur Chapman, with the latter of whom he means to make a climax of the whole list.

—Sentiment against child labor seems to be mainly sustained on pity for "the poor little things who have to work so hard." But if there were nothing in child labor except the toil of it, it would be hard to keep up a steady and rational movement against it. The profound peril of child labor, which makes the fight against it a patriotic necessity, is its vicious bequest of inefficiency to manhood and womanhood. The child who works makes a man or woman unable to work with anything like the effectiveness that full-grown service to the weal of the world demands. Society more and more must see the need of preparing its men and women, and child labor is not preparation.

—In Chicago papers lately there appeared a striking full-page advertisement announcing a series of thirty articles in The Daily News, by Frederic J. Haskin, on the immigrant. The advertisement itself contained a series of impressive facts. The immigrant contributes 85 per cent of all the labor in the slaughtering and meat packing industries; seven-tenths of the bituminous coal mining; 78 per cent of all the work in the woolen mills, and nine-tenths in the cotton mills. He makes nineteen-twentieths of all the clothing of America; more than half the shoes; four-fifths of all the furniture; half the collars, cuffs and shirts; half the gloves; four-fifths of all the leather. He refines nearly nineteen-twentieths of the sugar. And yet, as the advertisement says, he is the great American problem: "When I pour out my blood on your altar of labor, and lay down my life as a sacrifice to your god of toil, men make no more comment than at the fall of a sparrow. But my brawn is woven into the warp and woof of the fabric of your national being. My children shall be your children and your land shall be my land, because my sweat and my blood will cement the foundations of the America of tomorrow."

—Though believing fully in the justice of the sentence which lands them there, a human-hearted onlooker cannot be insensible to the pathetic side of the scene when thirty-three of the thirty-eight convicted leaders in union labor entered the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth last week. Most of them, and possibly all, are of a type which no ordinary temptations to wrong could have turned into crime. They are criminals only for the sake of a cause, and so represent that twist of fanaticism which in every age has led all sorts of men to do evil for the sake of the good to which they believed that the evil was a necessary condition. Not even Christianity itself has been free from that discreditable extravagance. But the closing prison doors at Leavenworth are like a curtain descending on a drama which once more has taught the futility, as well as the wickedness, of "doing ill that good may come." The union labor cause certainly will be both warned and strengthened by this harsh instruction, and men concerned for every other line of human progress and reform may well take their share of the same lesson.

—The Continent in one of its Christmas numbers made a rather pessimistic observation on the modern tendency to celebrate Christmas without reference to its religious meaning. But perhaps this way of speaking was a little bit too doleful. The defect is undoubtedly a real one, but possibly the trend has already started toward better things. There is certainly a suggestion of that in the way the daily papers have kept Christmas this holiday season The Philadelphia North American, for example, on Christmas morning gave up its whole first page to an illuminated and illustrated text of Montgomery's great hymn, "Angels from the Realms of Glory," with its splendid refrain:

"Come and worship, come and worship,
Worship Christ, the newborn King."

It hardly seems possible that anybody who bought The North American for Christmas morning would be stupid enough to miss altogether the religious meaning of the day.

—Frank W. Ober, editor of Association Men, can produce more new ideas to the square minute than any other magazine manager in the country. The cover page of his January number, which contains his annual review of Young Men's Christian Association activities, will do very well as exhibit A in this allegation. Mr. Ober has designed a facsimile bond which represents the Young Men's Christian Association as duly bound to return to the investor in its work "a full equivalent in the gold coin of Christian character, personal righteousness, temperance, efficiency or other equivalent of like standard and fineness." Interest is promised meanwhile "some thirty, some sixty and some a hundred fold." The coupons, elaborately engraved, stand for greater faith, church life, sound bodies, trained minds, clean lives, boyhood development, social redemption, manhood conservation, efficiency, brotherhood, leadership, country welfare, Christian homes and community development. Surely this is a "line of securities" that ought to "bring money."

Jots and Tittles

—The Christian who attends church only once a day may be a good man, but he is working on half time.

—When one thinks he doesn't sin, it is time to look up into the tree and count the apples.

—The man who can explain a miracle is seldom good for much else.

—Long sermons are too short if they fail to reach the man.

—Manners are the small change of life.

DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE

Visions and Dreams

"YOUR YOUNG MEN shall see visions and your old men shall dream dreams." And vision and dream are just the enlargement of our thought to apprehend the mind of God. They are vistas into spiritual secrets. They are windows looking out upon larger and wealthier life. They are glimpses of the will of God and of the riches of his grace. They are the unfolding of some new intimacy with the Lord, and of fresh discernment of the things pertaining to his kingdom.

The Holy Spirit, through the ministry of vision and dream, enables the soul to escape from the imprisonment of the present. We can be blinded and held captive by the immediate day. Absorption in the thing that is near is usually a form of servitude. To be absorbed in a book implies a certain insensitiveness to our surroundings. And if the subject that holds us is petty the absorption is belittling. But we may be also unduly confined to a worthy task until the very confinement makes us heavy-laden. We can be rigorously shut up in an immediate sorrow, and so become children of the night. We can so be held captive by a disappointment that the interests of our life are dried up into juiceless indifference. And we can be so locked up in the immediate loss of a bereavement as to lose all our sympathetic and sacrificial strength. Now the Holy Spirit is the appointed minister to give us release from this servitude, and he does it by means of vision and dream.

Life Refreshed by a Radiant Ideal

In a recent story John Galsworthy tells of a prisoner, serving a life sentence, who was saved from utter spiritual desolation by being allowed to keep in his cell a picture of a young girl gathering flowers in a garden. That colored symbol was a minister of vision and dream. It saved the convict soul from death, and there were leaves upon his tree of life that never withered. Stradivarius, while making his violins, associated his workmanship with the Infinite—"God choosing me to help him." The dream of a vast relationship threw its ennobling influence round about his daily life.

And in some such way it is that the Holy Spirit leads us out of our captivities. He unfolds to us the heavenly Presence upon our road. He sets our work in infinite associations. He reveals to us "the heavenly places in Christ Jesus," while we are employed in the place where we earn our daily bread. It is as though we were climbing a stairway of some turret where the light is dim, and the ascent steep and narrow. But now and again we come to a turret window, little more than a niche, but we look out upon the sunny acres of a big and far-stretching world. So does the Holy Spirit, as we go our "common round" and attend to the "daily task," open windows in the soul which relate our goings with the wonders of God's eternal world.

And again the Holy Spirit, through the ministry of vision and dream, unfolds to us the realm of heavenly possibility. He enriches our conception of spiritual ideals. He deepens the glory of our understanding of God. For surely the God of our souls should become more glorious to our gaze as the years go by! The gray of the early sunrise should change into the warmer splendor of the fuller day. There should be a more august contemplation of his holiness, a more subduing insight into his grace and a more rapturous discernment of his love. Things that were hidden in the early days should emerge in after years.

The Strengthening View of the Growing Soul

When we go with our impaired and defective sight to the oculist he adjusts the lenses until we see clearly. First of all, we have a lens that enables us to see the bold type. Then a stronger lens is tried which brings a smaller type into view, and so on through increasing strengths of vision, until the most hidden secret is clearly unveiled. And so it is in our passage through the years. The Holy Spirit, through direct counsel and through the medium of experience, adds strength after strength to the lens of our vision, and hidden glories in the things of grace break upon our eyes.

And he also gives us visions and dreams of further possibility in moral attainment. "Not that I have already attained." No, there was a height beyond the apostle's present standing. And when that farther height had been climbed another would tower before him. The Holy Spirit gives us succeeding visions of possible triumphs in grace. And so aspiration mingles with peace, and confidence with ambition. We are not permitted to sit down in inglorious ease, or to stagnate in perilous contentment. The life that is guided by the Holy Spirit is restful and yet restless, quietly rooted and yet always in growth.

And the Holy Spirit also gives us visions of new possibilities of service. He opens doors of opportunity and we have vistas of new fields and new harvests. The apostle Peter had such a vision at Joppa, and it led him into vital fellowship with the new world. Ananias had a similar vision, and it took him on a chivalrous errand to the apostle Paul. And whenever, in our smaller and more obscure lives, a door opens, and through it we see the gleaming, inviting presence of a new duty and a new occupation, we can interpret it as a gracious appointment of the Spirit of our God.

Revelations of the Perfection to Come

And, lastly, the Holy Spirit, through the ministry of vision and dream, fascinates our souls by the vision of the finished pile. When the disciple Philip brought a few Greeks to the Master, there came to the Lord's soul a vision of his triumph: "Now is the Son of Man glorified." In the mustard seed he saw the perfect tree. When the apostle John was in Patmos, exiled because of the word of God from kindly fellowship and coveted service, he was given a vision of "a new heaven and a new earth." When his thoughts had wandered to the garish impurities of imperial Rome, and he realized the apparent weakness of the little church planted in that seething city, there was given to him a vision of "the new Jerusalem, coming down from heaven, clothed as a bride adorned for her husband." And so does the gracious Spirit lift the eyes of our souls upon the prospect of the finished work, and we receive heartening in our task.

As we toil in tears and pain the Spirit gives us a vision of the day when all the scaffolding shall be removed, and the designed building shall stand out, clear and perfect, in the light of God, and there shall be "neither sorrow, nor crying, for the former things have passed away." The shepherds in "The Pilgrim's Progress" led the pilgrims to "the top of a high hill called Clear" and gave them a vision of things ahead which made them sing as they went again on their journey.

Sometimes as we grow older the vision of the Spirit is given us through the ministry of a dream. Some little thing sets our minds roaming over our past days, dreaming of years that are gone. And we return from the retrospect carrying the lamp of hope. We have retrodden in memory the way of a gracious Providence, and we come back with a new light shining upon the morrow. Our dream has been transformed into a vision. "Goodness and mercy hath followed us," and we shall "dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

J. H. JOWETT.

To a Fowl Seen in the North Atlantic

Thou wandering, tiny, helpless thing,
Here in this heaving sea,
There is no rest for thy tired wing,
No nest above which thou may'st sing—
Ah! how we pity thee!

But look! thou droppest on the wave
Like dove upon her nest.
Thy fluttering heart is sailor-brave:
This sea, we thought, had been thy grave—
Instead, a couch for rest.

These cold, salt valleys are thy home,
The deep thy downy bed;
Its flying spray, its singing foam,
Its rayless deeps where mermen roam—
These bring to thee no dread.

So let us, in the hours of fear,
When tossed on life's great deep,
Rest trustingly on His great care—
And with a murmured, "Father, hear,"
Close eyes for restful sleep.

—R. H. Morris.

—There is a wide difference between accession and conversion. One is always a change of heart, while the other may be a sum in addition.

New York's Unique "Try-Out" Sunday School

BY FREDERICA BEARD

A Sunday school where children of a dozen denominations meet in united Christian purpose is maintained by Union Seminary, the noted theological institution whose splendid plant overlooks the Hudson in Upper New York City. It is a religious laboratory, a successful demonstration of the possibilities of Sunday school teaching under modern educational principles and methods, and as such is of peculiar interest to teachers and parents.

THERE IS NOT, we believe, another Sunday school like this one. It is unique in character; it is worth studying. Every Christian parent and teacher interested in religious education, who visits New York for a Sunday, may well give the early morning hour to this school at Union Theological Seminary. It is making real the ideals that some have held; things hoped for are here actually seen, and there is a prospect of still better things to be. The people most closely connected with the school say, "It is in the experimental stage; we have not yet attained," but to many a visitor it serves as a revelation.

It is unique, first, in its place of meeting. As one sees little children going up and down the marble stairways with an air of at-home-ness in this school of divinity the old thought comes to mind of "boys and girls playing in the streets thereof," and one dreams of the possible good of this association both to the community and to the institution. It is not to be wondered at if the pupils have a certain pride in this connection. One little girl, in filling out her membership card, naively wrote that she belonged to the Union Theological Seminary. The churchly atmosphere of the beautiful chapel and the university atmosphere of the class rooms have their effect for good.

"The Union School of Religion" is unique, also, in the fulfillment of its name. Twelve denominations are represented by the parents of the pupils. Even a Catholic and a Quaker are united in Christian activities with those of other churches. The teachers employed belong to different sects, but here they unite in one Christian purpose and effort.

The school assembles at half past 9 in the morning in the administration building and, with the exception of the kindergarten group, marches to Memorial chapel for twenty minutes of worship. Processional and recessional hymns are always included in this service. After passing into the pews, teachers and pupils quietly bow down and the singing of "The Lord Is in His Holy Temple" is most impressive, followed by the chanting of "Our Father, who art in heaven."

Religion as a Permeating, Joyous Experience

The basic idea that religion is essentially a part of life, influencing, permeating and making rich and joyous all experiences, may be realized by him who has eyes to see below the surface. This truth is sometimes illustrated in the story told at the time of worship. A single example must suffice here. On the Sunday of the week in which Lincoln's birthday was celebrated the leader took the immediate experience and interest of the children and gave it the religious touch by showing in beautiful story form how Lincoln did a part of the work of Jesus, in that both sought to make men free. The story, or simple talk, as a part of the service, helps also to establish a Christian standard—a certain way of doing things "for us who are members of Union Sunday school"—and it fosters a community interest. He who thinks the spectacular is necessary to hold the interest of pupils and is accustomed to the use of much paraphernalia, will be surprised at the response to a simple, dignified service that has in it a tone of reality from the child standpoint.

It may be hard to believe that a hundred children will sit absorbed in listening to the playing on the organ of "The Pilgrims' Chorus," but after a simple word interpretation, such playing, given occasionally under right conditions, has proved a helpful interest.

The truth expressed in Horace Bushnell's words, "The child should grow up a Christian and never know himself as being otherwise," is manifest in the spirit of all that is done. Through the instruction given and the activities carried on a growing Christian experience is sought. A lesson period of forty-five minutes, and a separate room for each class, give a large opportunity for expressional work on the part of the pupils. He who doubts whether sixth grade boys are interested in research, discussion and conclusion in regard to biblical facts and truths may well visit such a group in this school. The boys and girls in this and the higher grades are led to think for themselves, while the teachers act as leaders and guides. Few teachers can manage successfully the dramatization of Old Testament stories; unusual insight and care are needed if this method is to be really helpful. It is, therefore, a suggestive study to see the simple and effective way in which characters are personified here by fifth grade children.

Plan of Organization and Work

The plan of the organized class as a social group is carried out through all the grades, and very definite cooperation is evident in some of them. Social fellowship is conserved by class parties, excursions and club activities. The moneys collected from Sunday to Sunday are kept in class treasuries, and are expended in deeds of mercy and help by the decision of each class in consultation with the teacher. The relationship of the smaller groups to that of the whole school is strengthened by united action of various kinds. Christian service for others is a strong feature of the work, sometimes fulfilled by the school as a unit, sometimes by the individual class according to its particular interests. Visits are made to the sick, and to charity organizations in the vicinity, such as a day nursery, a home for crippled children. Picture books, flowers and delicacies are distributed from time to time, and gifts of money are sent to famine sufferers, the Grenfell association and other Christian activities. Continuous responsibility has lately been assumed for the tuition of a student in Nanking University.

After weeks of quiet observation a visitor is impressed with the fact that one moving spirit is back of all the good being done. The school is, today, what it is because of the keen insight, the wise control and inspiring guidance of Professor George Albert Coe.

As a practical demonstration to students in the religious education department of the seminary this school is invaluable. Here is the laboratory method by which they may see theories actually in practice, and realize the possibilities of Sunday school teaching under modern educational principles and methods. Again one dreams and sees in imagination the minister of to-morrow who will have an intelligent knowledge of child life, and who will not only sympathize with but be able himself to establish a Sunday school that is, in very truth, a school of religion.

Moslems Are Trekking to Asia

Strange scenes are seen in Constantinople these days, says a writer in a recent number of The Orient, the American missionary monthly published at Constantinople. The Turkish and other Mohammedan villagers from the Thracian plains are passing by the thousands through Stamboul, across the Bosporus and off into Asia Minor. They are retracing backward the steps of their ancestors of five centuries ago, and leaving Europe to return to Asia. And the weird part of it is, that in costume, conveyances and manner of life there has been practically no change in these 500 years. The wheels of their long narrow carts have spokes in them now, where they used to be solid wheels, and perhaps the rush matting that protects the family from the weather may be a little better woven. But the oxen or buffaloes that leisurely drag the household along, and the barefooted wife or the sandaled husband with the goad who pulls these lumbering animals by a string, and the primitive mode of life on their plodding journey, all belong to a bygone age. Apparently the five centuries of life on European soil has not affected to any perceptible degree their scale in civilization. These Asiatics have been in Europe, but not of it; and now with the descent of the Bulgarian hordes upon the region, they pick up all their early belongings save their stone or adobe huts, and trek back to the regions of Anatolia.

According to their own admission, they are leaving the farms and villages of Thrace for the same reason that some of these very same individuals left their Bosnian homes three or four years ago—because of a deep-seated aversion to living under any but Moslem rule. Call it prejudice, call it obstinacy, call it religious bigotry, the result is a preference for Mohammedan surroundings and government with all the privations of a long, weary migration and an unknown future rather than the comfort of their ancestral homes under foreign rule, especially the rule of those who were once their rayah—their flocks.

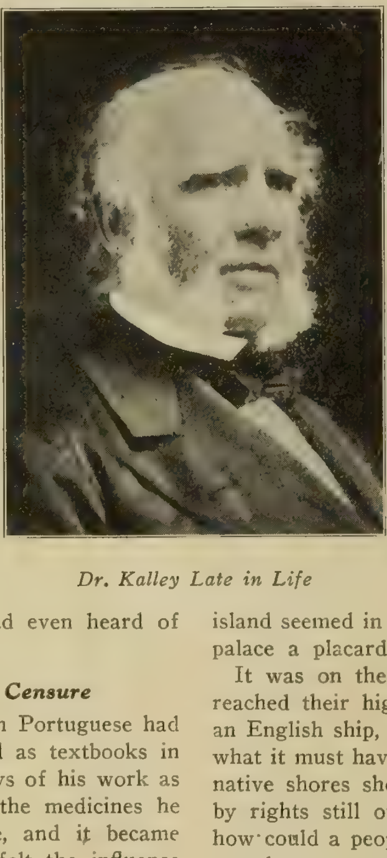
Hero-Exiles of the Purple Island

The Young Scotch Physician Who Carried the Gospel to Madeira, and His Portuguese Converts Who Were Driven to the New World

BY JOHN W. ELTZHOLTZ

ROBERT R. KALLEY was a young physician in Scotland who felt that he was called to be a missionary to China. He was ordained by the Free Church to preach the gospel and in 1838 he and his wife took ship for China. While on their way Mrs. Kalley took seriously ill. It was plain that she could not endure the long journey to China, and to go back to Scotland was impossible. But, being near the beautiful shores of Madeira, the island with the purple soil, they landed here. This meant a complete change of the plans of Dr. Kalley, but he was determined to serve the Lord, and just where was a matter of less importance so long as he was in the line of duty.

Dr. Kalley set about to learn the Portuguese language, learning his first word on the evening of the day he landed. As soon as he became conversant with conditions he saw the need of schools. In a short time he opened a school to teach English, with the design, as we are told, of acquiring the Portuguese language. Soon there were schools throughout the island. From his own purse Dr. Kalley paid the salaries of the teachers, and also paid for all the books used in these schools. At first this work was much appreciated and he was looked upon as a public benefactor. Even the municipal authorities of the city of Funchal, the principal city of the island, were constrained to pass a vote of thanks to Dr. Kalley for what they called "his disinterested acts of benevolence and philanthropy, such as the establishment of schools in different parts of the island at his own expense, and furnishing the people with medical attendance and medicines gratuitously."



Dr. Kalley Late in Life

While all these things were important and served as a leverage into the hearts of the people, yet their state was deplorable. Their ignorance of the Bible was the chief cause of Madeira's misery, which Dr. Kalley had on his heart to alleviate. One can scarce believe that an island presided over by an organization existing for the purpose of saving men could keep the Bible not only a closed but an unknown book. So it was, for no copies of the word of God were to be found, and very seldom did Dr. Kalley find anyone who had even heard of there being such a book as the Bible.

Introduction of Bible Changes Praise to Censure

It so happened that a few copies of the Bible in Portuguese had been brought from Scotland and these were used as textbooks in teaching the poor people to read. In the early days of his work as a physician Dr. Kalley would dexterously wrap the medicines he gave his patients in pages torn from the Bible, and it became literally true that the whole island of Madeira felt the influence of this one man.

Praise was now changed into censure. The work of Dr. Kalley was making inroads upon the Roman Church. It was the priests who had held the people in intellectual thraldom, it was they who had kept the knowledge of there being such a book as the Bible given to men. And the "Kalleyites," as they were now called, must be punished. The residents of the island could easily be handled by the law, but to regulate the acts of Dr. Kalley was not a matter so easy to manage. The treaty between England and Portugal presented a formidable obstacle. The treaty guaranteed to the subjects of these respective governments "liberty to enjoy their religion without molestation in Madeira." And yet what is a law to priests who are losing their grip upon a people whom they have held in ignorance for more than four centuries? Who cannot by going back far enough find a law to cover almost any case? And so here the astute Romish hierarchy discovered in the code of laws enacted by the inquisition of Portugal in 1603 what they wanted, and as a result Dr. Kalley was arrested, tried and condemned to prison, where he remained for five months.

His followers were now persecuted to a shameful extent. From every pulpit of the island was read the following document which made it impossible for anyone to live in Madeira who did not go to mass: "Let no one give them fire, water, bread or anything that may be necessary for their support. Let no one pay them their just debts. Let no one support them in any case which they may bring before a court of justice. Let all put them aside as rotten and excommunicated members, separated from the bosom and union of the Holy Mother Catholic Church, and as rebels and contumacious." More than that, it excommunicated, ipso facto, all who did not comply with these commands—every debtor who should pay these persons their just debts, every judge who should dare in court of law to do them justice, every charitable person who should give them water, fire or anything necessary to existence. A man who refused to pay homage to a piece of cloth fixed upon a stick and called the Holy Ghost was sentenced to six months in jail.

An order to the schools of Dr. Kalley was also sent to the registrar of each parish. It read as follows:

"On the receipt of this you will summon to your presence the teachers, male and female, of all the schools established and supported by Dr. Kalley existing in your parish and in the presence of two witnesses charge them not to teach any living being. If after being notified any of them should continue to teach you can immediately send them to this administration in charge of two officers of police. You will cause this order to be faithfully executed, and report the result by Monday next, giving the names of all who have been notified. God save you.

"J. S. TERREIRA UZEL, Administrator."

Hundreds of those who had found the Bible a solace, and who had seen how courageous was their leader under persecution were placed in jail. Some were kept behind bars for two years, and some for a longer period. Dr. Kalley escaped with difficulty. Dressed as a woman, he was carried in a hammock to a British man-of-war in the harbor. Later in the same day Mrs. Kalley was able to make her escape to the same ship. Standing upon the deck, Dr. Kalley could see the smoke from the ruins of his home containing his library valued at $10,000. The island seemed in a riot, for there had been placed on the governor's palace a placard commanding all Protestants to leave the island.

It was on the 23d of August, 1846, after the persecutions had reached their highest, that 200 of the Christians found refuge on an English ship, the William of Glasgow. One can scarcely realize what it must have meant to those and some 800 more who left their native shores shortly after. Some of them had been wealthy and by rights still owned their lands and houses on the island. But how could a people to whom no judge was allowed to give justice to whom no one should give bread were they starving, live in their own dear home, the beautiful island of Madeira, the isle of the purple soil?

Trinidad proved a refuge. Here the exiles could worship God according to their own conscience. Meanwhile Dr. Kalley was in Europe. Rev. W. H. Hewitson, also of the Free Church, had labored in Madeira and had returned to Scotland. Hearing of the persecutions, he determined to go to the people in Trinidad. He found that many of the exiles had obtained work through the kindness of the governor, Lord Harris. But it soon became plain that these islands could not be considered a permanent home. And in the midst of efforts on the part of Mr. Hewitson to find a more suitable abode for them the Bank of the West Indies failed and business in general was prostrated. As soon as it was learned in Trinidad that the exiles intended to leave the island many of their number who had positions were discharged. This left the poor sojourners in want.

Persecuted Turn to America

The cry of need reached the shores both of England and America. Contributions were made for the care of the suffering. The American Protestant Society sent Rev. G. Gonsalves to Trinidad to investigate conditions and thus learn what action to take. Mr

Gonsalves was himself born in Madeira, had been a Romanist, and for several years had been working among the 5,000 or 6,000 Portuguese living on the New England coast. An agricultural company first engaged to give them a home in Illinois. They were to have houses, good wages and to every family a ten-acre lot was to be given. The location was about half way between Springfield and Jacksonville. Shortly afterwards the firm making this offer failed. Meanwhile, and all through the time of waiting, the American Protestant Society had the no small task of providing shelter and clothing for the ever increasing number of exiles landing in New York. Most of the unfortunates arrived with no money in their pockets and even without sufficient clothing.

The delay caused by the failure was providential. Had the earlier plans been carried out the exiles would have encountered the scourge of cholera which was then making inroads upon the population of the western states. A committee now came to the front composed of Governor French of Illinois, Rev. J. M. Sturtevant, president of Illinois College, and Rev. Albert Hale of Springfield, Illinois. The committee invited this homeless band to the hospitality of the citizens of Springfield and Jacksonville. And on October 19, 1849, nearly 300 exiles left New York for their future home in the west. Cold weather was, of course, encountered and the citizens were that winter kept busy providing shelter and clothing, as well as food, for those who in the dead of winter did not obtain employment. The expense of transportation was met by the good people in New York and other places where the news of their devotion to principle had reached. The exiles were prospered on their journey. Public meetings were held at Albany, Buffalo, Detroit and Chicago. Most of these meetings were attended by this expatriated band and liberal contributions were made at such meetings to defray the expenses of their journey. Provision was also made for those who still remained in the West Indies to join their loved ones and friends in America, the land of promise—their Canaan, as they called it.

From this time the exiles through industry—many tilling the soil and later many going into business—became a substantial addition to the citizenship of the state as well as to the two cities which offered them shelter. At first there were two churches, one in Springfield and one in Jacksonville, both served by one minister. But divisions arose among the people of the church in Jacksonville over trivial matters and finally there were three churches there. At last these three churches were united, and nearly twelve years ago the first American pastor was called.

For years there had been dreams of building a church which should memorialize the sufferings of this Bible-loving people. From the beginning of the second English-speaking pastorate the needs of such a memorial were emphasized and in August of 1909 the corner stone was laid for the new building, the name having been changed from the Portuguese to the Northminister Presbyterian church. On September 18, 1910, the beautiful Northminster church was dedicated. A manse was also, for the first time, provided. The cost of the plant was about $45,000. The auditorium is the largest as well as the most beautiful in Jacksonville. So there it stands, a building dedicated to the worship of God and a lasting memorial to the faithfulness and devotion of a people who gave their all for the sake of an open Bible.

The Big Sister to a City's Girls

BY HERBERT H. SMITH

"GOOD-BY." A little hand in a white mitten was waving over the shoulder of a woman passing through the door of the public building in which the juvenile court of Chicago is held. "There goes another of Miss Bartelme's children," said a bystander as he watched the little procession of which the woman and child were a part leave the building.

It doesn't take a newcomer among the socializing forces of Chicago long to know who Miss Bartelme is, for her name is mentioned in probate and juvenile court more often than that of the presiding judge. For eighteen years she has been the official mother and father to hundreds, perhaps thousands, of children who have no other parents. During this time Mary M. Bartelme has been the appointee of the changing governors of the state as public guardian. She recently has been selected to the position of assistant to Judge M. W. Pinckney of the juvenile court and will sit on a bench and hear cases just as does the judge himself—the first woman of the country to occupy a judicial position of this character.

Mary M. Bartelme

"I am not to be judge in the usual legal sense," smiled Miss Bartelme as she sat in her law office in one of Chicago's skyscrapers. "I am only the judge's assistant, although my work will be the same as his. I shall have charge of all the cases against girls, and they will appear before me.

"I hardly know how many children I have," she said in talking of her work. It was just before the holidays. "Here are a few of them," and she picked up nine sheets, each with forty-four names. "What are the lists for? Oh, some of my good friends are helping me remember them at Christmas."

The little boy who waved good-by is one of the typical cases through which the new "judge" has obtained her experience. The child's mother died last autumn after the father had left her to face a lonely death from tuberculosis. A friend, however, had promised to care for her son, and she had signed a request that the friend be permitted to adopt it. But the grandmother also wanted the boy and the president of a Polish benevolent society actually was caring for the child and wanted to adopt it. A fund of $350 belonging to the youngster was also involved, and Miss Bartelme was asked to see that the money was saved and the tangle unraveled for the judge. The grandmother had brought witnesses that the friend of the dead mother had improper callers and was not a fit person to have the child. The friend in turn had witnesses who said the same of the grandmother. The Polish woman had no children and promised to give the orphan a good home and leave to it some real estate. It is the practice she has had in smoothing out such tangles of relationship or desired relationship that has given to Miss Bartelme that fine capacity for appreciation of others' troubles which shows in her kindly smile and gentle courtesy to the humblest of citizens who seek to unburden their woes.

Miss Bartelme appreciates keenly the responsibilities of her new position in tempering with kindness the austerities of the laws involving the delinquent girls of the second largest city in the country. While she admitted that her experience of nearly two decades with children in relation to the courts had given her highly valuable experience, "it never becomes really easy to judge human nature." To some of her many charges she has been merely a nominal guardian. If a boy under age wanted to join the navy, Miss Bartelme was appointed guardian to consent to his serving his country. If an orphaned couple wanted to marry before legal age, Miss Bartelme usually was relied upon to investigate and give consent if she found the union advisable.

In no other of the big cities of this country where the juvenile court has developed during the last decade is there a woman who hears and judges cases. There are women in police stations as matrons and on the force of some cities to care for young girls, but nowhere else is there a woman in a judicial position. It is a tribute to the woman herself that in a state where the suffragists have not made an aggressive campaign Miss Bartelme should be selected as the one individual best fitted to assist Judge Pinckney, overburdened with cases crowding his docket.

Unlike the work of most judges, it will be Miss Bartelme's part to guide and restrain rather than punish, although that power is hers also. She takes her place among those who would make the world better by work with individuals, quietly pointing practical ways of better living and seeking to keep them from temptation. Mild and quiet, with a hurrying step which spells efficiency, Miss Bartelme is typical of the womanly women, increasing in numbers, who are devoting their lives to others. Through wide knowledge of the troubles and difficulties of life which others meet, she has learned that the complex relation of things as they are to things as they should be calls for a tender sympathy as well as a firm determination.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters—Bradford Horton is working his way through the Prestonbury Theological Seminary in opposition to his mother's wishes. He is soloist in Second church, does indexing for Preston bank and tutors the grandson of Richard Elmore, the bank's president, to whose daughter he is greatly attracted. A fellow student, Austin Sleighton, becomes his loyal friend, but jealousy has made him a bitter enemy in Oren-Toole, bank employee. "O.-T." evolves a plan for Horton's undoing. He makes up a package containing $2,000 in banknotes, replaces the amount in the bank's safe with a similar package containing strips of paper, and hires an old beggar to hide the money in Horton's bedroom. Horton discovers the man, who proves to be his own father, angrily forces the package back upon him, buys a ticket for New York and starts him off on the train. In an anguish of self-accusation and regret, Horton finally confesses to Sleighton that he is only the adopted son of the Hortons. He is arrested for the theft of the banknotes, but his case is dismissed when no one appears against him. In the meantime his father, discovering the contents of the package he is carrying, gets off the train at Albany, registers at the Albemarle hotel, deposits all but $200 in the hotel's safe and indulges in a day's debauch, ending in the smashing of a plate-glass window, which lands him in the workhouse to serve a three months' term. Oren-Toole, in accordance with a plan of Mr. Elmore's, goes on a fruitless search for Horton's father. Life for Horton, in the meantime, moves on quietly. He declines all invitations and devotes his time to study and practice. His work in "The Messiah" wins him profound admiration, and a carnation dropped at his feet by Miss Elmore's hand reveals the source of others found in his room. Mr. Elmore, however, has learned from Mrs. Horton that the young man is a foundling, and is convinced that he is a liar, and the taker of the $2,000. He sends Oren-Toole to Albany to bring back to Prestonbury the father of Horton, Andrew Drum, whose whereabouts have been discovered, at the expiration of his sentence.

CHAPTER X.—Continued

OREN-TOOLE saw he had miscalculated the man he was dealing with. "You're smarter than I thought you were," he said. "I did mean to ruin your son, as you call him, and I mean to yet, and you're going to help. We're going to hide the money that's left in his room tomorrow night."

"But I can't help to ruin my son."

"Pretty son! Shipped you off like a hog, you said yourself. If I were his father I'd get even with him."

The old man weakened as his sense of ill treatment reawakened. "We can't hide the money without getting caught again," he objected, but less firmly.

Oren-Toole, for answer, pulled an Albany morning paper from his pocket, and watched the other's face as he read the announcement that Bradford Horton, a new and distinguished American tenor, would sing on Thursday night in Tweddle hall in the oratorio of "The Messiah." "See?" he inquired as the old man laid down the paper. "It's dead easy. He'll be here; we'll be there."

"But that will send William to state's prison. I can't help send my son to state's prison."

"Back there again, eh? All right, old Andy. One of us three goes. No court will believe you or him against me. I can send you there, and will, if you don't send him there."

The poor old man hesitated. His memory ran over his bitter disappointment in his son, and the brutality which he had suffered, and his wrath flamed up once more. "Pretty son!" he muttered. "You're right. He wouldn't have cared if I'd gone to the devil. I'll do it."

That night the two conspirators went to Prestonbury.

Oren-Toole did not report at the bank until Friday morning, but with the old man went to a little house on a back street to which the bank teller had moved his mother when his father died. On Thursday night the two rascals hid the money under a floor board in Horton's room. His report to Mr. Elmore was interesting.

"Well, sir, I've brought Drum to Prestonbury."

"Good!" said Mr. Elmore. "Did he have the money?"

"No; he never had it. But he knew where it was three months ago."

"Where?"

"He says it was hidden in Mr. Horton's room."

"Strange the police didn't find it. I wonder if it's there now."

"Drum says he can find it, if Horton has not sent it away."

The police found the money, of course, under Drum's guidance, but nothing more could be done until Horton's return to the city. Mr. Elmore was angry and sad; Oren-Toole happy and satisfied.

* * * * *

On the Thursday that the two conspirators spent in hiding, Horton and Sleighton went to Albany. The train from Prestonbury was unusually full. Horton took a vacant half seat at the front end of the car, and near the rear Sleighton found Miss Elmore alone. She recognized the organist and spoke. "There are no vacant places, Mr. Sleighton, but you're welcome to a seat by me."

"Only too happy, I assure you." He helped her move her belongings and took the seat.

"I saw by the paper Tuesday that Mr. Horton is to sing in Albany tonight. Do you go to play his encore accompaniment?"

"Oh, no. I am his guest, that's all."

"Then he's on this train?"

"Yes, up yonder."

"We Prestonbury people will feel proud to have one of our singers appear at the state capital."

"I suppose you must. Well, he certainly can sing."

"Do you remember my musicale? I gave that on purpose to have him sing at it, and he wouldn't come."

"I remember. It was lucky enough for Horton that he didn't go. That was the night of the bank robbery, and if he'd been at your musicale he'd be in prison now."

The girl looked puzzled.

"Don't you remember," Sleighton explained, "about the old man who said he'd hidden a surprise in Horton's room?"

She assented.

"Well, that parcel probably contained the bank money. Had Horton gone to your house the old man would have gone away undiscovered, and the police, when they searched, would have found the money in Horton's room. He couldn't have proved that he didn't steal it."

"I see," said the girl thoughtfully. "Who gave the old man the money?"

"We don't know."

The train was stopping at a way station, and two men left the seat opposite, which in a moment was preempted by the alert Sleighton, who deposited his overcoat and bag there. "Pardon me," he said, "and I'll go after Horton."

Presently they returned together. Eleanor was deep in a magazine and did not see them, nor did Horton make any sign that he saw her. He knew his friend had trapped him, and was both annoyed and pleased. As he took the inside end of the vacant seat Eleanor, looking up, noticed Sleighton.

"Oh, you've come back, have you?" she said in surprise.

"Yes."

"Did you bring Mr. Horton, as you said?"

"Yes; shall I present him?"

Bradford heard the whole comedy, and was surprised that Sleighton could manage the stage play so well. Rising for the introduction, they stood in the aisle talking for the few minutes that remained before the whistle sounded for Prestonbury Junction.

Mr. Tappan, Jack's father, passed. "Off again, I see," he said.

"Yes. Tell daddy you saw me at the junction, all safe."

"All right. I'll see him tomorrow."

At the junction Miss Elmore changed from the coach to the parlor car on the main line train. Horton carried her wraps and bag to the porter and said good-by. Seated once more in their own car, he said, "Austin, I didn't think that of you. Sharp trick you played, but you can't do it again. I'll see that girl no more."

Sleighton made no answer except by a laugh, and they sat silent for ten minutes. Suddenly, as if forgetful of Sleighton's presence, his friend broke out:

"Oh, Antigone, Antigone! why couldn't you have stayed dead? You worked mischief enough with men's hearts long ago. Why do you at this late day come after mine?"

"After yours, you idiot?" Sleighton laughed till his sides ached. "She doesn't want your heart, man. All she wants is to hear you sing."

Some hours later in the office of the Albemarle the clerk looked at Horton's signature, then eyed him sharply. "You've just missed your father, Mr. Horton," he said; "at least I suppose it was your father. He was here yesterday."

"My father? What makes you think that?"

"Oh, his name. Same as yours, exactly. He registered here about three months ago. He had a lot of money, which he left with us for safekeeping. He went out one Saturday morning and we didn't see him again until he and a young fellow came in yesterday and took the money."

"What sort of looking young fellow?"

"Fine-looking, tall, well-dressed, red-headed Irishman."

The clerk turned the register pages and showed Horton the signature. Bradford scanned it and turned to his friend.

"A. S.," he said, in an undertone, "here's a great go. My father and Oren-Toole were here yesterday. Let's go upstairs."

Comfortably settled in their room, they sat down to consider this latest development. "I've thought it all out," said Bradford. "That precious pair have gone to Prestonbury, and taken the money with them. They'll hide it in my room tonight, and I'll be arrested as I step off the train tomorrow. Oren-Toole thinks he has me this time. Why he's playing the game I don't see, and how he knew the whereabouts and movements of my father I don't know, but, anyhow, I'll beat him to a finish. Oh, Austin, when a fellow starts in without experience to be a knave there's no fool under the canopy that can match him for a fool. That stolen money was in the safe in this hotel from the day after we packed my father off until yesterday, when my father and Oren-Toole came and took it away. Oren-Toole's smart, mighty smart. But sometimes luck beats brains."

Everything happened as Bradford predicted. The warrant for his arrest sworn out by Mr. Elmore was served, and the young man spent Friday night in a cell in the city prison. At the hearing on Saturday morning Ansley Jickers asked adjournment until the next Wednesday, that he might have the case of his client properly prepared. There was no objection urged by the city attorney and the request was granted. Dr. Jickers became Horton's bail.

Andrew Drum's testimony at the hearing was a singular tissue of truth and falsehood. He described his visit to his son William, otherwise known as Bradford Horton. He told how on entering his son's room, having gone without previous announcement in order to surprise his boy, he had found him on his knees over a hole in the floor into which he was putting a paper parcel. The description of his son's treatment of him, and of his starting him back to New York, whence he had come, followed. He narrated how he had been left by the train, while he was at his breakfast in the station in Albany; how on the street he had been knocked down by a cart and suffered a bad fracture of the leg, and how he had been carried to the hospital, where he had been ever since.

(Continued on page 56)

THE WAYFARER

ONE OF THE Philadelphia stories which have stood the test of time relates how a stranger in the city was taken to the opera. Her hostess pointed out the notables in the boxes, and the phrase frequently recurred, spoken with an awed intonation, "That's a Biddle." At length the benighted stranger, who had none of Philadelphia's traditional respect for, or knowledge of, an ancient family name, inquired, "But what is a Biddle?"

* * * * *

A Biddle in Action

Good fortune enabled the Wayfarer, on a recent evening, to learn "what is a Biddle," for the best known representative of that historic Philadelphia family, Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, was the speaker at a dinner of the Philadelphia Presbyterian Social Union. Now Mr. Biddle not only wears the mantle of aristocracy which is his by birthright, but he has also by his own prowess of arms won to distinction in certain circles as the best known amateur boxer of our day. As a "gentleman sportsman" he has worn the padded gloves with most of the professional ring celebrities of our time. There are thousands of brawny citizens of this wide republic who don't know the difference between a Cruden's Concordance and Cæsar's Gallic wars, and who are as little informed upon the identity of the moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly as upon the personality of the sheikh of the Shammar Arabs, who can tell with fervor of the exploits of "Tony" Biddle.

So the presence of this shining light of amateur pugilism upon the program of the staid social union, in double harness with a clergyman whose topic was "Loyalty to the Doctrines of Historic Presbyterianism," promised a diversion. "The Joys of Strenuous Christianity" was Mr. Biddle's topic. All the men present knew him as the head of a Bible class organization which has spread widely throughout the East. Everyone was keen to see how the two reputations, that of the prize ring and that of the Bible class, could be reconciled.

* * * * *

They saw. The smiling, shining-faced, courtly, restless man, after greeting his hearers ceremoniously, plunged straight into a boyish, ingenuous tribute to the sense of Christian fellowship he had felt in the meeting. His confession of the benefit he had received from it sounded like a simple, sincere prayer meeting testimony. "Brothers" was the word he used frequently—this flower of Philadelphia's aristocracy, with transparent genuineness, was speaking in the terms and spirit of a primitive Christianity.

A touching allusion to his own idle years before he sought, in counsel with his rector, Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, for something to fill the void in his inner life, opened the talk, and won the sympathy of the hearers. This man was fairly childlike in his straightforwardness. Those who had expected laudation of the Drexel-Biddle Bible class, and extravagant claims for its work, were disarmed by the unmistakable modesty of the speaker, who never once mentioned the name of the organization.

With refreshing plainness, Mr. Biddle told of his first attempt to teach a class of three men, one of whom went to sleep every Sunday. "When I found later that he was a capable Bible student, I didn't wonder he went to sleep."

The worth of the common man, his willingness to work, his readiness to cooperate in the service of men, and his quick response to the Master's gospel of brotherliness, were spoken in phrases that sounded none the less true because unconventional. The power of gentleness over even the roughest athlete was portrayed by this refreshing apostle of the eagerness of the common man to follow leadership in the best life.

The only allusion to the speaker's ability as a boxer was most remote, and contained in the fact that he told at length the story of the juggler of Notre Dame, who had only his poor skill in juggling to offer as his prayer and his gift upon the altar of the church. A devout talk about self-consecration would not have been half so impressive as the implication of the familiar story of the juggler who had only his physical ability with which to express his heart's devotion.

* * * * *

As a theologian, Mr. Biddle would be marked about zero. Of the conventional arts of the public speaker he knows quite as little. Of the methods of organizers and officials of religious societies he is almost equally ignorant. Yet the oldest members of the social union have never seen more rapt attention given to a speaker, or more instant and generous applause. To borrow speech of certain of Mr. Biddle's admirers, he "scored a clean knockout" that evening. This was not because he was a Biddle, or because he is handy with his fists (and those who went expecting to hear the exaltation of boxing or athletics were agreeably disappointed), or because he has mastered the tricks of after-dinner oratory.

* * * * *

Instead, the ovation—for it amounted to such—was a tribute to the compelling power of manifest sincerity, simplicity and warm-hearted brotherliness. It was the doctrine of Christian fellowship and Christian service preached in the direct, unperfunctory and unprofessional speech of a gentleman.

THE WAYFARER.

THE HOME COUNCIL

Risks as Courage Makers

BY HELEN A. HAWLEY

ONE OF THE greatest blessings that a child can have is a spirit of courage. There is a large natural difference in children in this respect. Some are born fearless, others from the beginning are timid and overcautious. Much may be done by good training to keep the first from being reckless and the second from being controlled by fear. Any grown person who is under the domination of fear, either constant or recurrent with certain circumstances, knows the torture of it, and how difficult it is to throw it off after it becomes a habit.

The tendency of maternal love is to be overcareful. Since the baby or the little child does not yet know what is harmful, the mother guards it at all points, and unwittingly teaches it fear. Better sometimes to let the little one find out for himself what will hurt, for the lesson of experience is not readily forgotten. "A burnt child fears the fire." Of course no mother will let her child come to real harm, but the toddler who has touched the stove with a finger tip just by way of experiment has from that time on a better safeguard from burns than any warning—experience.

One of the most tormenting of terrors is the fear of lightning. Hundreds of persons lose half the enjoyment of the beautiful summer because of their dread of thunder storms. Is it advisable for a mother to let her children play on open porches or in exposed places during violent storms? Probably not, yet it may be said unhesitatingly that even this is wiser than to have them inoculated with fear. There are other ways of handling the situation, however. The mother can quietly explain that it is best for the children to play inside and encourage the play to go on there. Occupation and interest will keep the children quite unconscious that anything unusual is transpiring outside. Or if the storm is so violent that it claims attention. she can teach them to look with admiration on the electrical display, telling them meanwhile about our heavenly Father's control of the elements, and his loving care.

When children cease to be babies they are often inspired by physical daring. The mother's careful guidance is very necessary here. She wants her boy to have courage; quite as strongly, she does not want him to be reckless. An excellent illustration of good management is a story from a recent book of an English mother's handling of her boy. English boys are trained to hardihood; they are not allowed to whimper for small hurts, they are taught to bear bravely, and to endure. This little fellow was not more than 4 or 5 years old. He and his mother were walking through country paths one day when they came to a stile. It was several steps high and the boy wanted to jump from the top. "May I, mother?" he asked.

The mother carefully explained to him that if he did he would run the risk of hurting himself. Still the eager face questioned, and the lips repeated, "May I?" and finally the mother said, "You may do as you please, my son, now that I have warned you."

The little chap gathered himself up bravely, measured the distance carefully with his eye and jumped, landing on his two sturdy feet.

"I think the mother was glad he jumped," said an onlooker.

That mother weighed the chances. She knew there was a slight risk. Why did she allow it? Because of the greater good. In the first place, she invested her son with the responsibility of decision; in the second place, she did not thwart a reasonable pride in showing what he could do; in the third place, she put a certain confidence in him which will go far toward making them true comrades. But more than all, she helped him to a habit of fearlessness.

Such a course is not without its reflex action. Most mothers wear themselves out with needless worry about their children when they are out of sight. The mother who teaches bravery to her children knows that she has panoplied them against many perils, and she becomes herself brave in their behalf.

Some persons are very literal, otherwise there would be no need of saying that there are risks and risks. Some risks have no compensating benefit, and the mother possessed of good sense does not allow these to be indulged. Moral risks are quite another matter and must be considered in a class by themselves. Risk in morals is almost certain to be recklessness. But children, in order to come up courageous physically, must not be afraid of small hurts, or of facing the dangers always incidental to everyday life. Above all, they must be kept free from the dreadful domination of fear. Certain risks are inevitable to the accomplishment of this. The wise mother will not, in order to save her child a few bruises, deny him his rightful privilege of taking chances.

Bits by the Way

The Help of Receiving

The Christmas season is well over. The last piece of tissue paper has been smoothed of its creases and slipped into a drawer for future reference, the last bit of holly ribbon tucked away, with the left-over "stickers" and cards of greeting, to add a festive touch to our next Yuletide offerings. But many long weeks must pass before good old Santa will kindle anew the fires of Christmas gladness on our hearthstones. In the meantime—what?

I happened to drop into a friend's house for a little chat the morning before Christmas, just as the postman staggered up to the door under a weight of packages that made one instinctively look about for the reindeer. He unloaded a considerable part of his burden into my friend's arms, and as she carried the parcels in and dropped them on the table her eyes filled with sudden tears.

"I suppose you think I'm a goose," she choked apologetically, "but I just can't help it. Christmas always breaks me all up. I never can get used to the surprise of having so many dear people think of me. Of course I know they're going to because they always have done it; but the astonishment of it never grows a bit less for having happened every year since I can remember. When the last present is opened on Christmas morning, and the last card is read, I am right down on my knees in humble, wondering gratitude.

"There's a lot of talk going on about abandoning gift giving between people who don't need the help of it. But I tell you there isn't a single one of us who doesn't need that very kind of help—the—well, the spiritual help of it, for that's what it is. I heard a man say the other day that everybody needed the help of gift giving, and, of course, he's right—except about me. I need a whole lot more the help of receiving. I know that sounds selfish, but there isn't a bit of selfishness in it. I do my giving, too, just like everybody else, and love it. But there's something about all this"—indicating with a wave of her arm the heap of packages on the table—"that loosens the tight places in my heart. When all these thoughts of me come flooding in I just hug them up tight and say, 'Please, God, oh, please make me worthy of so much love!'"

Christmas is gone. Next Christmas is months away. In the meantime—this: To give, of our love, our thought, our sympathy, our understanding, to the someone, the many ones, who may need the help of receiving that which is ours to give—that to give which costs us nothing save those life experiences which have developed these gifts for use. It would be worth while to have made it possible, when another Christmas rolls around, for someone to cry, "Please, God, oh, please make me worthy of so much love!"

Marion Harland Has Birthday

Marion Harland has had a birthday, her 82d; and because she is, first of all, a real woman, and because she is a helper of women, all other real women must feel a glow of personal pride in that long span of useful years; and because she had lived in a nationwide fellowship with thousands of women and their thousands of problems, because she has lived to serve, this friend of American womanhood has carried her youth with her on into the sunset years.

Referring to her birthday, she says in a letter to one of the editors of The Chicago Tribune: "Tomorrow will be the 1st of December. I find it hard to believe that on the 21st—the very shortest day of the whole year—I shall be 82 years old! And most of the time I feel as if I had been just made! Think of me on that day. Don't worry yourself to send me so much as a postcard, but say one wee prayer for me—that I may be useful as long as I live, and live only as long as I can be useful."

A back look over Marion Harland's life recalls to mind the remark of a little girl to her snowy-haired grandmother—"How God must love you, grandma, to let you live so long!"

All Pleasant—"Except One"

Returning just once more to the holidays—some eleventh-hour shoppers were jostling each other at the travel book counter of a department store the afternoon before Christmas.

"How glad you'll be, won't you, when it's all over?" I said commiseratingly to a tired-looking saleswoman, after she had displayed exhaustively the attractions of three popular books to a young man, only to have him mumble a "Much obliged" and elbow his way out without buying.

"Oh, no," she protested brightly; "I'll be sorry, because I'm just a 'sub,' and tonight will end it all for me. I've liked the people so much; everybody's been so nice and pleasant, not a bit cross or impatient—except one," she added, with a reminiscent laugh. "She certainly kept things lively here for an hour; had us all on the jump. She'd been dieting six weeks for indigestion, she said, and living on milk; and she took it out on the rest of us."

Uncongenial elements will come to blows at times, even in the best regulated stomach, but it isn't kind, or necessary, to "take it out" on someone else. Solitary confinement till internal peace is restored would be infinitely better. Besides, it isn't really desirable to be recalled as the "one" excepted when everybody else is "so nice and pleasant." S. C. R.

Why Porterhouse Is High

A writer in The World's Work gives the following conversation with his butcher as an explanation, from the retailer's point of view. of the high cost of beef:

"That will be 72 cents," said Mr. Danahy, handing my parcel across the counter. "Will that be all today?"

"Seventy-two cents!" I gasped. "For goodness' sake, man, how much does that steak weigh?"

"Two pounds and a quarter—32 cents a pound," smiled Mr. Danahy.

I was proceeding to unburden my mind on the subject of robbers, beef trust, the high cost of living, and the tariff, when a small girl came into the butcher shop.

"Mamma wants 10 cents' worth of soup meat," she said. "She said won't you please cut it with the ham knife. It makes it taste better."

Mr. Danahy sharpened his knife, obligingly trimmed a ham with it, and then deftly carved and sawed off a chuck of beef, which he threw on the scales. I glanced at the weight. It was two and a quarter pounds—the same as my porterhouse steak.

"There you are, little girl," he said, as he handed her the package. She gave him 10 cents.

"That's the answer," he said as the child disappeared. "She gets two pounds and a quarter for 10 cents. I've got to sell those cuts for that price or not sell them at all. I can't get porterhouse steaks enough to supply the demand. I pay 12 cents a pound for an entire carcass of beef. You pay 32 cents a pound for about 10 per cent of it, but there is 40 per cent that I have to sell for less than it costs me."

YOUNG AMERICA

How Bobbie Acted His Part

BY FRANCES BOWMAN

"OH, GOODY, GOODY!" cried Bobbie as he rushed noisily into the living room waving a big white envelope. "Here's an invitation to Ethel Baxter's party for next Saturday afternoon," he breathlessly explained, "and it's going to be almost like a show. They're going to dress up like people in books; and I'm really and truly invited, if I am the youngest, littlest boy in our grade, so there!"

Suddenly he paused. A solemn look came over his face. It was very hard for him to be his usual bright self when he wanted so much to be big and old. "I wish," he sighed, "that I was big, like Jim Seely! Then I'd be Uncle Tom's Cabin or Jack the Giant Killer or something else that's big, and then I'd get the prize."

"Little boys sometimes do get the prizes," suggested his mother as she softly patted his curly head. "It will all depend on the way you act the part you choose."

"I know what I'd like to be," began Bobbie, then stopped.

"What's that?" questioned big brother Sam, glancing up from his algebra.

Bobbie hesitated. "I wouldn't know what to wear to dress like him, but I could act the part, all right."

"But who is it?" urged sister Nell.

"It is——" and Bobbie tiptoed around to each member of the family and softly whispered the name.

"It's just the one for Robert!" exclaimed grandma proudly. "And I'll fix some fuzzy little white boots and mittens for him to wear."

"And I'll see if I can't rig up some kind of a long furry white coat," said mamma.

"And I'll make the cutest little cap and collar," promised sister Nell.

Big brother Sam laughed. "There's only one thing left for me to furnish, and that's the brush and pencil."

"And I'll begin to practice my part this very day," declared Bobbie, smiling happily at the others. "I've got a whole week yet to learn it in."

Such a busy week! At school illustrated story books were passed from one to another with a delightful air of mystery, for not a word could be told to anyone about what anyone else was going to be. All the boys and girls talked about the party except Robert St. John. Every minute he could spare from his lessons was spent in drawing funny pictures of birds and animals and trees and roomy old castles.

Saturday afternoon found a jolly lot of boys and girls in Mrs. Baxter's parlors, each one intent on carrying out the part he had chosen. There was a tiny Uncle Sam in regulation costume, guarding the United States flag; the Old Woman Who Lived in the Shoe was busy with dolls of all kinds and shapes which she was keeping in a big pasteboard shoe; the Little Lame Prince was trying to make a flight with his wonderful traveling cloak; and a demure little Quaker miss was teaching a fierce looking Indian to spin at a real spinning wheel. There was Jack Horner with his famous Christmas pie, and Red Riding Hood, and Little Boy Blue and a great many others.

At first Bobbie was frightened. Everybody was dressed so fine and did such wonderful things that his part seemed too little even to try to give; but by and by he remembered his mother's words, "It will all depend on the way you act your part," and straightway he began to act it.

Taking a large piece of light gray canvas from his pocket, he pinned it securely to a rug. Then slipping off his furry mittens and getting down on the floor, with some white chalk he began to draw pictures. He was soon surrounded by a group of puzzled boys and girls.

"That's a camel" cried one. "And a deer and some trees!" exclaimed another. "He's surely some kind of an artist. But who ever heard of an artist making pictures on a light canvas and with white paint?"

At a word from Mrs. Baxter, Bobbie skipped across the room to a big window, on which he quickly drew a picture of a tall tree, a big house, some smaller trees and a road. Before he had finished the picture someone cried "Jack Frost!" Then they all shouted.

"But why didn't you make the pictures on the window first?" questioned Jim Seely. "Jack Frost never makes pictures on the ground."

"Indeed he does," explained Mrs. Baxter, coming to the rescue. "The next frosty morning go out on the walk and see if you can't find funny little pictures of all sorts and sizes of animals and trees and houses made the night before by Jack Frost."

Don Is an English Police Dog

Then the children all declared that Bobbie ought to have the prize, because he acted his part so well that they had learned something new about Jack Frost.

Bobbie talked it over that night with his mother. "It really doesn't make so much difference about a boy's being little," he said, "if he only acts his part big."

Don—Assistant Policeman

Don is a police dog, and though his uniforn consists solely of the collar which you see, h is clothed with considerable authority, is Dor His home is in England, where he accompanie a policeman on his rounds in the outskirts o the city where he lives. Woe to any ma who tries to break away from that policema during arrest! If he succeeds, Don is aft him like a flash, seizing him and holding hi fast until the officer comes up. But this is n all he can do. Don is so well trained that h can watch and so, too, can give the alar when anything is happening that requires t attention of the policeman. Moreover, if burglar leaves something behind which D can sniff, he has a poor chance of getting awa for the dog's keen nose is pretty sure to follc his trail and smell him out.

Don is not a big dog, like a Newfoundla or a Great Dane, but is rather the size of Airedale, with a cross of Irish terrier. His intelligence is very keen, his senses sharp, his movements alert; otherwise he could not be what he is—assistant policeman. Dogs of his kind are used extensively for police service in Germany and France as well as in England, and they have been introduced in a few cities in the United States, but there are none thus far in Canada.

Rhymes to Remember

WHAT THE MINUTES SAY

We are but minutes, little things—
Each one furnished with sixty wings,
With which we fly on our unseen track;
And not a minute ever comes back.

We are but minutes. Each one bears
A little burden of joys and cares;
Take patiently the minutes of pain;
The worst of minutes cannot remain.

We are but minutes. When we bring
A few of the drops from pleasure's spring,
Taste their sweetness while ye may;
It takes but a minute to fly away.

We are but minutes. Use us well;
For how we are used we must one day tell.
Who uses minutes, has hours to use;
Who loses minutes, whole years must lose.

Do You Know These?

What is that of which the common sort is the best? Sense.

Enough for one, too much for two and nothing for three; takes one to make and two to keep? A secret.

Why is a girl not a noun? Because a lass (alas) is an interjection.

Why are lazy persons' beds too short for them? Because they lie too long in them.

Why is a kiss like a rumor? Because it goes from mouth to mouth.

When is it easy to read in the woods? When Dame Autumn turns the leaves.

Which is the largest room in the world? Room for improvement.

Why are the western prairies flat? Because the sun sets on them every evening.

Why are the laws like the ocean? Because most trouble is caused by the breakers.

Why are the stars the best astronomers? Because they have studded (studied) the heavens since creation.

Why is a schoolmistress like the letter "C"? Because she forms lasses into classes.

What two words contain all the vowels and in their proper order? Facetious, abstemious.

Why is a young lady dependent upon the letter "Y"? Because without it she would be a "young lad."

What is that which works while it plays, and plays while it works? A fountain.

What two flowers should decorate a menagerie? The dandelion and the tiger lily.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

January 19, 1913—Man's First Sin

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 3. Golden Text, John 8:34: Everyone that committeth sin is the bondservant of sin.

Sin has a long history. It came in with the first man and will go out with the last. What may have occurred before man's creation is largely speculative. The angels that kept not their first estate belong to another life. But man we know. Adam was not only a man but man. The distinction is vital. Much that is true of him is true of all. The garden of Eden is too universal for exact location. It is nowhere because it is everywhere. The tree of knowledge of good and evil grows in every soil.

Temptation Today as Subtle, as Deadly, as the First Temptation

There is no past to truth, and because of this libraries have been written on this lesson with little reference to its import. Incident has been magnified above meaning. Page after page has been devoted to the serpent, as if the central fact were to be found in natural history. All this may be interesting, but it does not belong here. The serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field, and he remains so still. There is something about it that is suggestive of evil. Silent as a shadow, it strikes its victim and is gone. Satan, then as now, would employ an agent whose nature is like his own. No barrier is successful against it. Such is sin. It may assume a thousand forms, but it is always subtle, deadly as at the first.

Restriction is essential to liberty. The fruit of every tree is Adam's, save one. About that one God has built the fence of law, and to touch it or eat of it is death.

He does the same still. Law confirms liberty. Sin is simply the transgression of law; to lead Eve into such transgression was what brought the tempter to her. His approach was gradual. "Yea, hath God said?" There is no disparagement of God, but has he really said they shall not eat of any tree of the garden? Doubt leads to final unbelief. Destroy the reliability of God's word and the rest comes of itself. No one can safely reason with the tempter.

Temporizing with Temptation First Step Toward Yielding to It

But the woman parleyed. Her reply was verbally correct, but it lacked the terseness of determined purpose. One quick, passionate "No" would have sent the serpent back to his den. But the key is within the door. The argument is now shifted. The serpent tacitly implies that God may have seemed to say so, but the woman had misunderstood him. He certainly could not have said that you shall die, said the tempter. That would be against his character. Deception is impossible to him, and he knows that in the day you eat thereof you shall not only not die but you shall live and be like himself. Thus many argue today. to smallpox, just for the experience of having had it, may not die, but he has paid too dearly for wisdom. The first object that greeted the newly acquired sight was the nakedness of the offenders. Their souls were laid bare in all the ugliness of sin. Who would not conceal his transgressions? So they made garments out of leaves and thought themselves secure.

Obedience Brings Fellowship with God, but Sin Separates from Him

Such effort is by no means out of fashion. When one sins he lies to conceal it. And to that lie another is added, until the garment is complete—a covering of leaves that deceives no one save the wearer. One may seek to hide himself from himself, but the footfalls of God are heard not far away. Conscience is natural. Education forms but never creates. "Adam, where art thou?" In their innocence the two had walked with God as friend walks with friend, but sin separates from him. Adam's reply was true. He was naked, he saw himself and therefore was ashamed. It is always difficult to explain a crime. The more one explains the more he confesses. "Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree?" The answer was the conventional one. "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree and I did eat." We always seek to throw the responsibility of our sins on someone else—sometimes on our fellows and sometimes on God, or inherited natures.

There is always some cause apart from ourselves. Eve did the same thing, only her excuse was the better of the two. But every work must be brought into judgment. Man had been given his opportunity and lost. The tree of life was near by, but a flaming sword guarded it against his approach. God may forgive, but he cannot return. The prodigal is received as he is, but not as he was. His youth is wasted and his inheritance cannot be restored. So God drove out the man, but one redeeming promise rang in his ears as he went—the seed of the woman was to bruise the serpent's head.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins.

ANALYSIS—Sin is a fact recognized in the literature of every nation. Sin is a chain, fettering the action of the soul heretofore free. Sin is of the devil, who is a liar and the father of lies. Sin contains within itself elements leading to its own exposure and its own punishment.

The most striking fact about the human race, apart from its unity, is its universal sinfulness. The writer of Genesis is more of a philosopher than many of his critics. For the past fifty years science has been changing its front from that of Agassiz, who declared the racial differences of man too fundamental to permit us to n a common origin, to that of Darwin, s the race descended from the ape.
nity of mankind is not simply physical, chical. Men are not only one in bone, one in sin.

alone of all creatures has a distinct nse, which he is continually outraging.
nscious of two natures, two contending vithin himself, one of which is ap-nd one condemned by his moral sense.
like this exists in the life of the below him. He has less control of ites and passions than they have. Inand culture may condemn sin or it by invented terms, but they do not, eradicate it.

riter of Genesis declares that sin en-world through the act of the first pair, heir first child was born. This cerin accord with the fact of sin's diffusion. The stream was polluted rce, not by some affluent which joined lcourse.

t Inherited from Brute but Injected by Devil

1—The inspired writer is not attemptccount for the existence of sin in the universe but for its existence in the world. He is not writing a philosophy but a history. No twentieth century physician knows how smallpox originated. It is enough that he knows how it is spread and how it may be stamped out. Whatever men may say of sin, the Bible says it was not inherited from the brute, who never possessed it, but injected by the devil, who is full of it. The devil is universally represented by the serpent in ancient art and literature from Babylon to Mexico. Even today we can find nothing better by which to designate a poisonous and venomous life than to call such a one "a snake in the grass."

Verse 2—Eve is not able to deny that what God grants is more than what he forbids. We should be careful that, in dwelling upon what is forbidden, we do not forget what is freely given. Righteousness has a wide range and has little need to rebel against any of God's restrictive commandments.

Verse 3—Under the image of the tree we can hardly doubt that some symbolism exists. It is called in a previous chapter (2:17) the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. When a child commits its first act of willful disobedience it becomes instantly conscious of a difference between right and wrong. When a young man is recovering from his first debauch he looks out upon a different world from the one he knew yesterday in his sobriety. And perhaps in such a first act the soul realizes most intensely that it is "sold under sin" (Rom. 7:14).

Disobedience, Then as Now, Is Induced by a Falsehood

Verses 4-5—Satan denies that sin will be followed by a penalty and promises that its results shall be delightful. He has been repeating that ever since, and every repetition is a lie, proved a lie by sorrowful experience. One of the oldest of English proverbs is to the effect that "cent for cent does a man pay for every vicious indulgence." Sin is to the soul what the candle is to the moth, a fatal attraction. Throughout the western states the Judas tree is a common object in the spring, with its brilliant flowers covering the whole growth with a delicate mauve veil. Every bee that is early on the wing seeks it, only to find it devoid of honey; and it is said its exudations are fatal to the insect that sips its juices.

Verse 6—No one is content to sin alone. Eve drags down her husband. This is a true picture of sin's spirit as well as of sin's power. Every foul-mouthed boy hastens to teach obscene language to some other boy. In Chicago the citizens have waked to know that vice has become one of the largest commercial investments in the city, providing salaries and dividends and bribes. It always tends to organize for propagation. Whatever be the form of government, democratic or autocratic, vice adapts itself to its environment and, serpent-like, finds secret ways of diffusion. Every man tempted by some new sin should remember that when he sins he sells himself into the slavery to sin which necessitates his dragging others down with him to the same depths.

The Sinning Soul Seeks Refuge, but Seeks in Vain

Verses 7-10—Be sure your sin will find you out (Num. 32:23). The very anxiety to escape oft reveals the guilty. The writer once preached on that text, so alarming one of his hearers, an officer of the county, that the man fled the city by the next train, and through his flight revealed his crime and made certain his own arrest and later his imprisonment. Eve and her dupe sought to hide themselves, but in vain. People who have served prison sentences tell us that no method has ever been discovered by which their past can be kept wholly and forever from the knowledge of the public.

Verse 12—One of the "gun men" of New York City, commenting upon the escape of certain criminals who had turned witnesses for the state, said that it was "always so." The guiltiest were always first to seek immunity by exposing their companions in sin to the penalty of the law. Many a man, consciously guilty, is bled by blackmailers through threats of exposure. If there be honor among thieves, thieves themselves have not discovered it and do not trust to it. So in this Bible study of the first sin we have all the lineaments of sin depicted as sin is known on our streets today, and he who refuses to be warned contributes to his own destruction.

NEW BOOKS

A Valuable Treatise on Christology

THE DOCTRINE OF THE PERSON OF JESUS CHRIST, by H. R. Mackintosh, is a solid contribution to Christology. In the hopeless welter of scrappy books, of books which bear every sign of being written between breakfast and luncheon, of books which deal narrowly with broad themes, or flatly with narrow themes, this work of the professor of theology in New College, Edinburgh, stands out in sharp contrast. It is the seventeenth volume in the International Theological Library and is equal to the best of that notable series. Ministers who have been looking for a book for substantial winter's study, comparable to the Fairbairn books of a few years ago, will find here what they need.

The volume is divided into three parts. First comes an excellent statement of Christology in the New Testament, in which must be noted especially a section on the sinlessness of Jesus, where the capital point is made that this is not an a priori dogma but a transcript of the convincing facts which the gospels bring us. Dr. Mackintosh accepts the Johannine authorship of the fourth gospel and its authenticity. His calm phrases are in pleasant contrast with such cocksure sayings as those of Dr. Warschauer, who dismisses the apostle almost curtly and declares that the fourth gospel "gives us an abstraction in a world of abstractions." On the contrary, Dr. Mackintosh points out that the Johannine conception really saves the synoptic conception from becoming an abstraction by showing the eternal reality in those narratives. He makes the striking observation that the so-called preface of the gospel of John (1:1-18) gives the impression of being written after the gospel itself; that is, the gospel was not written to elucidate the preface but the preface condenses the gospel.

The second part of the volume gives a condensed but sufficiently clear statement of the history of the Christological doctrine, covering it in eight eras. The attention given to the Arian controversy is justified by the persistent reappearance of the Arian heresy. The three pages on Ritschl are very pregnant and touch with firm finger the sore spot in that theological body. The third section combines a statement of the present situation in Christology, with a reconstructive statement from the author's point of view. Dr. Mackintosh starts with a fact which is often neglected, and that is intellectual need for a Christology. It is well enough to insist that facts are beyond question, but rational men cannot fail to frame a theory of facts. Justifying himself in this way in a pragmatic age, Dr. Mackintosh moves with a steady and deliberate progress into his treatment of what he calls the "self-limitation of God in Christ," coupled with the "self-realization of Christ." There is no place here for a fair resume of his arguments. It is sufficient to say that, while Dr. Mackintosh is one of the younger scholars, this book gives assurance that he will take his place among the strong leaders of the church. We are glad to know that he is to be lecturing in this country during the winter. [Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $2.50 net.

Of Educational Interest

WHY GO TO COLLEGE? by Clayton Sedgwick Cooper. Mr. Cooper has had a good time visiting 700 institutions in the United States and Canada during the past decade. He gives some of his conclusions in the five papers of this handsomely printed volume. These include some striking statements. The response of 100 graduates showed that just 10 per cent went to their particular college because of its educational standing. Forty per cent made their choice for financial reasons; 36 per cent believed the most important value of their course was the influence of professors; and in another connection it appeared that 86 per cent of a group declared that "personal contact with a great teacher" was the best thing that came to them in college. Mr. Cooper says, after visiting so many institutions, that "the quality of instruction in any one of these institutions of the first grade does not vary sufficiently to render the choice of a college on the ground of educational conditions a matter of great moment." There is an excellent criticism of an excessive elective system in a paper called "Education a la Carte," marking a protest against the reigning idea of today, that education must fit students for breadwinning. The book throughout proclaims the cultural value of college life. It is something to be able to say, "One must believe that the main tendencies in the life of American undergraduates are toward the discovery of and devotion to the highest truth—the truth of nature and the truth of God"; though we are bound to fear that the book itself bears some evidence on the other side. [Century Company, New York. $1.50 net.

TEACHING IN SCHOOL AND COLLEGE, by William Lyon Phelps of Yale. A capital book to give to young or prospective teachers. The title is much too pretentious for the papers included, as the writer hints. Every chapter is interesting, and the whole book is as fresh and naive as though Professor Phelps had not been a university professor for a dozen years. Older teachers will take most of the book for granted, and may debate some points, but even they will read it with pleasure. Not many writers are willing to say some of the things Professor Phelps says—they are so perfectly patent; they even sound paternal. Yet they are all true and of importance. The chapter on "The Moral Aspect of Teaching" is peculiarly good and widely needed. The studies do not pretend to be deep; but they are true, which is better. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1 net.

Affairs of Public Interest

AMERICAN SOCIAL AND RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS, by Charles Stelzle. This is the most substantial work Mr. Stelzle has given us. He discusses such "conditions" as the city, women and children in industry, the immigrant, the new frontier, and describes the place and work of the church. The appendix contains charts and statistics which were made in the recent Men and Religion investigation. It is an arresting book. Complacency dies hard, but those chapters ought to "scotch" it at least. One main conclusion to which Mr. Stelzle comes is that "the future of the church depends on the permanence of the home." [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1 net.

BUSINESS: THE HEART OF THE NATION, by Charles Edward Russell. As a Socialist, Mr. Russell deprecates all attacks on "big business" and all attempts to moralize it. He tries to show that all the corruption of politics and honor by big business—and he retails lots of it—is inevitable in the fight of business to survive. The only remedy for this condition, says Mr. Russell, is to nationalize big business and run it for the common good. But, the unconverted individualist reader will think, such simple solutions are generally too good to be true. New and cheaper edition. [John Lane Company, New York. $1 net.

CITIZENS MADE AND REMADE, by William R. George and Lyman Beecher Stowe. The George Junior Republic idea is now a proved success. The present work deals with it, therefore, not in a merely descriptive way but describes its workings with the view of applying them to two further spheres of usefulness. The first of these suggestions is the extension of the idea of self-government of the junior republic to the school systems of the country. The data which Mr. Stowe presents in these chapters show how, in school after school, the organization of the pupils into self-directing bodies of school citizens resulted in an instant and marked raising of the morale of the student body. The other suggestion is the substitution of an inclosed village of the George Junior type for the conventional penitentiary. Here the convict, on an indeterminate sentence, would learn to work, earn, spend and display initiative, just as the boys do in a George village. Here his good conduct would be a real good conduct in relation to real living conditions, instead of an artificial good conduct in an artificial environment where goodness means meekness rather than self-reliance. When he proved that such conduct was real, he would be permitted to go before a court of rehabilitation and be given his freedom, to apply the lessons learned in his George village in the outside world. The arguments of this book are put sanely and with common sense, and all friends of democracy should familiarize themselves with these suggestions for safeguarding its future in our land. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

THE NEW COMPETITION, by Arthur Jerome Eddy. Mr. Eddy's ambitious volume is condensed in his subtitle as "An examination of the conditions underlying the radical change that is taking place in the commercial and industrial world—the change from a competitive to a cooperative basis." Since the trust supplants competition Mr. Eddy would welcome the trust, regulate it instead of trying to crush it and would undo altogether the mischief—as he would call it—of the Sherman law. He also fears the results of the present trend of unionism. For the union by aggregation as seen in national brotherhoods he would substitute a union by integration, in which the local plant would be the unit and the service of outside "agitators" would be at a discount. The value of Mr. Eddy's work is somewhat mitigated by the dogmatic cocksureness with which he writes and by the carelessness which permits him to lump together socialists and anarchists and mere undoctrinated malcontents as standing "ready with torch and bomb." It would be unjust to deny, however, that the book is without a wealth of valuable suggestions. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $2 net.

Religion and Theology

EVANGELICALISM—HAS IT A FUTURE? by R. C. Gillie. A little book with a large meaning and real value. Its interest supposedly centers in England, but its question is always pertinent in America. "Evangelicalism" was applied first to the Wesleys and Whitefield and their group. It grew out of a revival, not out of a reformation. It brought new emphasis, not a new teaching. It stands for two facts—man's desperate need, and the all-sufficiency of Christ's sacrifice. These were not new teachings in Wesley's time; they were in the thirty-nine articles, and certainly they were in Pilgrim's Progress; but their emphasis was lost. Mr. Gillie asks whether we may not make the mistake of holding dogmas more important than the inner life of men, or than bringing them to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. The book is earnest and deserves wide reading. [Cassell and Company, New York. 60 cents net.

THE STORY OF JOSEPH, THE STORY OF DAVID and THE STORY OF JESUS, by Edward Leigh Pell. Three little booklets written for children of from eight to twelve years, admirably told and prettily illustrated in colors. Many a weary mother will bless the author who has put into simple language stories which form so necessary a part of a child's religious education. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 35 cents each.

The Open Hearth

A Business Men's Mission Company

For recreation I started round the world to skim its surface. I was knocked down by what I saw in Japan and China. The next year, after a revolution in my life and as a keen, posted Christian business man, I returned to the Orient with strings of business at my finger-tips even as a Wanamaker in his lines. Had it not been for them my investigations would have cost me $25,000 additional, and, I believe, my life. So far as I know no other man has conditions as I have them because no other business man has taken the time to investigate as I have, who has felt the call as I have felt it, and none but a business man, equipped as I was equipped, can get the facts as they exist.

If Christian laymen who control many millions could at stated times meet together for consultation and action would it not be beneficial? If not, why not? Suppose L. H. Severance, J. T. Underwood, John Wanamaker, Mrs. Kennedy and Mrs. Sage, for example, met now and then and began a mutual work for the Presbyterian Church, the undertaking could be extended to the great financiers of all denominations and might result in a "Christian Union Trust Company," embracing all the good things and eliminating all the bad things in trusts.

Is a Christian Union Trust Company as above needed? Let us see. For an example take Korea. Korea is the key to the Orient. God's call is "Foster the work there." How may it be fostered? Educate, train, develop. Is it being done as it should? What would be the result were it done? We may educate this "so great a people" 90 per cent less cost than we can educate our own, and Koreans are 600 per cent more efficient than Anglo-Saxons in the Oriental work. We may send thousands of them into China, while we send hundreds of Anglo-Saxons. We can get them in the field and at work six years earlier, and at this time, when the destiny of 500,000,000 is hanging in the balance, it is time to act quickly.

Some individual cases needing the mutual help such a Christian Union Trust Company could give are Doctors H. G. Underwood, A. A. Fulton, S. A. Moffett, Mary Fulton, Franklin Hoskins, Mary Eddy and others.

I believe all churches are ready for a move of this kind. Were Severance, Underwood and Wanamaker to put their heads together 99 per cent of the laity of the Presbyterian Church would do what they said ought to be done. The laity will not follow any other leadership that would bring one-tenth the result.

Seattle, Wash. W. W. BECK.

What the Elders Can Do

As there has been so much said about the effectiveness of our church, I offer a few facts as I have found them in looking over the Minutes of the Synod of Colorado. There are on the roll 178 churches and 176 ministers, while the eldership numbers 691. There are six presbyteries and 21,868 communicants. At the last meeting of synod there were present ninety-one ministers and thirty-nine elders. Out of a total of 176 ministers there were eighty-five absent and only thirty-nine churches were represented by an elder, with a sum total of 691 to elect from.

True, some of the churches are isolated and far away, but synod has made a provision for just such cases, and defrays the greater portion of the expense not only for the smaller churches but also for the larger ones, so that each church may be represented by a minister and also by an elder. The record shows that the church with the largest number of elders in the synod, located on a railroad, was not represented by an elder, showing that this seeming neglect of our duties as elders does not rest alone with the smaller churches.

Why should this condition exist? I presume Colorado Synod is no different from other synods, but when I take "Roberts's Manual for Ruling Elders" and turn to the ordination service, where we promise faithfully to perform all the duties of the church, and then fail to represent our church at meetings of presbytery and synod, I cannot help but feel that we are negligent. I do not look upon the matter of representing our church at these meetings as a duty but as a blessed privilege. If we as elders will grasp every opportunity which presents itself to advance the Lord's work we will find that the church will begin to take on new life, and that we as elders will be better able to assist our pastors in their work. How can we expect results from the pulpit, when we as elders are not working for them?

We need to be better posted along all lines of church work; then when questions come up we will know better how to handle them. And this information can be obtained only by attending the meetings of the higher judicatories of the church, when there we meet the representatives of the church at large, where information can be had direct. I received more information at the meeting of synod in Denver by the asking of two questions than I could have obtained in a week's writing. We need just that help that can be obtained by attending the meetings of the church. Brother elders, let us make this a special subject of prayer, that we may be more faithful.

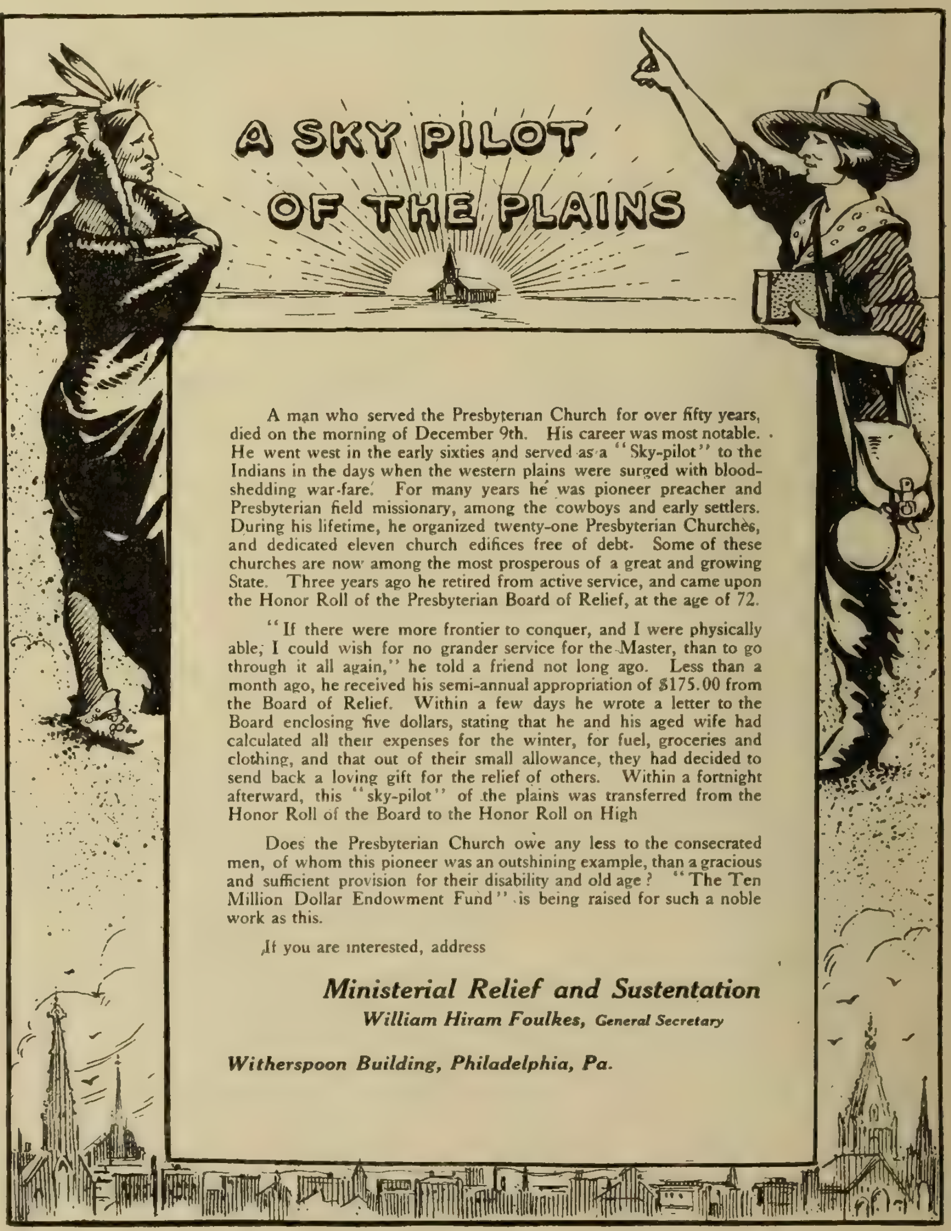
G. H. THOMSON.

Idle Ministers, Vacant Churches

In answer to my letter in The Open Hearth in November, I have a private letter from a brotherly minister in Nebraska informing me of a couple of vacant churches near by. Then I have a letter from a pastor-evangelist in Wyoming to the effect that there are lots of needy fields in his presbytery demanding pioneer work. Yes, and young ministers ought to be required to serve in these fields as apprentices and endure the hardships for at least ten years rather than assume master workmanship in a fat-salaried church. With advancing years let them be promoted to better salaries. Again, I have a letter from a hungry-souled old lady in Ohio whose church has had no pastor since last April, expressing the hope that I might come to them.

But am I, as an idle minister, assuming that I am an average ministerial success, to be held guilty for not getting in pastoral relation with this or that particular vacant church? Or is this vacant church at fault for not securing me? What does that particular church know about me? And what do I know about that church? How may I know that that field is what I am fitted for, and that I can supply the needs there? The fact seems to be that pastoral relations are negotiated and formed with little regard to the fitness of things and to the divine approval. The ministry of our church is a promiscuous mass of place hunters and salary grabbers. I confess, with a feeling of shame, flushing my face, that most fields to which I have gone have been accepted under the necessity of a salary as against no salary at all, or an increase of salary as against an insufferable inadequacy of salary.

My experience was intended to indicate the failure of our system in the matter of fitting together idle ministers and vacant churches. Ministers not only suffer enforced idleness on top of inadequacy of salary, but many churches are vacant for many months, causing great loss to the kingdom of Christ. Our Assembly's committee, with its paid secretary and other costly items, is not spirit-filled nor genius-constructed to solve the problem and correct the evil. The committee at its long range cannot know the man nor the field. The only solution that comes to my vision is in the direct exercise of presbyterial authority such as the constitution and government of the church clearly warrant. Let a committee of presbytery appoint temporary supplies to vacant churches for several months, requiring the church and minister to accept the appointment for the specified limited time. Let this committee secure a



A SKY PILOT OF THE PLAINS

A man who served the Presbyterian Church for over fifty years, died on the morning of December 9th. His career was most notable. He went west in the early sixties and served as a "Sky-pilot" to the Indians in the days when the western plains were surged with blood-shedding war-fare. For many years he was pioneer preacher and Presbyterian field missionary, among the cowboys and early settlers. During his lifetime, he organized twenty-one Presbyterian Churches, and dedicated eleven church edifices free of debt. Some of these churches are now among the most prosperous of a great and growing State. Three years ago he retired from active service, and came upon the Honor Roll of the Presbyterian Board of Relief, at the age of 72.

"If there were more frontier to conquer, and I were physically able, I could wish for no grander service for the Master, than to go through it all again," he told a friend not long ago. Less than a month ago, he received his semi-annual appropriation of $175.00 from the Board of Relief. Within a few days he wrote a letter to the Board enclosing five dollars, stating that he and his aged wife had calculated all their expenses for the winter, for fuel, groceries and clothing, and that out of their small allowance, they had decided to send back a loving gift for the relief of others. Within a fortnight afterward, this "sky-pilot" of the plains was transferred from the Honor Roll of the Board to the Honor Roll on High

Does the Presbyterian Church owe any less to the consecrated men, of whom this pioneer was an outshining example, than a gracious and sufficient provision for their disability and old age? "The Ten Million Dollar Endowment Fund" is being raised for such a noble work as this.

If you are interested, address

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation

William Hiram Foulkes, General Secretary

Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

financial, social and religious inventory of every church within its bounds, thus qualifying itself, at least measurably, to make wise and Christian appointments, and at the same time bring pressure to bear upon the church toward an adequate salary, knowing the church's financial ability.

A. E. D.

Plans World Tour for Seventy

J. Campbell White, general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, called together recently an interdenominational group of New York people interested in missions and submitted a project which he has conceived. He has the thought that it would be wise to take seventy Christian leaders around the world for a course of training and establish them on their return in seventy different districts in this country to promote a five-year campaign among the churches, aiming to enlarge the home and foreign mission contributions of North American churches by $50,000,000 annually and to send out 10,000 more foreign missionaries. The conference was much interested in Mr. White's plan, but not united as to its feasibility. The executive committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement has referred the plan to a special committee.

Three Church Fires Same Day

One of the oldest churches in eastern Iowa suffered the loss of its edifice Dec. 22, when the rural church of Salem, Tama county, burned. The church was built twenty-five years ago, but its rebuilding is a problem on account of the removal of many of its supporters. Rev. James N. Currens is pastor.

Fire partially destroyed the church at Milan, Ill., Dec. 22, damaging the structure to the extent of $1,500.

Fire near the furnace of the church at Chaumont, N. Y., was discovered just before morning service Dec. 22. It was put out without much damage.

Continent Read by Growing Church

In the Pennsylvania town of Wellsboro, a community of 3,000 people, the Presbyterian church subscribes for and distributes to its congregation 100 copies of The Continent. Rev. P. H. Hershey went to this charge in October, 1910, and has revitalized the church to a large extent. The attendance at Sunday school has increased more than 100. Fifty-four people have united with the church and there has been contributed for all purposes during the two years more than $14,000. A large social room has been built, a pipe organ installed and a debt of $2,500 provided for.

THE BEST TEACHER
Old Experience Still Holds the Palm

For real practical reliability and something to swear by, experience—plain old experience—is able to carry a big load, yet without getting swaybacked.

A South Dakota woman found some things about food from Old Experience, a good, reliable teacher.

She writes:

"I think I have used almost every breakfast food manufactured, but none equal Grape-Nuts in my estimation.

"I was greatly bothered with weak stomach and indigestion, with formation of gas after eating, and tried many remedies for it, but did not find relief.

"Then I decided I must diet and see if I could overcome the difficulty that way. My choice of food was Grape-Nuts, because the doctor told me I could not digest starchy food.

Grape-Nuts food has been a great benefit to me, for I feel like a different person since I began to eat it. It is wonderful to me how strong my nerves have become. I advise everyone to try it, for experience is the best teacher.

"If you have any stomach trouble—can't digest your food—use Grape-Nuts food for breakfast at least, and you won't be able to praise it enough when you see how different you feel." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

New Home for Mother Church

Chicago First, Pioneer Organization of City and Middle West, Moves to Forty-First Street Society's Building.

The fifth home of the mother church of Protestantism in the Middle West was established ten days ago when the congregations of First and Forty-First Street churches in Chicago met and the deed to the property of the latter organization was transferred to the new board of trustees of First church. Thus the name of the first church in the Middle West and of the first organization, secular or religious, in Chicago is preserved, when it seemed that through changing conditions and removals of residents to other parts of the city there was danger that it would become a thing of the past.

Founded by Rev. Jeremiah Porter, chaplain of soldiers sent to Fort Dearborn in 1833, the church has always been located in or near what is known as the downtown district. For several years it has been within two blocks of the large Second church, of which Dr. John Balcom Shaw is pastor. First church has always been known for the number of prominent families of the city counted upon its rolls. With the growth of the city these have moved and the incoming population of the neighborhood from an ecclesiastical standpoint is amply cared for by Second church.

William C. Covert, D. D.
Pastor of the "New" First Church of Chicago

The changing of the location of First church to the site of Forty-First Street church, two miles south, is significant in that the location of the Presbyterian churches is made more strategic and the organization which has persisted for nearly eighty years is put in a position to do more effective work for the city. The combined resources of the two churches will make one of the most important churches numerically in Chicago.

Dr. William Chalmers Covert, who has been pastor of Forty-First Street church for eight years, was called as pastor of First church Dec. 30 and Dr. John N. Freeman, who has been stated supply of First church, was elected associate pastor. The boards of the church were then enlarged and officers chosen from both organizations. Dr. George N. Luccock, moderator of presbytery, presided at this congregational meeting. The organ, memorial windows and organist as well of old First church will be transferred to the new edifice at Grand boulevard and 41st street. The first services of the new First church were held last Sunday, when the communion sacrament was administered.

Dr. Covert, the pastor, is editor of Men at Work, the national organ of the brotherhood, and is well known to readers of The Continent, having been a frequent contributor to this paper and to The Interior. He served for a time in Saginaw, Mich., and in St. Paul, Minn. In addition to being a trenchant writer, with a keen sense of the beauties of nature, he has the genial manner of a man who loves his fellow men and is a friend to all humanity.

A little ancient history

Remember how our mothers used to chop meat for mince pies and croquettes and such like? Took a wooden bowl and a clumsy hand chopper and hammered away till they were all tired out. You'd still be doing this if you hadn't learned a better way—the modern meat-chopper way, whereby a little machine grinds the meat fine and smooth at the simple turning of a handle. How did women learn about the modern meat chopper? Through advertising.

This is only one of the thousand labor lighteners that advertising is constantly proclaiming to the housewives of the country—which is an excellent reason why you should follow closely the advertisements which this paper places before you.

THE ADVERTISING MANAGER

The Modern
Individual Communion Service
Made by Reed & Barton, has many advantages over the old style. Ask us for illustrations.

REED & BARTON, Silversmiths
Established 1824 Represented at TAUNTON, MASS.
Fifth Avenue and 32nd Street 4 Maiden Lane
New York

EGYPT
THE HOLY LAND

Tours to the Orient, including the Mediterranean Countries. Leave New York, Jan. 22 and Feb. 19.

OTHER TOURS: South America, Jan. 25th, Feb. 8 and Feb. 20; Round the World, Jan. 22; Japan, Feb. 15 and Mar. 15; Mediterranean Lands, frequent dates, Jan. to May.

Send for book that interests you.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB COMPANY
306 Washington St., Boston 225 Fifth Ave., New York
1005 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

CHURCH MONEY
Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their
OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS
MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER

This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.

Write us at once for information and prices.

THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., .: CHICAGO

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments
Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings
COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 47)

The old man described his meeting in Prestonbury with Oren-Toole, who had given him his dinner and directed how and where to find the seminary. After leaving the hospital he had by accident met Oren-Toole, who recognized him and told him about the robbery on the very night he had been in his son's room; that his son had been arrested and examined for having stolen the money.

"Mr. Oren-Toole told me," he asserted, "that my son had testified that I had a thick paper package in my pocket when I visited him, and that the belief in Prestonbury was that I took the money from the bank. He told me he was going to have me arrested for robbery and tried in Prestonbury. So I told him how I'd seen my son hide a parcel under the floor. Then he said my son must be the thief, and he would take me back to Prestonbury to show the police where I saw him hide it."

Ansley Jickers conducted the cross-examination. At its close no one in the magistrate's office believed a word of the old man's testimony, save that he had previously been in Prestonbury and that his name was Andrew Drum. One person, however, was fully convinced that Bradford Horton was the son of Andrew Drum, and that his name, as the old man said, was William. That person was Richard P. Elmore.

But Ansley Jickers had not finished his case. He called to the stand Edward Barnes, the room clerk of the Albemarle. At this old Andrew turned deadly pale. He was a lawyer; he saw what was coming and knew what the end would be for him.

The hotel clerk told his story, and at its end the magistrate in high dudgeon stopped the case. "The prosecution has not so much as a peg on which to hang a shred of a case," he declared. "It is a case of malicious persecution. This witness, Andrew Drum, is a perjurer, a tool in the hands of an unscrupulous person. That money was hidden under the floor of Mr. Horton's room by the conspirators the night he sang in Albany. I order the discharge of the prisoner and the arrest of Andrew Drum for perjury and of Oren-Toole for robbery."

The order of the magistrate made a great sensation. Mr. Elmore, his face as hard as a stone, walked hastily out of court. The old man, in terrible excitement, rose. "Your honor," he cried, "your honor, your honor, I——" but no more words would come. The nearest spectators saw his lips move in a struggle for utterance, saw him throw his hands high; then a wild cry sounded through the courtroom. "Oh, my God! This in Prestonbury, in Prestonbury, where I——"

That was all. He fell fainting to the floor, and they carried him to a couch in the magistrate's room. A doctor restored him to consciousness, but ordered his removal to the city hospital. He was in a high fever before morning, and delirious, and the hospital surgeon reported to the authorities that a violent attack of pneumonia had developed.

When the officers made search for Oren-Toole he had vanished. Before the lawyer had finished the cross examination he had seen how the case was going, and he also saw the clerk of the Albemarle waiting to be called. Without delay, and very quietly, he had slipped out of the room unnoticed, and Prestonbury saw him no more for many days.

Maxwell had followed Mr. Elmore from the city hall, and they walked to the bank together. Neither spoke for some time, but the silence worried the president and he broke it at last:

"Well, Sam, we've lost the teller. He did take that money after all. The student told the truth about that night in his room with the old man, and Oren-Toole lied to me abominably. I'd like to have the student and the teller and the old man all in one bag, tied fast, and sunk in the sea."

"Oh, no, you wouldn't! Horton's done nothing wrong."

"Only lied to me about himself and his family. He's the son of this old vagrant. His name is Drum, William Drum, and he told me he was Henry Horton's son. He's not a thief so far as I know, but he's a liar, and liars and thieves go to the same hell."

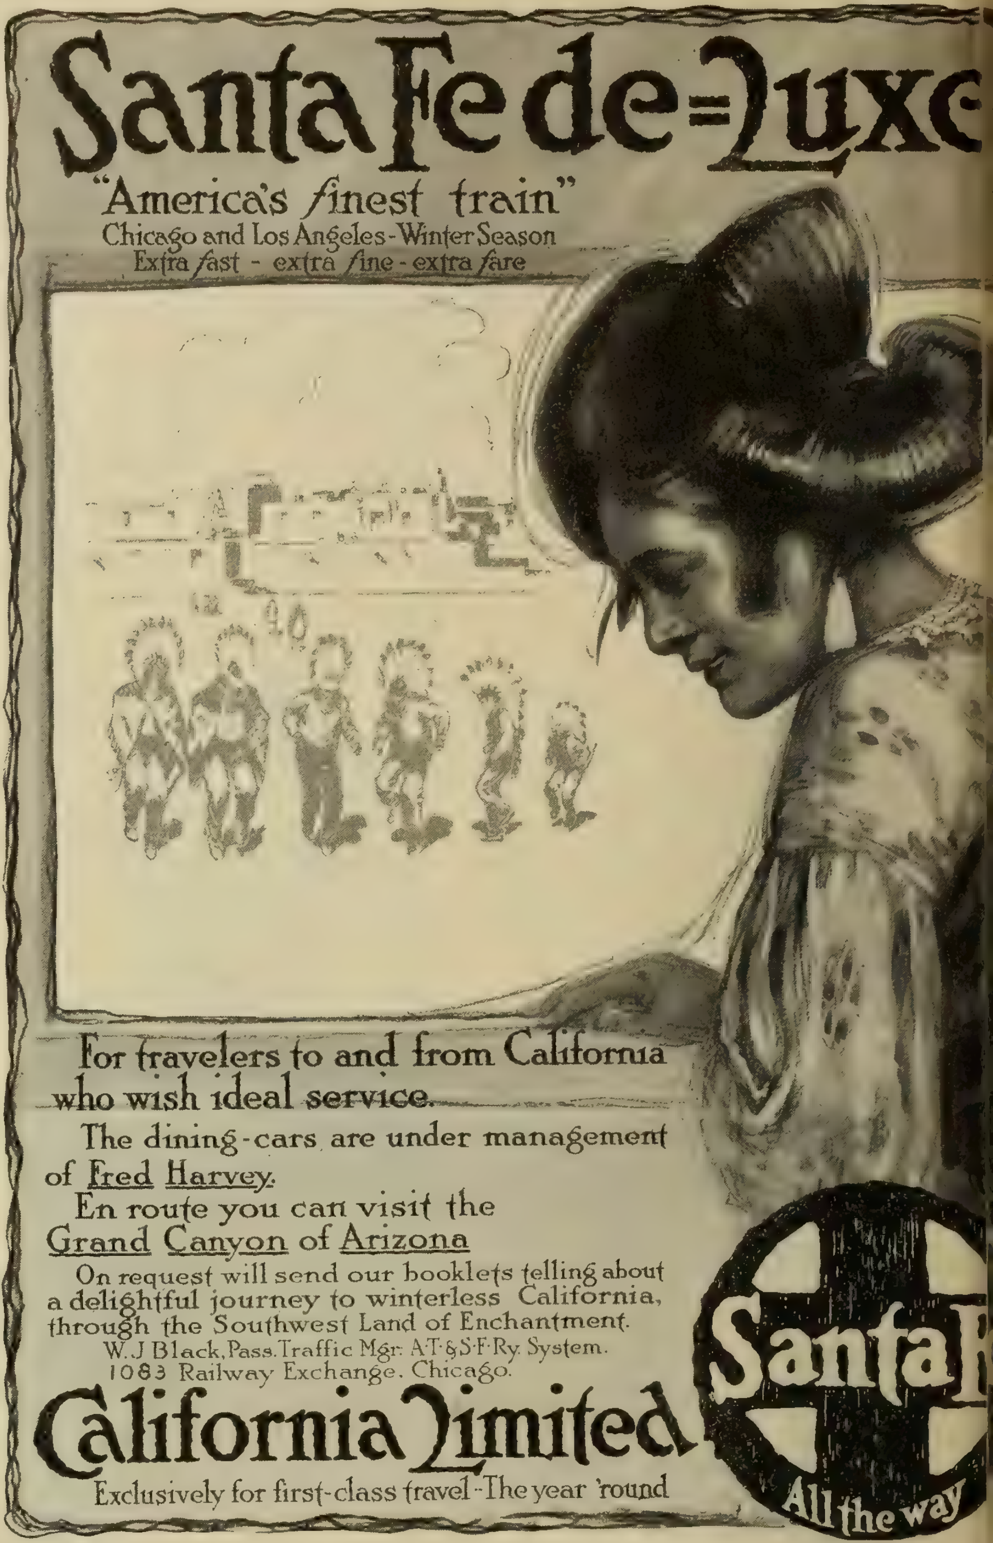
"I think you're mistaken, Mr. Elmore. I don't believe his name is William Drum, any more than I think the old man's name is Andrew Drum."

"You don't? Wait till the old scapegrace is tried. The county judge will get to the bottom of the business. But what'll we do for a teller?"

"Offer the place to Horton. He's competent and honest."

"Sam, are you crazy?"

(To be continued)



Santa Fe de-Luxe
"America's finest train"
Chicago and Los Angeles - Winter Season
Extra fast - extra fine - extra fare

For travelers to and from California who wish ideal service.
The dining-cars are under management of Fred Harvey.
En route you can visit the Grand Canyon of Arizona
On request will send our booklets telling about a delightful journey to winterless California, through the Southwest Land of Enchantment.
W. J. Black, Pass. Traffic Mgr. A.T.&S.F. Ry. System.
1083 Railway Exchange. Chicago.
California Limited
Exclusively for first-class travel - The year 'round

Items of Evangelistic Effort

Billy Sunday on Dec. 29 opened in Columbus, Ohio, what promises to be one of the greatest evangelistic campaigns of his career. The attendance at the morning service was estimated at 12,000, and during the day it is believed that more than 30,000 people heard him. At the evening service the large tabernacle was packed long before the hour for opening the service. Dr. Sunday declared this opening to be the most auspicious of any of the 150 campaigns he has conducted. The opposition, which a few months ago was quite marked, seems recently to have been rendered ineffective. The choir of nearly 2,000 voices led by Homer Rodeheaver is one of the largest ever organized anywhere for this purpose.

Revival meetings will begin Jan. 12 at Milton, Iowa. Rev. John W. Dickson, the pastor, will conduct the special services.

Rev. John Laman just closed a two weeks' meeting at Glendale, Kan.

Dr. H. D. Dunlop closed a series of meetings at Millersburg, Ill., Dec. 29, with a general uplift to the community. B. H. Redden assisted in the music.

Dec. 22 the first fruits were gathered of a seven weeks' union effort at Trumansburg, N. Y., under the leadership of Evangelist Ernest G. Crabill. The meetings were held in a vacant factory building seating a thousand people. The whole country for miles about the village was roused. Rev. J. S. Niles is pastor.

Fairview church, Princeton, Ind., is enjoying a special mission, which began Jan. 1 under the leadership of a former pastor, Rev. John Welsh of Wilmington, Ill.

A season of revival has recently been experienced by Scioto church, Commercial Point, Ohio. This church for many years was miscellaneously supplied, but during the past summer was by the home mission committee united with Grove City, and Rev. B. S. Hughes became pastor of these two churches, taking charge Aug. 1.

Prayer Meeting Held at Dawn

John Wanamaker Conducts Meeting of 2,000 Beginning at 5. A M.—Interchurch Federation Boosts Social Service.

PHILADELPHIA—Bethany church held a "dawn service" attended by nearly 2,000 persons on Jan. 1. They began to assemble as early as 5 a. m. and the exercises, conducted by Elder John Wanamaker and Rev. R. E. L. Jarvis, began in the dark. Previously the men's brotherhood of John Chambers church, 300 in number, serenaded Mr. Wanamaker at his home and marched with him to Bethany, their band playing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The spirited service of song and prayer continued until after daylight had flooded the building. Every attendant received a small silk banner containing the inscription: "Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify me." Other churches which held services were Woodland, Walnut Street, Second and Calvary.

New interest has been excited in work among the 90,000 colored population of Philadelphia and vicinity by the appointment by Bishop Rhinelander of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Archdeacon Dr. Henry L. Phillips to take charge of it, four missions and three Sunday schools being placed under his care.

To Urge Social Religion

The commission on social service of the Interchurch Federation is enrolling many of the ablest public speakers of the city—clergymen, professional men and city officials—for a campaign to carry "social religion" into churches, ministerial meetings, women's societies, brotherhoods and guilds. Legislative measures, recreation and amusements, hygiene, immigration, health, housing, justice, probation, police, etc., will be subjects discussed by them.

A Bible class attendance of nearly 17,000 men was obtained by five Methodist churches in the northern part of the city in a nine weeks' campaign contest during November and December. On the final day, Dec. 29, 5,532 men attended.

Through the zeal of its secretary, Dr. Joseph B. Turner, the Presbyterian Historical Society has obtained the custody of what is believed to be the oldest communion service in the United States. It consists of three silver pieces, a flagon and two chalices, and was presented the latter part of the seventeenth century to the Patuxent or Upper Marlboro church, Prince George's county, Maryland, by Colonel Ninian Beall, who settled in Virginia about 1655 and was one of the first Presbyterian elders in America. The service was obtained from the session of the church of Hyattsville, Md., which is a successor of the Upper Marlboro church.

Josiah Linton, an influential elder of Philadelphia, connected with the Falls of Schuylkill church and a prominent business man and official, died Dec. 30, aged 72. He was the father of Rev. J. M. Linton, pastor of Bethany church, Buffalo, N. Y.

To Prevent Overlapping

Dr. J. Gray Bolton presided at the quarterly meeting of the ministerial union in Westminster hall Dec. 30. Rev. J. S. Roddy, assistant pastor of Arch Street Presbyterian church, was elected secretary. In addition to listening to addresses from Doctors E. H. Delk of the Lutheran and W. A. Creditt of the Baptist Churches, the body resolved, in order to prevent future overlapping in the location of churches and the useless waste of men and money, to make a survey of the churches of the city. The action of the social service committee of the Interchurch Federation in taking steps to warn young women of the country against coming to the city to enter upon work other than domestic service unless assured of at least $8 a week was also approved.

At the first meeting of the Presbyterian ministers in 1913 Dr. Robert Burns Wallace gave an account of "A Record-Breaking Trip" through Europe. Jan. 13 President Milton G. Evans of Crozer Theological Seminary, a Baptist institution, will speak on "The Deification of Jesus."

W. P. White.

Albany College Gets Endowment

Presbyterians of Oregon are rejoicing over the fact that Albany College has now an endowment fund of $250,000, which was completed in the last hours of 1912. This is the synodical college founded forty years ago by pioneer missionaries. It has struggled along with no endowment, no adequate equipment, no large student body; but it has kept steadily to its purpose and has given a real Christian education. Now it will forge ahead.

A great impetus was given the move for endowment by a promise by J. J. Hill to give $50,000 if there were raised $200,000. President Crooks accepted the conditions and then set to work with an indomitable will to fulfill them. Of the total amount now pledged $120,000 is from the East, including Mr. Hill's promise, and $130,000 from the coast. There are many sharers in the success, and that means many friends of the college.

Give Pastor Trip to Holy Land

Twelve Feet of Tickets Surprise to Detroit Minister—Many Boards and Charities Will Gain by Will of Mrs. Newberry.

DETROIT—As a climax to the Christmas exercises of Woodward Avenue church and Sunday school, Rev. Sherman L. Divine, the pastor, was given twelve feet of tickets to the Holy Land and eastern historic points. The presentation was made by the congregation and includes a defrayal of the expenses of a five months' trip abroad. Lee E. Joslyn, as chairman of the board of trustees, presented the gift to the pastor, who was taken by surprise.

By the will of Mrs. Helen H. Newberry, a member of Jefferson Avenue church, the following legacies, among others, were left to benevolent objects: Grace hospital $10,000, Jefferson Avenue church for chapel fund $2,500, Woman's Board of Foreign Mission (Southern) $5,000, Board of Home Missions (Southern) $5,000, Home of the Friendless and Thompson Home for Old Ladies each $5,000, Children's Free hospital, American Sunday School Union, Y. W. C. A., Detroit, each $2,500; Park College, Parkville, Mo., $2,000; also $10,000 to be disposed of by the sons in such benevolences as may seem most needy. Newberry Memorial chapel, an annex of Jefferson Avenue church, is a memorial to Mrs. Newberry's husband.

Forest Avenue church, J. M. Barkley, D. D., pastor for the twenty-seventh successive year, observed the coming in of the new year by a 7 a. m. service in the church.

Rev. J. F. Fitschen, Jr., pastor of Jefferson Avenue Presbyterian church, is the new president of the ministers' association.

Rev. J. Brittan Clark, pastor of Westminster church, after a six months' tour of Europe, returned to his work with the first Sabbath of the new year.

William Bryant.

Big Sunday School 112 Years Old

Has Been Nearly Century in Same Location—Pittsburg Calls Two Pastors—Special Meetings Follow Week of Prayer.

PITTSBURG—First church observed the 112th anniversary of the organization of its Sunday school Monday evening, Dec. 30. This is the oldest Sunday school in western Pennsylvania and one of the oldest in the country. The first organization was effected in a small log building midway between the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers. The superintendent and first teacher was Rev. Robert Steele. After a few years the school was moved from the log cabin to the wagon shop of William Leckey on Wood street, then ninety-seven years ago it was moved to the present site of First church, 6th and Smithfield streets. An elaborate program was prepared, consisting of addresses and music. Notwithstanding the fact that First church is located in the downtown district, surrounded by business buildings, it has one of the largest and most up-to-date schools in the city.

Two of Pittsburg's vacant churches have lately called pastors. Dec. 26 Blackadore Avenue church sent a call to Rev. Malcolm Matheson of Murdocksville. Wednesday evening, Jan. 1, Second church, Wilkinsburg, issued a call to Rev. Charles G. Jordan, who for several years has been doing evangelistic work.

Week of Prayer Services

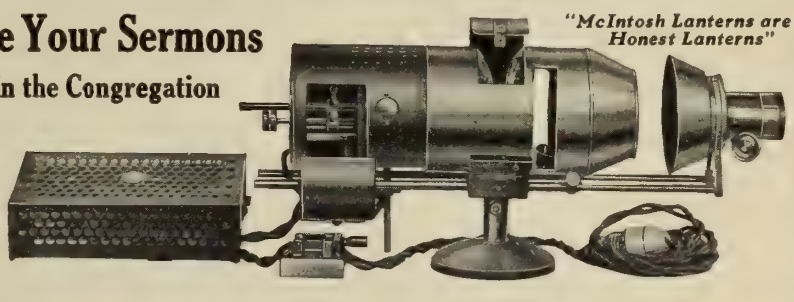
Many churches are observing the week of prayer, with plans to follow with a week or two weeks' services. Homewood Avenue church opened a two weeks' series of meetings Sunday evening, Jan. 5. Special music was furnished by the double male quartet of the Central Y. M. C. A., which has been assisting a number of churches. The pastor will preach the first week and Rev. Robert Hezlep of Grove City the second.

The majority of the Pittsburg churches held watch night services. Many had elaborate programs of music and provided refreshments.

The women's missionary society of Homewood Avenue church observed its twenty-first anniversary Jan. 2. A number of the women made short addresses. The principal address was made by Mrs. Mary Snyder, who is one of the leading missionary workers of the Evangelical Church in this country.

At the January meeting of the Monongahela Presbytery a committee consisting of Doctors J. T. McCrory and W. E. McCulloch was appointed to cooperate with a similiar committee from Allegheny Presbytery in an effort to obtain the quadrennial council of Presbyterian churches for Pittsburg in 1917.

P. W. Snyder.



Illustrate Your Sermons
and Entertain the Congregation by Using
a

"McIntosh Lanterns are Honest Lanterns"

Miopticon—the Newest, Neatest, Niftiest of Stereopticons

You can attach it to an ordinary incandescent socket using 5 amperes, 110 to 115 volts, and project pictures for a whole evening at a cost of about twelve cents for current.

You can show pictures of people, countries, scenes you have traveled through. You can show pictures of any modern science or industry.

You can show pictures of Europe, Asia, Africa or any other continent. You can even show pictures of the solar system and its different members, using this wonderful little machine.

You can set it down wherever there is a space 5½ inches in diameter. You can operate it without the least difficulty. It is simple; the arc lamp is always centered.

You can use it in any size room or even in a small hall up to fifty feet or more from the screen.

We will send a little booklet telling about the Miopticon if you want it. It is free. A post-card will bring it to you. Write for it now.

McIntosh Stereopticon Company, 421 Atlas Block, Chicago, Illinois

Will Tell of China Opportunity

Missionaries and Board Secretaries to Address Special Meetings — Mission Converts Men New Year's Eve While Others Revel.

CHICAGO—The necessity for the effort being made by the church to put 160 missionaries and $735,000 additional into the mission work of China the next three years will be explained to the people of Chicago Jan. 19 to 21. A large group of some of the best speakers in the church will occupy local pulpits and address the various meetings. Among the visitors will be Doctors Brown, Halsey and Speer from New York, King of Monmouth, Bradt of Wichita, Marquis of Rock Island and Reherd of Waterloo, in addition to six or seven China missionaries. There will be a meeting for women Monday afternoon and one for the students of McCormick Seminary that evening. The campaign will close Tuesday evening at a big dinner, when Dr. Speer will be the principal speaker. No collections will be taken at any of the meetings, the idea of the committee being the giving of information.

Ex-Senator Frank J. Cannon of Utah will discuss Mormonism before the ministers' association at Assembly hall, 509 South Wabash avenue, Monday next at 11 a. m. Nonmembers are welcome, following a meeting of presbytery, which has been called to consider the call to Dr. W. C. Covert by the "new" First church and other matters.

MAYOR MISTAKEN AT LEAST ONCE

The orgy in the hotels and cafes of Chicago on New Year's eve, together with the snub of the mayor in failing to see a large delegation of ministers who called at his office, constituted subjects of pulpit comment last Sunday. The mayor announced that he didn't believe there were fifteen active ministers in the delegation that called on him. The leaders responded with the names of sixty ministers, besides other church men. The fight on open vice as aided by police blindness is expected to continue through the year.

Faith church Sunday school, Rev. E. L. Winterberger pastor, during last quarter had an average attendance of 240, with an enrollment of 300.

Rev. Fred L. Selden, pastor of Ravenswood church, and his wife have gone to California for two months. Dr. George L. Robinson will supply the pulpit during most of his absence and Rev. Duncan C. Milner will have charge of the pastoral work.

Free-thinking Bohemians have recently contributed $1,400 toward the purchase of three lots for a new building for Lawndale church.

Even the closets in the six-room flat used by the Superior Street Italian mission were filled with spectators at the Christmas entertainment. In a space supposed to accommodate only seventy-five with comfort over 150 persons were crowded.

NEW YEAR'S AT INDUSTRIAL LEAGUE

Popular hall, 806 South State street, proved its name New Year's eve when the doors had to be locked to keep out the crowds. This is a mission under the Christian Industrial League and the watch night service was designed specially for "jags," according to the cards distributed through the saloons and lodging houses. Coffee and rolls were served under the direction of Rev. George A. Kilbey. The service began at 10:30 o'clock, and while the most of the crowds in the near-by loop district were high in their revels, seven of these men professed conversion.

The recent mass meeting in the Coliseum for "The World in Chicago" was a large success. The attendance was nearly 10,000, and the enthusiasm generated there will mean much to the movement, according to leaders.

The newly organized morals commission of Chicago will seek through education of parents and children to help eradicate the social evil. At a recent meeting a subcommittee was appointed to study the best method of carrying on such a campaign.

Clergy and Laity

Practically all ministers of the church in these days send a card of Christmas greeting to each parishioner. But perhaps only one sends the remembrance that Dr. Robert Watson of Cincinnati Second church chose as his Christmas card, a neatly printed copy of the book of Proverbs.

The moderator of North Dakota Synod, Rev. G. William Barnum of Bottineau, is recovering from a slight attack of bronchitis which kept him from his duties two weeks.

A recent issue of The Philadelphia Journal of Commerce carries on its front page a portrait of Dr. James Avery Worden, in honor of Dr. Worden's 70th birthday. Two columns of appreciation are devoted to his life as teacher, soldier and pastor, and as Sunday school leader in connection with the Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sunday School Work. Dr. Worden expects to attend the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Aberdeen this summer.

Will Try to Start Sunday Schools

Attempt to Increase Attendance in New York — Dr. Albertson Accepts Call — Celebrate Signing of Emancipation Proclamation.

NEW YORK—The Sabbath school committee of New York Presbytery has recently made canvasses of two important districts where Sabbath schools ought to be organized. At the present time the committee is seeking to encourage and assist schools in needy parts of the city and it has agents at work increasing the attendance. The committee deplores very much the fact that there has been a loss in Sunday school membership in this city during the last ten years and it is making every effort to turn the tide.

Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson has accepted the call to Lafayette Avenue church, Brooklyn, and will leave Central church, Rochester, where he has been eight years. It is said that the fact that Dr. Albertson broke the unwritten rule of Yale school is responsible for his Brooklyn call. No clergyman there is expected to preach more than twenty minutes. The penalty is to be coughed down. The committee on pastor from the Brooklyn church heard Dr. Albertson hold 3,000 men for thirty minutes, with no suggestion of an interruption.

WILL CARE FOR THE BABIES

Collegiate Reformed church of St. Nicholas, Rev. Malcolm J. McLeod pastor, has established a nursery where mothers can leave their children while they attend worship in the church. It is the first church in 5th avenue to take such a step.

Several prominent Presbyterian and Reformed ministers of New York City will go to Canada to attend the annual meeting of the western section of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance Feb. 18.

The golden anniversary of the signing of the emancipation proclamation by Lincoln was celebrated Sunday evening, Jan. 5, at Labor temple. The principal speaker was Booker T. Washington.

Friends observed that it was appropriate that the address at the funeral of Dr. Abbott E. Kittredge of Madison Avenue Reformed church should have been delivered by the venerable Dr. Charles Augustus Stoddard, as he was a schoolboy companion, a college chum and a manhood friend.

The speakers at a watch night service in Bedford church, Brooklyn, were John P. Mitchell, president of the board of aldermen; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Congressman William M. Calder, Alfred T. White, Dr. Walter Laidlaw and Dr. S. Edward Young, the pastor.

Professor William Adams Brown is the preacher the first three Sunday mornings of the year at Union Seminary.

Rev. Archibald Black, pastor of Bedford Park church, and Miss Ruth Hunter of Montclair, N. J., will be married in the near future. Mr. Black is a brother of Professor Hugh Black of Union Theological Seminary.

DETECTIVE BURNS ADDRESSES MEN

At a meeting of the men's club of Brick church Jan. 6 William J. Burns, the detective, spoke on "The Conditions in New York and Throughout the Country, and What the Men of Brick Church Can Do to Better Them."

The week of prayer was observed by local churches. The new Broadway church, Dr. Walter D. Buchanan pastor, had special services Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. An interdenominational prayer meeting of women was held in the lecture room of the Collegiate Reformed Church of St. Nicholas the morning of Jan. 9.

Carol Singers Serenade Homes

Church Musicians Help Children - Lots Donated to New Congregations in St. Louis to Be Used for Structures.

ST. LOUIS—Groups of carol singers from fifteen churches visited a number of homes and the principal hotels Christmas eve at the dinner hour, receiving offerings for the care of infants by the Children's Aid Society. The singers stopped only in front of homes bearing a lighted candle in the window. They made special trips to St. Luke's and the City hospitals. The Presbyterian churches represented were West, Central, Second and Markham Memorial.

West church, Dr. F. W. Russell minister, gave two Christmas parties for the Sunday school pupils. The first was for the juniors and all the graduates of the classes of 1911 and 1912 on Christmas night. The primary party Friday night, the 27th, was in the primary Sunday school room, and included all the children of the cradle roll.

S. C. Palmer, D. D., pastor of Lafayette Park church for eighteen years and later pastor at Macon, Mo., for four years, returned to this city last spring with the intention of making it his home. Tuesday evening, Dec. 24, Dr. Palmer and Miss Emily Marie Mittendorff

Washington's Birthday Program for Sunday Schools

You will want to make Sunday, Feb. 23, the day following Washington's birthday, memorable in your Sunday school. The patriotic program which the Presbyterian Home Board has issued will fit your school without interfering with the lesson period. Printed in two colors, with seven illustrations, it is a most effective leaflet. It will broaden the sympathies of city pupils and enlarge the vision of country pupils.

It is furnished free for use in connection with your home mission offering. Sample packets may be secured on request from the address below. Order at once. Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, 910, 156 5th avenue, New York.

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.
Will Send BOOKLET on Receipt of Six Cents Postage

CHAUTAUQUA ORIENTAL TOURS
Sailing Jan. 21, Jan. 30 and Feb. 18, 1913. The finest obtainable throughout. Special Comfort Tour, EGYPT and PALESTINE, May 10, $470; Four Sunday School Convention Tours; Fifteen Tours to Europe, Norway and Russia.
The Chautauqua Tours (Inc.)
Marquette Building -:- Chicago, Ill.

THE GIST OF THE LESSON R.A.TORREY
POST PAID 25¢ NET

"FITS THE VEST POCKET"
The Gist of the Lesson
By R. A. TORREY
A Vest-pocket "Multum in Parvo." Each lesson fully explained (three whole pages); special emphasis of the text; prayer meeting topics, etc.
FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY
N. Y., 158 5th Ave. Chicago, 125 N. Wabash

SMITH GRANITE PRODUCTIONS Stand in every instance as the world's best, in the world's best granite; Westerly. Write for booklet.
SMITH GRANITE CO. Westerly, R. I.

ALEXANDER'S GOSPEL SONGS
OVER A MILLION SOLD
$25.00 per 100.
Sample 30 cents postpaid.
No. 2. An Enlarged Book—Many New Hymns—Now Ready
FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY. New York or Chicago

were married at Second church, Dr. S. J. Niccolls officiating.

A lot has been donated to Home Heights church, recently organized, and a building will shortly be erected. The new Harney Heights church has also received a lot, and will occupy a new building in the near future.

Establish Church for the Negroes

Permanent House of Worship Will 'Be Found —Brother of Governor Refuses Religious Services in Hospital for Insane.

CINCINNATI—Presbytery has established an Italian church, and also the only church for colored people in Ohio Synod. It is endeavoring to secure funds for a place of worship for the colored church. There is a movement looking to a wider operation in the field of church extension. Overtures from General Assembly, except No. 7, have been answered in the negative by presbytery.

An effort to establish religious services in Longview Hospital for the Insane has met with a decided refusal to permit such services by Superintendent Harmon, a brother of Governor Harmon.

Jan. 16 Edward T. Swiggett, D. D., will have been stated clerk of this presbytery twenty-five years. Ohio Synod commemorated his service as synod's clerk for twenty-five years at its recent meeting in Bellefontaine. He has also served the General Assembly as temporary clerk three years.

From Various Fields

Indiana

Mr. and Mrs. John Rommell gave the church at Oxford a piano as a Christmas gift on Sunday, Dec. 22.

The choir of First church, New Albany, has added a choir room to the church, which was dedicated the first Sunday in January. Dr. F. W. Grossman delivered the address.

First church, Jeffersonville, through the pastor, Rev. Charles I. Truby, has just organized a men's Sunday evening club to take charge of the evening service. The evening audiences crowd the church.

Five brotherhoods of South Bend recently met to plan details for the election of honest city candidates in the fall of 1913. Meanwhile the men will attempt to enforce the Sabbath observance law.

About a year ago Dr. F. W. Grossman, state superintendent of Sunday school work, organized Sunday schools at Thayer and Snyder against strong opposition. Until these organizations there were no religious meetings of any kind in either town. On Nov. 24 they dedicated new churches, and are practically self-supporting.

Wisconsin

The city council of Oshkosh has been asked to rent the gymnasium of First church for use of the high school students during the winter.

Dr. Lowell C. Smith, for fourteen years synodical superintendent of Wisconsin home missions, died Dec. 28 at his home in Waukesha.

A communicant class at every preaching station, in which a two months' course in catechism and church history is a minimum, is being urged by the home mission committee of synod. An effort is also being made to have every individual over 12 years of age subscribe through the duplex envelope system.

The fortieth anniversary of Shawano church was held Dec. 10 with three large services. Rev. C. A. Adams preached morning and evening. In the afternoon a platform meeting was held, with several addresses. This church has doubled its property during the last four years. Rev. J. Adair McGreaham is pastor.

Iowa

Dr. E. A. Bess, pastor of First church, Clinton, has urged a campaign against gambling in that city.

Rev. Carl Montanus, who has served Wapello as stated supply for sixteen months, has resigned to accept a call from the board of directors of the Open Door Rescue mission in Ottumwa. The church and Sunday school have increased greatly under his lead.

After nine months' vacancy Logan church is now supplied by Rev. C. S. Marsolf, a former Congregational minister.

Rev. G. J. Cardy of Mechanicsville is slowly recovering from a recent operation at St. Luke's hospital, Cedar Rapids.

Amber church was organized Dec. 19 by a committee from Cedar Rapids Presbytery—Reverends Scott W. Smith, chairman; Allen of Monticello, Benbow of Onslow, Behrens of Anamosa and Helsing of Center Junction. Fourteen members were received. It is seven miles east of Anamosa.

Washington

Rev. Robert H. Milligan was installed pastor over Immanuel church, Tacoma, Dec. 18. Dr. Boyd of Portland First church, Moderator Matthews of Seattle and Professor W. E. Roe of Whitworth College took part.

A foreign mission institute lasting three days was conducted in Tacoma recently by Rev. and Mrs. Ernest F. Hall and Rev. George H. Trull. The home mission committee of Olympia Presbytery is arranging for a conference in Tacoma with all the home missionaries in presbytery Jan. 14-15.

University church, Seattle, Dec. 22 moved into its new edifice. The church is less than five years old and now has a membership of 250, which during the past year has occupied a chapel which was erected by members of the congregation last February in less than two weeks. This building was soon outgrown and the present structure, costing $6,000, was soon found necessary. Rev. Norman B. Harrison is pastor.

The North Yakima Sunday school has the largest number of pupils enrolled in teacher training courses of any school in this territory, there being more than fifty. This is also the largest and most thoroughly organized school in the Northwest. Nearly a hundred persons were added to the membership of the church last year as a direct result of Sabbath school work. The superintendent is J. F. Giboney, a hardware merchant, who gives more time to his Sabbath school business than to the other.

The Okanogan valley, a fruit growing section, is served by three churches—Oroville, Omak and Okanogan. Oroville is under charge of Rev. Fred M. McCreary, who has lately pulled the church through a vigorous fight for a dry town. The town is to be the railroad center of that district and is now of no little importance from a business viewpoint. Omak is served by Rev. David Brown, who has recently recovered from an operation and has been welcomed back by his people with great thanksgiving. There is no likelihood of any other church coming into the town, as this is the desire of other Protestants, following out the spirit of the federated churches of the district. Okanogan has as its pastor Rev. Fred J. Hart, a young man who has especially interested the men in his work. The coming of the new railroad which is now being built into the valley will mean the rapid development of the city and extended influence for the church. The three churches have together taken a scholarship in Whitworth College known as the Okanogan valley scholarship.

Minnesota

Central church, St. Paul, has elected a church secretary to assist the pastor, Dr. Harry Noble Wilson, in reaching possible attendants in the near-by boarding house district.

Rev. Philip S. Landis has gone to Brazil under commission of the Foreign Board. The people of Little Falls and Sartell were greatly blessed by his ministrations and his work for the men and boys.

Greenleaf and Spring Grove churches, situated in the country, are without a pastor. A comfortable manse, sheltered in a fine grove of oaks and near some beautiful lakes, is one of the inducements for any minister to take up the work on this field.

The old church building at Warroad has been moved and enlarged, and Dec. 1 was dedicated. Rev. R. S. Sidebotham, pastor at large and former pastor of the church; R. N.

"Worship is the chief function of the church."
—Hugh Black.

Good Hymn Books

are necessary in worship. With four standard hymnals to choose from, we are successfully meeting varying needs.

Hymns of the Centuries Shepard
(Church and Chapel Editions)
Hymns of the Kingdom Coffin and Vernon
Church Hymns and Tunes Turner and Biddle
Hymns of the Church Calkins and Davis

A hint as to your needs will bring one or all for free examination.

THE A. S. BARNES COMPANY
Publishers of Hymn Books since 1855
381 Fourth Ave. (27th St.), New York

Ask The Teacher Who Uses

TARBELL'S

TEACHERS' GUIDE, 1913

By MARTHA TARBELL, PH.D.

Primary Teachers, Junior, Intermediate and Senior Teachers and Bible Class Teachers always find their needs more than met. Senior students, Members of the Home Department, Workers in Young People's Societies, find the book invaluable.

"It is exceedingly wise in its adaptation to the various grades." Bishop John H. Vincent.

Nearly 500 pp. Illustrated, 8vo, cloth, $1.00 net; postpaid $1.15

F. H. REVELL CO., New York, 158 Fifth Avenue
Chicago, 125 N. Wabash Ave.

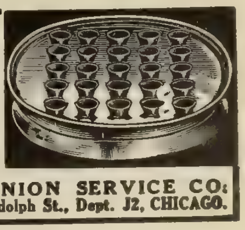
The nations of the world are crowding the steerage quarters of American bound ships. If the leaders are trained in Christian ideals there need be little fear of the future. At Dubuque, Iowa, is an institution maintained under Presbyterian auspices where are educated the young men of a dozen nations. Most of them will be preachers. Germans, Bohemians, Bulgarians, Armenians, Mexicans and Russians are in Dubuque German College and Seminary.

Would you like to know more about this work? Ask President C. M. Steffens, Dubuque.

The Best Way

The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.

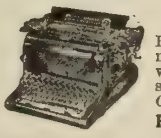
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago



INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.



TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED
Samples at Wholesale
Get in Business for Yourself

Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.

Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.

MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

Adams, D. D., and Rev. J. T. L. Coates took part. Mr. Coates has accepted a call to become pastor of the church. The new building has cost about $4,800 and was dedicated free of debt.

South Dakota

Although six students of Huron College supply near-by churches, still others are calling for student help.

Interior church much appreciates the new bell and chairs recently presented by friends. Rev. D. S. Brown is pastor, also serving Stamford and Okaton.

The church of Volga is much encouraged with the services of John Andrews, student, who is the only English-speaking minister in the community of 600.

Parkston church has the Methodist church joined with it in supporting both Sabbath school and preaching services, and Rev. J. A. Thomas, formerly of Java, is minister.

The new house of worship of the church in Morristown is nearing completion by the aid of the manual labor of the minister, Rev. F. A. Hassold. It is the only church in the community.

The churches of McIntosh and Watauga under the lead of Rev. W. J. Richardson are engaged in special evangelistic meetings conducted by Pastor-Evangelist H. Cullen, D. D., of Midland.

Dr. William Wallace, who has resigned from Parker church to take up missionary work in this state, during his pastorate has strengthened the church through the organization of a men's Sunday evening club and establishment of a Boy Scout troop.

New Jersey

Hope church, Plainfield, N. J., has been celebrating her silver jubilee.

Christ Reformed Church, Newark, has called Rev. Percival H. Barker, former pastor of Second Presbyterian church, Kansas City, Mo.

"Old" First church, Newark, was the scene of an impressive watch night service, in which five neighboring churches joined.

It is expected that Knox church, Kearny, will call Rev. Robert T. Graham of First tabernacle, Newark. The former church has been pastorless since Rev. Roland S. Dawson left.

Bethany church, Newark, will shortly have a fully equipped parish house, part of which will be paid for by old First church, its mother. It will cost $16,000 and will be used as a dispensary and a gymnasium.

New Hampshire

A complete census of the Protestant families of Manchester has just been taken by the church workers of that city. The Presbyterians took a very active part in this work.

Westminster church, Manchester, was recently given a new individual communion service of aluminum by Dr. Ellen Wallace, a member of First Congregational church, and Mrs. David Monteith of Westminster church.

Rhode Island

Providence Presbytery met in Lonsdale church Dec. 16. This is one of the smaller churches of presbytery. Rev. James D. Cameron and his wife are doing a good work in this weak outpost, with a salary that many ministers would think insufficient for a livelihood. In the evening a popular meeting was held and inspirational addresses were given by Rev. McLeod Harvey on church finance and by Rev. Peter H. McIntosh on evangelism.

Pennsylvania

The church at Claysville has recently finished a three weeks' campaign in which $5,000 was subscribed for payment of the debt on the church. Rev. R. T. Lynd is pastor. The church now numbers 350 and the Christian Endeavor society has recently grown largely.

New York

The country church of Burdett has welcomed Rev. James W. White of Sheboygan, Wis., the new acting pastor, who takes the place of Rev. C. H. Van Wie.

"The Oklahoma House"

OKLAHOMA WHEAT

"Buy Mortgages by Mail—with Safety"

It is a simple matter. Investors inquiring about our mortgages, receive full information regarding the properties securing them. Information about Oklahoma is also gladly furnished. References will be exchanged and methods suggested for an independent investigation of our House. Take your time and satisfy yourself fully. regarding both the securities and the House.

You take no risk, as all information and papers are in your hands for examination before paying for them. Afterwards, the House makes the collections for you, and "does all the worrying."

In amounts of $500 and upwards, paying annual interest by coupons. Loans mature in 5, 7 or 10 years, according to contract.

The notes are the individual obligation of the farmer and his wife—and secured by a first mortgage on their farm.

If this interests you write for Mortgage List No. 708—Also our Booklet.

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co. (Inc.)

OLDEST AND LARGEST MORTGAGE HOUSE INCORPORATED UNDER LAWS OF OKLAHOMA

Oklahoma City, U. S. A.

Business Founded 1892 Capital and Surplus $145,000.00

WE CAN CONVINCE YOU of the desirability of our high grade farm and city loans. To each person who has seen our advertisement in THE CONTINENT this year and answered it we have sold mortgages. These readers were satisfied as to our record and reliability and as to the safety and good profit in our securities. We feel sure we can satisfy you. Let us know about how much you have to invest at this time or in the near future, and we will be greatly pleased to tell you about our offerings and give you references and complete information about our methods. Our many years' experience in this field gives us exceptional opportunities to secure the choicest securities. No investor has lost a dollar through his investment in these mortgages, which are carefully selected in one of the best investment fields in the Northwest.

Drop us a line toaay.

Idaho Title & Trust Co.
BOISE - - - IDAHO

GOOD 6% Farm Mortgages
The BEST and SAFEST Investment on Earth.
Write us for information regarding our Farm Mortgages on lands located in the fertile James River Valley, North Dakota. We guarantee to look after collection of interest so that the investment will net you 6%. Write us for lists.

H. J. JOHNSON LAND AND CATTLE CO.
OAKES. - - NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $300,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

A Farm Mortgage Specialist

The requirements: Carefulness, good judge of land values, legal proficiency, financial responsibility, experience and honesty—these are a few.

Successful, shrewd business men, men of large financial affairs, are buying my Farm Mortgages. Enough said.

Write me today for Booklet "C," list of offerings and references.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker
ARDMORE, OKLAHOMA

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements

8% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Income sure. Our mortgages never exceed 30 per cent actual value of security. Every farm is examined by our salaried inspector. We collect and remit interest free of charge, and net you Eight per cent. Our field i the rich agricultural valley of Eastern New Mexico. Diversified crops; prosperous farmers. Write for information and sample application of $500.00 loan on improved 160 acre farm.

THE UNION MORTGAGE CO.,
105 West Grand Ave., Clovis, New Mexic

REAL ESTATE LOANS
6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%
During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

Farm Mortgages 6%
Capital and Surplus, $350,000.00
Send for pamphlet "C." Interest and principal collected free. Highest references. Clients in 32 States. Established in 1883
E. J Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT
30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St. Chicago.

Read the "WANT" Column every week. The thing in which you are interested may be advertised in this issue.

Financial Situation

Signs That Speculation Will Be Less—People Learn Value of Sound Investments—Cost of Curb Market.

There are good grounds for believing that the year 1913 will see less speculation and more actual investing than has usually been the case in previous years. The people who produce the wealth of the country and even those to whom the wealth is intrusted are learning that gambling is a serious menace to the pocketbook as well as to morals. The government is doing its best to prosecute fraudulent investment schemes by prohibiting the use of the mails and those who are unacquainted with the ways of investments are learning that a large profit offered to strangers constitutes prima facie evidence that there is something wrong with it. The First National bank of Chicago returned a profit of 19 per cent on the par value of the stock to holders during the past year. Stock of this sort, like that of other sound institutions, earning a large amount of money, is not offered promiscuously. The increasing confidence in investment houses dealing in bonds and in farm mortgages is also another promising indication of a more sane view of investments among people generally.

Avoid the Curb Market

Articles such as Collier's Weekly published Dec. 28 on "Confessions of a Curb Broker" give people a graphic idea of the way in which their money is used by speculators for their own advancement. This dealer in stocks which are denied the protection of the New York Stock Exchange because the companies issuing them refuse to submit the annual statement demanded, explains how he made $50 because he happened at the same time to get an order to buy and to sell a hundred shares of the same stock. By "matching" these orders he did what is commonly practiced by bucket shops and others and made his fictitious profit, which, however, resulted in increasing his bank account. This writer points out that nearly a thousand people are dependent upon the curb market for their support, which amounts to nearly $5,000 a day. This comes from the people who buy the stocks there offered. A large majority of these stocks in another six months have no value save as waste paper. They are made to sell, and in this market, unlike most stock markets, "securities" are dealt in before the project has passed the promotion stage.

Business Prospects Promising

Business prospects of the country continue excellent. Records for iron and steel production were broken in 1912 and most of the mills at the present time have enough orders on hand to keep them in operation for many months. Contemplated extensions of railways, as well as the expansion of industrial enterprises requiring structural steel, are accountable for this. Prominent bankers and business men have none but optimistic words for present prospects, although men who study crop conditions carefully are hoping that the Central West, which for the greater part of the winter has had no snow, will receive some soon.

It has been announced that the United States Steel Corporation is contemplating the establishment of a manufacturing plant in Canada near Detroit. The first cost of the plant will approximate $20,000,000, according to Judge Gary, chairman of the corporation.

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts who have spent their lives in this section. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazard3. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature.

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

A 6% January Investment

$2,500.00 First Mortgage secured by 160 acres tillable black loam, 3½ miles from Noble, Alberta, 110 acres under plow. Buildings worth $1,000.00. Mortgagor owns 42 horses, 30 cows, 500 sheep, 50 hogs, 1,280 acres other land, private grain elevator. Full particulars of this and other Alberta mortgages, $500.00 to $32,000 denominations on request.

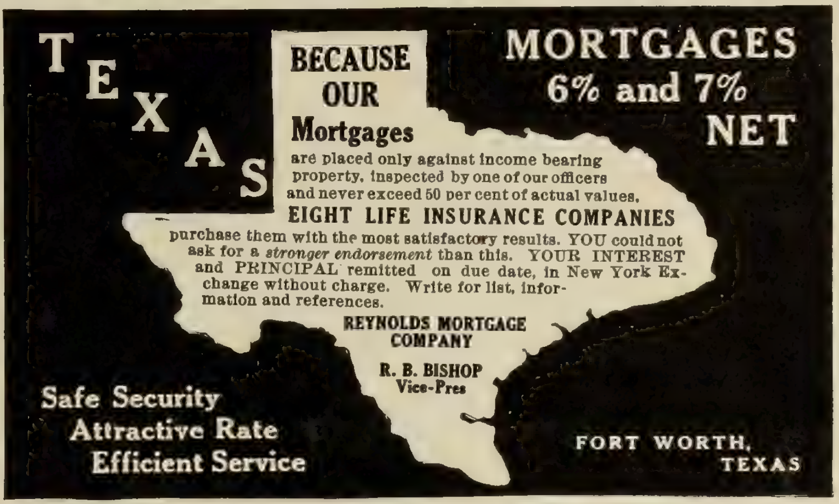
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer
1201 Granite Building :: Rochester, N. Y.

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidations of Other Banks

CAPITAL, SURPLUS and UNDIVIDED PROFITS
$14,500,000.00
LA SALLE ST. and JACKSON BLVD.



TEXAS

MORTGAGES 6% and 7% NET

BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values. EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY
R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres

Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

7% — 7½%

20 Years successful experience placing LOANS in the Southwest

Choice FARM LOANS in the RED RIVER Valley in S. E. Oklahoma, N. E. Texas and S. W. Arkansas, on improved farms at not to exceed 33⅓% actual value of security. The home of long staple cotton, corn, oats, alfalfa, fruits and vegetables. Average annual rainfall 45 inches and good soil, insuring certainty and fulfillment. Diversified farming; prosperous community. Write for information, booklet and map.

THE SECURITY MORTGAGE COMPANY
Individual responsibility over $1,000,000. Broad St., Texarkana, Ark.-Texas

Place Your Funds in Safe Securities.

No matter if you have a large or small amount for investment, a well placed First Mortgage upon an improved or cultivated farm can always be depended upon to yield a liberal rate of interest with the assurance of prompt payment of interest and principal at maturity.

My offerings range in amounts from $500.00 to $5,000.00 bearing 5½% and 6% interest. All loans carefully inspected and closed with our own funds before being offered for sale. Interest and principal collected without charge. Correspondence invited and detailed information with references and list of offerings will be mailed upon request.

G. W. HART, President Merchants' Bank, Bryant, S. D.

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.

3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

6% — 7%

We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request

JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

5% FARM MORTGAGES

ON IOWA and MINNESOTA FARMS are the SAFEST FORM of INVESTMENT—Tested by our customers for 40 years. We collect and remit interest wherever investors desire. Write for booklet and list.

ELLSWORTH AND JONES.
IOWA FALLS, IOWA.

Speed Men and Religion Leaders

THE KINGS OF PRUSSIA had among their titles that of "augmenter of the empire." That, Dr. C. C. Albertson reminded the men at the farewell dinner to Fred B. Smith, Raymond Robins and the quartet, was an appropriate title for Men and Religion to earn. The officials of the movement and a group of guests, the whole numbering about 150 notable leaders in Christian work, met at dinner in the Hotel Astor last Friday to give godspeed to the deputation which was to set off the same night for a seven months' tour of the world. Hawaii, Japan, China, the Philippines, Australia, South Africa and Europe will be visited. An advance agent is already on the other side of the world arranging for meetings with Christian leaders when Smith and Robins arrive with the message and method of the Men and Religion Movement.

Of course the dinner was more than a farewell—it was a testimony and an interpretation of the Men and Religion Movement nearly a year after. If any man went expecting to hear fulsome eulogy of the enterprise or its men, he was happily disappointed. The occasion was used for the latest statement of the condition of religious work in the world, and especially in the nation. All the speakers kept a high level. James M. Speers presided (Mr. Speers, James G. Cannon, Alfred Marling and S. W. Woodward were the hosts of the evening), and the speakers were Dr. Frank Mason North, Hon. H. B. F. Macfarland, William Knowles Cooper, Dr. Albertson, Mr. Robins and Mr. Smith.

The horizon of the speakers was notable. They all spoke to some phase of the general topic, "Ideals and Achievements in the New Program of Christian Work for Men and Boys." The newness of the program was postulated. It is comprehensive and cooperative. The coordination of the church's existing agencies is taken for granted. The world scope of men's interest and the assured place of social service in the modern ministry of men were treated rather as an assured basis than as a desirable ideal. From this standpoint the speakers dealt with kingdom concerns.

The note of sane patriotism that so often appears in the day's religious utterances was sounded by Mr. Macfarland, who statesmanly set forth the relation of religion to government. His optimistic tribute to the men who are in public service was as wholesome as welcome. The same ideal was carried out in further detail by Mr. Cooper, who reported that of the 162 new congressmen, to whose coming Washington looks forward, only two are regarded as unfit men from the moral standpoint. As might be expected of a Washington man, Mr. Cooper, who is Y. M. C. A. secretary at the capital, dwelt upon the ambassadorial aspect of this round-the-world mission.

"Scratch a minister and you will find a layman; and scratch a Christian layman and you will find a minister," was Dr. North's epigrammatic statement of a great truth. In his thrilling address Mr. Robins affirmed that "the saving of the individual will never do the job alone, but the job will never be done without the saving of the individual."

In the afternoon a group of Men and Religion workers, from widely scattered points, reviewed the work of the campaign after this interval of time. Really remarkable results, of the most definite character, were instanced, yet with a restraint and modesty that was notable. Clearly, for some men and communities, the Men and Religion campaign was the beginning of a new order.

Gatherings in New York Summon Many Church Leaders

A remarkable convergence of the religious leaders of the country is expected in New York City beginning Jan. 13. During a week there will be executive consultations on four of the most vital national interests of the American churches. On Monday will convene the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches, which is composed of about a hundred men representing thirty denominations. The quadrennial council lately held in Chicago left to this committee the responsibility for organizing an effective national secretarial force.

The next day the board of managers of the Missionary Education Movement will assemble in the Presbyterian building. Secretary Harry Wade Hicks will report the raising of a $50,000 fund commemorating the tenth anniversary of the organization and providing increased capital for the publication work which this movement carries on.

The same day will begin the annual meeting of the Home Missions Council, which will be in session in the Methodist building on Tuesday, and on Wednesday in the Presbyterian building. This will be attended by practically all the home mission secretaries of evangelical churches in the United States, and by many other home mission experts. Problems for discussion include such questions as whether home mission week ought to be observed annually; whether a permanent home mission publicity bureau is desirable; whether the neglected field survey which was made in the West ought to be extended to the East, and what kind of representation the united Protestant churches ought to have at Washington.

On Wednesday the annual conference of the organization which unites America's foreign mission boards is to convene in the Garden City house, Long island. It is likely that most of the secretaries attending will come the day before to take part in an all-day prayer meeting for Moslem lands, which will be held in the Presbyterian building on Tuesday. The sessions at Garden City will extend through Wednesday, Thursday and the forenoon of Friday. In this time there will be discussed cooperation in mission publications, including the proposed general missionary magazine, the spiritual side of missionary administration, the problems of Anglo-American communities in foreign lands and the board of missionary studies.

In view of this unusual coming together of great church men from all over the country, the Missionary Education Movement has arranged for a dinner on Tuesday evening, Jan. 14, at Hotel Astor, which will include them all. Tickets may be obtained of the Missionary Education Movement.

Evangelism in Home Mission Field

The attention of the last General Assembly was directed to the fact that out of the 9,935 churches on the roll 3,739, or more than a third of them, did not receive anyone on confession of faith. The Board of Home Missions finds that of 3,904 churches directly related to the board 1,896, or nearly one-half of them, did not receive a soul upon confession. The board has asked the pastor-evangelists in the various presbyteries where these home mission churches are to give themselves especially to holding services with these small and struggling churches, many of which are pastorless. The board has asked the entire church to unite in special prayer for God's blessing to rest upon the labors of the brethren to the end that sinners may be converted and Christians strengthened in faith and life.

Young People's Day Feb. 2

The department of young people's work has recently sent out a program and suggestions for observing Young People's Day Feb. 2. The purpose of this special service, remommended in place of the regular evening service, is that all the young people's societies may join in a service which presents some practical phases of work in the societies. The department of young people's work is also to be presented. The suggestions, mailed upon request to the department of young people's work, Witherspoon building, Philadelphia, will help any church to reveal the work of the young people and encourage them to continue and even increase their work.

School and College

Wilson College recently received a bequest of $1,000 made by the late Thomas K. Cree, for many years international secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

The Manlius Schools (St. John's), Manlius, N. Y., open the new Verbeck hall building this month, thus providing increased capacity to meet the demand for enrollment.

Ten Helps for Young People
in This Issue

There is one corner of The Continent to which thousands of young people turn first—the comments on the Christian Endeavor topics. But there are many other things of great interest to them each week. Here are some in this number.

1. To Give You, Young Man, Greater Interest in the Y. M. C. A.: Read last long paragraph, page 41.
2. To Encourage a Friend to Attend More than One Church Service: First "Jot and Tittle," page 41.
3. For Ideas of Sunday School Work: See what is done at Union Seminary, page 43.
4. To Encourage You in a Hard Task: Read what Dr. Kalley did, page 44.
5. To Strengthen Your Faith in Bible Study for Men: Read of the founder of the Drexel-Biddle Bible classes, by the Wayfarer, page 47.
6. To Give You a Brief but Close View of Moslem Life: Page 43.
7. To Freshen You for the Sunday School Lesson: Read comments by Doctors Scott and Jenkins, page 50.
8. Why Are You Going to College? See comments on Mr. Cooper's book, page 53.
9. To Give You an Insight Into One Important Public Question: Read the first page editorial.
10. Get an Idea of the Cost of Missions and Need of Your Help: Mission figures for 1912, page 39.

Porto Rican Workers to Meet

The fifth biennial conference of evangelical workers in Porto Rico was held in the M. E. church of Arecibo Dec. 3 to 5. The following denominations were represented: Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Christian, United Brethren in Christ, Christian and Missionary Alliance, Presbyterian, Congregational.

Porto Rican Workers at Conference

Sixty delegates were present from all parts of the island. The conference was marked by its high spiritual tone and general good feeling. Among the subjects discussed were the following: "Two Years More of Advance in Evangelical Work," "Protestantism and Liberty," "The Solidarity That Ought to Exist Between Evangelical Churches" and "The True Basis of Public Morality."

Committees were appointed to consider and present at the next meeting suitable action regarding Sabbath observance, publishing of tracts and social purity.

Ministerial Obituary

Corliss B. Gardner, D. D.

A veteran soldier, well equipped, he fell in the ranks, with all his armor on, Friday, Dec. 5, four days after his 83d birthday, Dec. 1. On Sunday, Nov. 24, he preached his last sermon in the Presbyterian church of Carlton, N. Y., where with increasing acceptance he had ministered for the last four years, going over every Saturday from his home in Spencerport, some twenty-five miles distant. Part of this journey was made by rail, and part, usually eight or ten miles, upon his bicycle, unless shortened by the hospitality of some friendly traveler. Having retired from the active pastorate three or four years before, he was casually invited to supply for a Sunday the Carlton pulpit, just then vacant, thus forming a relation which ended only with his life.

Sept. 3, the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage to Harriet, daughter of the late Rev. George Freeman of Parma, N. Y., now the sole surviving member of his family, his devoted parishioners gave them a golden wedding celebration.

Born in Brockport, educated in Rochester University and Auburn Theological Seminary, ordained in 1862, Dr. Gardner exercised his ministry in Clarkson, N. Y., for four years; in Cuba, N. Y., for ten years; in Westminster church, Rochester, for twenty-one years, and in Ripley, N. Y., nine years. He was to the very last a careful and conscientious student, keeping abreast of the varying phases of modern theological thought, characterized by a generous catholicity of mind and heart, an admirable preacher and a diligent pastor. He found needed diversion in habitual attendance for many years upon the annual meetings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, of which he was a member. He never seemed to have "crossed the dead line." A willingness and a desire to serve, to be at work in the vineyard, irrespective of relative prominence of fields and of financial compensation as the years slipped by, kept him perennially young and made him in this respect a worthy exemplar for men far younger in the ministry. S. A. F.

Rev. James F. Watkins

Rev. James F. Watkins died at his home in Appleton City, Mo., Dec. 26, aged 69 years. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. John B. Hill of Kansas City. Mr. Watkins was born at Point Pleasant, in what is now West Virginia. When 10 years old his father's family settled on a farm near Appleton City. During the civil war he served under General Sterling Price. In 1868 he entered Westminster College at Fulton, Mo. Later he studied theology under Dr. Nathan L. Rice. After his ordination in 1871 Mr. Watkins supplied the churches of Clinton, Brownington, Papinsville and Bolivar, until 1874, when the Declaration and Testimony party, with which he had connected himself, went into the Presbyterian Church U. S. Then, believing that political differences ought not to perpetuate church divisions, he entered the Presbyterian Church U. S. A.

Aside from three or four years spent in evangelistic work in Texas, Mr. Watkins' ministry was in Missouri, with the churches of Osceola, Rich Hill, De Soto, Jefferson City and Butler. In 1897 he became pastor at large in Kansas City Presbytery. In that, as in all his other work, he was indefatigable, never sparing himself until failing health compelled him to retire. For the next few years he engaged in business in Appleton City.

Mr. Watkins was one of a large family, of whom only two survive him—Miss Kate Watkins of Clinton, Mo., and John P. Watkins of Kansas City. On Jan. 1, 1873, he married Ellen G. Lilley, who survives him, with their three married children. Mrs. Watkins, her son Walter and her daughter May (Mrs. Edward Grobe) reside in Appleton City. The other daughter, Kate, is the wife of Rev. T. Anderson Glagett, pastor of the church in Oregon, Mo.

David A. Wilson, D. D.

David A. Wilson, D. D., died at his home in Macon, Mo., Nov. 30 after an unusually long and useful life. Born near Gettysburg, Pa., in 1821 and graduating from Marshall College at Mercersburg and from Princeton Seminary, he was ordained by Carlisle Presbytery in 1851 and was a missionary in Liberia and principal of Alexander high school, Monrovia, from 1851 to 1858. Returning to this country on account of the ill health of his first wife, he served Second church, Steubenville, Ohio, and the church in Potosi, Mo., then as chaplain in the Union army from 1861 to 1863, later as pastor at Ironton, Mo., for five years, and was warden of the Missouri state prison for two years following. He was pastor of the churches of Sullivan First and Birdseye Ridge, Mo., from 1871 to 1881, when the Presbyterian church at Milan was organized, and was pastor of Sullivan First and Milan from that time till 1886. Later he supplied a number of churches in Missouri and North Dakota till 1890, when he returned to Milan and retired from pastoral work on account of advancing years, but continued to preach occasionally. He retained a lively interest in Liberia and the negro race all his life. Mrs. Julia Meredith, the wife of his later years, ministered tenderly to him in his last months, which were characterized by great weakness of body. His only child, David McConaughy Wilson, is a leading lawyer in Milan, Mo. A granddaughter is the wife of Rev. J. T. McCutchan of Florida, Mo. Both were missionaries in China.

George Knox, D. D.

George Knox, D. D., synodical superintendent of home missions in Indiana, died suddenly at his home in Layafette, Ind., Dec. 19. Dr. Knox had been in failing health for some time, but with his enthusiasm he worked to the limit of his strength. On the day before his death he was in Indianapolis in the interest of the Gary home mission plant, and so successful had he been that but a few dollars remained to be raised for the $18,000 needed. Dr. Knox had pastorates before taking up home mission work at Cherokee and Sioux City First in Iowa; Monticello, Vincennes and Indianapolis Seventh in Indiana. Much of the present success of Indiana home missions is owing to his administrative ability.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Carthage—Joplin First, Jan. 28, 7:30 p. m.
Indianapolis—Clay City, Jan. 21, 7:30 p. m.
West Jersey—Camden, Jan. 21, 9:30 a. m.

Resignations

Alabama—Ensley: L. A. Reagor; Brent: I. C. Tallent.
Missouri—Hopkins: A. P. Walton; St. Joseph Brookdale: H. N. Wieman; Grant City: A. D. Seelig.
New York—Eagle Mills: H. E. Coombs; Troy Ninth: J. Milton Thompson.
South Dakota—Parker: William Wallace.

Calls

Kansas—Liberal: T. A. M. Halshauser, accepts.
Missouri—St. Louis Carondelet: George S. Fulcher, declines; Bethany: L. Layman, accepts.
Mississippi—Corinth: W. C. Lindsay, accepts.
New Jersey—Bayonne Christ: George A. McAllister; Phillipsburg First: George A. McAllister, declines.
New York—Far Rockaway Russell Sage Memorial: J. Milton Thompson, accepts; Rome Welsh: R. T. Roberts; Bergen: R. J. Kay.
Ohio—Hamilton First: A. J. Anick, accepts.
Wisconsin—Portage: John Homan, declines.

Installations

Alabama—Calera: D. G. Onnan, Dec. 11; Marvel: J. S. Bridges, Dec. 17.
Kansas—Bucklin: E. J. Gilmore, Dec. 27.
Missouri—St. Louis Rock Hill: U. D. Reiter, Jan. 2.
New York—Far Rockaway Russell Sage Memorial: J. Milton Thompson, Jan. 23; Yorktown: Harry B. Roberts, Dec. 20.
Pennsylvania—Vanderbilt: E. C. Musselman, Dec. 19.

Supplies Arranged

Alabama—Brent: J. H. B. Hall.

Vacant Pulpits

Missouri—Hopkins: C. L. Adams clerk; Grant City: W. L. Hoteling.

Change of Address

Hall, J. H. B.—Acton to Brent, Ala.
Peirce, J. D.—Selma to Columbus, Ga.
Huston, R. M.—Mansfield, Ohio, to Bozeman, Mont.
Lindsay, William C.—Newport, Ky., to Corinth, Miss.

Accessions

Indiana—Rock Creek, 7, Dec. 23, R. Emery pastor.
Iowa—Winterset, 26, J. S. Corkey pastor.
Kansas—Iola, 4, Dec. 29, S. S. Hilscher pastor.
Ohio—Scioto, 27, Dec 22, B. S. Hughes pastor.
New York—Trumansburg, 29, Dec. 22, J. S. Niles pastor.
North Dakota—Crosby, 14, Dec. 29, R. M. MacDonald pastor.

Churches Organized

Kansas, Holcomb, 35 members, Dec. 14.

Marriages

A charge of one cent per word is made for marriage notices. Payment must accompany copy.

LEEM-REESE—Mrs. Jennie Derr Leem, for six years organist of Hokendauqua, Pa., church, to Prof. William Reese of Allentown, Dec. 26, by Dr. James A. Little.

Thornwell Home School for Orphans

The institution is furnishing a home for 300 orphan children. More than a thousand have already been educated here. These children are not located in large dormitories, but in quiet little cottage homes, two to four children in a room and about twenty to a cottage, with at least one and in most cases two good women living in each home.

Beginning with the first grade, each child is passed on to five more years in the high school, and those who desire it receive four years of a collegiate course—the girls in Thornwell College for Orphans and the boys in the Presbyterian College of South Carolina. Every boy and girl is given a technical course of some kind. The boys may learn how to become farmers, carpenters, machinists, printers, shoemakers, plumbers or electricians; and the girls may study nursing, stenography, steam laundry work, dressmaking, and quite a variety of other occupations. There is a well appointed infirmary, with physicians and nurses in attendance.

Every morning, the year round, the children assemble for family worship and for religious and moral training. They have a midweek evening service, where particular attention is given to their needs by an experienced pastor. In their school work special instruction is given in the catechisms and in the Scriptures. The institution is steadily improving its range of services. The cost is about $100 each per annum for the schooling, technical training, spiritual development and physical care, including board and clothing, or an average of $8.33 per month.

No boarders are taken and no child pays for any good received, for they are all orphans, and there is no one to pay anything for them, but as each lad and lass works for four hours daily in a selected department, they are really through this self-care contributing to their own support. There are about eighteen of these cottage homes. And there are eight or ten other buildings devoted to the public uses of the institution. W. P. Jacobs is president at Clinton, S. C.

SELL'S NEW METHOD STUDIES

FOR BIBLE CLASSES. Eight Distinct Series--popular throughout English-speaking world. Send for Full Descriptive Circulars.
F. H REVELL CO. 158 5th Av., N.Y. 125 N. Wabash, Chicago

We have HYMN-BOOKS FOR ALL SERVICES
Let us know your needs.
The Century Co., Union Square, New York City

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

MEMPHIS, TENN., COURT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN church, Charles M. Collins, minister.

WANTED—BY A PASTOR OF A LARGE CHICAGO parish, a cultured Christian young woman experienced in stenographic and secretarial work. Must be interested in church work. Will be required to do church visiting. Give full particulars. Address F, care of The Continent.

WANTED—BY MINISTER, YOUNG COUPLE OF energy and refinement to occupy country manse, all conveniences. Farm land, also complete poultry raising equipment. Minister to board, reserving bedroom and study. Address P. O. Box 256, Parkesburg, Pa.

REAL ESTATE

FOR SALE—SPOKANE VALLEY CHICKEN, FRUIT and truck ranches at bargain prices. Write for pamphlet. Cryor & Co., 432 Old National Bank Bldg., Spokane, Wash.

DON'T YOU WANT A FARM HOME IN THE MILD healthful Southern states? Fine grazing, truck and general farming lands $10 to $30 an acre; easy terms. Poultry, fruit, truck pay $50 to $300 an acre. Land lists and "Southern Field" magazine free. M. V. Richards, Land & Industrial Agent, Room 22, Washington, D. C.

TOURS

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WILL CONDUCT A select company to London for a month. For particulars inquire of Rev. J. E. Day, Butte Falls, Oregon.

SPEND YOUR VACATION IN EUROPE. SELECT, party sails July 2 for two months tour, visiting all the points of interest in Continental and Island Europe. Booklet free. Rev. B. Willoughby, Wadena, Minn.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

SCIENCE, after giving the manufacturer electricity, steam and machinery with which to make things, contributed just one factor to help sell them—

Advertising Art

Illustrations and engravings that picture his wares in a life-like manner, introduce them to the public and create sales and profits for the advertiser.

Barnes-Crosby Company makes illustrations, designs, commercial photographs, zinc etchings, wood cuts, electrotypes, photogravures and color plates in two or more colors, all of the highest quality, charged with selling power and persuasiveness.

Day and Night Service

Barnes-Crosby Company
E. W. HOUSER, President
Artists :: Engravers :: Catalog Plate Makers

Manufacturing Engraving Plants:
Madison and Franklin Streets, Chicago
Eleventh and Locust Streets, St. Louis
Branch Offices in Fifteen Principal Cities

If you ever published a catalog, booklet or folder or if you intend to do so some day, send for our free folder, entitled "Cover Designs." It throws an entirely new light on a troublesome subject.

Free to Continent Subscribers

Can you remember the exact vote cast in your state at the recent election for the three presidential candidates? Sometimes it's mighty convenient to know at a glance how many ministers, churches, and members there are in the different religious bodies in the United States. The above and thousands of other items of information are obtained from

The Chicago Daily News Almanac and Year-Book

This is a standard, current, ready reference volume which is now ready for distribution. It contains 700 pages of statistical and other information concerning international, national, state and local affairs; also details of many matters which have occurred during the year and which are of more than ordinary significance. There are 2,500 or more indexed items of information. Under A alone in the 1912 issue there were 200 items. An idea of what a vast storehouse of knowledge this Almanac contains can be obtained by a glance at the first item appearing under the different letters of the alphabet in the 1912 issue as follows:

Abyssinia
Ballenger, Resignation of Cab Fares, Legal Dates, Recent Historical Eagles, Coined
Factory Fires in N. Y.
Galleries, Art of The World
Hague Court of Arbitration
Idaho Game Laws
Japan
Kansas Society of Chicago
Labor, Alien Contract
Maccabees, Knights of National Banks
Oat Crop by States
Packers, Proceedings against Qualifications for Suffrage
Racing, Horse
Sage Foundation
Taal Volcano Eruption
Unemployment, Conference
Valuation, Cities
Wages, Compared Yellowstone Park
Zinc Oxide Produced in U. S.

This year-book will be mailed postpaid to any present reader of The Continent who will send us one new yearly cash subscription at the regular $2.50 rate. If not convenient to secure a new subscription or send the paper to a friend as a present, we will send the almanac to you postpaid for 75 cents cash.

Address THE CONTINENT

509 South Wabash Avenue
Chicago, Illinois

156 Fifth Avenue
New York, N. Y.

War Correspondents of the Church

Newspapers of the world are spending large sums to keep their best reporters as near as possible to the firing line in the Balkans. They tell of bloodshed and destruction. The Continent at all time[illegible] has correspondents on the firing line of the church in every country. Each week the latest [illegible] of the cross are told—and told before the facts are history.

SparksMarionE †jan13
1205 Springfield av

In each issue The Continent has a page of live [illegible] with pictures from mission fields at home and abroad. These sidelights on the actual work of the missionaries permit a better understanding of the country, customs and conditions in which your representatives work, than do formal elaborate reports of the situation once a year. The Continent is published weekly and the information on the missionary page conforms to a newspaper's definition of news. Usually missionary information is distributed only monthly.

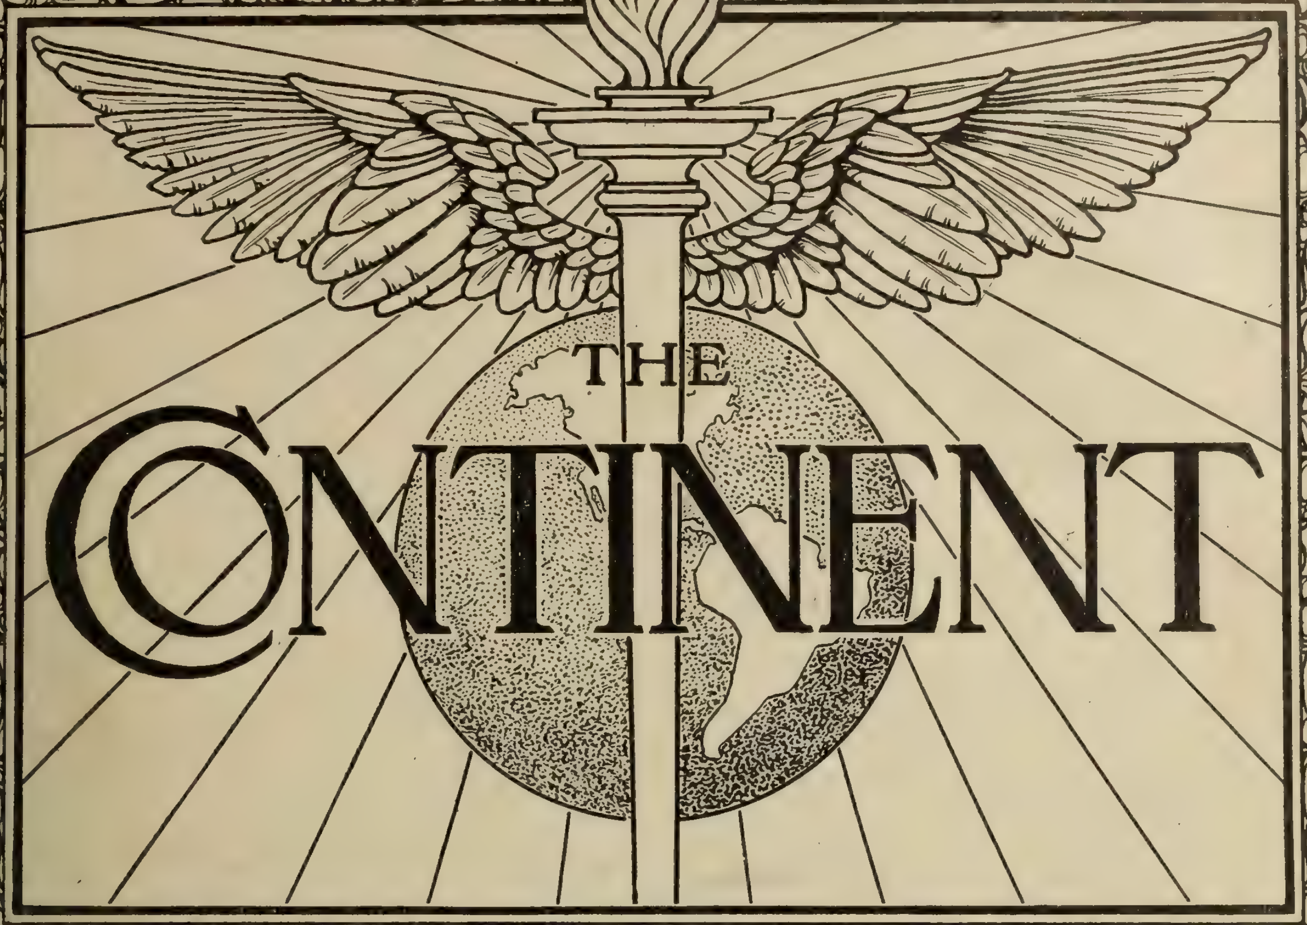
Scrap books made of clippings from this page will provide reliable and usually exclusive information for many months of missionary meetings. Readers of The Continent have that "different tone" in missionary papers which makes them individual. The editors are constantly on the lookout for important news in the board offices, of conferences of the denominational leaders or of the leaders of many churches as they plan joint work. Results of these meetings are given to Continent readers at once. The matter is written in the smallest possible compass with emphasis on the important facts.

No other publication of any denomination gives its readers such full and prompt information about missions

This missionary page is but one of the many valuable features of the paper which give it unique standing. In the news columns may be found items showing what men and women in various parts of the country are doing in and out of their organizations. Pastors and laymen find "Ways of Working" exceedingly helpful. Here successful plans of work are explained for use of others. The sayings and doings of the leaders of religious thought in all parts of the country are given each week. The paper is a source of inspiration and ideas, and costs less than 5 cents a week.

But not alone in the news columns is there definite help for the readers. The World department with its summary of current events, occurrences of interest in the religious world, the editorials, the departments for home and the children, the book department, Sunday school and prayer meeting comments all add to the paper and supply other mission information. When there are large mission problems before the church The Continent meets the situation. It told Korea's plight, exposed "Pastor" Russell and constantly follows developments in home mission lands.

The Presbyterian National Weekly for the Whole Family



THE CONTINENT

JANUARY 16, 1913

Capital's Cosmopolitan Pastor

WILLIAM T. ELLIS

You and I Are "Called"

J. G. K. McCLURE

A Prejudice in Favor of Jesus

EDITORIAL

Johnnie Saves the Day: the Young America Page
Dr. Niccolls on Lay Moderator of General Assembly

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. The Continent's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of The Continent. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

THE CONTINENT EDUCATIONAL BUREAU
509 Wabash Avenue - - - CHICAGO

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD

For Young Women

A Cultural and Practical School

JENKINTOWN, PA.

Has a twofold aim: to discover and develop each pupil's aptitude for some definite life-work; and to seek true culture through academic and social training. These are of equal importance. And both are successfully accomplished here. College Preparatory, College Departments, Conservatory of Music, Art, Arts and Crafts, Oratory. Courses in Domestic Arts and Sciences, Secretaryship, Normal Gymnastics, Normal Kindergarten, as electives.

Free, healthful country life near Philadelphia. Unusual buildings. Rooms with private bath. Moderate terms. Apply for catalogue to

M. H. REASER, Ph. D., :: :: :: :: :: :: President

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

LAKE FOREST COLLEGE

offers a liberal training under experienced professors and excellent provision for the physical and social welfare of its students, in a beautiful environment. For information address

JOHN S. NOLLEN, President, Lake Forest, Illinois

BIBLE STUDY BY CORRESPONDENCE

Four Courses: Bible Doctrine, Practical Christian Work, Chapter Summary, Synthetic Bible Studies; each independent. Begin any time. Certificate at end of any course. Students all over the world.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE,
153 Institute Place, Chicago.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

The School That Makes Manly Men

The Headmaster and Instructors are all men of wide experience in the "Boy Problem"—all University Graduates. BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY is ideally located in a town of 1500, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college; Graduate Courses in Academic, Normal, Commercial, Instrumental and Vocal Music. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write

HEADMASTER, :: BUNKER HILL, ILLINOIS

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.

W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Tennessee

Greeneville and Tusculum College

Strong Faculty. Healthful climate. Broad and liberal courses. Positive Christian influences. Expenses reasonable. Pres., Rev. C. O. Gray, D.D., Greeneville, Tenn.

Ward Seminary

For Girls and Young Women

42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres.. Nashville, Tenn.

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Glendale College

Glendale, Ohio
Suburban to Cincinnati

Young women may enter the second semester February 3d, to their advantage. Liberal arrangements and superior teachers in every department.

MISS R. J. DEVORE, President.

THE OXFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN—FOUNDED 1830

One hour from Cincinnati. Ambitious students, brilliant faculty. Standard four year course, B. A. Degree. Rate only $355.00. Art, Music, Expression, Normal Domestic Science, Business. Write for "Seven Points."

JANE SHERZER, Ph.D. (Berlin), Pres., Box 2, Oxford, Ohio.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place' Catalogue mailed free. Address

H. B. BROWN. President.

The periodical peddler

The itinerant peddler with his pack was the father of the present-day merchant prince, with his mammoth department store.

The old-time traveling merchant could only offer such meager selection of necessities and luxuries as was possible to carry on one man's back.

Now, instead of a peddler's pack a magazine enters the secluded home and spreads before its occupants the latest and best the world has produced in the way of things to eat, to wear, to furnish the home and to enjoy.

Thus has advertising made it possible to the dweller in the byways to share every good thing in life in common with the dwellers in the highways.

The advertisements in this periodical not only offer you selections of those things for which you feel a need but suggest many things which will increase your comfort, lighten your labor and conserve your income.

THE ADVERTISING MANAGER.

WANTS AND HELPS

REAL ESTATE

ARKANSAS BARGAIN—160 ACRE FARM LOCATED about 1½ miles south of Oliver, Ark., on R. R. 20 acres cleared. Most of tract can be farmed. Good ranch, fruit and pasture land. Oak, hickory, gum and other timber. Near church and school. Three-room house, barn, well, spring, etc. No trades. Price for quick sale $5.25 per acre, cash. Ringland, McAlester, Okla.

ESCAPE THE COLD WINTERS. LOCATE ON A southeastern farm. Profitable lands $10 to $30 an acre—easy terms. Poultry, truck and fruit pay $50 to $300 an acre. Unexcelled living conditions. Land lists and the "Southern Field" magazine free. M. V. Richards, Land and Industrial Agent, Southern Railway, Room 22, Washington, D. C.

PRESBYTERIANS WANTED — IRRIGATED FRUIT lands, good; water rights, reservoir, fine schools, church, climate. Rev. Morley, Penrose, Colo.

WANTED—AN ASSISTANT MINISTER FOR CITY church. Little pulpit work. Chiefly pastoral visitation and organization. Unmarried man in middle age or past preferred. Salary $1,500 and housing. E. B., The Continent.

MISCELLANEOUS

MEMPHIS, TENN., COURT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN church, Charles M. Collins, minister.

WANTED—BY A PASTOR OF A LARGE CHICAGO parish, a cultured Christian young woman experienced in stenographic and secretarial work. Must be interested in church work. Will be required to do church visiting. Give full particulars. Address F, care of The Continent.

FOR SALE—GOOD SECOND HAND PEWS. ADDRESS D. I. Conkle, Newtown, Ind.

TOURS

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WILL CONDUCT A select company to London for a month. For particulars inquire of Rev. J. E. Day, Butte Falls, Oregon.

SPEND YOUR VACATION IN EUROPE. SELECT, party sails July 2 for two months tour, visiting all the points of interest in Continental and Island Europe. Booklet free. Rev. B. Willoughby, Wadena, Minn.

EUROPE and ORIENT. 32nd Year. Limited Parties. Comfort and Leisure. Thorough Sight-seeing. Expert Guidance. Strictly first-class. Special Tours for Private Parties. PAINE TOURS, Glens Falls, N. Y.

PIPE AND REED ORGANS

AND PIANOS

Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., PEKIN, ILL.

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD

$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

"A FAIR FACE MAY PROVE A FOUL BARGAIN." MARRY A PLAIN GIRL IF SHE USES SAPOLIO

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE MCCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
EVERETT SISSON, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE: THURSDAY, JANUARY 16, 1913

A PREJUDICE IN FAVOR OF JESUS......... 69
EDITORIAL—
  Have You Found a Better Way?....... 72
  South as Well as North Involved....... 72
  Kaiser's Opinion on the Traub Case..... 72
THE WORLD—
  President-Elect's Latest Address....... 70
  Vote on Kenyon Bill Few Weeks Away 70
  Supreme Court Outlaws "Corners"..... 70
  Attacking Verdict in Dynamiting Case... 70
  Would Revoke Coatesville's Charter.... 70
  Talk of Resuming Balkan War........ 70
  Death for Chinese Woman Opium Smoker 70
  Liberals' Program Moves to Accomplishment 71
  "Food Tax" Hurts the Unionists....... 71
RELIGIOUS WORLD........................ 71
A "CALL" TO CUT STONE..J. G. K. McClure 74
A COSMOPOLITAN PASTOR AT THE NATION'S CAPITAL (Illustrated)...William T. Ellis.75
A THEOSOPHICAL "WILL-O'-THE-WISP" ....Stanley A. Hunter 77
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XI. ....Richard S. Holmes 77
THE HOME COUNCIL—According to God's Plans.....................Cora S. Day 79
YOUNG AMERICA—When Johnnie Saved the Day for Teacher.......Frances M. Fox 80
  A Scout of the Old Frontier (Illustration) 80
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 81
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE.........E. A. Wicher 82
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 82
MISSIONARY WORK (with Illustration)..... 83
NEW BOOKS............................ 84
THE OPEN HEARTH...................... 85
DR. NICCOLLS ON LAY MODERATORSHIP.... 85
WAYS OF WORKING...................... 87
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS WORLD—Beginning 87

Around the Shop

That first tragedy in the Around-the-Shop Man's life seems now a simple thing. But, then, the elephants were bigger in those youthful days than they are now, and Cincinnati was unrivaled among the cities of the world in its imperial vastness.

The village dentist said it really wouldn't hurt—that is, not much; and my! how good you'll feel a moment after. And the Boy did feel better, but he never did acquire the habit of having a tooth drawn just to experience the comfort that followed.

Life for successful folk is fairly well made up of little and big crises in which they do this or that thing not for immediate enjoyment but because good will follow. Happily in this respect experience does not parallel that of the terrified youth of those long ago days. Practice in doing the right thing, and observing the fruits thereof, develops a quite different condition of mind. Not to do it becomes the disturbing element.

For example, here is a successful business man in a great city, whose mind might be fully occupied by commercial problems. But something had been weighing upon his conscience. A possibility of service had been suggested to him. It wasn't a question of the money involved—just that old problem of "getting around to it." Let him make confession:

"That Around-the-Shop Man is making my life so miserable that I can wait no longer. Here is that $5 to send The Continent to two of my friends who ought to have it."

—

Now, this gentleman attends a Congregational church. If the Around-the-Shop Man can make a Congregationalist miserable, do you wonder that Presbyterians are sending in as many as five, ten, fourteen, thirty-four full-paid subscriptions at a time? —

The Bureau to Relieve Such Misery is always open for business.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

Church Chime Peal BELLS
Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

Pastors & Building Committees
Write Today For Our "Catalog B"
An Authoritative Guide on Church Seating. Gives valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc Please send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements.
Pews, Pulpit Furniture, S. S. Seating
American Seating Company
218 S. Wabash Avenue CHICAGO

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Memorial Windows
Beautiful in design, highest quality in materials, best workmanship in execution. We number many Presbyterian churches among our patrons. Let us tell you what we can do for you. Write today for particulars.
FLANAGAN & BIEDENWEG CO., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

The Best Way
The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect
Minneapolis, :: Minn.
Will be glad to send church booklet to churches intending to build, upon receipt of 6c postage stamps.

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat, or Acetylene Generator, $29.00. Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus. Get our latest catalog and terms.
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only
C105 Church F'rnit're | School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture | Office Desks D105
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

"JOHN WESLEY
and
D. L. MOODY,"
a unique article by Rev. L. W. GOSNELL, will appear in the February number of THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE. Also addresses by Rev. John Gardner, Dr. L. W. Munhall, Dr. W. E. Biederwolf and Bishop William M. Bell. Single copy, 10 cents.
Three Months, 25 cents.
THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE
161 W. nstitute Place, :: Chicago, Illinois

Registered Trade Mark Established Half a Century

Annual Sale Table Linens

At Greatly Reduced Prices

Some idea of the variety of the goods offered at this Sale may be gathered from the fact that in the collection of Table Linens there are 194 designs. There is not an old or undesirable pattern in this lot, and it includes many of the newest and most up-to-date designs. Every size of Table Cloth is offered, as well as every quality from the moderate-priced up to the finest.

Napkins (per doz.)

20 to 22 in., at......	$2.25	2.75	3.00	4.00	6.00	9.00	10.50
Reduced from	2.75	3.25	3.50	4.50	7.00	11.00	12.50

24 to 27 in., at	$3.00	3.50	4.00	5.00	9.50	16.00	21.50
Reduced from	3.50	4.00	4.50	5.50	11.00	19.00	27.50

Cloths

2x2 yd , at...	$2.25	2.50	2.75	3.00	4.00	5.00	8.50
Reduced from.	2.75	3.00	3.25	3.50	4.75	6.00	10.00
2x2½ yards...	$2.85	3.00	3.50	4.00	4.75	6.00	10.50
Reduced from.	3.25	3.50	4.25	4.75	5.50	7.25	12.75
2x3 yards.....	$3.25	3.50	4.00	4.75	5.50	7.00	10.00
Reduced from.	3.75	4.50	4.75	6.50	6.50	8.50	12.00

2¼x2¼ yards.	$3.50	4.00	4.50	5.00	6.00	7.50	11.00
Reduced from.	4.25	4.75	5.50	5.75	7.50	9.00	14.00
2½x2½ yards.	$4.25	5.00	6.00	7.00	8.25	10.00	13.00
Reduced from.	5.00	6.75	7.00	8.50	10.00	12.00	15.75

2½x3 yards...........	$6.00	8.00	9.00	10.00	15.50
Reduced from..........	8.00	10.00	10.75	12.00	18.75

We also offer at this Sale very attractive values in Bed Linens, Towels, Blankets, Bedspreads and Quilts, French and American Lingerie and Corsets, Ladies' Outer Garments, Hosiery, Neckwear, etc.

32-page booklet describing these goods in detail mailed free on request.

James McCutcheon & Co.,
5th Avenue & 34th Street, N. Y.

German help in the making of America.

In your own town you are pretty sure to know many useful citizens whose parents came from German Europe. Teutonic blood has vastly influenced the institutions of this country. How can the best of the German characteristics be trained to build up American ideals? Adrian Van Vliet sixty years ago believed preachers in their own tongue would help, and he founded Dubuque German College and Seminary. The sturdy Christian Germans of the Central West still believe as he did, and help support the school he founded and which is helping to solve the immigrant problem. The institution has grown so that men of a dozen nations are given instruction and trained to work among their fellow countrymen. The results have shown the great advantages of American training with foreign birth. To maintain and follow up the work the far sighted Germans started they must have the cooperation of other American Presbyterians.

Full information on request to President C. M. Steffens, D.D., Dubuque, Iowa.

The school for students of many nations.

Ever stand in line to get a seat in church?

People do in the nation's capital.

In one of a series of sketches of individuals who are doing things in the church, William T. Ellis tells something of the life and work of Dr. Wood of Washington. It appears in this issue. It will interest you.

The Continent believes there is inspiration in accounts of purposeful men and women in action. Mr. Ellis recently contributed a sketch of Samuel B. Capen, the distinguished Congregational layman. In the near future he will tell about Charles A. Rowland, a Georgian, who is chairman of the executive committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

More of these delightfully written articles will follow from time to time. They deal with men and women you have heard of, and with others whose names will be new to you but who are "doing things" in their departments of life.

Ask your friends if they read the Presbyterian National Weekly.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 3 JANUARY 16, 1913 WHOLE No. 2225

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

A Prejudice in Favor of Jesus

THERE IS SUCH A THING AS BEING TOO IMPARTIAL. It's fine, surely, to have a balanced mind, but a mind so fixed in balance that it feels no preference for what is noble, uplifting and forcible for good in the world overdoes the virtue of impartiality far enough to make it a vice.

Questions of fact against no fact cannot, indeed, be put aside by simply preferring ideas that sound well, seem pleasant, or appear to work well. But it is better to take hold of an idea that does some good than to waste one's life playing checkers with all the doubts that one has ever heard of or been able to imagine.

The Christian does not need to take a bit of shame for confessing himself a man with a prejudice—a prejudice in favor of religion.

* * *

As Christians, we should, in particular, be proud to declare ourselves prejudiced in favor of Jesus Christ.

There are many questions that can be raised about the Master—his nature, his birth, his miracles, his atonement, his resurrection and his living, present kingdom—and we do not mean to shut our eyes to those questions. We mean instead to discuss them openly and frankly with anybody candidly concerned.

More than that, we recognize that whatever truth is proved about any of these matters, we shall be bound to accept it, no matter how badly our preconceptions may be wrecked.

Nevertheless, we are free to admit that in discussion of these questions we are not indifferent to the results; we do decidedly care to have them come out a certain way—the way which will most honor and exalt Jesus.

That is prejudging the case, of course; it is no impartial judge's attitude. In the frankest possible way, we are interested partisans, anxious to see our Leader's claims vindicated. To drive us back from what he has taught us to believe him to be will require an overwhelming weight of adverse reasons.

* * *

But can a rational man justify himself in that admitted bias of his mind and feelings? His mind is given him to weigh and judge even religion with; can he then honestly load his judgment down on one side with a conscious preference?

Yes, he can—and not apologize for it to himself or anybody else. He has the best of ground to boast a preference for Jesus. In the first place—

Jesus Christ and the religion taught by him make for the betterment of the world and the ennoblement of men with a force that no power on earth equals.

Some, to be sure, argue that science rather than the church has done most to enlighten the world, but these sustain the comparison only by dwelling on shortcomings in the church which have obscured its Lord. Where the church has been in any wise true to what Jesus was, its preeminence in the uplift of humanity is indisputable.

The finest flowering and richest fruitage of human personality always come where men and women most faithfully follow Jesus.

There is, therefore, in the faith which works results that the world needs so much, a treasure that the world cannot afford to lose. There is a miracle too precious to forfeit in the Person who evokes that powerful faith. A force for righteousness so vast as this must needs be conserved.

In fact, the real issue at stake is not whether a man is justified in entertaining a prejudice for Christianity, but how anyone can excuse himself for presuming to be impartial over a matter in which so much of the good of mankind is wrapped up.

* * *

Jesus Christ is precisely the answer that the soul of man craves for its deepest and most instinctive personal wants.

If we should be selfish enough to be judicially indifferent to Jesus as the need of the world at large, how can we be indifferent to Jesus as the need of our own lives personally?

How "incurably religious" we are, all of us realize at times at least. And of viands to satisfy the religious hunger in us, many are recommended, but all save one ask the spirit in man to be content with God afar off as an exalted Sovereign, held in awe and dreaded.

The one exception is the religion that Jesus brought; that introduces God as friend. And a friendly God is what our souls cry for.

Because, therefore, we could not endure to live on in the world without a friendly God, once that we have come to know of him, our hearts are wholly enlisted to hold on to Jesus Christ—through whom the friendship of God has been explained to us.

Even deeper, Jesus alone meets our necessity in the problem of sin. Other religious leaders would put us to the requirement of paying off our sins by accumulating merits of our own—an impossible task except in the eyes of a fool's conceit.

But Jesus Christ has a way for our sins to be forgiven—lifted off of us—yet without leaving us in the grip of temptation to commit them again. That fits our case precisely.

Wherefore we are mightily in favor of Jesus.

Philosophical difficulties about the logic of his teachings; mystery in the theology of forgiveness! No doubt. But one cannot wait for a schedule of chemical constituents before he eats the food laid on the table before him. Hunger and taste bid him partake. So with the appetites of the soul.

What Jesus says satisfies the hunger of the soul. Christians need no better reason for partaking of his words.

* * *

Jesus Christ imparts strength—living strength for life—to the man who goes with him his way.

That is something which in the nature of things only the Christian knows about. One must be a Christian—a thoroughgoing, committed Christian—before he can prove it.

But there is abundance of testimony to it. When one goes the way of Christ, it is mysteriously but most actually easier than on any other way to keep on going past difficulties, over obstacles, against clouds and darkness.

Discouragements count in other lines, but somehow the man who keeps Jesus in sight isn't stopped by them.

Natural, is it not, that one who has experienced this help should be biased against losing it?

* * *

As a practical proposition, it is vastly fairer, for one's own religious interest, to postpone arguing about Jesus until after you have tried him.

The prejudice in his favor that comes through testing him is really the only just preparation for judging his religion.

The World

President-Elect Makes an Important Address

One of the interesting avocations of the people of the United States of late is noting the speeches which Woodrow Wilson is making. The President-elect admittedly moves on a high intellectual, political and moral plane, and the people seem more and more convinced that his practical achievements will measure up to their large expectations. Saturday night he addressed the Chicago Commercial Club, made up of representative men of wealth, and to them he gave both an appeal and a warning. He told them that monopoly must end, economic freedom must be reestablished and that the public good must be put above private aggrandizement.

Three things, said Governor Wilson, must be done, in addition to destroying monopoly: The common resources of the country must be husbanded and administered for the common benefit. Raw materials of the country must be at the disposal of everyone upon the same terms. Credit must be at the disposal of all upon equal terms—the bankers must see that it is done—which would operate to dissolve class prejudice.

Governor Wilson left Chicago for the East shortly after Sunday noon.

Vote on the Kenyon Bill Only Few Weeks Away

Perhaps the most important vote to be taken in the present Congress before adjournment March 4 will be the test in the senate on the Kenyon measure to stop the shipment of liquor into dry states. After some maneuvering the date of the vote was last Saturday definitely set for February 10. Many states have laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, but these laws can be and are nullified under the cloak of the constitutional interstate commerce authority of Congress.

The question of the constitutionality of the pending act may well be left for the supreme court, especially as there are well considered opinions in favor of its entire validity. A writer in The Philadelphia Ledger puts it this way:

"When a man takes himself from one state to another he at once becomes amenable to the laws of the state to which he goes, and from them he can open no interstate commerce door of escape. Is it common sense, common law or common justice to hold that a commodity has more rights than the individual who owns the commodity? If the man in transit becomes amenable to the laws of the state which he enters, why should the commodity which the man could not sell have the right of way against the laws of the commonwealth simply because it is done up in an inanimate 'original package'? If the United States Congress may stop an interstate commerce in white sulphur matches and other injurious articles and interstate commerce for immoral purposes, why may it not call a halt in the interstate commerce in alcoholic liquors for the same purpose?"

The Chicago Record-Herald correspondent says there has been no question of public sentiment or of the presence of votes to pass the bill in the senate provided a roll call could be obtained. However, if you are not quite certain as how the senators from your state will vote, or whether they will help to bring the measure to a vote, you can do no better than to write to them, or to any senators with whom you may be in touch, and to urge your friends to do the same thing.

Supreme Court Calls "Corners" Unlawful

"Corners" in staple commodities were forbidden by the United States supreme court in a decision handed down last week remanding for trial the indictments against James A. Patten of Chicago and others. In 1910 there was a famous cotton pool engineered by Mr. Patten and his associates, which by gaining control of the available supply of cotton made a reputed profit of $10,000,000 for the select few. The court now declares that this process of "cornering" is a violation of the Sherman antitrust law. The court passed only upon the general question of law and not upon Mr. Patten's personal case.

Attacking the Verdict in the Dynamite Case

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and other less well known labor leaders have been commenting acrimoniously on the verdict of the federal court at Indianapolis in the dynamiters' case. Speaking before a subcommittee of the senate in favor of the Clayton anti-injunction and contempt bills, he said he saw a causal connection between "government by injunction and dynamiting," and also declared that the federation would not repudiate the unions of the structural iron workers. With a word of censure for dynamite conspiracy, he passed on to condemn "the conspiracy of organized capital."

The Chicago Federation of Labor at its last meeting passed a resolution expressing sympathy for the convicted men and asserting that they had been sent to prison by a partial judge and a prejudiced jury. Opposition to the resolution was voiced by the president of the Illinois state federation, E. R. Wright, who protested that "organized labor does not approve the tactics of these men. The rank and file will still refuse to believe in violence and the use of dynamite." But the utterances of John J. Fitzpatrick, who for several years has been president of the Chicago central labor organization, were construed as an indorsement of violence as a means of progress for the wage earner.

Governor Would Revoke Coatesville's Charter

If Governor Tener of Pennsylvania has his way the municipal charter of Coatesville will be revoked by the state legislature. In his annual message the governor says that the officials and citizens of the borough have not done their duty. Continuing he says:

"People of this borough, by fomenting murder and consorting with murderers, have not only violated the laws and obstructed the administration of justice, but in my judgment have forfeited the high privilege of further acting as a governmental agency of the state. State agencies like the borough of Coatesville, which set the laws at defiance and outrage the peace and dignity of the commonwealth, should be obliterated from among her orderly municipalities."

Coatesville is the city in eastern Pennsylvania where in August of 1911 a wounded negro prisoner chained to a hospital cot was taken by a mob and burned to death. Leaders of the lynchers were indicted, but no jury was found to convict them when tried.

Talk of Resuming the Balkan War

Peace negotiations dragged last week, as neither the Turks nor the Balkan allies cared to recede from positions previously taken, and the reviving "concert of Europe" was not eager to put pressure on either side. If Adrianople and the Ægean islands were out of the way a settlement could now easily be arranged, but Turkey does not want to let go of the islands nor of the ancient capital. Talk of resuming the war was prevalent.

Rumania at one time threatened to make trouble, claiming that it was entitled to compensation from Bulgaria for remaining neutral during the war. Compensation, in the form of new territory, not being forthcoming, Rumania began mobilizing her army to invade Bulgaria, but is said to have paused on receipt of strong hints from Great Britain and Russia. Russia in the meanwhile is reported to have her army and navy in a state of preparedness.

From Athens came an account of the destruction by Turks of the town of Keramisza in Epirus, near the Greek frontier, and the massacre of thirty women and children who had fled into a cavern.

Death Penalty for Chinese Woman Opium User

Evidence that the Chinese government is desperately in earnest in its crusade against the use of opium was furnished by an Associated Press dispatch from Shanghai last week reporting the public execution of a woman who persisted in using the drug in spite of the official prohibition. By law effective January 1 habitual opium smoking was made punishable by a fine up to $2,000 and in extreme cases by death. Both the empire and the republic tried with varying success to stop opium smoking, but economic and international questions are involved in the traffic, which is in a measure protected by treaty.

While the government can get at native users and growers it cannot stop the importation of opium from British India. The trade has enriched India to the extent of millions of pounds during the last century, and British merchants of Hongkong and Shanghai, counting upon the continued failure of Chinese restrictive methods, have gone on importing opium with the expectation that somehow they would be able to market it. And bankers have loaned money to the opium speculators, who are now threatened with ruin. Sixty million dollars' worth of Indian opium is said to be lying in the warehouses without finding buyers.

British subjects have not played a creditable role in the past in pandering to China's national vice. Recently the British legation in Peking demanded an indemnity for a large quantity of Indian opium destroyed as an incident in the war on the deadly habit. The opium was not owned by British merchants, though British trade had suffered. The counter claim is made that the Chinese authorities are more active in seizing opium from India than they are in checking its production by Chinese growers, but at best this is a lame defense, and it is to be hoped that English influence will not be used longer to bolster up a traffic that should be outlawed.

* *

Liberals' Program Moves to Accomplishment

Reforms proposed by the Liberals are being slowly pushed into effect in England by the coalition of parties under Premier Asquith, Chancellor Lloyd George and the Irish champions, against the clamorous but futile opposition of the Unionists and Tories. The Ulster agitation has apparently spent much of its force; at all events the Irish home rule bill has made steady progress through the house of commons, having passed the committee stage before the end of the year, and since then it has weathered several parliamentary storms. The ultimate passage of this highly contentious measure now seems assured.

British physicians at first refused to accept the schedule of pay for services offered by the industrial insurance act. When the pay was slightly increased the dignified British Medical Association, by referendum vote of its members, declined to cooperate. Only $1.44 yearly for each insured patient is to be paid. It looked as though the act might fail to produce the expected benefit because of the "doctors' strike." But Lloyd George's crucial measure was not destined thus to perish, in spite of the adverse attitude of eminent city physicians of large practice and assured income. English newspapers pointed out that there are in both metropolitan and provincial districts a large proportion of worthy practitioners who will be glad to receive an officially assured living, even though it be small. The threat of the chancellor to institute a state medical service may have helped to bring in the flood of belated responses which recently came from medical men in London and all parts of the country, and the new plan is going into operation.

* *

"Food Tax" Declaration Hurts Unionists

The Unionists have been seriously discomfited in Great Britain by the failure of their tariff propaganda. In England tariff reform means the imposition of import duties—exactly the opposite of the American signification. Ten years ago Joseph Chamberlain, since retired from public life, proposed his plan of "imperial preference," based on imposts which could be waived in favor of the colonies; this necessarily included duties upon wheat and other foodstuffs, and the Liberals were quick to stigmatize it as a "tax on food." The Unionists lost two general elections on this issue, but they still clung to it. Andrew Bonar Law, who succeeded Arthur Balfour as party leader, in a recent widely quoted speech at Ashton-under-Lyme argued at length that the "food tax" should be imposed, though only on the initiative of the colonies. That is to say, if the colonies themselves, after an imperial conference, were to ask for a tariff on wheat from countries outside the empire the united kingdom ought then to adopt such a system.

But Canada and Australia and New Zealand have no desire to dictate the fiscal policy of the home land, even if Englishmen were willing to concede it. The overseas dominions do not need this particular kind of stimulus to patriotism, and, furthermore, they are shipping ever increasing cargoes of grain to Britain, owing to the decrease of grain exports from the United States, caused by increased American home consumption. What the British people have been demanding is not the possibility of dearer food but cheaper food and a decided betterment of living conditions. And this better day has been promised by the present ministry, along with Irish home rule, Welsh Church disestablishment and a tax on land values. "Lloyd Georgeism" is an offense to many conservative Englishmen, but food taxes are generally unpopular, even among the Unionists, and Mr. Law's position has been assailed from all sides.

* *

Presidential Election at Hand in France

France will on January 17 elect a new president to serve for a term of seven years, but instead of a campaign lasting six months or more and stirring the nation from end to end, the contest is confined to a few weeks and the people as a whole are taking only slight interest in the event. The reason is that the president is not chosen by the people but by the national assembly, and his office is dignified and "ornamental" rather than executive, being analogous to the position of a constitutional sovereign. The prime minister is the real executive, and, with the rest of the cabinet, is liable to be forced out of office if the chamber of deputies becomes hostile.

Religious World

Canadian Committee Heavily for Union

The Canadian General Assembly's committee on church union had a meeting not long since in Toronto, and for three days discussion ranged back and forth between the advocates of two opposing resolutions. Of these one recommended that the committee should break off all negotiations for organic consolidation with the Congregational and Methodist denominations, and proposed instead a scheme by which these denominations should cooperate in federation. The other resolution, proposed by Dr. Herridge of Ottawa and Principal MacKay of Vancouver, provided that the committee would proceed with negotiations aiming to consummate union as soon as practicable. Advocates of federation declared that at least one-third of the church was set against any merger and that an attempt to proceed in that direction would simply bring into Presbyterian ranks vitally serious dissension. Through nine successive sessions, as the committee sat morning, afternoon and evening, the conflict between these antagonistic ideas went on, and at the end of the ninth session the Herridge-MacKay resolution was supported by thirty-eight votes, while the opposition could muster but six.

It seems probable that this is practically the end of Presbyterian antiunionism in Canada. That this long debate was conducted in the very best temper was manifest by the fact that the six minority members issued a public statement, in which they thanked the majority for the courteous and kindly treatment they had received.

* *

Continuous Expansion of Christian Associations

The annual review of Young Men's Christian Association activities in Association Men, the monthly organ of the brotherhood, shows that local associations in North America now number 2,192, with a membership of 556,100. These associations lay out for current expense $10,000,000 a year. They own 725 buildings, valued at $81,000,000, which is an increase of $7,000,000 since 1911, and is nearly three times the total of ten years ago. The gross attendance at religious meetings in associations in the past year is 5,820,000. While 125,000 men and boys have been enrolled in Bible classes, the educational classes have numbered 69,000 enrollments, and the gymnasium 300,000. In 700 student associations there are 62,000 members; in 251 railroad associations, 92,000 members.

Three cities, Cleveland, Montreal and Pittsburg, each erected three association buildings within the year past. Of lesser cities Erie, Des Moines, Lowell, Birmingham, San Diego each have completed during the year buildings valued in excess of $200,000. Of buildings in course of erection the new structure at Boston, Massachusetts, is the greatest, costing over $1,300,000. The central building at Toronto and the building at Vancouver will cost half a million each, and the buildings at Winnipeg, Atlanta and Louisville will come to almost as much.

One of the most remarkable developments of the year past is in connection with the associations for colored people, which have been wonderfully stimulated by the offer of Julius Rosenwald of Chicago to give $25,000 to any city raising $75,000 toward a hundred thousand dollar building for negro young men. Six cities have met the conditions—Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Los Angeles and Indianapolis. The Washington building is completed and in use, and the Indianapolis building is nearly ready. Baltimore, Cincinnati, Kansas City and St. Louis will soon be in position to avail themselves also of Mr. Rosenwald's generosity.

* *

Religious Education Convention in March

The Religious Education Association in 1913 will arrive at the tenth anniversary of its existence and work. Its decennial convention is appointed for Cleveland March 10-13. As is well known, the association chooses each year some particular relation of religious education as the major theme of its conferences, and this year that general topic will be the connection between religious education and civic progress, which is deemed particularly appropriate to a meeting in Cleveland on account of the progressive civic spirit of that city. Besides this larger subject, there will be much attention paid to moral and religious instruction in all grades of public and private schools. The invitation to Cleveland was forwarded to the association by the federated churches there and is well supported by the schools and colleges of the city, as well as by its business interests. The headquarters of the association in Chicago will supply programs upon request.

Editorial

Have You Found a Better Way?

THERE ARE A LOT of poor ways of doing things. Some people seem to have a knack of standing for the most objectionable methods of getting results. Then it is easy to get one's eyes glued to the horrible methods and overlook entirely the fact that the results are important, even if the method does have to be abandoned. Nowhere does this appear more markedly than in church work. The results that the churches want are very much the same, whatever the methods adopted; but some methods of gaining those results are exceedingly offensive to some people.

In a presbytery meeting a while ago a man said that he would not preach to a sleepy congregation, and told of a friend whose people were not paying attention, who backed off in his pulpit and kicked the light frame reading desk into the front pews, which waked up his congregation and attracted so much attention that the next Sabbath the church was quite filled. There were a good many brethren present who protested vigorously against that method. Doubtless it would be very unwise for it to be adopted in general, and it may be in quiet protest against it that most pulpits are nailed down. For all that, it is very important that a man shall not preach to a sleepy congregation. If he does not believe in kicking the pulpit into the front pews, it is just as incumbent upon him to find some other way of keeping people awake and arousing sufficient attention in the community so that men may come to the sanctuary to worship and to be taught. It will not do to settle down in a complacent way with a sleepy congregation because one does not believe in one particular method of keeping people awake.

The same thing applies in the matter of winning men to Christ. That is the business of all the churches. It is a pitiable shame that so many churches do nothing appreciable in this chief business of a church's life. There are scores of methods of doing it. Perhaps a certain pastor and his people do not like the so-called evangelistic methods, do not like special meetings, would not have Billy Sunday in their town for anything, and all that. Very well then, those methods are out of the question. The demand for the results continues exactly the same, however. If a man does not believe in that way of doing it, he must set about to find some other way of doing it.

There is a certain sense indeed in which he is doubly obligated to do so, because now he has faced certain methods and discarded them. He must necessarily have, therefore, an idea of methods which he ought to put into practice. It is, on the whole, rather better to do things by doubtful methods than not to do them in the most correct way. We are now in the most profitable period of soul winning. If any pastor does not believe in this method or that, it is immensely important that he have his own method and put it into practice, the results being as important for him as for those who are adopting the other methods.

That is true also of Sunday school work. Some men are convinced that the graded lessons and the general graded system of the school is what is needed, that teachers ought to be put through courses of teacher training, that there ought to be a technically trained man at the head of Sunday school work in a particular church, or in a community. Other men much dislike that. They see grave faults and dangers in it.

Very well; but to all men alike there comes the demand for results. If that is not the way, it is essential to find the better way. Nobody goes free of responsibility of deciding that this method is not the right one. Have you found the better way?

South as Well as North Involved in Defect

The Continent last week referred to the great number of churches reported in the Minutes of the Assembly U. S. A. as receiving no additions by confession of faith last year. The actual number of congregations showing thus deficient is more than a third of the whole list—over 3,500. But to be conservative about the matter, The Continent contented itself with estimating a thousand churches where the failure must undoubtedly be due to sheer spiritual decline and not to lack of the means of grace. And it would appear that this situation is no better in the South, for the committee on evangelism representing the Presbyterian Church in the United States has issued a sobering circular which reveals that 1,617 churches of that communion have no converts to report for a whole year of time. This is almost half of all the churches in the denomination, but doubtless the proportion of shortcoming is about the same as at the North, if account is taken only of churches fully served with preaching and pastoral service. The South has more pastorless congregations and more churches where preaching appointments are nominal and infrequent.

But no effort to minimize the seriousness of the situation by recognizing the number of congregations that have only a name to live and are really dead, can overshadow the very grave weakness involved in this condition of affairs pertaining to congregations fully equipped. According to the very best face that can be put upon it, there are 1,500 to 2,000 Presbyterian church houses in this country where the gospel is regularly proclaimed Sabbath after Sabbath and all the forms of church activity are observed to the full without persuading for a whole year even one child to follow the Master Jesus Christ. There might be conceived a worse Christian inefficiency than this, but this is bad enough to be fairly called appalling, and it is no wonder that the Board of Home Missions in New York has issued a general appeal to Presbyterians to pray seriously about this thing.

Kaiser's Opinion on the Traub Case

When Pastor Jathro was removed from his parish in Cologne by the ecclesiastical authorities of the German Evangelical Church on account of preaching pantheism in his pulpit, a friend of his, Pastor Traub of Dortmund, publicly denounced the church court as having been guilty of gross and deliberate injustice. For this the consistory of Westphalia, to which Traub belonged, called him to account and, to punish him, transferred him to another parish less conspicuous and less desirable. Thereupon Traub appealed to the synod, and on his plea that he could not get justice done in Westphalia, it was ordered that his appeal should be heard in the consistory of Breslau. But the latter body confirmed the judgment of his own consistory, and Traub, after raging violently against his judges, appealed to the supreme court of the denomination—which, as is well known, is the established church of Prussia.

This court, however, refused to try him on any other charge than his scandalous contempt of the Breslau consistory, and for this offense alone imposed upon him the severest judgment in the power of the court—complete deprivation of all ministerial standing—leaving him stripped even of the pension which the law guarantees to retired pastors of the state church. This was far more severe than the punishment that aroused Traub's indignation when inflicted on his friend Jathro, for Jathro, though forbidden to preach longer, was allowed to retire on the regular pension.

It is obvious from these circumstances that the Prussian mind regards insubordination in a church official as a considerably worse offense than aberration of doctrine. And it appears that the kaiser, Wilhelm II., is very much of the same mind. Professor Meyer of Berlin publicly reports a conversation concerning the Traub controversy which he has had with the emperor, who, as king of Prussia, is the official head of the Evangelical body. The kaiser emphasized that the mistake of Pastor Traub was in refusing to subject himself to the formularies which any church must have if it is to be in any sense an orderly institution. He expressly said that he did not wish to bind the clergy down to literal interpretations of the ecclesiastical creed. Indeed, he remarked that he was himself "by no means orthodox." Yet he was particular to emphasize the fact that he accepted the Bible as a supreme authority and rule of faith, and said that the final test for every question is to him, "What would Christ do or think on this particular matter?" Outside the Bible he felt there is very little of real importance to church life, and he would advise pastors not to concern themselves with dogma in their sermons.

—The daily press has been much inclined to ridicule Mr. Morgan, the New York banker, for saying that character counts more than wealth in a man's getting and maintaining credit in Wall street. The skepticism of the times assumes that Wall street is so thoroughly devoted to materialism that any pretense of thinking about anything else than money in that neighborhood can only be received as an obvious hypocrisy. But that cynicism is altogether too superficial. The simple truth of human experience is that even if a man is indeed thinking about nothing but money, the question of character is going to thrust itself in on him nevertheless. The two things cannot be separated. Some men may make money without character in themselves, but they ask no one to help them make money whose character they are dubious of. Certainly they intrust none of their money to men, however shrewd, if those men are known to lack the vital character-element of honesty. This is what Mr. Morgan was saying, and it is all so reasonable and true that those who call him absurd only become absurd themselves.

—The comment of Dr. Niccolls on the renewed suggestion of electing a layman for moderator of the General Assembly is proof that at least one broad-minded Presbyterian minister, famous for wise counsel, is not yet prepared to consent willingly that a lay president should be the head of General Assembly in his denomination. And undoubtedly Dr. Niccolls is far from standing alone among his ministerial brethren in that particular. While that remains true, The Continent is inclined to believe that no Presbyterian layman strong enough to be thought eligible for the moderator's chair will consent to be nominated for that office. The Continent knows no reason whatever why a lay moderator should not be as agreeable to propriety and order as a clerical moderator in any court of a democratic church. We are not even as sure as Dr. Niccolls is that the law of the church discountenances it. But a layman altogether Christian would hardly enjoy an honor in the church which representative ministers therein for any reason whatever begrudged him. As long as any considerable section of the denomination's clerical leaders feel that the moderatorship ought to continue a ministerial dignity exclusively, it is unlikely that there will be any lay assertion of the right to share that dignity. If, on the other hand, however, there should develop a general ministerial desire to honor a layman in this way, there is no doubt the innovation would soon come to seem as much the natural order of things as it does now in the Southern Assembly, where an elder moderator is no curiosity at all.

—In the strange crusade set afoot lately to awaken new prejudices against the Board of Home Missions, Dr. J. L. Weaver of Colorado has enlisted very vehemently. And, of course, it is his privilege, as it is the privilege of every other Presbyterian, to throw all the bricks he pleases to assail any board he pleases, since Presbyterians have no institution too sacred to criticise. But Dr. Weaver, like all the rest of us, ought to look alive not to use anything but facts to load the bricks he throws, and in writing to The Presbyterian that 61 per cent of what living givers donate to the Board of Home Missions goes to administration he seriously neglects that precaution. The fact is that the Board of Home Missions spends for administration nothing donated by living givers. Its income from property and investments covers all its administration expenses, and current donations go wholly into the work. Moreover, Dr. Weaver counts much more under the head of administration than he possibly could if he were not so anxious to make a case. There certainly is no defensible point. He certainly could not sustain before an impartial jury his allotment of all the salaries of pastor-evangelists to the administrative side. Certainly the pastor-evangelists are on the field and mighty close to the people. Moreover, by far the greater share of the expense of the immigration department goes to pay pastors and parish workers. Yet Dr. Weaver assigns that whole sum to administration. Our Colorado friend will have to make his analysis much more detailed before he makes it convincing.

—It is no matter for boasting, but certainly real matter for gratitude, that "the decline in church attendance" is by no means so big a problem in this country as in England. A recent census of churches in Liverpool showed a total of 2,604 persons in Presbyterian houses of worship at Sunday morning service. In 1891 the total was 5,300. Contrary to the experience in American cities, Liverpool people go to church better at night than in the morning. The Presbyterian congregations totaled 4,820 on the evening of census day, and this record indicated much less decline than in the morning congregation; in 1891 evening attendance was 6,200. However, it is not simply indifference that is the matter in Liverpool. Very much of the trouble is the trend to the suburbs, where all churches are growing. If these suburbs had been counted in, the Liverpool census would not look bad.

—It is trusted that pastors reading The Continent will notice in this issue the request of the Federal Council of Churches for assistance in distributing the information committee's circular, which has just been issued. As The Continent said at the time of the quadrennial convention, it is highly important for the success of the Federal Council that the mass of Christian people in the country should know its work better, and pastors can now lend a hand in that particular by putting this new circular, which is all information, into the hands of their people.

—It is queer how almost every year in General Assembly somebody bobs up and moves to eliminate "Young People's Day" from the church calendar on the ground that there are too many "days" already and some of them ought to be knocked out. Perhaps that is true, but if the church calendar is going to be lightened, there are a dozen other things, and quite likely two dozen, that ought to be eliminated before anybody puts an eraser to Young People's Day. In point of fact that particular observance has now the right of a long preemption. It has been observed not in the Presbyterian Church alone but in nearly all the evangelical denominations for more than a quarter of a century. The first Sunday in February was originally designated for celebration by Christian Endeavor because it coincided with the organization of the Endeavor movement by Dr. Clark in Portland, Maine, in February, 1881. It chances that this year the Sabbath comes back exactly to that anniversary, and Presbyterians are asked to make Sunday, February 2, a special time for thinking and talking of young people's work. There may be some congregations where the older Christians are as deeply interested in the younger Christians as the younger Christians deserve, but such congregations are no big proportion of the whole. All the rest certainly need in common justice and fairness to be prodded up and stirred up and pried up to a keener appreciation of what the church of today owes to the church of tomorrow growing up in its midst. That is what Young People's Day is for, and it is a good deal better to observe it than to neglect it. As announcements in other columns of The Continent show, William Ralph Hall of the young people's department in the Witherspoon building, Philadelphia, is ready to advise all concerned on good means for making the day vitally profitable.

—Uncle Henry Wallace in Wallaces' Farmer manages to sandwich a lot of extra good preaching in with all his agricultural advice about cabbages and pigs. In fact, Dr. Wallace considers that farms are just as valuable for raising boys and girls as for raising the aforesaid pigs, cabbages and other vegetables; and he knows that the boy-and-girl crop doesn't do well unless the soil is fertilized with a substantial admixture of preaching. So he draws on the training of his youth and furnishes that brand of farm-enrichment. One of his sermons not so long ago was for the boys on "leadership," and some of the "heads" of it are worth fastening in the heads of young boys and old. One of the best points is that leadership is like happiness—if you seek for it you will miss it, but if you prepare for it, it will come. Preparation must begin early—cultivating self-control, keeping one's temper, taking hard knocks, studying human nature, learning to hold one's tongue and also how to use it. Don't push yourself, but be something that other folks will want to push to the front. Yet none of these bits of good advice are rated by "Uncle Henry" as of top importance Here is his idea of the "first thing"—and isn't it an apt illustration?—"As the prophet Elisha told Naaman, the first thing to do is to wash and be clean—clean in body, clean in conduct and clean in all dealings with men."

—Dr. Warren H. Wilson, superintendent of the country life department of the Home Board, finished up this week the rural survey which he has been making the past few months in Ohio for the state board of agriculture. The report date was marked to coincide with the annual meeting of that board. For the rest of January Dr. Wilson will be touring Ohio on a circuit of "country life institutes," in which his Home Board colleague, Rev. M. B. McNutt, will also participate, along with Hon. A. P. Sandles, the state secretary of agriculture, and representatives of the American Sunday School Union and county Young Men's Christian Association. This report of Dr. Wilson's will undoubtedly be of big significance both to church and to state in Buckeyedom, and his deductions when published will be worth and are certain to receive wide attention.

Jots and Tittles

—The humanities of the world almost without exception have their origin and support in the church of God. There is many a little rivulet bubbling along in boastful independence of creed and faith, which would soon become dry as the wells of Baca but for the constant interest of Christian men.

—No one really owns a book that he hasn't read. He may have paid for the leaves and cover, but the contents are purchased by a coin of another kind. Judged by this standard there are a great many copies of Scripture without owners.

—If the truthfulness of the Bible lacked evidence, it could easily be supplied from the lives of those who claim to disbelieve it.

—A church that prefers the choir to the pulpit is like an army that depends upon the drum corps for its victories.

—The man who is satisfied with his faith is a twin brother to him who is equally well satisfied to have none.

—The spectacular in worship is an effort to substitute a fashion plate for the ten commandments.

—Sweeping another's house will not find your lost piece of silver.

—Praise is prayer set to music.

—Salvation is yes to God.

BY JAMES G. K. McCLURE

ONE OF THE MOST useful and blessed names in the Bible is Bezalel. So the American revision writes it, though the earlier version makes it Bezaleel. Who was Bezalel? And what did Bezalel do that he should be of interest to us?

A "Call" to Cut Stone

Bezalel was the man God "called" to help make the tabernacle. It was a critical time in the history of the human race and in God's revelation of himself to mankind. He had lately brought Israel out of Egypt, and he was now fashioning the nation so that it should determine the religious views of the whole world. He called Moses to be leader, and thus Moses knew that God was back of him in his responsibilities. He called Aaron to be priest, and called, too, the family of Aaron into association with their father in the duties of the priesthood, and thus they all felt their work to be a distinct vocation of God. Then when the call of God had such high meaning in cases like those of Moses and Aaron, God called Bezalel to do the work of building the tabernacle.

What was that work? "To devise skillful works, to work in gold and in silver and in brass, and in cutting of stones for setting, and in carving of wood, to work in all manner of workmanship." The work was largely manual work. And more than this; God took a man named Oholiab and set him, too, apart, in association with Bezalel, and told them both that when they were making the tent and the mercy seat and the tables and the candlesticks and the vessels and the garments, and were preparing the oil and the incense, they were acting under the direct command of God.

So it is that Bezalel stands upon the very plane of Moses and Aaron. They were called to leadership and priesthood; he was called, with equal responsibility and equal recognition, to manual labor. God needed them, all three alike, for the furtherance of his plans; he depended upon Bezalel as much as upon Moses and Aaron.

A Call to the Ministry Defined

I often wonder why Bezalel does not have more said about him, why business men, mechanics, artists and clerks do not claim him as their special forerunner and friend. Some day they will, and that day will be the most blessed day our earth has ever seen. Up to this present time it has been quite the custom to dwell upon the call to the ministry, and almost appropriate the term and everything it implies to the ministry. Surely there ought to be a call to the ministry. No one should enter it until summoned there by God himself. But how does God summon? He summons when a man, putting himself before God and asking what he can do as a life work that will prove most sanctifying to himself and most serviceable to mankind, receives a conviction in his soul that he can best accomplish these results in the ministry. There may be extraordinary (and let us remember that they are extraordinary, not ordinary) experiences through which special men realize God's call to them to be ministers. But ordinarily this definition will hold, and should hold: "A call to the ministry is a conviction borne in upon a man that he can accomplish more for the good of God's world in the ministry, than elsewhere; this conviction being based on his belief that he has qualities which by diligent and loving application, under God's blessing, will enable him to do the work of the ministry."

Would to God that every young man, especially the young man who would have to face a large self-renunciation and surrender a multitude of other ambitions in case he yielded to this call, would give God a chance to lodge such a conviction in his soul, would really open his heart to God's communication to him, and would nourish any suggestion so sent to him by God, with the tenderest and most jealous protection!

It is indeed a heartening privilege to go out to life feeling that God has sent a man to his work. How the prophets dwelt upon the fact that God had raised them up for their tasks! And how the apostles and other disciples of our Lord rejoiced in believing that God had set them apart for their responsibilities. But why should this blessed experience be confined to any one set of workers and not be the strength and glory of all Christian workers? Did not Paul write to the people of Corinth that every one of them who was doing an honest and honorable life work should abide in the calling in which God's grace found him? And was it not the upright character and patient industry and winsome goodness of the domestic servants of Paul's very day that prepared the hearts of heathen masters and mistresses to believe in the gospel?

Many a life has attained its grandeur only when it believed that God himself had assigned its lot and its labor. The Pilgrims at Plymouth talked true wisdom when they spoke of every man's work, taken up in the thought of God and done to the glory of God, as the man's "vocation." Bradford's vocation was that of the administrator, John Alden's vocation was that of the scholar. When the Pilgrim wives and mothers discharged their duties, at home perhaps, out of the home perhaps, with the same recognition of God that characterized Elizabeth as she nourished John the Baptist and Mary as she trained Jesus, they felt that they were following the call of God.

God's Call to Lawyer and Soldier

The elder Frelinghuysen of New Jersey in his early manhood desired to choose the ministry instead of the law, but it became plain to his own judgment that God wished him in the law. Was it not the conviction that God had called him to the law that made him what Wilberforce was to the British parliament—the conscience of the United States senate? General Havelock firmly believed that God had called him to lead troops in securing the victories for English civilization in India, and so it was that his superior officer in times of great emergency used to say, "Turn out Havelock's regiment for this service; they are never drunk and they never run."

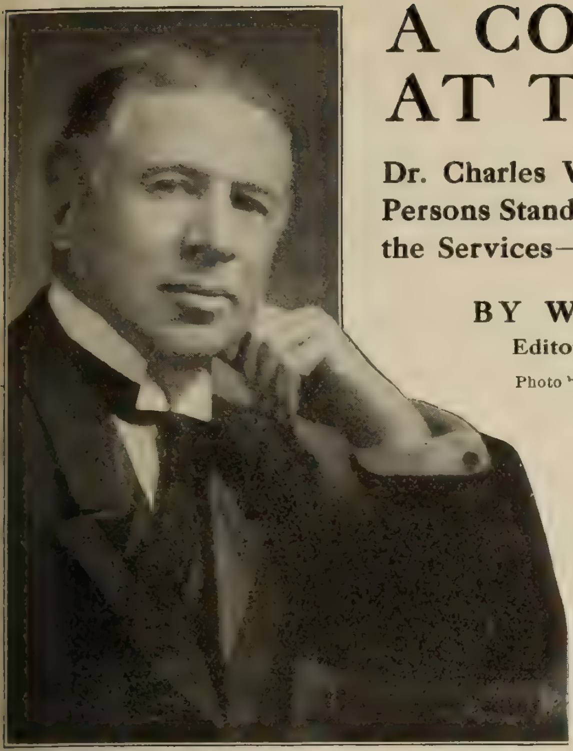
"Magnify your calling," men say to one another, when they wish to arouse them to earnest, persistent, heroic effort. Yes, let the minister magnify his calling, and when he has an opportunity to act the minister's part, act it as a divine assignment, with the best devotion of all his powers. "I am here under God and for God," he may say to himself; "therefore I must play the man, and play the man well." But let every other person as well magnify his special calling. "You have a very small garden," was once said to a householder whose little patch seemed diminutive beside the broad acres of others. "Yes," replied the householder, "but it reaches to the skies."

And so does every calling reach to the skies. Who knows the relative importance of spheres of labor as God understands them—in all their limits, and in all their possibilities, too! Shamgar seems to have his life-calling for the time in the use of the ox-goad. His work appears narrow, a work of drudgery, he is a mere companion of the soil and of cattle. But who can tell whether some day that ox goad will not be the instrument wherewith God shall glorify himself in delivering Israel from heathen wrath and vice? Magnify your calling! Yes, every man may, and should, who feels that he is teaching, keeping ledgers, tilling land, plying a trade, driving a horse, because his work is God-assigned. He may lay his hand on his paint brush, or his loom, or his spade, or his brake, or his pen, and say, "Herewith is my calling. Nothing mean, selfish, dishonest, unworthy, shall mar it. It must be holy unto the Lord."

Let Your Life Work Be God-Propelled

This is the true way of sanctifying all life. Until every individual is doing the work that he believes is his divine calling, business, society, art, literature, home, will lack the touch and the beauty of heaven. But once let every person choose his life work, not as a drifter into it but as a person propelled by God into it, and all life work, and every life work, will be a blessing to the world. Directed by such a choice no one can keep an intoxicating saloon, no one can conduct a business that cheats and injures and debauches, no one can carry on social pleasures that enervate and demoralize. But if every man has a calling of God, even the slave can render hearty service to his master and the sick man can look upon his sickness as a field of opportunity. Was not Chloe Lankton's weakness, who suffered patiently and serenely for fifty years, a call of God? Was not Pascal's pain, who never was free from that pain through his busy life of labor for the world's welfare, a calling of God?

Bezalel a man to be kept in mind! Yes, indeed, to be kept in mind because God called him, called him as he called great Moses himself and Aaron the prototype of Christ, and the work he gave him to do was the everyday type of work such as most people are required now to do. It was manual work, work with things that are temporary and perishable. But Moses and Aaron, and even God, could not carry on their purposes apart from the work of Bezalel. Because God called Bezalel, the whole world of mankind trying today to contribute labor to the welfare of society and the advance of God's kingdom may say, each in his own sphere, if he has been directed by God into that sphere, "My work is a calling of God," and may go on his way bravely, contentedly and cheerily.



A COSMOPOLITAN PASTOR AT THE NATION'S CAPITAL

Dr. Charles Wood and the Church Where Persons Stand in Line Seeking Admission to the Services—A Study in Efficient Ministry

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS
Editor Afield of The Continent

Photo by Harris & Ewing, Washington, D. C.

FOR TEN YEARS this article has been incubating. It had its origin in letters received by an editor of a Philadelphia daily newspaper. Now an editor receives many letters in the course of a year, but most of them are either finding fault or seeking favors. But there was one Philadelphia minister who occasionally wrote to the editor for neither of these purposes. His notes either praised some service in behalf of righteousness which the newspaper had performed or else called attention to an important work of religion or good citizenship which the newspaper might further. During the half a dozen years that this editor's service coincided with this pastor's ministry in the city he received many of these letters, not one of which asked the slightest favor for the minister himself or for his own church. When we consider that nine times out of ten the minister who writes to a secular editor at all wants to get some little item into print about himself or his work, this record is the more surprising. It betokens what William Penn called "a public mind." It is Pauline in its "care of all the churches."

There you have the outstanding characteristic of Charles Wood. He is a minister of the kingdom. His parish is the widest field he can serve. The fact that he is pastor of the Church of the Covenant in Washington, with a unique and notable ministry, or the further fact that he was for years an outstanding figure among all the ministers of Philadelphia, leaving a place of leadership that is still unfilled, is of less significance than his tireless, persistent, ingenious outreach in service. The same mind which led him to inaugurate, nearly a score of years ago, the religious services for the American students of the Latin Quarter of Paris prompted him to begin and carry to a successful conclusion, a few weeks ago, the campaign for the extinction of the debts upon all the churches of his presbytery. His own church had no debt, but a considerable proportion of the $89,500 secured for the Washington churches came from the Covenant congregation.

Before I come to the story of the wonderful success of Dr. Wood in Washington I must linger a little longer upon memories of his work in Philadelphia. Although he never turned a hand to secure publicity, or gave even fair cooperation to the newspaper men who sought news of himself and his own church, the whole city knew him. He lent himself—not merely his name, but himself—to every really good work. Evangelism especially appealed to him, although he was the idolized pastor of one of the most aristocratic congregations in Philadelphia. I have heard him, after three other preaching services on a Sunday, present the gospel to a crowd of "tenderloin" habitues in a midnight theater meeting. Summer evangelistic work, special revival meetings and all things that made for the furtherance of the actual preaching of the gospel could count on Dr. Wood's support.

To be "interested" in good work is one thing (and sometimes it is made an easy substitute for actual activity), but to do definite, taxing, self-sacrificing Christian service through a long course of years is entirely a different matter. All Philadelphia remembers with pride that for twenty-one years, through rain and sunshine, Dr. Charles Wood preached to the Sunday afternoon men's meeting in Association hall. A privilege? Of course; but also a task of first magnitude, and one to which few men are equal. For the hundreds of men who gathered Sunday after Sunday in the old hall at 15th and Chestnut streets were not bound by any congregational ties; they were literally "all sorts and conditions of men," from the flotsam and jetsam of the lodging houses to the fastidious "sermon-taster" who sought the best preaching as an intellectual enjoyment.

It is a noteworthy and singular fact that two Presbyterian ministers, Dr. Charles Wood and Dr. Charles R. Erdman, now of Princeton, both of whom had served the same church, First Presbyterian of Germantown, simultaneously maintained, through a long period of years, the service of addressing Sunday afternoon Young Men's Christian Association audiences—Dr. Wood at Central and Dr. Erdman at the Pennsylvania railroad branch. No more convincing tribute to the essential masculinity of the men and their message could be given.

One of the Pioneer "Afternoon" Preachers

What such a service as this really means needs to be stated somewhat in detail—and, by the way, Dr. Wood was the pioneer in holding Sunday afternoon Young Men's Christian Association meetings, as well as the man with the record for the longest continuous service. He began in a theater, before the association took up the enterprise. During these twenty-one faithful years, in which there was never a sign that the spring was running dry, this one man preached the gospel to more than a quarter of a million men—or a greater aggregate than the adult male population of Philadelphia. Mostly these hearers were young men. Few of these men were association members; and none had any obligation to attend the Sunday afternoon meetings. Only the sheer drawing power of the spoken word drew these multitudes, who are today scattered all over the earth. And the word has gone with them. At the Young Men's Christian Association office I was told of a letter received from a trained nurse in a distant town, whose patient in his delirium had been repeating what he had heard Dr. Wood say at an association meeting. There are hundreds of mothers who bless the name of this man who held their sons true to the old faith, amid the allurements of the great city.

In probing around in the known character and works of Dr. Wood, the fact that he has a gospel to preach is probably the best self-explanatory record that can be written. A polished man of books, a litterateur whose library is doubtless a constant temptation to ease, and a polished man of the world whom social engrossments might be expected to beguile, Dr. Wood is yet first of all, and animating all else, a preacher of the gospel. And his is the old but ever-living gospel. No juiceless pulpit essays for his people. The burden of the message is on his soul; and that he delivers the eternal evangel in the choicest speech of our day but proves him a good workman. One listens to his sermons in vain for the hackneyed dialect of the orthodoxy of a century ago—why should the language of the Puritans be counted a shibboleth in this twentieth century?—but one finds instead the thrill and throb of a contemporaneous Christ, who even today walks among the hurt and heavy and hungry and homesick hearts of humanity. The most conservative of theologians, if he have the wit to distinguish the substance from the form, would be delighted to find all that he esteems precious being set forth fearlessly, yet alluringly and ac-ceptably, to men and women whose besetments are those of the prosperous and the cultivated. While they are an intellectual pleasure, Dr. Wood's sermons also satisfy the spirit.

Church of the Covenant at Washington

This passion for preaching from the sheer love of it amazed Dr. Wood's Washington parish when, four years ago, he succeeded Dr. Teunis S. Hamlin as pastor of the Church of the Covenant. The established Sunday sessions were the morning service and a vesper service. Dr. Wood asked permission to add a third, merely as a kindness to himself, for he had cultivated the habit of preaching three times on Sunday. He really would not be happy unless he could preach at least one more sermon a day. The officers of the congregation remonstrated; nobody went to church in the evening in Washington, and the service would be a failure, which would look bad for the new regime. Rather agreeing with them, Dr. Wood still persisted, like a small boy pleading for candy, and so the session indulged his whim. One of the men told me that he verily believed his pastor would preach ten times a day if he could get a chance; and frequently he crowds in extra sermons and addresses from other city pulpits and platforms on Sunday. When I was in Washington a few Sundays ago the Church of the Covenant held almost 800 persons, its capacity, for the evening service. There had been a large congregation also in the afternoon and a full house in the morning.

That morning service is a problem. The church has only 800 sittings—and 800 members! Personally, I do not happen to know of any other church in the land where people stand in line waiting for admission to the morning preaching service. In the winter visitors are turned away every Sunday for lack of room. And these disappointed worshipers often include men high in the service of the government. Indeed, ever since the time of President Harrison, who was a member, the Church of the Covenant has been facetiously known as "The Church of the Government," because of the large number of officials who worship therein.

The story was told me of a politician who recently said to the pastor, "Look here, Dr. Wood, you are missing your opportunities. Why, when I looked around the congregation this morning I saw most of the influential members of the committee on ways and means of Congress. I'd have given anything for ten minutes at those men. Just think what you might have accomplished if you had talked in favor of tariff revision. Yet with that splendid opportunity before you, you just preached religion!"

Students' Atelier Reunion—a Religious Service in the Latin Quarter of Paris

The Church of the Covenant services satisfy one's æsthetic taste. The auditorium itself, high, light and chaste, is built cruciform. The stained glass windows are rich. And wherever Dr. Charles Wood is there is certain to be found good music. His taste in this respect is celebrated in Philadelphia, where Second church was esteemed one of the musical centers of the city. The music of the Church of the Covenant is provided in an unusual manner. For the morning service, the principal assembly for congregational worship, there is no choir, but only a precentor. In the afternoon the service is largely musical, with a double sextet of soloists. In the evening there is a trained volunteer choir of a hundred voices, who enter, singing, in a processional, and are seated on a special platform built about the pulpit. The anthems of this great choir are a musical service of the first order. The ingenuity of this threefold musical service strikes the experienced church officer, for it doubtless obviates choir troubles. The afternoon and the evening choirs keep each other mutually humble, while the precentor in the morning is an admonition to both that they are not indispensable!

Pulpiteers Ranking with Men of Government

A man's man, if ever there were one, Dr. Wood has found the only place that could justify his leaving his position of power in Philadelphia. The nation's capital is a cosmopolitan and exacting city. It wants men in the pulpit who can rank with the men in the service of our own and other governments. That sophistication which comes only from a wide knowledge of men and affairs is almost as requisite as pulpit ability. Over the character of Dr. Wood is written the word "urbanity"; he is a city man. His talents have equipped him for just this peculiar work. He is at home on all levels of society. Men of affairs like to meet him off duty, even as they like to hear him in the pulpit. His own congregation feel that they, and the whole Presbyterian Church, have a man peculiarly adapted to represent them upon every occasion.

This sane, genial humanness and lust for helpfulness it was which prompted him to organize, eighteen years ago, when on a visit to Paris, "The Students' Atelier Reunions," which have been maintained every winter in the Latin Quarter of Paris, and which now meet in a large hall connected with the French School of Architecture. To this peculiarly patriotic ministry Dr. Wood has given personal service on the spot, and he has also been the inspiring and directing genius of the American committee, of which he is chairman. A resident pastor is maintained, and in religious, social and practical ways a far-reaching service is done for the American young people sojourning in Paris.

Finding the Largest Sphere in Ministry

If this were a biography of Dr. Wood it would be necessary to list the books he has written, the journeys he has made, the offices he has held, the pastorates he has filled (in Buffalo, Albany, Germantown, Philadelphia and Washington) and the personal events that have loomed large in his life. Instead, I am only trying to give a glimpse of the sort of man who is finding in the gospel ministry the largest sphere for the exercise of his gifts. And chiefly among these gifts I would note the quality of comprehensiveness, of wide-horizoned service, of outreaching ministry, in sheer fidelity to the basic law of Jesus.

One more incident alone can be told here, and its "news value" should have given it earlier place in the record. This is the service which Dr. Wood has rendered to the Presbyterian Church in Washington in inaugurating and conducting a movement for the extinction of all church debts. Only those congregations who know by bitter experience the paralyzing effect of a large debt—frightening away timorous possible members, hampering benevolences, and in all activities limiting the church's liberty—can realize how grateful must be the experience of having help from the outside that can be received with self-respect. The "big brother" congregation, so to speak, of Washington Presbyterianism is the Church of the Covenant. It has no debt, and its membership is large and its people are prosperous.

So, when Dr. Wood, stressing the solidarity of all the churches as the Presbyterian Church in Washington, called for a concerted, cooperative movement to wipe out the existing debts in toto, the response was hearty and instant. The burdened congregations themselves rose bravely to the emergency and bore a full half of the load of $89,500. The lion's share of the other half came, naturally, from the Church of the Covenant, but Dr. Wood, as chairman of presbytery's committee, lays stress upon the fact that Presbyterians in New York City contributed $4,000. Other denominations have raised large sums for their work in Washington; the Presbyterians of the city have shown uncommon self-reliance and self-resourcefulness. The total of $89,500 needed was all subscribed by the 1st of December; and the visitor hears Dr. Wood's praises sounded in all the churches.

Where the Difference Came In

This story has been told about the father of Woodrow Wilson. But we have a faint suspicion that it was the hand of the adapter that gave the name to the Virginia minister who is made the hero.

The preacher had a horse that was not very ornamental. One day the nag was standing in front of the post office and a parishioner said, jokingly:

"Your horse is looking rather frayed around the eyes, doctor. What's the matter with him? Still, I don't know but that he looks better than you do."

"That's because I take care of my horse," said the minister, "while my parishioners take care of me."

A Theosophical "Will-o'-the-Wisp"

BY STANLEY A. HUNTER

INDIA IS FULL of fantastic faiths and all sorts of modern movements. , The Theosophical Society is an example, and under Mrs. Annie Besant it has gained quite a following. Those who observe things closely tell us that Mrs. Besant is losing her hold on the organization, for many of the devout followers from the Indian community feel some chagrin at being led by a woman in a country where women do not lead, and especially by an Englishwoman, when it is commonly supposed that India has nothing to learn in matters of religion and spirituality from the West. Mrs. Besant's alleged statement that she was a Brahman priest in her last incarnation does not help matters very much.

As president of the Theosophical Society (which, by the way, is not to be confused with the California association at Point Loma headed by Mrs. Katherine Tingley) Mrs. Besant has been instrumental in founding a new organization called "The Order of the Star in the East." She bears the title "protector of the order," but her own Theosophical Society has been opposing it in many cases.

In these days of the birth of many new cults not much attention is bestowed on the latest arrival. It is worthy of note, however, to realize that this new order expresses a deep spiritual need, and a sort of dissatisfaction at the teachings with which it has been endeavoring in the past to satisfy that need. It may be that some of the followers are tired of feeding on the husks and desire to return to the Father's house.

Mrs. Besant says, "The order has its creed, 'I believe in the coming of a World Teacher.'" Six months ago the journals in India were commenting on her reported statement that she had seen the coming Teacher in a dream. In one of those passages full of the eloquence with which she has fascinated Indian audiences for many years, Mrs. Besant has told her followers of what has been in her mind.

"Brethren, I have no words by which I can convey from my own heart to yours the joy which fills me as I lift up my eyes to the hills whence cometh the Lord, for whom the world is inarticulately crying in its sore need of help. Can you not picture him as he stands in his great garden on the southern slopes of the Himalayas, under the spreading branches of a mighty tree, gazing, with eyes that are wells of wisdom and compassion, over the wide plains that stretch beneath his feet? He is waiting—he on whom wait the guardians of the world.

"As in the still hour before the dawning one bird wakes after another, and soft tones flute forth from many places, calling from bough to bough, till presently, as the sun god rises, all burst into one glad melody of welcome and the silence is shivered into welcome cascades of song, so in this waiting hour, before the rising of our Sun, soft calls are heard, and little fragments of song, half-breathed, tell over sweet cadences of melodious hope and joy, heralding the splendid outburst of triumphal song that shall greet the Master of masters when the world's cry for help shall draw him downwards, when his feet shall once more tread the common paths of earth and the Desire of all nations shall come and speak the word of peace."

Julius Richter, in his masterly book on Indian missions, put "Will-o'-the-Wisps" as the title under which Mrs. Besant's movement was to be classified. This new theosophical trend seems to justify it. The quotation given is full of human interest, for it shows the insufficiency of theosophy to satisfy the human heart.

Captors' Kindness Surprises Turks

"Reports from Sofia," says The Orient, a missionary weekly published at Constantinople, "show that the Turkish prisoners have been much surprised and gratified at their kind treatment in Bulgaria. A wounded officer was taken to the hospital trembling for fear of being killed. But after most tender and skillful treatment had put him on the road to recovery, he was even more amazed at the refusal of the authorities to take his proffered napoleon in payment for the operation. Our Bulgarian friends seem to be making good use of their opportunities of showing to the Ottoman prisoners that humane treatment which is an outgrowth of the Christian spirit. While war itself is anything but Christian, and the field of battle is a scene of carnage and destruction, the tender sympathy shown to wounded and other captives will do much to mitigate the horrors of warfare. Such a spirit, coupled with the work of the Red Cross agencies at the front and in Constantinople, should show to our Moslem brethren the real, deep significance of Christianity."

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS—Bradford Horton is working his way through the Prestonbury Theological Seminary in opposition to his mother's wishes. He is soloist in Second church, does indexing for Preston bank and tutors the grandson of Richard Elmore, the bank's president, to whose daughter he is greatly attracted. A fellow student, Austin Sleighton, becomes his loyal friend, but jealousy has made him a bitter enemy in Oren-Toole, bank employee. "O.-T." evolves a plan for Horton's undoing. He makes up a package containing $2,000 in banknotes, replaces the amount in the bank's safe with a similar package containing strips of paper, and hires an old beggar to hide the money in Horton's bedroom. Horton discovers the man, who proves to be his own father, angrily forces the package back upon him, buys a ticket for New York and starts him off on the train. In an anguish of self-accusation and regret, Horton finally confesses to Sleighton that he is only the adopted son of the Hortons. He is arrested for the theft of the banknotes, but his case is dismissed when no one appears against him. In the meantime his father, discovering the contents of the package he is carrying, gets off the train at Albany, registers at the Albemarle hotel, deposits all but $200 in the hotel's safe and indulges in a day's debauch, ending in the smashing of a plate-glass window, which lands him in the workhouse to serve a three months' term. Oren-Toole, in accordance with a plan of Mr. Elmore's, goes on a fruitless search for Horton's father. Life for Horton, in the meantime, moves on quietly. He declines all invitations and devotes his time to study and practice. His work in "The Messiah" wins him profound admiration, and a carnation dropped at his feet by Miss Elmore's hand reveals the source of others found in his room. Mr. Elmore, however, has learned from Mrs. Horton that the young man is a foundling, and is convinced that he is a liar, and the taker of the $2,000. He sends Oren-Toole to Albany to bring back to Prestonbury the father of Horton, Andrew Drum, whose whereabouts have been discovered, at the expiration of his sentence. Drum, resenting Horton's treatment, falls in with a scheme to hide the money a second time in Horton's room. Here the package is found, and Horton's arrest and trial follow. He is cleared, but Oren-Toole and Drum are incriminated.

CHAPTER XI.

FILIAL DUTY OVERCOMES

ANDREW DRUM'S trial was to be before a far different tribunal from that over which the county judge of Preston county presided. The officers of the earthly court had arrested him, but those of a Superior Court had also laid their hands upon him. For two weeks he struggled vainly to escape the hand of death.

Bradford Horton ministered to him in all kindness, but made no disclosure as to the antecedents of the dying man, simply asking permission from the hospital authorities to visit him as often as was possible. The general belief, however, was that they were father and son, and that the real name of the young man was Drum, though for some reason no one ventured to address him so. There was something about him that made people respect the name by which he had introduced himself to Prestonbury.

From his father's lips, in the intervals when he was free from pain, Bradford learned the story of that part of his life of which he knew nothing. In the narrative of the years that had passed since he had last seen him he found a new assurance of the power of temptation.

"But how did you happen to come to Prestonbury, father?" he asked one day. "How did you know that I was here?"

"I always had the Glencoe paper," the old man answered feebly. "I always looked it through each week for anything that might be in it about you. I wanted you to succeed, Bradford, though I had failed so."

Bradford winced. The pathos of the words struck him like a knife as he remembered how he had received the man who had thus wished him well. "You said you'd stopped drinking," he went on presently. "How was that?"

"It's quite a long story," the weak voice began. "I used to hang around the law buildings, you know, to pick up odd jobs. I had to borrow a good deal, law blanks and such things, from men I'd known when I was practicing. Well, I did it once too often. The man I tried to borrow from took me by the collar and threw me out."

He paused for breath, lay still a moment, then went on. "The jar shook me up considerably, and I lay there on the floor in the corridor till a nice young lawyer opened his door at the noise and came and picked me up. He took me into his office and brushed me off and let me sit down and rest, and when I got over the jar, asked what the row was and what he could do to help me. He was the most kind-hearted young fellow I've met in many a day."

Again came that thrust of the knife. The contrast of his own treatment of the broken old wreck was too condemning for the son to endure.

"He treated me white," the husky voice struggled along. "He was sorry for me, I suppose. He hunted up the man I was to draw the will for and did the work for me, and then he wanted me to promise I'd get out of the city and go to my friends. I said I hadn't any, only one son, and he was studying for the ministry and would be ashamed of me. He said you wouldn't, and he seemed so sure of it that I gathered up courage to come here to find you. He saw me off on the train. I promised him I wouldn't drink any more—that's why I said I'd reformed. He was a good friend to me. I wish you'd write some day and thank him for all he did for me, Horton.

Almost choked with the sob in his throat, Bradford promised. His father lay still for many minutes, resting after the effort of the long story he had told. Then, bracing himself for a final word, "Bradford, you know that Mr. Elmore?—the one I saw in court the day——" He did not go on, and Bradford assented silently. "Did you know he was almost the same as brother to your mother?"

"No," said Bradford in surprise. "I knew she came from Prestonbury, but that was all I'd ever been told."

"Why, his father married for his second wife Laura's mother, so they weren't really any relation, but they grew up in the same house. They didn't want her to marry me—I can't hardly blame them, after all that's happened. They refused all communication with her—I don't think they even knew of your birth and her death, and she was too proud to ever write to them. She was bound to have her own way. She loved me, and I loved her—and I showed it," he added bitterly, "by squandering all her mother's money that was left her. But, oh, in spite of it all, I did care!"

Under the pillow his shaking hand groped feebly for something. Bradford drew out for him the package of yellowed letters tied with faded ribbon. He clasped it tightly and a smile broke over his face.

"Laura's letters," he said faintly. "I loved——" the voice trailed away into silence, from henceforth to be unbroken. The unconsciousness into which he sank, worn out with life and struggle, was never lifted until the end came.

Bradford buried his father in Mount Logan cemetery, and with him the letters left him by the wife of his youth. The tragedy of the old man's life was over; the young man still remained a living part of the life of every day. But where was the other actor in the drama upon which the curtain seemed to have fallen? Oren-Toole had vanished as completely as if he had left the planet.

Horton, who at intervals all through that fall and winter had been acting as assistant bookkeeper at the bank, remained in that capacity, at Maxwell's request, after the departure of Oren-Toole. It made a strenuous life for him, but by wise use of overtime he met the demand. It was thus he overheard the president and cashier talking one day in a manner to make him think they were contemplating an effort to find and bring to justice the man who had robbed the bank. Before he left his work he asked to see Mr. Maxwell alone.

"You have been very considerate of my feelings, Mr. Maxwell," he began, "and I appreciate it fully. But I want to presume on your kindness now once more."

"Mr. Horton, I can hardly believe that anything you can do or say will be presuming. What have you on your mind?"

"The bank lost $2,000 by the robbery. Fortunately $1,800 has been recovered. Now, please do not follow Mr. Oren-Toole with prosecution, nor attempt to find him. I will refund the two hundred."

The expression on Maxwell's face was a study for an artist—an expression of mingled astonishment, wonder and suspicion. Could it be that this transparent looking young man was after all playing a game deeper than any of them had suspected?

"Why not follow him?" he inquired after a little interval.

"Because he never meant to be a thief. He only intended to make it appear that I was one. He supposed when he took the money that it would be back in the bank next day, and it would have been had I attended Miss Elmore's musicale. His second attempt was more clever than the first, and it would have succeeded had not the old man registered with my name when he went first to the Albemarle. Don't try to find him, Mr. Maxwell."

"Isn't this rather a curious method with a criminal?" asked the cashier.

"He is not a criminal, Mr. Maxwell. That is, not an intentional, vicious criminal. But find him, arrest him, convict him, and you will make him a criminal for the rest of his life."

"But such a course is wholly unusual, Mr. Horton; wholly unusual."

"Yes, I know. But listen! If you ever find where he is, notify him that you know. Tell him you will not prosecute. Tell him you understand how he has fallen, but that you mean to give him a chance to be a man, and will rejoice to know of his success. It's not usual, I know, but Christianity it not usual, not so very usual."

The cashier's look had changed now to admiration. "Mr. Horton," he said, "were I in your place I could not make that proposition, but I will lay it before the directors."

The discussion in the board of directors of a motion made by the cashier that no attempt be made to find or prosecute the absconded teller was long. When Maxwell was at last asked what made him bring so unusual a proposition before the board, he frankly acknowleged that he had not originated the idea, but that it was the special request of Horton. Whereupon Joseph Jickers spoke:

"Mr. President, I said at our meeting four months ago that this Horton was a new type. He is. I repeat it. Not another man in Prestonbury would have dreamed of proposing such a thing. Old Professor Dragham says he doubts if this man is called to the ministry. Perhaps he is not. So much the worse for the ministry. But he is called to a straight out-and-out exhibition of manhood, and he's answering the call. Some people are saying he is an impostor; that his name is William Drum. Well, let it be; William Drum or Peter Fife, I don't care. He's a new type, and I shall vote for this motion."

The unanimous decision of the meeting in favor of the resolution seemed to show that the rest of the directors were impressed, like Joe Jickers, with the young man's magnanimity. At their enthusiasm the president frowned slightly, but as chairman of the meeting he had no vote.

It was about a week after this meeting that Mr. Elmore wrote to Bradford Horton a letter that grew out of a conversation between himself and the cashier.

"Sam," Mr. Elmore had said, "young Drum must have been at large expense in this matter of his father."

"Undoubtedly," was the reply. "But I would not call him Drum if I were you."

"It's his name, Sam. I know what the position of the Horton family is—honorable and highly esteemed in their part of the state. For this impostor to call himself by that honorable name is an outrage."

"There is something wrong about all this," answered the cashier. "If we let it alone it will right itself by and by. You would better call him Horton. It will not hurt you, and it will simplify things."

"Sam, I tell you he is an impostor. But this is not what I started in to say."

"He said he would pay that $200, didn't he?"

"Yes."

"Well, don't let him do it."

"You are too late, Mr. Elmore. He has paid it."

"What? Paid that $200?"

"Yes, and three months' interest."

"He's a mystery to me, Sam. It must have used up all his money. I can't fathom him."

"Perhaps you haven't tried the right sounding line."

"Are you having any better success?"

"Yes, I think I am. I am going on the basis that J. J. is right, and that he is an entirely new type."

"Sam, what do you suppose that sickness and burial cost?"

"Probably a couple of hundred."

"And he couldn't get a lot in Mount Logan under $300." The president figured for a moment. "He hasn't earned more than $500 at the outside. Well, as Oren-Toole got him into this scrape, partly, we're in a measure responsible. I'll send him our check for $700."

Maxwell remonstrated earnestly. "I wouldn't try that if I were you," he urged. "You're longer-headed than that, generally. This affair seems to have got on your nerves. Don't try to fix things up; drop it all. Do you remember that lamp story J. J. tells?"

"Oh, well, this is different," Mr. Elmore asserted confidently

(Continued on page 86)

THE HOME COUNCIL

According to God's Plans

BY CORA S. DAY

"YES," replied a man, questioned as to his belief in a guiding Providence, "of course I believe in a guiding Providence. And I'll tell you why. Years ago I broke down and was ordered to take a long rest. I was sure my prospects in life were ruined forever. I was doing office work in a small law firm at the time and studying law, working hard for a chance to get up a little higher.

"When my health failed, and I was ordered away from town, I went straight down to a little country place where a kind-hearted old aunt and uncle lived on a big, run-down old farm that barely furnished them a living. There I loafed, and sulked, and made myself worse instead of better, for a week or two. After that the fresh air and simple life and food got hold of me in spite of myself, and I began to take an interest in my surroundings.

"One of my boyish hobbies had been geology. I went about the old farm, chipping and hammering and seeing what I could see, forgetting my ruined hopes and actually beginning to find life worth living after all. Then, one day, I struck a ledge of rock that was different and interesting. I sent some samples off to an expert, without telling the old folks anything about what I suspected. But when he sent back word that I had found a valuable deposit of granite, in a place that made it doubly valuable because it was scarce, I told them, and rejoiced with them over their good fortune.

"I thought then that I saw why I had been laid aside from my regular work, and sent there to make the find that was to give them ease and comfort for the rest of their days. I did not know that they would leave it all to me in a few years, and put me in a position that I could never have reached by the law office route. But I saw then, and have realized more and more with the passing years, that my own little hopes had to be ruined to make way for the bigger things that God had in hand for me. He has given me great opportunity to serve him with my substance.

"I am trying to build my hopes according to his plans now," he concluded.

How We May Avoid Fires

Statistics regarding money loss by fire are sobering. The question is, what can the everyday householder do to make the showing less discomforting? It is said that 60 per cent of all the fires are due to preventable causes, and there are a few simple precautionary measures which would greatly lower this percentage.

First as to matches, says a magazine writer. It is not merely the matches that are thrown away. The silly habit of leaving them lying around loose on bureau, table and kitchen shelves makes life merry for the rats and mice, but causes trouble for the fire department. All matches should be kept in covered dishes, or else only "safety" matches should be used. Moreover, all matches that can be ignited merely by being stepped on are a constant source of danger. Again, inferior grades of lucifers, being made of poor material, often snap off, letting the burning part fall on the floor or clothing. These matches also have a habit of spluttering and casting sparks in all directions, making them especially unsafe for women, since their dresses are so inflammable. And, of course, no match, "safety" or otherwise, should be left within the reach of children.

Another common cause of fire is the emptying of hot ashes into wooden boxes or dumping them against a wooden shed. Only metal ash cans with covers should be used. Wood ashes are frequently dangerous weeks after becoming cold because of their liability to generate heat.

All oily rags should immediately be put into the stove. Cotton rags or waste saturated with linseed oil, or in fact with any of the vegetable oils, are particularly dangerous, owing to their tendency to spontaneous combustion. After your hardwood floor has been polished, take a look behind your kitchen range and see if there is not a boxful of fine oily rags, saved up for another cleaning day, which, for the best of reasons, may never arrive.

The accumulation of waste papers, and rubbish generally, in cellars, sheds and attics should be rigorously forbidden. If the inspector for a fire insurance company sees such a collection of rubbish, he will either quietly add at least 10 per cent to the premium or decline to accept the risk at all.

Articles made of celluloid are intensely inflammable. A certain lady who laid her hot curling tongs close to her side combs will testify to this. The combs caught fire and ignited the lace dresser cover, and the firemen's services were required to extinguish the flames.

It ought to be unnecessary to repeat the old, old warning against using coal oil to start the fire in the stove. As for benzine and gasoline—kerosene also—it ought to be one of the fixed rules in every household never to leave a can of these inflammables uncorked, or to expose them to the air in any way (such as in garment cleaning, filling lamps, etc.) in an apartment in which there is an open fire. Even an empty coal oil barrel standing in the sun has sufficient vapor left in it to make mischief on a hot day. The greatest care should be exercised in the use of metal polishes, many of which have for an ingredient one of the petroleum products.

Candles covered with fuzzy shades may become an element of destruction. Candles are at their best as destroyers, however, when taken into a dark clothes closet.

Imperfect electrical wiring is a very common source of trouble. On no account allow any but a skilled electrician to meddle with your wires. If you have any reason to doubt the skill of the professional workman, have your installation examined by an inspector of the fire insurance underwriters. The fee is small.

Householders enjoying such conveniences as dumb waiters and laundry chutes should have them lined with fireproof materials, and see to it that they are kept carefully closed except when in use. Besides acting as a chimney, these shafts make the quickest possible means for a fire to travel from floor to floor.

Where hot air heating is employed, at all points of contact with the furnace pipes wooden floors and partitions should be protected by metal sheeting, with at least an inch of air space left between.

Chicago has taken the lead in a "fire-prevention" day, established not only to commemorate her own great fire but to consider the fire waste of the country. Other cities have joined the movement. School children are given special instruction, designed to inculcate a responsibility for preventable fire waste, and in all the schools periods are set aside for fire prevention exercises. Talks are given on such subjects as "What to Do in Case of Fire," "First Aid to the Burned," "Gasoline Dangers," "The Use of Kerosene," etc.

Through the schools a "clean-up" campaign has also been started in connection with the observance of the day.

A Thought for the Week

When I am going out for an evening, I arrange the fire in my stove so that I do not fail to find a good one when I return, though it would have engaged my frequent attention, present; so that when I know I am to be at home, I sometimes make believe that I may go out to save trouble. And this is the art of living, too, to leave our life in a condition to go alone, and not to require a constant supervision. We will then sit down serenely to live, as by the side of a stove.—Henry D. Thoreau.

Verses Old and New

WHEN THE GATES ARE OPENED

When God shall ope the gates of gold,
The portals of the heavenly fold,
And bid his flock find pasture wide
Upon a new earth's green hillside—

What poor strayed sheep shall thither fare,
Black-smirched beneath the sunny air,
To wash away in living springs
The mud and mire of earthly things!

What lonely ewes with eyes forlorn,
With weary feet and fleeces torn,
To whose shorn back no wind was stayed,
Nor any rough ways smooth were made!

What happy little lambs shall leap
To those sad ewes and spattered sheep,
With gamesome feet and joyful eyes,
From years of play in Paradise!

The wind is chill, the hour is late;
Haste thee, dear Lord, undo the gate;
For grim wolf-sorrows prowling range
These bitter hills of chance and change.

And from the barren wilderness
With homeward face thy flocks do press.
Their worn bells ring a jangled chime—
Shepherd, come forth, 'tis eventime!
—May Byron, in "The Wind on the Heath."

Was Sorry She Asked

The following story illustrates how unpleasant truths are sometimes brought home to us in strange ways.

A Chicago woman was traveling in the Orient, relates The Chicago Tribune. On a trip through a desert she was carried by four stalwart blacks in a chair suspended on poles. The natives started out with great cheer, but as the journey progressed and the sun beat down upon them they began to chant a prayer to Allah.

It was melodious though a bit mournful. Its constant repetition was soothing and the lady dozed. On awakening the prayer, grown more mournful, almost despairing, was still being intoned.

Turning to her interpreter she asked the meaning of the mysterious words. The interpreter pretended not to hear, but being pressed for an answer finally bowed low and said:

"Madam, since you insist, they pray that the great Allah may make you less fat."

Do You Misspell Them?

"Oblige," of all the words in the English language, is the one most frequently misspelled. This assertion, says The London Daily Mail, is made by W. Stewart Thompson in a new edition of his "Public Examination Spelling Key," and is based upon practical experience and from evidence provided by the papers of competitors in civil service examinations. "Not 5 per cent of educated Englishmen," Mr. Thompson adds, "spell correctly, even in standard books and high class newspapers, the simple word 'repellent.' The English language is a living and growing thing and dictionaries as a rule are about fifty years behind the times. There is perhaps no more common fallacy with the experienced writer than the idea that in these days of free education and strict government inspection 'every schoolboy' can spell all the fairly common English words and that a spelling book should, therefore, contain only such as are of considerable difficulty."

Love's Labor Lost

Freddy was taking his father's dinner, and on the way he saw a workman emptying a drain. "That drain," said Freddy to the workman, "is the one father lost a shilling down." "Oh!" said the workman, and his face brightened. "Now then, youngster, hurry on with that dinner before it gets cold."

When Freddy returned half an hour later the workman was still working on the same drain. His face was flushed and excited, and his hands were black with mud. "Are you sure," he asked, "that this is the drain your father lost the money in?"

"Quite sure!" piped Freddy. "Because I saw father get it out myself."

YOUNG AMERICA

When Johnnie Saved the Day for Teacher

BY FRANCES MARGARET FOX

JOHNNIE FELT SURE that the teacher was troubled about something. Perhaps she was grieved because Melissa Horton could not remember the bones of her body, but whatever the reason, never before had their young teacher called the roll without smiling once. She even called "Jakey Spooner" without looking up from the book, but repeated his name in the tone she might have used in saying "Norway pine and hemlock." Something was certainly wrong.

Having convinced himself that his teacher was unhappy, Johnnie did his best to be good. He didn't throw a single paper wad that morning; not once when the teacher wasn't looking did he try to make Jakey Spooner laugh. Whenever Johnnie stretched his mouth from ear to ear and pulled down his lower eyelids, Jakey Spooner was sure of punishment. Not that it distressed Jakey to obey the teacher when she said, "Jakey, you may stand on the floor," but Jakey, standing first on one foot, then on the other, hitching up his wee trousers and continually grinning, furnished amusement for all the pupils, thanks be to Johnnie.

That morning Johnnie neglected to wave his hand frantically in the air, until, having commanded attention, he might say, as usual, "Please, may I pass the water?" The tin dipper hung from its nail undisturbed until recess the morning Johnnie tried to be good.

But studious pupils and springtime in the woods failed to cheer the young teacher. Frequently she stepped to the door and looked down the path in the only direction from which anyone might be expected to come on a visit to a log schoolhouse in a clearing from which the stumps had never been removed.

The schoolhouse door was at the left of the front platform. Directly before the entrance and against a side wall stood the big stove and the woodbox. To the right of the door was the teacher's desk and one chair. Wall space back of the desk was taken by a blackboard. At the back, opposite the front entrance, maps decorated an otherwise blank wall except in the blackboard corner. The entire schoolroom wasn't so big as Mrs. Rawdon's hotel kitchen in the settlement, but it accommodated six roughly made double seats, so placed that the pupils could march up the center aisle and down on either side, and even perform ceremonious marches on Friday afternoons. Between the desks and the teacher's throne was a plain wooden bench without a back, known as the recitation seat.

Johnnie, having learned his morning lessons, gazed thoughtfully about the room, and, taking in its possibilities, decided upon a beautiful plan for making their teacher smile happily before the day was done. Even then he neither whispered nor wrote notes to his seven comrades. Instead, Johnnie waited until noon, when seven dinner pails followed his lead into the clearing.

"Eat your dinners quicker'n scat," commanded the general, "put your pails all back on the dinner-pail shelf and then come scooting out to the railroad track, because I've thought up something new and I don't want the teacher to hear a word."

Boiled eggs and sandwiches disappeared fast after that, and fifteen minutes past 12 o'clock squirrels, bluejays and crows were alone in the clearing.

Meantime the teacher also ate her lunch quickly and gave a worried glance around the room. First she examined the blackboards. The one at the back needed cleaning. Having scrubbed that blackboard until it looked nearly black, the teacher thought a moment before she wrote in perfect script: "That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

From the front blackboard she erased mottoes and daily program, replacing them by "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and a newly written schedule of daily work. There were eight pupils in the school, yet the long program had an air of importance great enough to cause the teacher to regard it with approval. Next she restraightened maps and charts already straight. That done, she inspected every desk to be sure no marbles lurked in corners to roll out on the floor at the wrong time, and that no loose papers threatened disorder. Last of all, with exquisite care, she swept and dusted the room.

"It is the best I can do, anyway," observed Johnnie's teacher, as she gave her personal appearance severe attention and made herself tidy from top to toe. "Now I wish he would come and have it over with."

Even as the girl spoke she saw a dreaded figure approaching the schoolhouse. He was the new school commissioner who had threatened to visit every school in the county for the purpose of examining the pupils in their studies, with the avowed intention of "weeding out all young and incompetent teachers." He was to visit a neighboring district that morning and Johnnie's teacher trembled with dread. If that school commissioner frightened the children by his questions, she knew one 16-year-old teacher who would be weeded out.

Only the gentlest encouragement ever induced Melissa Horton to admit that she had a cranium, and the other member of the physiology class, although able to rattle off the bones of the body well enough to satisfy anyone, was obstinate in regard to gizzards—she insisted that she had a gizzard. The geography class was studying the map of Africa, which means that its one representative, Sammy Horn, was sure to disgrace his teacher. Jimmie Cassidy always stumbled in history.

No wonder the teacher was pale and looked worried when she greeted the commissioner! The first thing that man did was to look at his watch; and when he stepped in, he seemed to fill the schoolroom.

"Please take my chair," requested Johnnie's teacher, and the school commissioner squeezed behind the desk into the corner and caused the chair to complain. He was a big man.

"It isn't quite time for school to call," observed the teacher, unable to think of anything else to say, "but I will ring the bell."

(Continued on page 86)

A Scout of the Old Western Frontier

OF COURSE YOU know who this is—everybody knows "Buffalo Bill," the famous scout and Indian fighter! He isn't really, truly "Buffalo Bill," though, because when he was born his father prefixed an ordinary boy's name, William Frederick, to his last name, Cody. So you see William F. Cody started out very much like other boys—except that he lived on the border between Kansas and Missouri in frontier days (he was born in 1845), and so knew what rough life meant.

He was only 12 when his father died, and he had to go to work and earn his own living. He found employment with army contractors carrying stores to the various posts on the frontier, and that was when he learned his first lessons in Indian fighting. And that was his first step, too, toward winning the name of "Buffalo Bill."

His next step was to become one of the most daring riders of the "Pony Express." In those pioneer days in the West most of the mail between the East and far West was sent by way of Panama. It took about twenty-two days, and people wanted to get their letters more quickly than that. So the Pony Express was established. Mail was carried on horseback between St. Joseph, Mo., and San Francisco, Cal., in eight days, with stops at places on the way. Each rider was expected to cover seventy-five miles in a shift. The country was full of Indians, and frequent fights gave William Frederick added experience of their ways.

But still he wasn't "Buffalo Bill." That didn't come till after he had served the government with distinction as scout and guide during the civil war. At its close he took a contract to supply the men who were building a railway in western Kansas with all the buffalo meat they required for food. Great herds were roaming the prairies then, you know, and in eighteen months he killed 4,280 buffalo, winning the title of "Buffalo Bill," by which he has since been generally known.

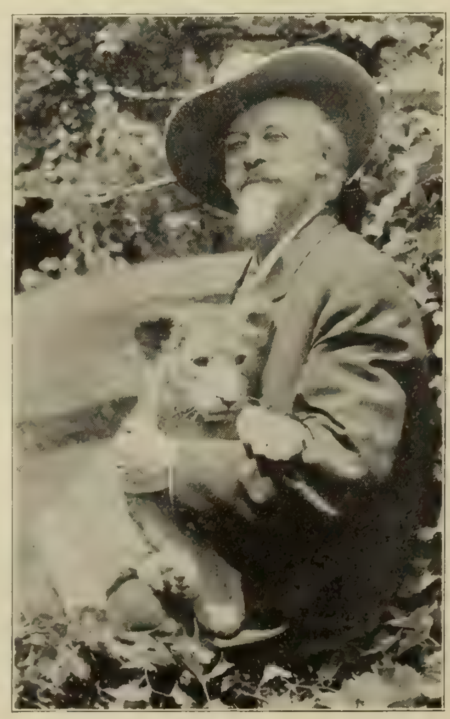

Photo by Frank Osborn

Later he again went into the government service, and took long, dangerous rides through country filled with Indians to carry important dispatches. It was after this that General Sheridan appointed him chief scout against the Sioux and Cheyennes. He did some very fine work, which you will enjoy reading about if you like brave deeds. There is not room here to say more of it than that he did a great work for his country.

And, of course, you know about the Wild West Show. "Buffalo Bill" organized that to give people a true picture of frontier life, and the actors included real Indians, Mexicans and cowboys.

Buffalo Bill has taken part in more Indian battles than any other living man, but he is through with fighting now that the call to service is no longer heard. He lives in Cody, Wyo., and is interested in such peaceful pursuits as ranching, real estate and irrigation.

He has some good friends, who always give him a warm welcome when he occasionally gets around to see them. One of these is Cy De Vry, keeper of the Lincoln park zoo in Chicago. The last time "Buffalo Bill" was there, there were several different kinds of animal babies at the park, and, of course, he had to see and admire them all. But to this little lion, which was only a few months old, and very playful, he took a special fancy, insisting on having the photographer take a picture of him with the tawny youngster in his arms. And here they are—the man who conquered dangers, conquered by a baby!

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

January 26, 1913—Cain and Abel

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 4:1-15. Golden Text, I. John 3:15: Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer.

Qualities are best revealed by contrast. The white and black horses of Revelation are seen to the best advantage when driven side by side. Perhaps no one ever utilized this fact to a greater, advantage than did the apostle Paul. He wrote on parallel columns. On one side he put the law, on the other the gospel. The old man and the new walk arm in arm through his reasoning. All history opens on the same lines. Cain and Abel stand at the beginning of the ways. That two sons absolutely antagonistic in disposition and character should be born of the same parents is nothing unusual. The theory of heredity would account for the individual on the basis of his ancestors. Other theories locate life at the center of environment. Both contain an element of truth, but there are too many Cains and Abels to accept them as final.

By Faith Abel Offered a More Excellent Sacrifice than Cain

This story is an illustration. With but one generation behind them, two brothers come into the world. With the same environment they pass out into life by opposite gates. The mother named the older son Cain. He was a gift from God. All first sons are particularly precious gifts. But "in pain thou shalt bring forth children," and Eve began to realize the truth. The second child she named Abel, or "vanity." The two sons select their occupations; one becomes a farmer, the other a shepherd. But morality is the true test of manhood. The two built their altars and prepared to worship God. One brought of the fruit of the field and the other the firstling of his flock. Each brought of his own, but God for some reason had respect to the offering of Abel, but not to the offering of Cain.

The author of Hebrews thousands of years afterwards touched the most vital difference between the two when he said: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain." Faith was essential to all acceptable worship then as it is now. Cain's service seems to have been one of self-will, while Abel through faith may have seen that far away Sacrifice yet to redeem the world.

True service has its corresponding reaction upon the soul. We ask blessings that we never receive, but the blessing of asking is never denied. The reaction upon Cain shows the character of his worship. His blood grew hot and his countenance fell. And yet God reasoned with him. "Why art thou wroth? The cause and the remedy both lie with thyself. If thou doest well thou shalt be accepted, but if thou doest not well sin lieth at the door." The thought is that of a beast couching at the door of the heart ready to destroy it. Cain was in a position either to destroy or be destroyed. "Thou shouldst rule over it, but all depends upon thyself."

Our Attitude Toward God Is What Determines Our Future

It is so common to blame God or our fellows for whatever may come. One's attitude toward God is the one thing that determines his future. Begin by hating God and sin has marked you for its own. The two brothers left their altars and went out into the fields, but the spirit of their service went with them.

The smallest sins are but guide posts that show us the way to greater. There in the field Cain rose up against his brother and smote him to the earth. Thus hate culminated in murder. The two were alone. No eye had seen them save the eye of God. But no man can escape from himself. The voice of Abel's blood cried unto God. Sin, like an avenging shadow, follows the sinner. Whether large or small, it remains a memory not to be forgotten. One may suppress its voice, but the ability to do that shows the worst condition of all. It suggests the death of a soul before its time. So long as Cain hears the voice of God speaking from above, "Where is Abel, thy brother?" there is hope that he may repent. The blood that speaketh better things than that of Abel may answer, but no deception can take the place of penitence.

Cain professes not to know Abel's whereabouts, and justifies his ignorance by saying he is not his brother's keeper. The same question God thunders across the earth today, and the same answer is heard from every side. One sits in idle luxury, while another wastes himself through the long hours of toil and want. These two men are brothers, and yet the more fortunate has no concern as to the other. Why should he have? Have the keys to his brother's life been intrusted to him? Yes. The custody of a brother's welfare is something that even the poorest cannot escape. Kind words cost nothing, and sympathy means more than all else. Force can never take the place of interest. To take an interest in his fellows is man's chief duty.

Sympathy Toward Our Fellow Men Is the Highest Service

God is in no need of human assitance, but many of his children are. They cry from the ground where they lie in the squalor of sickness, poverty and misfortune. Consideration toward them is our highest service. Sympathy spans the abyss between men and men.

The curse of Cain set him apart from his kind. The very ground was to become his enemy. He was tiller of the soil, but the harvest mocked his sowing. Punishment is consequence rather than vengeance. It is a part of the crime. Cain sinned against light as he did against law. God told him of sin that lurked before his door. He might overcome it or be overcome by it. The latter was his choice. The same causes and the same results attend murder still. Anger unsuppressed will lead to it; envy and hate are contributing causes, and the penalty is ostracism. The murderer becomes a fugitive from his kind. Cain felt this. "A fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be in the earth." "And," replies Cain, "from thy face shall I be hid." The last judgment is the most terrible of all. There is no night so black as the absence of God. That Cain should have felt this shows the possibility of a future manhood. No one ever fell so far that he took not something of his better self along. Cain was afraid. The conscience that makes cowards of men attended him wherever he went. But God's mercy was not wanting. He set a mark upon him, lest any finding him might slay him. That mark he wore through life. Sin leaves its mark upon the sinner, and nothing can erase it but the grace of God.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—Man is the same in all ages and needing the same redemption. Sacrifice is an essential part of redemption. God is always ready to redeem. We are redeemed that we may redeem others.

In the botanical section of the archæological museum at Cairo we have an exhibition of all the flowers, plants and cereals recovered from Egyptian graves. And what has been particularly noted is that every vegetable growth known to the valley of the Nile today is there, nor has one varied in form, color or substance since the earliest history of the land.

So we may say these early records of Genesis show us that man (as he was) is man as we know man today. Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel, are our true ancestors, possessed of the same possibilities, actuated by the same impulses and capable of the same emotions as ourselves. Science has established the physical unity of the race; revelation asserts its spiritual identity. These lessons are as well adapted to our needs as if they were just issued from our presses.

Cain and Abel were sons of Adam and Eve. That they were the first two is not asserted. They seem to have been chosen to represent the contrasted tendencies of human life, the one choosing obedience and the other rebellion. Those who believe that every man is "the product of his heredity and his environment" seem to forget that Cain and Abel were brought up under the same discipline.

These Two Views of Sacrifice Spring from Contrasted Views of Sin

Verses 3-4—Worship of some kind has always existed. It has not always been intelligent, not always moral. It has been at times, like Cain's, filled with petulance or obstinancy or both. Whether a religion be helpful or harmful depends on whether it be man-made or God-made. But man-made religions have usually lacked either virility or morality, and commonly they have lacked both.

The difference between the offering of Cain and the offering of Abel appears to have sprung from their different views of sin, and that remains the distinction and marks the divergence between religions today. The one son seems to have regarded sin as venial, as something for which man might easily atone. The other, if we read the story aright, held sin to be something awful and deserving of death, for whose atonement blood must be shed. The produce of the field might be worth as much in the open market as the lamb from the fold, but its presentation did not speak the same conviction. Blood atonement is founded upon a wholly different conception of sin from bread atonement. And the religions of today which minimize sin repudiate Abel's offering.

Verse 5—Cain had invented a religion of his own and it satisfied him. To object to it wounded his pride. In the "Life of Tolstoy," compiled chiefly from his own writings, we find that when he was a young man of 26 he "determined to found a new religion" which should be "an improvement upon Christianity." And this while he was living a life of the most degrading type. Cain thought he could "improve" the religion he had received, but in his cult there was no heart-broken sense of the real nature of sin. God spurned such a religion, and from Cain's day to our own such a religion has been found barren and futile.

Even with Cain God Deals Graciously, and Offers Opportunity for Repentance

Verse 6—It is one of the characteristics of the Bible that from first to last God reasons with the sinner (Is. 1:18). God seeks to win Cain from his course by expostulation rather than by immediate death. But Cain reveals his passion in his countenance. Only he can bring to the house of God a cheerful face whose soul is at peace with God. A clouded brow is little consonant with the beauty of the temple. When heaven is in the heart man wears the face of an angel (Acts 6:15).

Verse 7—Cain is divinely reminded that acceptance with God depends upon obedience. If a man chooses a downward path, penalty may seem slow-footed, but his sin "coucheth at the door" like a wild beast ready to spring upon him in some unguarded moment.

Verse 8—If it be true that the only justification of penalty is the reformation of the sinner, we may as well suspend most of our laws, for the worst criminal is the sinner that having been oft reproved still hardens his neck (Prov. 29:1). Cain's anger and envy are easily roused to violence. Hatred provokes to murder (I. John 3:12, 15). What care we should exercise over our thoughts lest they lead to ungodly deeds! How anxiously we should inspect our creeds to see that they do not contain some bacillus of devilish passions! What increasing power has sin that it leads the soul surrendering to its guidance quickly to bloody excesses!

All True Religion Makes Each Man Responsible for His Brother's Welfare

Verse 9—Philosophy demands self-culture; religion, that we live for others. No sin, however far its field may be from human habitation, is hid from God.

Verse 10—The teaching of the Bible is that God will bring every secret act into open view and final judgment (Ecc. 12:14). "Murder will out." Blood has seemed from the first to "cry from the ground."

Verse 11—The old Greek dramas were for the most part founded upon a horror of domestic violence. They believed that a brother's murder was such a reversal of the divine demands that it must eventually be avenged.

Verse 12—Remorse unfits a man for even his commonest duties. It destroys peace. We see such an effect pictured in the story of Eugene Aram, who cries out, helplessly and hopelessly—

> "O God, that I could shut my mind
> And clasp it with a clasp!"

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning January 19, 1913

TOPIC—The barren fig tree. Luke 13:6-9.

No judgment of God is isolated. It works according to universal law, and to an all-comprehensive end. The Jewish nation was a barren fig tree; the Jewish nation was in imminent peril of being cut down.

There are three points to be considered: First, the fig tree was planted in the vineyard; second, the fig tree was barren; third, the fig tree, if not speedily changed to fertility, would be cut down.

The fig tree stood in a vineyard—an unlikely place for a fig tree in our western world, where the vines are arranged in trimly set rows along the hillside; but not an unusual place in the country where Jesus taught, where the vineyard often contained a variety of trees and shrubs quite different from the vines. The Semitic sense did not object to this mingling. As early as Deuteronomy 22:9 there was a law prohibiting the planting of two kinds of seeds in a vineyard, but this law was never understood as prohibiting the planting of a favorite fruit tree of any kind in a garden of grapes. The fig tree of the parable stands in the place where it has the richest of the soil, the warmest of the sun and the best of the attention of the gardener.

But every advantage is given in vain. It is now the third year since the owner of the vineyard came at intervals seeking figs. It is evidently the third year from the time when he might naturally have expected the fig tree to come into bearing.

Fig trees are intended to bear figs. This is the reason why men grow them. If they are sound trees, they must bear figs; because it is in their nature to do so. But this fig tree had only leaves. It made a fine display when seen from a little distance; but it yielded no fruit for its owner.

Such was Israel, a chosen people, elect to the highest privilege and set in God's best place. In other passages of the Bible Israel is herself sometimes spoken of as a vineyard. But it will not do for the interpreter to mix the symbols of the several passages, or he may find himself in serious difficulties. Here evidently the vineyard is the kingdom of God; and the kingdom is distinct from Israel—it is something that Israel may occupy for a time, or forever, if her occupation is profitable to the owner of the vineyard. But it is also something from which Israel may be thrust out.

All in vain there have been given to Israel the law, the prophets and the promises. All in vain has the Messiah been given. No fruit of righteousness has appeared. But there have been leaves in abundance—casuistical quibbles over the minutiæ of the law, whereby the law itself was made of no effect; theological disquisitions about the Messiah, which covered over and concealed the spiritual reality of Christ and his work. Righteousness, joy, peace, love and forgiveness were forgotten, while hypocrisy, greed, self-aggrandizement and self-righteousness flourished in their place. "Why doth it also cumber the ground?" It is not simply that the tree itself is barren; but it is taking to itself of the sun, and soil, and rain, and care, which might be given to other trees. It is stealing the nourishment from the roots of the trees and vines that grow around it.

It was the closing year of the ministry of Jesus. The time was long since past when, if the Jewish nation was ever to bear fruit, the signs of productiveness should appear. "The ax lieth at the root of the tree"; it is not yet uplifted to strike, but it is in full view, and ominous. The clear eye can already foresee the descent of the Roman ax. But the gardener pleads for the tree. He has spent many a day upon its rearing; he has grown to love it; he hopes that even yet he may be able to do something for it.

The Saviour stands as the Intercessor before the throne of God. Over against the fruitlessness of men he pleads the work of his own hands. And his plea is manifestly granted. This is not stated in words. It is only implied. The parable breaks off at this point, and the impression is deepened by the suppression of the conclusion.

We have said that the tree means the people of the Jews; but there is a personal significance in the parable which we must not overlook. The spiritual lesson it conveys is equally true whether the application is made to the condition of a world, a nation or an individual man. For the man indeed bears a whole world within his soul.

Christ has called his followers into the privilege and blessing of the kingdom that they may be fruitful. There is no such thing as an election unto privilege alone; for every opportunity bestowed upon us, every talent with which we are endowed, carries with it the concomitant obligation of faith and service.

And the reproach of barrenness is the most serious that can lie against a single servant of Christ, or an entire communion. Our Lord does not want ornamental Christians; he wants fruitful Christians. "Here is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples." The very glory of God is involved in our fruitfulness.

And thus it is as if Christ said to us: "Live out the best that is in you, the best that you can incorporate from the place wherein you stand. Discover your star, write your sonnet, preach your sermon, achieve your reform, give your cup of cold water to the least of my disciples, in my name."

No life is a true life unless it is fruitful. We may say this also with reference to any branch of the church of Christ. When the church has lost the power of going down into the gutter and taking hold of the poor, depraved, drunken wretch, and lifting him up, and setting him at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in his right mind—when the church has lost this power it has ceased to be the church of Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

January 26, 1913

NEW PREACHING OF THE OLD GOSPEL

TOPIC—Mission work at home and abroad. I. Evangelism. Acts 13:14-44.

The swift swing of the pendulum of present religious thought back to evangelism has been a notable characteristic of the year just ended. A twelvemonth ago social service had the right of way in religious discussion. The forms and methods and spirit of this alluring form of Christian service were the uppermost themes. With surprising promptness, the very leaders of social service, while not abating one jot of their interest in this as an essential form of ministry, have made public declaration of their conviction that evangelism cannot be supplanted and that it is as essential as ever. Nothing can take the place of drawing men to new life by the proclamation of the story of salvation. The only sure way of making over this old earth, with its complex sins and problems, is to win men to personal salvation in Jesus Christ.

Language changes and methods alter, but the truth of the gospel abides the same from age to age.

There can be no substitute for the human lips as the means of expressing the evangel. Some things can never be outgrown. One of these is the place of the human life as a medium of divine truth. In all the ages that this old earth may yet last, we shall not get beyond the need of the preacher, to declare by spoken word the love of God for man and the provision of a Saviour. The witness of individual to individual, the spoken testimony of those who have tasted and seen that God is good, will always remain the first and best means of winning men to Christ.

After its first wave of phenomenal prosperity there came a period of misuse and abuse of the Christian Endeavor society. Now pastors and other responsible leaders in Christian work are coming to see that the young people's organization, in its original form, is still indispensable to the work of the church. The Christian Endeavor idea of regular witness-bearing by young Christians, and of actual service for the Master, is fundamentally sound. It gives the disciple, in the full flush of early zeal, to the business of evangelism, which is the duty of all Christians. He is made a winner of other young people. The normal, wholesome, unprofessional evangelism of young Christians is an asset to the cause of Christ for which there can be no substitute.

There is some means, in this wonderful day of ours, whereby every Christian, without exception, may bear the evangel to the unevangelized.

The best friend is helpful in best ways. Is there any higher office of friendship than to lead a comrade to fellowship with the Saviour, whose life vivifies and glorifies all the relationships of life that are in him?

There is a life that is more eloquent than words. It preaches Christ by its very being. This life breathes the aspiration of Howard Arnold Walter—

I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure, for there are those who care;
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave, for there is much to dare.
I would be friend of all—the foe—the friendless;
I would be giving, and forget the gift;
I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
I would look up—and laugh, and love—and lift.

A generation ago tracts and colporteurs were recognized agencies of evangelism. These have fallen largely into disuse. Today we employ the daily newspaper, which, as a whole, reaches more people in a single day than all the tract societies could touch in a decade. The setting forth of the pleas of Christ to men through the newspaper is modern evangelism. In advertising space and in news columns, the secular press may carry the good news where the living voice of preacher could never penetrate.

Christian work may take many forms, but the evangelistic purpose should underlie them all.

Often the shortest route to a human heart is by way of the throne of God. Says John R. Mott: "We may differ as to wealth, social position, education, native ability, inherent characteristics. But in the matter of exercising the greatest force that is at work today we are all on the same footing. What right have we to leave unappropriated or unapplied the greatest force which God has ordained for the salvation and transformation of men, and for the inauguration and energizing of Christian movements?"

Dear God, I thank thee for the Christ,
Once cradled in a manger;
For thou and I can hold sweet tryst,
Linked by this lowly stranger.

I dread thee, God, the Mighty One,
With every glory laden;
But I can love thee in thy Son,
Born of the mother-maiden.

I see thee, God, in his dear face,
The Father condescending;
I thank thee for thy tender grace
And Gift, of worth unending.

Born in my soul would he might be,
Till I in him inherit
All that thou hast of good for me,
God, Father, Son and Spirit.

Nor seek I for myself alone
Blest visions of the manger;
Make thou the Christ to all men known,
On earth no more a stranger.

—Robert M. Offord

MISSIONARY WORK

Plea for Christian Education in China

A significant missionary pamphlet has been published by Herbert E. House of New York setting forth "The Tragedy and the Imperative of Christian Education in China." Mr. House was for a number of years a missionary in China, and during that time served as private tutor to the son of Yuan Shih Kai, who is now president of the new republic of China. In this position he came to understand the impatient desire of the progressive young men of China for western education; and the object of his writing now is to insist that with the new outreach of their country toward life and liberty, young Chinese are certain to obtain that education somewhere, and if the church does not supply opportunities, it will be a non-Christian education which they obtain. With all enlightened educators throughout Christendom Mr. House is, of course, convinced that education without the balance and restraints of religion is as apt to bring harm as to bring good "to them that are exercised thereby."

The progress which the church is making in providing such education for China—apparently very rapid from an American viewpoint, but terribly slow in comparison with the multiplication of opportunities among the Chinese—is what leads Mr. House to write of present conditions as nothing less than "tragedy," and he believes that if the church only understood how urgent is this Chinese call it would feel the "imperative" of the demand for at least the immediate equipment of the Christian institutions already established in that land. Mr. House's particular connection is with the American committee fostering the Canton Christian College, and it is for that institution that he is especially laboring, but his argument is a generous one and applies to every missionary educational institution in the wonderful new Oriental republic beyond the Pacific.

Church at Kam U, South China

Beginning in a small shop, this church now has 150 members. Toward the erection of the new building the members gave the site and $1,300 in silver.

Social Service of Indian Students

The Continent has before alluded to the interest and significance of the social service reports which Forman Christian College at Lahore, India, collects from its students at the end of every summer vacation. The students are organized in a "league of service" which pledges them to do some particular labor for the benefit of their countrymen during their summer's freedom from school. As showing the advance of interest and zeal in this direction, it is noted that whereas in the fall of 1911 only thirty-nine students had definite reports to make, there were fifty-eight who handed in creditable accounts of unselfish activity when the school reconvened in the fall of 1912. The most of this service has been in the line of teaching ignorant neighbors in the vicinity of students' homes or lending books to those who know how to read but have not had the advantage of schooling. A number occupied considerable time in reading to illiterate persons. Some gave lectures to audiences of the more intelligent peasants, especially lectures on hygiene and sanitation. A few used knowledge attained through their science courses in college to prescribe medicine for common diseases among the poor. Taken all in all, the sum of their labors indicates the effectiveness of a form of "university extension" which is none the less useful for being entirely outside academic traditions.

Mrs. Forman's Death Loss to Mission

In the death of Mrs. Henry Forman at Lausanne, Switzerland, the North India mission has suffered its second recent loss. Mrs. Forman had gone with their only child, John, aged 10, to Switzerland when the time for furlough had come, and Dr. Henry Forman was to follow as soon as someone had been sent to occupy his post in Gwalior, the strategic point which the mission, after a lapse of years, has again taken over in one of the strong native states not directly under British rule. Mrs. Forman contracted pneumonia in Lausanne, and when her condition was serious a cable was sent. Dr. Forman arrived two weeks before her death on Dec. 1. Mrs. Forman was one of those rare spirits to have known whom is a pleasant recollection. She came of a family with a great missionary history, for she was a Newton. Four sons and two daughters of John Newton, the great Presbyterian pioneer in India, followed him in his life work.

Dr. Forman arrived in New York with his son Dec. 29, after an absence of eight years in India. He will spend part of his time on furlough in writing a biography of his father, C. W. Forman, D. D., that will really be a story of the two missions in northern India. Mr. Weld of the Arthur Ewing Christian College has been sent to hold Gwalior until his return.

Christianity and Chickens in India

The hen is coming into her own as a missionary agent. Professor Arthur E. Slater, who went out to the Allahabad Christian College to teach agriculture and is now stationed at Etah under the North India Presbyterian mission, writes that chicken raising is to be one of the means of "building up a self-supporting, self-respecting Indian Christian church" out of the low caste of converts, who now number 11,000 in the Etah district alone. There is absolutely no opening before them, as a general rule, since they come from the sweeper and "chumar" communities and are virtually outcasts. Their poverty and need is appalling.

Thoroughbred chickens are to be distributed through the villages of such a stock as will produce 200 instead of fifty eggs a year, the standard the present Indian hen is content to lay by. The plan is to be on the cooperative basis. Etah will soon be in direct communication with Delhi by a new railroad and the new capital with its large English population will increase the demand for fowl and eggs, even though the pious Hindu still refuses to eat either from religious scruples. The old camel cart in which American visitors in the past have gone to visit the McGaws and others in Etah will find itself superseded by the locomotive; and opportunity has come knocking at the doors of the Etah people. Silk worms may be introduced later as a further means of helping the people.

All of this goes to show the largeness of the missionary enterprise. Mr. Slater's father, the late Rev. T. E. Slater, was one of the best informed philosophical authors on higher Hinduism. The son is working with the same evangelical aim, but on the practical side.

A Request Never Out of Date

Rev. R. P. Gorbold of Kyoto, Japan, whose plea for prayer was so urgent while on furlough, writes to the Board of the Northwest: "We have been back on the field six weeks and everything is budding with promise. The most significant thing is the approachableness of all classes. All that is necessary for Japanese workers and missionaries is to have a message which meets the needs of the darkened hearts. The message must be from God and must be presented in the power of the Holy Spirit. This can be accomplished only through prayer. Far be it from anyone to think that it is only old prose when a request comes from the mission field for prayer. It is the vital life of every evangelistic effort. I hope that your board may be able to enlist the prayers of every woman in your territory who calls herself Christian."

Happiness for Siamese Lepers

Acknowledging receipt of a gift for the Laos Leper Asylum, Dr. J. W. McKean writes from Chieng Mai, Siam: "It means much of comfort to these people. Today two lepers came from a village six days distant, and right glad they seemed to be to find a place where they were really welcome, for this asylum is the only spot in the kingdom of Siam where the leper is free from the feeling that he is despised and feared and hated. These two lepers complete the first 100 of this unfortunate class who have received benefit. A real change takes place in the feelings and the faces of these people when they come to us. Visitors during the past year noticed the happy looks of our well cared for Christian lepers. All the more than seventy lepers now in the asylum are Christians save four or five, who have come to us recently. While the disease is evidently but feebly contagious, yet no one who has lived in lands where it prevails can doubt that it is contagious. We continually exercise care when going about the asylum."

Board Notes and Announcements

—Mrs. Covert of First church led Friday morning. Mrs. T. E. Clark of Clarinda, Iowa, president of Corning Presbyterial Society, was cordially welcomed and gave a cheering message. The foreign secretaries brought word from Mrs. Neal of Africa, Mrs. Dr. Walker and Mrs. Eckels of Siam and Miss Keach of India. Miss Rumsey told of a traveler's appreciation of Mrs. Fleming of Lahore and Mrs. Robinson gave news from Mrs. Clark of the same station, now at Wooster, Ohio. The field secretary, Mrs. Engstrom, gave a lively account of recent tours.

—A special meeting for women in connection with the China propaganda will be held in Second church, corner 20th street and Michigan avenue, on Monday, Jan. 20, at 2 p. m. The speakers will be Doctors Bible and Williams of China and Brown of the Assembly's board.

NEW BOOKS

A Practicable Platform for Eugenics

The Task of Social Hygiene, by Havelock Ellis. The theory of race improvement is slowly working into the social conscience of the leading nations. And this fact is prophetic of a new joy and a new freedom in life. Man's success in breeding animals and plants has prompted a tardy albeit energetic interest in methods for the social direction of his own heredity. From this interest there has emerged a new science, now widely known as eugenics, or race culture. It is one of the new things under the sun.

Throughout the ages God alone has had to deal with the breeding of men. He has received but little if any conscious cooperation on their part. Science, always in accord with truth, and fettered in later years only by its own limitations, has now come to the biological aid of what rational men call God. Scientists have found flaws in the old order of things. They have thought for years that the only great hope of improving the human species lay in applying the facts of heredity. In the meantime, a mass of facts has been gathered by investigators, sociologists, physicians and others, so that what once was silently thought to be true is now emphatically expressed as truth.

Havelock Ellis was one of the first constructive social scientists to see and champion the possibilities of race culture. As the foremost student of the sex question, from its morbid side in low life and high to its mystical reaches in the flowers of humanity, he was specially susceptible to the dynamic appeal of this new science. He has explored it as perhaps no other man could have done; for Havelock Ellis's vision, scientific instinct, temperament and training constitute a unique equipment for research and interpretation in this realm of lights and shadows.

Now a new and vital idea, presented with scientific poise by an acknowledged authority, is irresistible. There is no escaping the compelling impact upon mind and heart of the evolutionary idea which Mr. Ellis elaborates in this work. No other civilization has developed a social program so broad in its scope, so fundamentally humanistic in its aims, so workable in an enlightened society and so universal in its appeal as that which he offers the world in this epochal book. We cannot overestimate the value of truth that is rooted deep in life and branches out into the kingdom of God on earth. That is why none may attach too much importance to the plan for racial betterment which is here proposed. It is not extravagant to venture the judgment that Mr. Ellis's work will live and fruit through the oncoming centuries, and that in relation to unborn generations it will rank as one of the most useful services that any individual ever has rendered to society.

Mr. Ellis is not radical. He does not champion drastic legislation as a means of achieving social hygiene. He relies upon the diffusion of knowledge to bring it about. To him eugenics has a meaning which transcends all its physical aspects. And yet he does not permit it to enter the sphere of religion. He is not sure about the elevation of the race through eugenics, but he is convinced that this method must be invoked in order to preserve the race. He urges the teaching of sexual hygiene by qualified persons to children, but remarks that teachers today are themselves untaught in this fine art. He outlines the requirements of competent teachers.

"The Task of Social Hygiene" is a book of facts, inspiration and the power of living truth for the laity and the learned. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $2.50 net.

Some Recent Fiction

The Midlanders, by Charles Tenney Jackson. Geographically speaking, the inhabitants of Iowa, with a portion of whom this book is concerned, are accurately designated as "midlanders." It is a story of a present-day village and its people presented with understanding and sympathy. The action centers about the fortunes of a young woman, Aurelie, but there are a number of other characters who engage the reader's interest—the country editor, the religious fanatic, the unsurrendered one-legged Confederate soldier, the woman school superintendent of advanced ideas, and the undertaker, from whom the author succeeds in extracting a good share of the abundant humor in his story. There is no lack of action, and the denouement, while unexpected, is satisfying. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.35 net.

The Green Devil, by Arthur Metcalf. The "Green Devil" is not an automobile, as the reader may learn from the subtitle, which describes the story as a romance of Thornton Abbey in the days of John Wyclif. Near the ruins of this old abbey the author spent his childhood, and it was a happy and romantic impulse that led him to reconstruct in fancy the ruined walls and repeople the ancient building with its monkish inmates of other days. It is a stirring time to which we are introduced, and the people brought before us are real and vivid, with their loves, their hates, their ambitions and their adventures. To outline the story would not be fair to the prospective reader, whose interest is not likely to abate until he has reached the final page. [Pilgrim Press, Boston. $1.20 net.

The Jingo, by George Randolph Chester. The well-known author of get-rich-quick stories has here an entirely different setting for his tale of finance, love and royal politics, and makes of it one of the liveliest books that have appeared in a long time—though high moral tone is not noticeably in evidence. Jimmy Smith, a live young American, is shipwrecked on the shore of an inaccessible land with nothing but a handbook of modern shop practice and formulas. The inhabitants know nothing of modern inventions or business, but Jimmy soon manages to make everything for them from glass and soap to automobiles and aeroplanes. He fills the king brim full of patriotism of the American kind and ambitions of the Wall street variety. Incidentally there is a charming princess with whom Jimmy cannot help but fall in love in spite of the villain prince who is supposed to have a prior claim on her affections. It is interesting to see the way the new arrival makes things hum after his advent. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.35 net.

Travel and Description

The Romance of Nice, by J. D. E. Loveland. Nice was a hot, dusty town, worth only a cursory glance, thought that enthusiast over Italian cities, Augustus J. C. Hare. Other authors, too, have passed it by in silence or with little mention. But Mr. Loveland has found romance, interest and historic and natural individuality in this old city, and his book, free from the disadvantages which may inhere in that heat and dust of which Mr. Hare warns us, is altogether enticing. Not only does Nice boast an interesting history, but the flora of the Riviera, which can be studied from the city, is varied, beautiful and of economic value. The armchair traveler will especially enjoy the historical and anecdotal character of Mr. Loveland's book. Even as late as 1840 there is a mediæval flavor to the story of the death of the violinist Paganini, and the trouble consequent on the refusal of the church to grant to his body the privileges of one who had died in the faith. [Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York.

South America, painted by A. S. Forrest and described by W. H. Koebel. The outstanding feature of this impressive volume is the series of reproductions of water color paintings made throughout South America by Mr. Forrest. Perhaps nowhere has a more representative nor more truly interpretative collection of South American pictures been made available. They are incomparably more informative than the most accurate photographs could hope to be, for the soul of the country is revealed through them as it could not be by any mechanical process. But the descriptive writing of Mr. Koebel is not a minor feature of the book. He knows our ignorance of South America and he has set out to enlighten us. Many readers will be surprised by the wonderful extent to which the romance of enterprise has crowded out the older romance of guitar, dagger and silver spurs in this country, which was once a collection of patches of local colors, but which is now becoming a group of powerful world factors in commerce and international influence. Although the book, like the continent it describes, is luxurious and filled with color, it is also full of the modern spirit of that continent and may be read by the American business man for profit as well as by the seeker after interest and romance. [Macmillan Company, New York. $5 net.

New Volumes of Verse

Fires, by Wilfrid Wilson Gibson. The rhymed tales of life among humble and exploited people told in this volume might be said to constitute a school of poetry which might be called the purgatorial school. Mr. Gibson can write beautiful verse, his technique is good, and as the introductory poem to this volume shows he can summon rich fancies to do his bidding. But Mr. Gibson sees us as parasites on the poor people who have to slave and bleed that we may live in luxury, and he wishes to convict us of sin. Hence a poem beginning—

"Since Thursday he'd been working overtime,
With only three short hours for food and sleep . . ."

describes the horrors of overspeeding at those presses which print colored Christmas books for children.

Not all of these poems, however, deal with cities and factories; the perils of the sea are here also; and the tragedies of domestic relationships. The lover of poetry for its own sake will not like this wrenching of poetry's impulse into sociological channels. The narrative interest is so intense and absorbing that he will wish prose had been the vehicle employed. But the power and poignancy of Mr. Gibson's themes cannot be denied, and as an awakener of the sleeping social conscience these poems deserve a wide and long vogue. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Green Helmet, and Other Poems, by William Butler Yeats. The green helmet is a bone of contention between Cuchulain, Conall and Laegire, the three chief characters in a one-act heroic farce, and their followers. It is left among them by a "Red Man" from the sea, who has previously demanded the head of one of them in return for Conall's decapitation of him on a previous visit. How the helmet causes their servants and their wives—especially their wives—to quarrel, how Cuchulain settles the difficulty and discloses the real significance of the stranger's apparently grim jesting, should be discovered by the reader from Mr. Yeats himself. Suffice it to say that this "farce" has real beauty, real humor and real ethical significance. Of the other poems in the volume many are very slight. Some have a special interest to lovers of the Abbey theater; and one, "Upon a House Shaken by the Land Agitation," is a rather supercilious fling at land reform that the author might well have left to the more practiced politico-poet, Rudyard Kipling. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

Miscellaneous

The Vicar's Excursion, by Du Bois H. Loux. This is an autobiography of the author's not yet long life, detailing the various stormy experiences encountered in pastoral service of churches in Chicago, Meriden, Conn., and in New York. Mr. Loux has come to be an out-and-out Socialist, and what he expects to prove through this book is that the church is ignobly subservient to modern business influences. [Workers Press, New York City. $1.25 net.

In Memoriam: John F. Dryden. This handsomely printed volume includes many tributes to the late senator and insurance president, together with several portraits splendidly reproduced. [Prudential Insurance Company, Newark, N. J.

The Open Hearth

In Defense of the Home Board

A letter appeared in The Continent Dec. 19 signed by Dr. J. L. Weaver, chairman of the home mission committee of Pueblo Presbytery, and as pastor-evangelist of the two northern presbyteries of Colorado (Boulder and Denver) I would, with the approval of the chairman of each of my committees, make the following reply thereto:

We do not make answer as to Pueblo Presbytery, but will say that in this territory we have never at any time had occasion to complain of the lack of understanding, sympathy or financial response on the part of the Board of Home Missions. The word as to new work has always been in these words: "If you have anything to develop or organize that needs our help, put it up to the board"; "It is our business to act on facts—give us the actual facts." That is all we have ever done, and the response has been both prompt and adequate.

Furthermore, the writer is the secretary of the Colorado Home Missions Council that this year made the statewide survey, and it came to him at that time from the pastor-evangelist of Pueblo Presbytery that our board had given him all the freedom that could be desired to equip new work in unchurched communities, but with the rest of us he was to avoid unseemly scramble for denominational advantage, and not to overlap. On this basis we are proceeding.

The church seems slow to understand that there is such a thing as pauperizing fields; that home mission money is a sacred trust to be administered not as a subsidy but as an aid to supplement the best the field can do always.

Some things might be said about the situation in Pueblo Presbytery as to home mission matters from the standpoint of other presbyteries in this synod, and it would be commendatory. Why could not Dr. Weaver emphasize the splendid generosity of the board to the fields within its bounds and count on its help to reach the unreached as rapidly as the work assumed that stage where the board can legitimately undertake the responsibility? There are some things it cannot do, but we challenge the statement that it does not do what it can rightfully do in justice to a continent-wide responsibility. C. H. Powell.

Calls "Rev. C. Abraham" Impostor

A few weeks ago an Arabian, calling himself Rev. C. Abraham, claiming to be a minister of the Northern Presbyterian Church and engaged in work among his countrymen at Norfolk, Va., was in this city soliciting money. He had what seemed to be good testimonials. But the official representatives of the Presbyterian Church North assure me that there is no minister by that name in their body, while our ministers at Norfolk say they have never heard of him. I write this to warn people. This is the third time within the last few years that I have been approached by Asiastics whose claims did not stand investigation.

J. Keir G. Fraser,
Minister of Second Presbyterian Church,
Charleston, S. C.

Will Have His Hands Full

I notice in The Open Hearth a proposal to nominate Woodrow Wilson for moderator of the General Assembly. Why pile that burden on him at this time? As much as I esteem the honor of our church, I think it would be more of a burden than honor to the President-elect. I think Woodrow Wilson the third great President to go to the White House, but he will be loaded down with work there.

D. H. Dunham.

Prominent Men and the Sabbath

I saw that Woodrow Wilson was to start in the morning from Staunton, Va., and reach home by Sunday night, thus breaking the entire Sabbath. This is very exasperating to real old-fashioned Presbyterians.

Then when we remember that Thomas R. Marshall, the man who destroyed the local option law in Indiana—the best law that ever was spread on record since I have been a voter—last spring was called to Washington, D. C., to address the Y. M. C. A., and after delivering his address on Saturday night started home to Indianapolis on the Sabbath, it is very humiliating to true Presbyterians to see our church papers lauding such Sabbath breakers as Presbyterians. J. P. L. Weems.

That Austin Church in Wartime

As a Southern Presbyterian I read The Continent regularly in order to try to keep up with the current of events in the great branch of the Presbyterian Church which you represent with ability. In the interest of fairness and truth, I ask that you allow the following statement a place in your columns.

In the issue of Nov. 14 there appeared a brief editorial regarding the situation of Presbyterianism in Austin, Texas, styled "Slaveholders and Yet Unionists." There are just two facts that I would like to add to what was given in that notice. The first is, that when the church at Austin changed its connection from Central Texas Presbytery to a presbytery in Kansas the whole of the state official force (Austin being the capital) was in the hands of aliens, and the authorities in command let it be clearly known that no rebel need apply for any office. Second, that when the church by a majority vote transferred from the Southern Assembly it took the building away from the old Southern Presbyterian elder who had given the lot upon which the building stood.

John V. McCall.

Facts of the Federal Council Meeting

Pastors are urged to obtain from the office of the Federal Council, 215 4th avenue, New York City, copies of a letter issued by the committee on correspondence containing a summary of the recent quadrennial conference in Chicago. The cost is 75 cents a hundred.

Dr. Niccolls on Lay Moderatorship

THERE HAVE appeared in The Continent certain nominations for moderator of the approaching General Assembly of our church. These suggested nominations concern two of the foremost citizens of our country—William Jennings Bryan and Woodrow Wilson, President-elect.

The writers who made these suggestions were well meaning, but unconsciously they have subjected the church to unfavorable criticism, and have not helped the illustrious men whose names they have mentioned. The latter may well say, "Deliver us from our friends."

Their suggestions bring up the old question of an elder moderator. The moderatorship, the highest honor which the church can confer on anyone, so far as official position is concerned, has hitherto been confined to the clergy. This has been the case from apostolic times and the first council in Jerusalem to the present. It has been invariably so in the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. Nor is this merely an ancient custom which growing intelligence demands should be set aside. It is the law of our branch of the church. Our form of government declares that "the pastor's office is first in the church, both for dignity and usefulness." It also provides that he is to be the moderator of the session.

The requirements for the duties of the presiding officers of the higher judicatories indicate that they are to be filled by someone chosen from among the bishops or pastors. It is true that some have regarded this as only an inference, but it must be remembered that this interpretation of our constitution has been sanctioned in a formal way by the vote of the presbyteries and so has become established law. Over twenty-five years ago an earnest attempt was made to open the way for the election of an elder moderator. In order to do this, so that there could be no doubt as to the validity of such an election, an amendment to the form of government was overtured to the presbyteries providing for the election of elders to the moderatorship if the Assembly so chose. This was voted down. There can be no higher authority for the interpretation of the law of the church than the action of the presbyteries. This is the great ecclesiastical referendum.

This interpretation, whether it was wise or unwise, must stand as the law of the church until it is repealed. It would be lawlessness on the part of the General Assembly to ignore this action and, on the impulse or excitement of the hour, break through the restraint of this ancient law.

Besides, what high-minded elder would be willing to accept an office for which he did not have a legal title?

One of the chief reasons for the failure to adopt the amendment at the time was the fear that it would lead to political complications or to the identifying of the Assembly with political measures. Ecclesiatical politics are sometimes bad enough, but to mix them with state or national politics would add to the evil. As far as possible, the church should stand aloof from such relations. Yet now it is proposed to elect to the highest office in the church one of two men, one the recognized leader of the Democratic party, and the other the President-elect. Why is this?

There are, God be praised, hundreds and thousands of elders in the church their equal in piety and devotion and in knowledge of the affairs of the church, and equally capable of presiding as moderator; and when this is said in their praise, nothing more need be said. But these persons named have the additional distinction of being great and renowned leaders in the political world. This indeed should not disqualify them for an ecclesiastical office, but is it proper to urge it as a qualification? It is not the function of the church to give its highest honor to great inventors or discoverers or authors or politicians or statesmen.

There is still another reason to show the unwisdom of the suggestion. It is indeed a satisfaction to our branch of the church that the two illustrious men named are officers in it. Let us rejoice that they are Christian men of the highest type; but why injure their great national influence, as Christian citizens, by tagging them before the nation on all occasions as belonging to the Presbyterian Church? No one body of Christians in the republic is so strong in numbers as the Roman Catholic Church. Suppose that one of this communion was elected to the high office of governor or President, and that upon every public occasion that church brought them forward, boasting that they represented Catholicism. Would we regard it as fitting?

In this country we are careful to maintain separation between church and state. Past experience shows the necessity for this. Hero worship is good within its limitations, but we hurt the higher influence of our public men when we insist upon identifying them with any ecclesiastical denomination.

President-Elect Wilson in his high office will not be there as a Presbyterian elder but as the representative of the whole Christian people. Let us honor him and pray for him as is our duty, but not embarrass him by a rash zeal which would make him the tail to fly our ecclesiastical kite to a greater height.

It is not great wealth or statesmanship or high secular office or masterly leadership in the political world that makes an elder worthy of the highest honor that the church can confer on him. It is rather his devotion to the church, and his self-sacrifice for it. Better leave the old custom and law stand unimpaired. Ministers have devoted their lives to the cause of the gospel. They have renounced wealth and worldly honors. They have by years of special study prepared themselves for their work. By their profession they are debarred from public office and leadership in secular affairs. Their nomination to the chief office in ecclesiastical meetings is not unreasonable. It is at least a barrier to the entrance of political and worldly ambition that might result disastrously. Nor are the elders desirous of the innovation. They are content to give what they can to the ministry of our Lord's appointment—men who are called to be ambassadors for him.

When it was proposed by some to evade the law and custom of the church and nominate ex-President Harrison for the moderatorship, he purposely absented himself from the meeting of the General Assembly. There is no reason to suppose that the next President of the United States would consent to the use of his name for the moderatorship, nor would Mr. Bryan with his high sense of honor accept an office when his election to it would be tainted by illegality. Samuel J. Niccolls.

St. Louis.

When Johnnie Saved the Day for Teacher

(Continued from page 80)

Accordingly, she rang the bell. Two minutes passed and not a child appeared. The commissioner compared his watch with the schoolroom clock.

"I presume," said he, "that you begin school promptly at 1."

"Oh, yes," agreed the teacher.

Where were those children? Had they run away for the first time in their lives? No, there stood the dinner pails, each speaking for one honest soul. From Johnnie the faithful to Peter Barnes the uncertain every pail expressed loyalty. "Perhaps the wind prevented their hearing the bell," suggested the teacher. "I'll ring it again."

As the last note of the bell died away and the clock pointed to one minute before opening time, the teacher looked relieved. "They are coming," she said, and turning from the door she stood behind her desk and waited.

Indeed they were coming. The commissioner soon heard what had caught the teacher's ear!

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching,
Cheer up, comrades, they will come."

"They have probably formed a procession," observed the teacher when reference to the "starry flag" was borne on the air. "They sometimes do that of their own accord—they are beautiful children."

When the procession reached the platform, music ceased and there was heard a shuffling of bare feet before Johnnie commanded "Left foot, right foot," and the parade entered the door, marching two by two. Each child carried arms full of wild flowers, and serious-faced, without noticing the visitor in the corner, they marched in and divided before the desk in two lines. These lines of four, keeping perfect step, marched toward the back of the room, one line on each outer side. Meeting at the center aisle, they marched down, two by two, once more, until they reached the teacher's desk, where each child deposited a burden of bloom and then marched on and waited for the signal to be seated.

The teacher smiled, although her cheeks grew bright red. "Children," said she in uncertain voice, for she feared the commissioner's disapproval, "I thank you. Now you may open your books and study your lessons. Chart class, one, two——"

"Wait, if you please," interrupted the commissioner, although the chart class, Petey Barnes and Jakey Spooner, were ready for the third signal to march.

"You may be seated," said the teacher to the chart class. "Boys and girls, allow me to introduce to you the commissioner of our county."

The big man walked cautiously forth and stood beside the stove, with his back to the door.

"I wish to ask you," he began, "why you brought these flowers to your teacher? The boy on the back seat may tell me."

"If you please, sir," answered Johnnie, rising and speaking in respectful manner, "if you please, we love her."

"She is a good teacher, is she?"

"Best in the United States, sir," was the reply.

"Good, my boy; you may be seated. Do you all like your teacher?" was his further inquiry.

A vigorous nodding of eight heads convinced the school commissioner that the teacher was a favorite with her pupils.

"Do you know the names of all these flowers you have gathered? This little girl please answer?"

"Yes, sir, we know the name and the history of every flower in our woods, and we know the birds' names, too, and their habits and about the trees!" announced Melissa Horton, who was such a discouraging pupil on questions of physiology.

"Who taught you all this?" demanded the commissioner.

"Our teacher! She knows jest everything!"

"Then I must leave you," remarked the commissioner, closing his watch with a loud snap. "If your teacher knows everything and she is the best teacher in the United States, it won't be necessary for me to stay here until 4 o'clock, as I planned to do, to find out if she is the right kind for our county. Good afternoon."

Johnnie for one moment feared his plan had failed after all, because when the school commissioner was out of sight his teacher buried her face in the blossoms on her desk and wept.

"They are happy tears," the teacher straightway explained when she looked up and smiled.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 78)

"Don't you worry, Sam. It'll be all right."

But when Charlie Elmore, going for his lesson next morning, carried to Bradford a note inclosed in a sealed envelope which bore no superscription, matters proved to be far from right. The message which accompanied the check was not long, but it sent every particle of color from Horton's face and made him flame within with wrath. It read:

"Dear Sir: Regretting that I was a party to your late ill-advised arrest, I write to say the bank incloses its check to reimburse you for the expense it has indirectly caused you in connection with the death of Andrew Drum.

"Richard P. Elmore.

"To William Drum."

"Charlie," said Bradford, when he could command his voice, "this needs an answer at once. I'll write it, if you'll take it back, and you needn't stay to recite this morning."

The boy asked no questions. With the rapidly written reply he hurried to the bank, where Mr. Elmore looked up in surprise at his speedy return.

"Back so soon?" he asked. "Is your teacher sick?"

"No," said the boy, "I think he's mad. When he read your note his face turned white as a sheet, then he sat down and wrote this note off like lightning, and said he couldn't hear me today. What's the row, grandfather?"

Ignoring the question, Mr. Elmore tore open the letter.

"Dear Sir: I regret that you have made it impossible for me to teach your grandson longer, and I add, as the bank has caused me no expense, directly or indirectly, I return the check. Bradford Horton.

"To Richard P. Elmore."

In his grandfather's face the boy could read anger as hot as Horton's had been, and he repeated his question, "What's the row, grandfather?"

"I shall have to find you another teacher, Charlie, that's all."

"But I don't want any other teacher."

"It cannot be helped, boy. Your teacher will not hear you any more."

"Won't? Well, what's the row, grandfather? What have I done?"

"Nothing. It is all on my account, my son, and you would not understand it."

"Why wouldn't I understand?"

"It is too long a story for this morning, Charlie, and I am busy. Your teacher is an impostor, that is all the trouble, and he is angry at me for knowing it."

Then Charles Elmore grew angry, but he did not dare to show it before his grandfather. Home he went, and poured out his heart to his mother.

"It's too bad. It knocks me for Yale. If I can't go this fall with Elmore Miller, I'll never go."

"Don't lose your head, my son. Mr. Horton has lost his, or your grandfather has lost his, or they have both lost their heads. Don't you lose yours. Just keep cool. I'll find out something about this."

Meanwhile, at the bank, the president was having an uncomfortable time. Taking up the returned check, after he had quieted his anger a little, he called Maxwell. "Sam," he said, "here's your check back. Young Drum is more fool than I thought. Throws away good money and stops the little Charlie brought him in each week. Won't hear Charlie any more."

"I knew he'd do that. I told you to let well enough alone. Did you call him Drum?"

"Of course. That's who he is."

"That may be, but we're not called upon to rub it in."

"Sam, are you a fool, too? I don't rub it in by calling a man by his name."

"Perhaps he's trying to escape from all memory of the name, and the old reprobate who bore it."

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Elmore impatiently. "Don't sentimentalize over a fellow who's assumed a name to make himself pass for something he isn't. Here, take the check, and he can debit and credit himself this afternoon."

Maxwell, however, returned after a little to say, "Mr. Horton will neither debit nor credit himself, Mr. Elmore. He came in just now, took a few things that belonged to him, and has gone."

"Gone? Gone where?"

"Out of our employ."

"You don't mean to say Drum has left the books?"

"Yes; he bade me good-by, said he could work here no more, and went out."

"Did he give his reasons?"

"No. I asked for them, and he referred me to you."

"Say anything about me?"

"No."

"Sam, he beats me. He's the queerest compound of impostor and gentleman that I have ever known."

"He certainly is a gentleman, Mr. Elmore, and I do not think he is an impostor."

"Sam, I know he is. I tell you I know. I can prove it." Whereupon the first gentleman of Prestonbury walked out of the bank in high dudgeon, more angry than Maxwell had ever seen him.

His troubles were not yet over. His daughter-in-law was awaiting him in the library of his home. He was very fond of Caroline Elmore, the widow of his son, who had died twelve years ago, and the only sister of Samuel Maxwell. A very accomplished musician, she had been for several years the soprano at the "Old Furnace," and there had become greatly interested in the young tenor, whom, moreover, she had no intention of losing as teacher for her boy.

"Good morning, father." Her voice was soft and clear. "You look troubled. Is anything wrong at the bank?"

"No, no. Nothing wrong." The tone was weary. Then suddenly, speaking sharply, he said, "Yes, everything's wrong. Our bookkeeper has left."

"What? Has Mr. Hobbs gone?"

"No; Hobbs is teller now. That student man, that seminary man. It seems almost as if there were no other man in the city."

"Oh, you mean Mr. Horton?"

"No, I mean William Drum."

"Father, don't call Mr. Horton that. He is a splendid man. Everyone calls him Horton, and you will only attract unkind notice. He——"

The man broke in almost fiercely. "Caroline Elmore, he is an impostor. He told me in yonder room that he was the son of Henry Horton of Glencoe, and I know he is not. I believed him when he told me, but I have learned positively that his story was false, and right on the heels of my discovery comes the testimony of that old vagabond, Andrew Drum, that he is his son, and that I believe."

"Is it worth while to sacrifice Charlie to that belief, father?"

"I'll not sacrifice Charlie. I can get him a dozen teachers."

"But I don't want a dozen, father. I want this one."

"Have you been talking with Sam?"

"No."

"What makes you so strenuous about this particular man?"

"Charlie's need, father. I have never seen you so unfair, so unkind before. Is it worth your while to spend your strength in trying to discredit an almost friendless young man? I do not know what you wrote to him, but it has evidently hurt him deeply to have caused his action of today. And you are hurting us all, and yourself, more. Whatever you wrote, recall it."

"I cannot, Caroline. He is an impostor. He lied to me, and I cannot overlook it."

"Not if it destroys Charlie's chance for Yale?"

"It will not, Caroline. There are plenty of teachers. I can find one. Money will do anything."

Caroline Elmore gave it up and went home sad-hearted. She had never before heard her father-in-law speak so. She did not know of the wound to his pride from Rosalie, which conspired with his chagrin at being deceived in a man he had trusted and his fear because of that man's interest in his daughter to make him both unjust and unreasonable. She saw only that his temper was most unlike himself, and not knowing the cause she could not understand it. (To be continued)

Ways of Working

Publicity in Small Towns

Photography plays an important part in the publicity methods used by Rev. Delmar B. Ralston of Litchfield, Neb., in two pastorates. He says: "Never let a class social, hike, picnic or banquet pass without having a post card picture made and sold or given away. Each one present will want one and will show it to others." His plans have been used successfully for churches of less than 100 members in towns of less than 2,000, but may be adapted to others.

In connection with announcements in papers of the regular meetings he inserts educational and inspirational items of information not known to people who do not real religious papers. He always emphasizes the Sunday school. Displays in downtown windows of hand work in the departments of the church are attractive. These are also used at county and district conventions. Mr. Ralston also finds that two to six minutes before the sermon spent in explaining the work of the Sunday school and giving facts about it stimulates interest and attendance. In the pastoral visits the work of Sunday school is urged, and interest obtained.

Junior Christian Endeavor in Morning

In First church of Fort Morgan, Colo., the junior Christian Endeavor society meets at the hour of the morning church service. The juniors attend church in a body, sitting in front pews reserved for them, and after the opening exercises of the service the pastor gives them a special sermonette. Then they retire to the chapel, and under direction of their superintendents have their own exercises, joining their parents at the close of church. This church has found this junior meeting instrumental in helping to solve the problem of training the children in the habit of church attendance. The arrangement does not interrupt the Sunday afternoon at home when busy fathers have the opportunity to get in closer touch with their children.

Stereopticon Helps Evening Service

The stereopticon is being used generally by ministers in Montana as a means of attracting non-churchgoers and interesting the public generally. It has been found a means of helping the work, especially the Sabbath evening service. Rev. J. Forsyth Smith of Miles City, Rev. N. H. Burdick of Helena, Rev. E. P. Giboney of Great Falls, Rev. E. J. Groeneveld of Butte, have been using the stereopticon successfully for two years. Rev. S. F. Entorf of Belgrade and Rev. J. F. Cheesman of Manhattan have recently introduced this method and find it very acceptable, interesting and instructive as one means of advancing the kingdom and promoting the Master's cause.

New Churches Are Planned

Presbyterians of Miles City, Mont., have decided to erect a building costing $40,000 or more and having a Sunday school capacity of 450. The building as now planned is much larger than was first contemplated.

First church of Atlanta, Ga., will begin a $100,000 building early in the spring. A manse on the same lot will cost an additional $10,000.

As a memorial to W. W. Miller, for twenty-five years superintendent of the Sunday school, Knox church, Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, will erect a building to be used as a school institute, with a gymnasium and class rooms.

Plans are under way for the building of the new church at Watseka, Ill. A gift of $10,000 from one friend has already been announced.

Bible Course for High School Students

The recent adoption by the high school board of North Dakota of a course of Bible lessons prepared by Professor Vernon P. Squires of the state university is perhaps the nearest approach that has been made by any state educational body in recent months looking to moral teaching of any sort for high school pupils. The course is not required, but the board does give examinations based upon the course, the passing of which entitles the student to one-half unit of credit.

The study is purely elective and is pursued outside of the schoolroom under the direction of parents, teachers or pastors. The syllabus does not emphasize the religious aspect of the Bible so much as its other phases. It is desired that high school boys and girls may have a knowledge of the Scriptures. The studies have been outlined for use to coincide with the ninety recitations usually demanded for the same credit in other courses. It is said that the organization of the course grew out of the dense ignorance on biblical matters displayed by high school graduates presenting themselves for entrance to the university.

The course opens with a study of the geography and topography of Palestine and surrounding countries and takes up fifty great Old Testament narratives, with an outline of Hebrew history before Christ. Certain passages are also to be memorized. Studies in the life of Christ include the political divisions of the country and the various details of his activities, also the missionary journeys of Paul.

New Jersey Church Achieves Peculiar Distinctions

Here is a picture of the Lambertville, N. J., church for which the Around-the-Shop Man gave a hearty cheer last week. Of the 389 members of this church 145 subscribe to The Continent. There are several reasons for recognizing this as a church in a particular way. Its corner stone was laid in 1817 and its first pastor, Rev. Peter O. Studdiford, continued there forty-five years. He was succeeded by his son, Rev. Peter A. Studdiford, who ministered for twenty years. A grandson, James S. Studdiford, is now clerk of the session.

Lambertville, N. J., Church
Practically every family takes The Continent

The present pastor, Rev. Roy Ewing Vale, was ordained and installed last May. His marriage in October to Miss Jennie Dobson is remembered by Continent readers. The Dobson family has three ministers and three wives of ministers—Dr. F. F. Dobson, Tracy, Minn.; Rev. R. Calvin Dobson, Highland Park, Ill.; Rev. D. N. Dobson, Newark, N. J.; Mrs. R. A. Bartlett, Moberly, Mo.; Mrs. W. M. Hamilton, Sioux City, Iowa, and Mrs. Vale. The father, Dr. A. S. N. Dobson, has been pastor at Limestone, Tenn., forty-five years. Mr. Vale's only brother, Clair F. Vale, is preparing for the work of a medical missionary.

Country Conferences in Nebraska

Good results are being seen in the churches of Nebraska City Presbytery following a series of country church institutes held recently. Meetings were conducted for a day and a half each in Barneston, Raymond, Panama, Dunbar, Liberty and Marietta. The state university and the Board of Home Missions cooperated in the enterprise. Some of the themes discussed were "Is the Old Orchard Worth Keeping?" "Vitalizing the Rural Religious Forces," "Hog Cholera," "The Church and the Farmer," "Soil Culture," "The Girl Who Can," "Is the Farm Woman Getting a Square Deal?"

Pears'

Don't simply "get a cake of soap." Get good soap. Ask for Pears' and you have pure soap. Then bathing will mean more than mere cleanliness; it will be luxury at trifling cost.

Sales increasing since 1789.

Portland Plans for Union Work

Presbytery Appoints Committee to Outline Scheme for Needs of City—Dr. Boyd Tells of Efforts in Eastern Centers

PORTLAND—Jan. 2 members of Portland Presbytery went into retreat at Piedmont church and spent the day in religious exercises and discussions of practical questions. The opening hour of worship was led by Rev. W. S. Gilbert of First church, Astoria.

Dr. Boyd of First church, Portland, gave an insight into some of the newer plans now in use in such cities as Chicago, Detroit and New York. Portland made its largest growth under the auspices of the Presbyterian Alliance. Led by the alliance, all the strategic places in the city were occupied by churches. The alliance, seeming to have done its work, passed away. The city now needs increased equipment, and Dr. Boyd told of the movement for better equipment now in progress in the East. A special committee of Doctors J. H. Boyd, W. S. Holt, Rev. Thomas Holmes Walker and Rev. Henry Marcotte, and Elders J. E. Wheeler, S. P. Lockwood, Fletcher Lynn and C. N. Wonnacott was appointed to draft a plan of enlarged work adapted to this city and present it early in February.

Rev. A. L. Hutchison preached and the remainder of the day was given over to a "quiet hour" led by Mr. Marcotte, pastor of Westminster church, Portland.

The ladies of Piedmont church, of which Rev. J. E. Snyder is pastor, served lunch.

W. S. HOLT.

Smith Granite Monuments

Monumental Exclusiveness. Write for booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO., Westerly, R. I.

China Campaign in Twin Cities

Evangelistic Meeting Postponed Until February – Plans for Religious Federation in St. Paul – Missionaries in Demand for Talks.

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS—Dr. Charles E. Bradt of the Foreign Board will be here Jan. 20 and 21 to inaugurate the China campaign. The evangelistic conference has been postponed till the latter part of February, when representatives of the General Assembly's committee will be present. A financial conference and campaign for Minneapolis Presbytery will follow under the leadership of Moses Breeze. That Presbyterian churches of the respective cities may realize the oneness of their common interests is part of the result hoped for from these conferences.

Dr. Thomas Cleland of Evansville, Ind., has been called by Rosedale church of Minneapolis. The church will move to a more advantageous location. Dr. Cleland spent a number of years as pastor of First church, Duluth.

The work in Riverside chapel under Rev. W. E. Paul is in a prosperous condition. Out of a membership of 700 in the Sabbath school it has an average attendance of 600.

Dr. C. K. Roys and Mrs. Roys of Weihsien, China, are spending a brief vacation with Mrs. Roys' parents in St. Paul. The churches are making good use of them. Mrs. Roys is a daughter of Merriam Park church, where she spoke to a splendid congregation at the annual praise service of the women's missionary society.

First church, St. Paul, was loath to surrender Dr. Eliot H. Moore to Bethany church, Minneapolis. As an evidence of the appreciation in which he and his family were held the congregation presented Mrs. Moore with a rug and the doctor with a purse of $650. The duties of the new pastorate were assumed the first of the new year.

Erection of Merriam Park church is progressing, but it will probably not be ready for dedication till autumn.

A committee has been appointed to work toward the formation of a federation of all the Protestant churches of St. Paul. The recent meeting of the Federal Council in Chicago is said to have stimulated the movement.

Central church, St. Paul, conducted a successful watch night service under direction of the pastor, Dr. Harry Noble Wilson which attracted nearly 500, despite the fear of the officers that the crowds downtown would not go to church Dec. 31.

Student Volunteers in Home Field

By W. N. Sloan

The student home mission volunteer band is the name of an unorganized association. So far it is little more than a vision, but a vision working toward realization. The ever widening and enlarging of home mission work and the want of trained men shows the need of such an organization to develop specialists.

Home missionary work to be most efficient must have specially trained men for its varied fields. The country church; salvation of rural communities; Christianizing the million or more immigrants that come to us every year; the redemption of the Indian; the solving of the industrial and social problems which the church is undertaking, all indicate work that can only be done by heroes of the cross, who are willing to prepare themselves for life work in some of these spheres.

Failures as a rule in western missionary work (there are not many) are due largely to lack of training, through men who accept home mission work because nothing else is offered. Although there is work enough for five times the present force, it is not so much quantity as quality that is needed in home mission work.

When the student home missionary volunteer band becomes more than a dream, we may have an association of young men banded together by ties of Christian love and patriotic fervor, who will say, "Here am I, send me"; whose goal will be the Christianization of American civilization, and on which depends the evangelization of the darker continents of the world.

The plan is to call for young men in colleges and seminaries to enlist their services in some branch of home mission endeavor, and then to go into training, through a specially prepared course of study, that will fit them for their chosen work. Many things can be learned only by experience, but it is a waste of time and money if so much has to be learned by experience that might have been learned before experience begins.

The object of this forward movement in home missions is twofold—to enlist men for the work and then prepare them for it. Wooster University has already made the first endeavor in this direction, and it is hoped that many other institutions will be prompt to follow.

Chicagoans Will Help Bohemians

New Religious Settlement House Nearing Completion Attracts Interest – Playground Adjoins – Services Well Attended by Neighbors.

In the midst of 40,000 of the less prosperous Bohemians of Chicago there is being completed a Presbyterian Christian settlement house to care for what is perhaps the most successful work among the 125,000 Bohemians in the city. The work started seven years ago through a kindergarten founded by the Woman's Presbyterial Society for Home Missions of Chicago Presbytery. Two years ago it was expanded into two floors of a building at 1827 South Center avenue and three residents were put in charge.

The place is small, poorly arranged, uncomfortable in both winter and summer, and entirely inadequate for a settlement house, but it sufficed for an experiment, the experiment of establishing a Christian settlement with religious services and a Sunday school as well as all the other social and educational activities usually found in a social settlement. The preaching and other religious services are in charge of Rev. Vaclav Vanek, the Bohemian pastor, working under the direction of the church extension committee of Chicago Presbytery. During his ministry of two years fifty-five of the neighborhood people have united with the church. The Sunday school of 200 is much too large to be accommodated in the audience room, making it necessary to use the living rooms upstairs each Sunday for the smaller children.

New Settlement House for Chicago Bohemians

The various activities, including Sabbath school, industrial school, kindergarten, medical clinics, cooking classes, library, penny savings, mothers' clubs, boys' clubs, girls' clubs and relief work of various kinds bring into the house over 5,500 people each month.

Three lots were given the settlement, one of which is to be used for playground. The three-story building will have room in the basement for janitor's quarters and a laundry for the use of neighbors. Gymnasium and shower baths will add to the usefulness of the building. On the first floor will be offices and free dispensary and auditorium. The kindergarten will be on the second floor, as well as music rooms and cooking-class room. On the top floor will be living apartments for workers.

There are ninety pupils in the sewing class and 100 adults in the night school for English. There is an illustrated lecture in Bohemian each Wednesday and a great variety of clubs for boys and girls. The settlement must endeavor to compete successfully with the cheap and unwholesome pleasures which are presented in attractive form to the young people; with the saloon, the dance hall, the street, the cheap theater and picture shows, and the infidel Sunday school. To do this there must be both a well equipped plant and well equipped workers.

The Bohemian settlement house is financed by a joint committee appointed by the home mission committee of Chicago Presbytery and the Woman's Presbyterial Society. A year ago plans for a $30,000 building were made, $20,000 of which is in hand. The building is to be ready for occupancy in the spring. It is greatly desired to dedicate this Presbyterian settlement house in April free from debt.

Mrs. William A. Dean is treasurer, 316 North Franklin avenue, Chicago. C. D. B. Howell, an elder in First church, Evanston, is superintendent of the Sunday school. Miss Helen I. Duncan is head resident.

More Churches Practice Unity

Pending the erection of the new church at Corning, Iowa, concerning which The Continent recently made brief announcement, the congregation is worshiping with the Congregational society. Rev. Norman McLeod shares pastoral duties with Rev. C. G. Marshall, the Congregational minister, one presiding and the other preaching at the morning services. At the communion Jan. 5 officers of both churches officiated. The Sunday schools and several other societies meet at different hours instead of the organization being merged for the time. It is expected that the new church, which will cost $13,000, will be ready in August.

An effort is being made to combine the Presbyterian, Christian and Baptist churches of Tuscola, Ill., into one to be known as the United church. Two of these churches are now without pastors, and Rev. R. B. Fisher, head of the Presbyterian congregation, is proposed as pastor of the new church.

The most advanced step toward church union ever taken in Iola, Kan., was accomplished Dec. 29, when the members of First Presbyterian church joined with the Methodist church in communion in the edifice of the latter congregation.

A. R. Taylor, president of James Millikin University since it was founded in 1902, has resigned, to take effect June 30.

DREADED TO EAT

A Quaker Couple's Experience

How many persons dread to eat their meals, although actually hungry nearly all the time!

Nature never intended this should be so, for we are given a thing called appetite that should guide us as to what the system needs at any time and can digest.

But we get in a hurry, swallow our food very much as we shovel coal into the furnace, and our sense of appetite becomes unnatural and perverted. Then we eat the wrong kind of food or eat too much, and there you are—indigestion and its accompanying miseries.

A Philadelphia lady said:

"My husband and I have been sick and nervous for fifteen or twenty years from drinking coffee—feverish, indigestion, totally unfit, a good part of the time, for work or pleasure. We actually dreaded to eat our meals. (Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"We tried doctors and patent medicines that counted up into hundreds of dollars with little if any benefit.

"Accidentally, a small package of Postum came into my hands. I made some according to directions, with surprising results. We both liked it and have not used any coffee since.

"The dull feeling after meals has left us and we feel better every way. We are so well satisfied with Postum that we recommend it to our friends who have been made sick and nervous and miserable by coffee." Name given upon request. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavor is always uniform. Sold by grocers—50-cup tin 30 cts., 100-cup tin 50 cts.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Praises Work Done for Laborer

Presbyterians First to Recognize Need of Close Relationship with Workingman — Sunday School Needs Room.

SAN FRANCISCO—The principal speaker at the ministers' meeting last week was Rev. Henry A. Atkinson of Chicago, secretary of the Congregational Brotherhood. His subject was "The Church and the Labor Question," and he said that the Presbyterian Church was the first to start a definite movement to bring the church and the laboring man into closer relationship when it appointed Rev. Charles Stelzle to have charge of this work. The Congregational Church came next, then the Methodist. Rev. William Nat Friend, pastor of Howard church, is chairman of synod's committee on church and labor. He is a graduate of the University of California. For several years he practiced law, but took a course in San Francisco Theological Seminary. He preached in Colorado, but came back to San Francisco several years ago. Here he has taken great interest in the welfare of the laborer and in the promotion of business integrity and civic righteousness.

Rev. H. H. Wintler became pastor of Los Gatos church four years ago. A recent report shows good work done during that time. A new manse has been built, a pipe organ installed and improvements made otherwise, amounting in all to almost $10.000.

The Sabbath school of Seventh Avenue church, W. J. Fisher, D. D., pastor, has so outgrown its present quarters that the church is planning to provide more room.

Rev. Duncan Wallace of Calvary church, Fresno, was assisted recently in a series of meetings by Evangelist N. S. McClurkan.

St. James church, Oakland, is developing so rapidly that a movement has been started to build a $10,000 or $12,000 house of worship. Rev. Charles L. Campbell, a graduate of San Francisco Theological Seminary, is pastor.

Richmond is a thriving manufacturing town across the bay, ten miles north of San Francisco. Rev. Guy A. White is pastor there. The work has so prospered under his ministry that the people are starting to build a new house of worship to cost about $5,000. JAMES CURRY.

Presbyterians Moved Westward

Migration of Founders of Indiana Churches Is Traced—Men of Home Church Dig Basement New Year's Eve.

INDIANAPOLIS—Logan Esarey of the state historical survey has recently published an interesting sketch, "Presbyterianism Traced Westward from Princeton to Indiana Pulpits of Today." He indicates the various lines of migration taken by the members of the denomination of early days. The organization of some of the earliest churches at Vincennes, Madison and Indianapolis is related. George Burnie, a member of presbytery's Sabbath school committee, recently gave the history of the Bible classes of the city at a Sunday school rally.

The week of prayer was recognized by several of the churches. At Memorial church a suggestive series of meditations upon "Deeper Christian Experiences" was announced. At Grace church cottage meetings were held. Seventh announced no special meetings, but made a circular appeal to the entire membership to "specialize the regular meetings." The Missionary Social Union engaged in a week of mission study in morning classes led by Mrs. P. R. Wells of Chicago.

Rev. H. W. Rankin, synodical superintendent of Sabbath school work in Idaho and Utah, is representing the board in this vicinity. His pamphlet, "A Sky Pilot in Idaho," has been widely circulated.

The men of Home church, Rev. A. S. Buchanan pastor, are excavating for a basement to provide class and social room. They started the enterprise on New Year's eve, working most of the night, with midnight refreshments from the ladies.

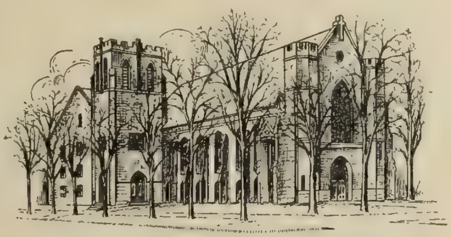
Acton church has profited by a union meeting under the leadership of Evangelist Samuel Kirkland. This makes an auspicious beginning to the pastorate of Rev. A. N. Crowe, recently located here from South New Lyme, Ohio.

The speaker at Grace church on a recent Sabbath was Rev. Elmer Themis of Hartford, Conn., a former member of that church. Other visitors in pulpits were George B. Stewart, D. D., president of Auburn Theological Seminary, at Second church, and Rev. G. T. Barry of New York City at First church.

A preliminary meeting of representatives of all denominations called to consider plans for the third anniversary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement was held last Wednesday in the Y. M. C. A. The plans anticipate special activities during the first three weeks of February. C. R. S.

Ohio Church Enlarges Building

First church, Canton, Ohio, recently dedicated its enlarged building, which has been improved and refurnished at a cost of $60,000. This includes a large addition for the Sunday school to accommodate the 572 pupils enrolled. The membership of the church is 675. Half of the cost of the improvement was raised before the work began. Rev. George Edward Jackson, pastor, was assisted by Dr. E. P. Hill of Chicago and by Rev. David C. Platter of Cleveland, a former pastor, at the dedication exercises. The church has been organized for ninety years.



Enlarged First Church, Canton, Ohio

It is possible to seat 1,600 within sight and hearing of the preacher, and the dining rooms, study and parlors are commodious. It was in this church that President McKinley was married.

Regret to See Dr. Albertson Go

Rochester People Sorry to Lose Pastor — Brighton Church Literally Moving—Building for Colored Congregation.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The departure of Dr. Charles C. Albertson, for the past eight years pastor of Central church, to Lafayette Avenue church, Brooklyn, means a great loss to Rochester. Dr. Albertson has been intimately interwoven with the religious life of the city since he came from Germantown, Pa., as successor to Dr. Henry H. Stebbins.

Rochester's youngest church is Dewey Avenue Presbyterian. The pastor, Rev. George H. Fickes, is having marked success. The church was organized in the fall. It has had additions which bring the membership up to about 200. Plans are already being made for a new $50,000 building.

Brighton church is literally on the move. The old auditorium is being moved to new foundations on the back of a fine lot and a new church is being erected on East avenue. Services are being held in the parsonage. The pastor is Rev. Frank M. Weston.

Rev. John Hutchinson of Philadelphia has recently taken up the work of stated supply of St. Peter's church. This is one of Rochester's most influential congregations.

The church at Dansville observed a reopening Sunday recently after having been closed three months for repairs. In the morning the pastor, Rev. Marshall Harrington, was assisted by Dr. J. E. Kittredge of Rochester, who preached the sermon.

Rev. W. McNair Kittredge was recently installed as pastor of Second church, Delhi.

A church for the colored people of Scottsville is approaching completion. It is being erected by the presbytery with aid from the Scottsville Presbyterian church and some of the other churches. Rev. W. A. Byrd, pastor of Trinity church, Rochester, is in charge of the field.

Pastor—Poverty—Pension

Pastor:—"I know that sooner or later, I will become disabled either through accident or age. My salary has always been barely enough to provide for my family needs. I have given my life fully and freely to the ministry of the Church and I do not begrudge it. What will happen when I am laid aside, and especially what will befall my family if I should be taken away?"

Poverty:—"As sure as you live you will have to reckon with me. If you escape me by death, I will seize your family. The fact that you have served the Church for many years does not deter me from attacking you and yours. While you have not been able, with the many demands made upon you, to provide against me, I am no respecter of persons."

Pension:—"I will ward off poverty. I do not promise any luxuries, but I will keep the wolf from the door. I am already taking care of the aged and disabled employees of many secular concerns. I will be glad to serve the faithful pastor as well, if he will show his good faith in me by modest but regular provision during his productive years. If the Presbyterian Church will adopt and liberally endow me, I will make the old age or disability of its ministers, their widows and orphans, comfortable and honorable."

If you are interested in this dialogue, write for further information to—

MINISTERIAL RELIEF AND SUSTENTATION
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary, Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

Brotherhood Gets More Room

Addition Costing $50,000 Nearly Ready for Use—Presbytery Refuses to Prevent Sale of Church to Satisfy Claim for Back Salary.

PHILADELPHIA—Bethany's new $50,000 addition to the Brotherhood building will soon be ready for use. It will contain gymnasium, baths and all modern appliances for men's work. The brotherhood numbers about 7,000. The pastor, Dr. R. E. L. Jarvis, is giving several days in January to the University of Nebraska under the direction of the Board of Education.

Fourth church, Dr. J. T. Reeve pastor, gave a reception and banquet to members of the Men's Meeting, their wives and friends, and nearly 200 were present. Among those making addresses were the following city officials: Hugh Black, receiver of taxes; Robert Smith, select councilman; Joseph S. McLaughlin, former director.

PRESBYTERY ELECTS OFFICERS

At the January Meeting of Philadelphia Presbytery Rev. William Biggerstaff of North Tenth church was elected moderator. The stated and permanent clerks, Doctors Robert Hunter and W. P. Fulton, were reelected for three years. The license of Elder William Graham of Bethany church as a local evangelist was renewed and Elder J. A. Hamilton of Tabor church was recommended for examination for license as a local evangelist. Three young men were received as candidates for the ministry—A. Waldo Stevenson, Jr., son of Rev. A. W. Stevenson and grandson of the late Dr. T. P. Stevenson of the Church of the Covenanters; Charles Lakey, son of the pastor of Magyar church of Philadelphia, and Franz Moscoitz, a young converted Jew of Northern Liberties church. The trustees of Presbytery reported eighteen churches and missions aided during the year, a larger number than any preceding year. Forty thousand dollars was contributed for the purpose by churches and individuals, $17,000 of which was added to the endowment fund, now amounting to $70,000 and which it is hoped will reach $100,000 during 1913. Presbytery declined to interfere in the matter of the sale by the sheriff of Union church property to satisfy a judgment note held by the late pastor, Rev. Alexander Waddell, for salary and interest amounting to $7,500.

St. Paul's church has appointed a committee of nine to formulate plans by which the every-member weekly pledge system recommended by General Assembly may be inaugurated. The chairman, George R. Camp, entertained the committee recently at a delightful dinner.

Covenant church of Germantown, Rev. H. W. Hathaway pastor, at the close of its second year as an organization reported 340 members and a Sunday school of 800. At the anniversary addresses were made by the pastor and Elder Jacob Backus, and by Elders William Sidebottom of First church and A. R. Perkins of Second church.

ADDRESS BY DR. VAN DYKE

At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Historical Society Jan. 9 a reception was tendered the president, Dr. Henry van Dyke, who addressed those present on "Our Heritage of History."

Dr. Alexander Henry, secretary of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work, on Jan. 2 gave a reception to the officers and employees of the board numbering over 100. Greetings were presented by Judge R. N. Wilson and William H. Scott. The address of the evening was by Rev. J. H. Lee, a member of the board.

W. P. WHITE.

Four missionaries are employed in addition to volunteer workers in following up the work of the nonsectarian meetings being held every Sunday night in the Garrick theater. This is a continuation of the work of last summer at Lemon hill. The average attendance is 1,000, most of whom are strangers in the city. Dr. James B. Ely is in charge, and it has recently been decided by the executive committee composed of business men of various denominations to continue the work.

Witherspoon Building Bonds Sold

The Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work received on Jan. 7 the final subscription to the annuity gold bond plan started some time ago, which enables the boards to pay the last installment on the Witherspoon building, thus releasing the building from any incumbrance whatever.

Starting fifteen years ago with a mortgage indebtedness of $600,000, the earnings from the building and the application of certain unrestricted funds paid off $300,000. In order to expedite matters the annuity scheme was inaugurated and judiciously advertised, and so successful has it been that in a comparatively short time the board disposed of a sufficient number of these bonds to release the entire remainder of $300,000.

Religious Work to Be Federated

Pittsburg Adopts an Advanced Policy—May Ask Dr. Sunday for 1914—One Church Gains 237 Members.

PITTSBURG—At a meeting of the Pittsburg evangelistic committee Jan. 6 plans for the year were adopted. After discussion the recommendation to invite Dr. W. A. Sunday here in 1914 was amended, with the understanding that the invitation should not be presented to Dr. Sunday until ratified by two-thirds of the ministerial bodies in the city. The committee agreed to cooperate with other bodies in the effort to federate them and employ a secretary who should have charge and oversight over all the religious work carried on jointly by the denominations of the city. Dr. J. K. McClurkin was elected president and Dr. H. C. Gleiss secretary.

First church is planning a special campaign during February and March to reach men and women who do not attend church. Beginning Jan. 19, in the Alvin theater, Dr. Maitland Alexander will preach each Sunday afternoon. The music will be furnished by First church quartet, one of the finest in the city. The men of the church are planning to advertise the meetings in the office buildings and hotels.

Rev. Robert Kirk, pastor of New Central church, McKeesport, received 237 new members Jan. 5 as a result of the Billy Sunday meetings. All but twelve of these were on profession of faith, and the larger part were men.

A luncheon was given in Fort Pitt hotel Saturday, Jan. 4, in honor of Fred B. Smith and Raymond Robins. More than 200 of Pittsburg's leading business men were present and listened to a forceful plea from these two men on behalf of the Y. M. C. A.

Forty missionaries, who have been working among the lumber camps and in the mining regions of Pennsylvania and neighboring states, held a conference in Pittsburg the first week in January. Addresses were made by Dr. W. L. McEwan and Rev. G. P. Williams of Philadelphia, and Dr. W. W. Johnstone of Chicago. In thirty counties of western Pennsylvania it is claimed that there are 500,000 children who do not attend Sunday school. In Westmoreland county alone of 60,000 children in the public schools 41,000 do not attend Sunday school.

P. W. SNYDER.

Clergy and Laity

Rev. Alexander McColl of Second church, Philadelphia, was the preacher on a recent Sunday at Princeton University.

George S. Payson, D. D., pastor of Washington Heights church, New York City, is chaplain of New York University for January.

Dr. E. Trumbull Lee, pastor of First church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., underwent a severe operation at Clifton Springs, N. Y., recently. He has been incapacited for some time.

Dr. John Royal Harris, pastor of Shady Avenue church, Pittsburg, has started on a southern tour in company with his wife. He was voted a month's vacation by his congregation.

Chicago Breaks a Record

When the local committee which arranged for the recent convention of the Federal Council of Churches in Chicago held its final meeting last week it was found that after all expenses were paid $1,400 remained. Much of the success of the financing was due to the personal efforts of Dr. John Balcom Shaw, the general chairman. The surplus will probably be used in local federation work.

The Modern
Individual Communion Service
Made by Reed & Barton, has many advantages over the old style. Ask us for illustrations.

REED & BARTON, Silversmiths
Established 1824 Represented at TAUNTON, MASS.
Fifth Avenue and 32nd Street 4 Maiden Lane
New York

CHURCH MONEY
Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their
OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS
MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER
This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.
Write us at once for information and prices.
THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., CHICAGO

THE AMERICAN HYMNAL
Just off the press
A MODERN BOOK FOR THE MODERN CHURCH
Contains the important familiar hymns with their associated tunes, and is rich in hymns that emphasize the present thought and action of the day.
726 Hymns, Chants, and Responses, with modern aids to worship. Responsive Readings from the American Revised or the King James Version of the Bible.
Send for sample copies
THE CENTURY CO.
UNION SQUARE, NORTH NEW YORK

HELP PAY YOUR CHURCH DEBT
Have your congregation save up old magazines, periodicals and newspapers. Solicit old office records from manufacturers, scrap papers from printers and general stores. We pay the highest market prices. Write us for quotations.
PIONEER PAPER STOCK COMPANY
1-11 East Ohio Street - CHICAGO, ILL.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED
Samples at Wholesale
Get in Business for Yourself
Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.
Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.
MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
For Bronchitis
Nothing better for the cough of bronchitis and asthma, hoarseness and throat irritation. Used over 50 years.
25c, 50c, $1.00. Sample Free.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON Boston, Mass.

Large Interest Shown in China

Campaign Attracts Attention—Spread of Mormonism Shown—Dr. W. C. Covert to Be Installed Jan. 24.

CHICAGO—Large interest has been manifested in the China campaign which opens Saturday afternoon with a conference between local pastors and board secretaries in Assembly hall. The following speakers have been assigned for church services on Sunday: Reverends C. H. Yerkes, E. L. Johnson, W. M. Hayes, F. W. Bible, A. B. Dodd and J. E. Williams, and Doctors W. S. Marquis, H. W. Reherd, W. R. King, A. W. Halsey, Arthur J. Brown and Robert Ross. The meeting for women in Second church Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock promises to be one of the best of the series. This will be addressed by Rev. F. W. Bible, Rev. J. E. Williams and Dr. A. J. Brown, who was at one time pastor of Oak Park First church. Monday evening the students of McCormick Seminary will be addressed by Dr. Brown and Tuesday evening at the La Salle hotel Dr. Robert E. Speer will speak to men from the various churches, coming from New York specially for this meeting. A large number of conferences in homes and churches have also been arranged through Dr. C. E. Bradt.

Ex-Senator Frank J. Cannon spoke Monday to the largest meeting of ministers held for some months. He showed how the power of the Mormon Church has grown and how the presence of a high church official in the senate makes this religious organization unique in America. Dr. W. C. Covert was appointed a committee to make arrangements to have Senator Cannon address churches and brotherhoods.

Presbyterians were among the eleven men and women who answered a "want ad" in a Sunday paper asking for Sunday school teachers at Halsted Street Institutional church, an interdenominational organization under Methodist auspices.

Active pastors of North side churches meet for devotional service Friday afternoon at the home of Rev. W. H. Phelps, pastor of Belden Avenue church.

The installation of Dr. W. C. Covert as pastor of the "new" First church will take place Jan. 24 at 8 o'clock at the church.

VISITING NURSES' WIDE ACTIVITIES

The extension of the services of the visiting nurses to families which are able to pay something for such a service, but are not able to afford a nurse on full time, was a suggestion made by Dean Sumner at the annual meeting of the Visiting Nurse Association in the Fine Arts building last Friday. The report of the superintendent showed that 50,000 patients had been cared for duing the year, the nurses doing everything demanded by the occasion from looking after sanitary arrangements and the cleanliness of the ice box to inquiring into the size of the family pay envelope, in addition to plain nursing. There is a large demand for the services of women able to handle home problems confronting nurses in outside work. Mrs. Arthur T. Aldis was reelected president.

A committee of presbytery composed of pastors living near the University of Chicago has been appointed to make plans to care for Presbyterians now attending that institution.

Sixty Sunday school missionaries from all parts of the country will be in this city Feb. 9 to 13 attending the exercises incident to the silver jubilee of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work.

The Great Lakes Presbyterian is the name of a new paper in this city published by the Andrew Stevenson Company. It is announced as a continuation of The Michigan Presbyterian, latterly published in New York as The Presbyterian Examiner. The general matter is printed concurrently in The Presbyterian Examiner, New York; The Pacific Presbyterian, San Francisco, and The Gulf States Presbyterian, Birmingham.

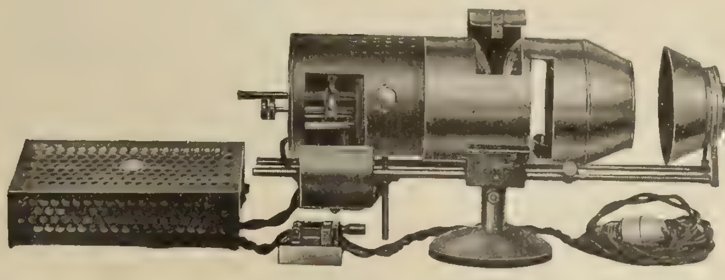
The United Societies, which claims a membership of 185,000, has appointed a committee to watch the lawmakers at Springfield and fight any legislation tending to curtail the liquor traffic.

Mayor Harrison, who refused to see a delegation of preachers one Monday morning because that was his day reserved for council business, on a recent Monday not only received a delegation of the Knights of Columbus but permitted his picture to be taken shaking hands with the leaders.

Dr. John Timothy Stone will be university preacher at the University of Chicago on Jan. 19.

A Compact, Portable Stereopticon

Pastors and public or home entertainers will be interested in a new small, convenient stereopticon which has recently been placed on the market. High candle power incandescent lamps as the source of light for projecting lanterns have been experimented with for some time, but as yet have not proved very satisfactory for giving sharp, clear pictures. The lamp here shown uses 5-16 inch carbons adjusted by hand feed apparatus, smaller but upon the same principle as the large lanterns. The carbons last for four hours without renewal. At sixty feet from the screen a twelve foot picture is produced. A rheostat and switch, with cord and plug for attaching to a lamp socket, are part of this Miopticon outfit, as it is called. The lamp sits on a 5½ inch base, and the whole equipment is carried in a case 20 by 6¼ by 10½ inches. It can be packed in a suitcase. In fact, the entertainer or educator may start out with his lantern in one hand and his slides in the other.



Instructed for Mr. Bryan

Commissioners of St. Joseph Presbytery were instructed at a recent meeting to use their utmost influence to elect William Jennings Bryan moderator of General Assembly. The members also asked other presbyteries to join this movement.

School and College

Alexander hall, one of the buildings of Princeton Theological Seminary and the first structure erected for seminary purposes in the country, was partially destroyed by fire Jan. 1. The fourth floor and belfry were burned. The bell, installed in 1832, was broken.

Dubuque German College and Seminary reopened Jan. 7 with twenty new students. The enrollment is growing rapidly. This institution had only twenty-three students ten years ago. There are 170 men preparing themselves for the highest service that man can render to God and to humanity. Rev. Reid S. Dickson, New Providence, N. J., will conduct special meetings in connection with the day of prayer for colleges in February.

Fourteen Churches Hear of China

Cleveland Holds Many Interesting Meetings—Addresses at Presbyterian Club—Parlor Conferences for Men and Women.

CLEVELAND—The churches have been busy with the China campaign, which was inaugurated Friday, Jan. 10. The afternoon of that day two parlor conferences for women were held, one in the home of Mrs. M. B. Johnson, where Dr. Arthur J. Brown and J. E. Williams spoke. The other gathering was at the home of Mrs. Lyman J. Treadway, where Miss Charlotte E. Hawes of the Weihsien mission and Rev. Frank W. Bible of Hangchow made addresses. Friday evening the annual banquet of the Presbyterian Union was held in Second church. Dr. Andrew B. Meldrum was toastmaster, and the principal speakers were Dr. Brown and Mr. Bible. At the Colonial hotel there was a Saturday noon luncheon, attended by ministers and laymen, and last Sabbath the pulpits of fourteen Presbyterian churches were occupied by visiting missionaries. Monday morning the Presbyterian Club was addressed by the visiting brethren and in the afternoon there was a union service at the Glenville church for congregations in that locality. Monday evening came the four parlor conferences for men in the homes of Dr. J. D. Williamson and Elders G. J. Baum, S. P. Fenn and Dr. W. S. Sykes, these places having been selected

Just a Little from You

And a Little More from Everybody Else Will Lift This Load, Make Many Happy Hearts, and Accomplish a Great Good

THE PLACE! LEOLA is the county seat of McPherson County, South Dakota. It has about 500 people, and is the trading center for the population in the country round for 20 miles. The state is new, the conditions are those of any pioneer land, and the environments of living are trying and rigorous. Take a map of the United States and find ABERDEEN, then draw a line almost straight northwest until you find LEOLA.

THE NEED! Ours is a mission church, aided in its work by the Home Mission Society. The Presbyterian Church is the only English Protestant Church whose doors are open in an area more than 15 miles square. The Roman Catholics are quite strong. Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists and others receive, through us, the only religious ministrations possible.

The town has two saloons—regular dens of iniquity. There are two pool halls open, neither place being of an inviting or elevating character. We have no theater, no picture shows, no public library, in fact nothing either good or bad, to which the young people CAN go apart from the Church services.

Our building is small, with only one room, in which can be seated about 200 people. We have no Sunday School class rooms and as our basement is not finished, no place that can be fitted up for the good of the young men and women.

WHAT WE PROPOSE TO DO! The minister has planned and partially arranged for the opening of a public center and "reading room." A business man here has offered rooms rent free until spring. Other necessary things have been freely proffered by those who have, but our need is still great.

No other one thing, aside from the actual spiritual ministrations of the church, will reach so many of our young men and women, and the lasting good done can hardly be calculated. If the people back East who read this appeal could understand by actual experience the problems the missionary pastor has to face, the difficulties he MUST overcome, and often on a mere pittance at that, a little more personal help would be given the struggling, battling, never-give-up missionary pastors who are laying the foundations for the Presbyterian Church in coming years in this state.

HOW YOU CAN HELP! 1st. Send by mail or express, prepaid, all books, magazines, and papers that you can spare.

2nd. Get that Sunday School of which YOU are a member to give us just ONE Sunday's offering. NOT MUCH TO YOU, but a big boost to us. Or, get your Aid Society or that Missionary Society in your church, to give us a little help. Even five dollars will work a great blessing here. We will write the Society a personal letter as to exactly how the money was spent, and the story of its investment will spur the Society on its own Missionary activities.

3rd. Some well-to-do, perhaps rich, people will read this. Ten dollars, or even twice that sum, will hardly be missed. Send us this greatly needed assistance.

DO IT NOW! Out here in this missionary pastor's home we look forward to very little for ourselves. Gladly will we go without if someone who reads these lines will make it possible for us to do the WORK our heart is set upon. DO IT NOW.

L. L. SANDERS, MINISTER, LEOLA, SOUTH DAKOTA. Ref.: Rev. C. C. TODD, Aberdeen.

to accommodate various sections of the city.

Dr. Paul F. Sutphen of Second church has commenced a series of Sunday evening services on "Religious Impressions of the City of Rome."

ARTHUR C. LUDLOW.

Soon to Form Bible University

New York Institution Is Growing—Faithful Sexton Buried from Scotch Church — Missionaries Start to Africa.

NEW YORK—The Bible Teachers' Training School will be organized into a Bible university as soon as it receives enough gifts to erect a new building on its present property at Lexington avenue and 49th street, which it recently purchased through Dr. Wilbert W. White, the president. The four houses now on the property will be immediately put into use as a chapel, clerical rooms and dormitory. The present building is overcrowded with its 110 pupils. The recent gift of $100,000 to the school by Mrs. John S. Kennedy was used toward paying for the new property. As soon as possible the dwellings will be razed and an addition built.

Dr. Jesse F. Forbes, secretary of the church extension committee, and Dr. Charles A. Stoddard organized a Presbyterian church at Woodlawn Heights, the extreme northern end of Manhattan, Jan. 5, with eighty-eight charter members. Rev. F. B. Daum is pastor.

Henry Topping, for twenty-eight years the faithful sexton of Scotch church, died Jan. 2 at Monroe, N. Y., aged 56. The funeral was held at Scotch church Sunday afternoon, Jan. 5. Dr. David G. Wylie, the pastor, officiated and elders, deacons and trustees were pallbearers.

MISSIONARIES LEAVE FOR WORK

Seventeen missionaries will start this month for the interior of Africa. Eleven are from New York and six are from England. They go out under the auspices of the Africa Inland mission. Many farewell meetings were held in Philadelphia and this city, culminating in a union good-by service Jan. 10 in the Church of the Strangers. This was addressed by all the missionaries.

Dr. Forbes and others of the extension committee expect to dedicate the new Olmstead Avenue church at Newbold avenue, Unionport, Jan. 23. The pastor is Rev. C. E. B. Ward.

Dr. Francis E. Marsten severs his connection with Bethany church Feb. 1 to take up his new duties as secretary of the Anti-Saloon League for Massachusetts.

Rev. William T. Elsing gave an interesting talk on "The Bright Side of Life in a Dark Part of New York" before the ministers' association Jan. 13. Jan. 20 Rev. Robert W. McLaughlin of Brooklyn will speak on "The Minister and the Danger of His Taking Himself Too Seriously."

Mrs. George S. Webster, wife of the pastor of the Church of the Covenant, addressed the monthly meeting of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions Jan. 8.

Rev. Paul S. Leinbach was installed pastor of Hamilton Grange Reformed church Jan. 9.

The Ladies' Christian Union held week of prayer services each morning of the week beginning Jan. 16, in the chapel of Collegiate Reformed Church of St. Nicholas.

The Presbyterian churches of the West side held union week of prayer services Thursday night in Fourth church and Friday night in Scotch church.

Sunshine mission, the West side branch of Marble Collegiate Reformed church, recently celebrated its sixth year.

SPANIARDS MAY HAVE A CHURCH

That the Spanish Evangelical Protestant congregation, now worshiping in the chapel of Madison Square church, will shortly have an edifice all its own was intimated Sunday afternoon, Jan. 5, at the regular service conducted by Dr. Samuel F. Cordiano, the pastor.

The Magyar congregation which worships every Sunday in Labor temple will henceforth be considered a part of the work of that institution. Rev. Gabriel Dorkus, Jr., is the Magyar pastor.

Dr. Edgar W. Work, pastor of Fourth church, has been elected by the Board of Publication successor to the late Dr. J. R. Miller as editor of Sunday school literature. He was also elected professor of homiletics in Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, but has announced no decision as yet. His church hopes to hold him.

Rev. George N. MacDonald, a venerable retired Presbyterian minister, and his wife were found dead in bed Sunday morning at their home in Yonkers. They were accidentally asphyxiated by gas from a leaky burner. Both were more than 70 years of age. Mr. MacDonald was born in Scotland.

Rev. Milton S. Littlefield, formerly pastor of Bay Ridge church, began a series of evening lectures Jan. 13 on "The Teacher and the Pupil." Reformed, Protestant Episcopal, M. E. and Lutheran Sunday schools are cooperating with the Presbyterians.

Double the former contributions to expenses and trebled pledges to benevolences followed announcement in Bay Ridge church that rented sittings and fairs and entertainments were to be banished as money raisers. Dr. Chauncey T. Edwards is pastor.

The Y. M. C. A. of Union Seminary has arranged an interesting list of addresses for Monday noon meetings. Feb. 3 Seth Low will talk and Feb. 10 Dr. Charles S. Macfarland.

Ten Helps for Mothers
in This Issue

The large amount of good material for mothers packed into The Continent each week is a surprise to many a woman who has received the help without "counting her blessings."

1. To Give You a Little Broader View of Life: Ponder on the thought for the week, page 77.
2. To Prevent Fire in Your Home: Follow the suggestions, page 77.
3. To Interest Your Children in Church Work: Help them to observe Young People's Day, Feb. 2. See comment, page 73.
4. To Give You an Idea for Comment in Prayer Meeting: Think over the next to the last "Jot and Tittle," page 73.
5. To Get Your Children to Read Their Church Paper: Find them the story about Johnnie on page 80.
6. To Help Your Children Prepare for Young People's Meeting: Call their attention to the comments on topic, page 82.
7. To Deepen Interest in Missions: Tell

OKLAHOMA WHEAT

"The Oklahoma House"

"Buy Mortgages by Mail—with Safety"

¶ It is a simple matter. Investors inquiring about our mortgages, receive full information regarding the properties securing them. Information about Oklahoma is also gladly furnished. References will be exchanged and methods suggested for an independent investigation of our House. Take your time and satisfy yourself fully, regarding both the securities and the House.

You take no risk, as all information and papers are in your hands for examination before paying for them. Afterwards, the House makes the collections for you, and "does all the worrying."

¶ In amounts of $500 and upwards, paying annual interest by coupons. Loans mature in 5, 7 or 10 years, according to contract.

¶ The notes are the individual obligation of the farmer and his wife—and secured by a first mortgage on their farm.

If this interests you write for Mortgage List No. 708—Also our Booklet.

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co. (Inc.)

OLDEST AND LARGEST MORTGAGE HOUSE INCORPORATED UNDER LAWS OF OKLAHOMA

Oklahoma City, U. S. A.

Business Founded 1892 Capital and Surplus $145,000.00

GOOD 6%
FARM
MORTGAGES

The Best and Safest Investment on Earth. Write us for Information regarding our Farm Mortgages on lands located in the fertile James River Valley, North Dakota. We guarantee to look after collection of the interest so that the investment will net you 6%.

WRITE US FOR LISTS

H. J. JOHNSON LAND
AND CATTLE CO.
OAKES, - - NORTH DAKOTA

WE CAN CONVINCE YOU of the desirability of our hig grade farm and city loans. To eac person who has seen our adver-tisement in THE CONTINEN this year and answered it w have sold mortgages. Thes readers were satisfied as t our record and reliability an as to the safety and good profit in ou securities. We feel sure we can satisfy you Let us know about how much you have t invest at this time or in the near future, an we will be greatly pleased to tell you about our offerings and give you references and complete informatio about our methods. Our many years' experience i this field gives us exceptional opportunities to secure th choicest securities. No investor has lost a dollar through hi investment in these mortgages, which are carefully selecte in one of the best investment fields in the Northwest

Drop us a line today.

Idaho Title & Trust Co
BOISE - - - IDAH

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of Th Continent by mentioning this paper when answering ad-vertisements.

your children of the chickens which will help an Indian caste, page 83.

8. To Tell You Something of an Interesting Book: "A Practicable Platform for Eugenics," page 84.

9. Might Solve Your Church Problem: Plan of holding junior Christian Endeavor in the morning, page 87.

10. Is the Bible a Closed Book to School Children in Your Town? See what North Dakota does, page 87.

Financial Situation

Best Farmer Has Best Security for Loan—Pujo Investigation Having at Least One Result—News for Business Men.

Someone has suggested that the farmer under present conditions is eating the doughnut and offering the hole as security for the loan he asks. In other words, too many farmers, and most renters, try to get all they can from the soil, leaving the ground in an impoverished condition. The farm may be worth more at the end of five years, but it is because the products raised there have increased in price rather than on account of an improved condition of the land. In fact, the production per acre is increasing but slowly in comparison with the advance in farm prices.

The man who farms in a scientific fashion, seeking to leave the ground in as good condition one year as the year before, has more to offer in the way of security than another who may have more acres. The business structure of the country rests in large part on the shoulders of the farmer, and everything done to help him get larger and "saner" crops from the soil is of advantage to the man who has money to loan as well as to the man who has things to sell. Some thinkers say the solution of the financial situation of the farmer depends not on cooperative credits or a paternal act by Congress but on the production of larger crops. The man who borrows money to buy more land to farm in the average way is not nearly so well off as the man who uses his borrowed money for stock and equipment which will enable him to farm so as to preserve the soil values.

Present Result of Investigation.

The revelations of the Pujo committee at Washington, although they do not seem to have proved to the general public that there is a "money trust," have brought out enough facts about Wall street and allied interests to cause people to think carefully before intrusting more of their money to corporations likely to use it in connection with the New York Stock Exchange. The average layman has only a confused notion of the results so far attained from the investigation. He is convinced, however, that he should invest his capital where he can have pretty good oversight of it.

The development of the $100 bond is opening a way for many people with small savings to put their money into concerns which seem to them to promise a safe return. This means that people who have been putting their money exclusively into savings banks at 3 and 4 per cent, and permitting the bank to earn 3 per cent more, can with the smaller bonds earn the extra income themselves. When a sufficient sum has been accumulated the savings bank itself will aid the saver in discovering a good investment. The issuance of small bonds secured by mortgages on real estate, now being pushed by some houses, furnishes another opportunity of the same sort.

Some of these houses, most of whom do business by mail, "follow up" investors very closely with their literature. If a person once answers an advertisement he may get half a dozen letters in succession. This is both a persuasion and an education to the prospective investor. The total cost to the office is very small, and a growing volume of business easily absorbs it. It is only by mail that some forms of investment are possible, for the cost of three or four neighbors clubbing together and sending a man to place mortgages for them in North Dakota or Oklahoma or Texas would eat up the income for many years.

One Way to Get Rich

Charles G. Dawes, former comptroller of the currency and now president of a big trust company, is credited with the following story:

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

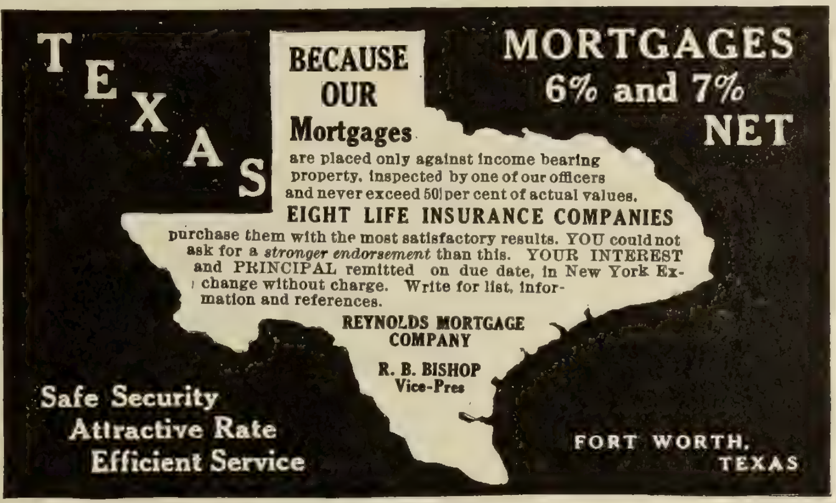
Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidations of Other Banks

CAPITAL, SURPLUS and UNDIVIDED PROFITS

$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. and JACKSON BLVD.



TEXAS

MORTGAGES 6% and 7% NET

BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY

R. B. BISHOP Vice-Pres

Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

7% 20 Years successful experience placing LOANS in the Southwest 7½%

Choice FARM LOANS in the RED RIVER Valley in S. E. Oklahoma, N. E. Texas and S. W. Arkansas, on improved farms at not to exceed 33⅓% actual value of security. The home of long staple cotton, corn, oats, alfalfa, fruits and vegetables. Average annual rainfall 45 inches and good soil, insuring certainty and fulfillment. Diversified farming; prosperous community. Write for information, booklet and map.

THE SECURITY MORTGAGE COMPANY

Individual responsibility over $1,000,000. Broad St., Texarkana, Ark.-Texas

Place Your Funds in Safe Securities.

No matter if you have a large or small amount for investment, a well placed First Mortgage upon an improved or cultivated farm can always be depended upon to yield a liberal rate of interest with the assurance of prompt payment of interest and principal at maturity.

My offerings range in amounts from $500.00 to $5,000.00 bearing 5½% and 6% interest. All loans carefully inspected and closed with our own funds before being offered for sale. Interest and principal collected without charge. Correspondence invited and detailed information with references and list of offerings will be mailed upon request.

G. W. HART, President Merchants' Bank, Bryant, S. D.

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.

3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

6% We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request 7%

JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

8% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Income sure. Our mortgages never exceed 30 per cent actual value of security. Every farm is examined by our salaried inspector. We collect and remit interest free of charge, and net you Eight per cent. Our field is the rich agricultural valley of Eastern New Mexico. Diversified crops; prosperous farmers. Write for information and sample application of $500.00 loan on improved 160 acre farm.

THE UNION MORTGAGE CO.,
105 West Grand Ave., Clovis, New Mexico

Farm Mortgages 6%

Capital and Surplus, $350,000.00
Send for pamphlet "C." Interest and principal collected free. Highest references. Clients in 32 States. Established in 1883

E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St. Chicago.

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $300,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

TIME TESTED, PANIC PROOF
The FARM MORTGAGE

When your money is invested in high grade First Farm Mortgages you need have no worry either as to your principal or your interest. The improved farm cannot be affected by business depressions, fire or other accidents. I sell my loans to insurance companies, trustees of estates and individuals. Write to-day for my interesting booklet C.

Best of References Given on Request
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, ARDMORE, OKLA.

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts who have spent their lives in this section. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature.

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

A 6% January Investment

$2,500.00 First Mortgage secured by 160 acres tillable black loam, 3½ miles from Noble, Alberta, 110 acres under plow. Buildings worth $1,000.00. Mortgagor owns 42 horses, 30 cows, 500 sheep, 50 hogs, 1,280 acres other land, private grain elevator. Full particulars of this and other Alberta mortgages, $500.00 to $32,000 denominations on request.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer
1201 Granite Building :: Rochester, N. Y.

5% FARM MORTGAGES
ON IOWA and MINNESOTA FARMS are the SAFEST FORM of INVESTMENT—Tested by our customers for 40 years. We collect and remit interest wherever investors desire. Write for booklet and list.
ELLSWORTH AND JONES.
IOWA FALLS, IOWA.

FIRST MORTGAGES ON OREGON and Washington Farms. The 6 and 6½% mortgages we offer for sale represent loans made with our own funds upon Improved Farms worth from three to five times the amount of the mortgage. A well selected farm mortgage is the safest of all investments. Write for current list.

DEVEREAUX MORTGAGE COMPANY
1014-1017 Spaulding Bldg., Portland, Oregon

15,000 CHURCHES USE THE
THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box I, Lima, Ohio.

"I know a man who had always had a hard time to get along in the world; he had got into trouble and gone to jail once, but when I saw him recently he was wearing diamonds and had a roll of bills that was thick enough to choke a cow. When I asked him what he was doing he said he was selling mining stock."

Of Interest to Business Men

—Rates on money in the large centers are now back to normal, although bankers still have their eyes on the Balkan situation.

—Traffic on the great lakes during the past season was greater than ever before. A total of 72,500,000 tons of freight passed through the Soo canal.

—Procter and Gamble, makers of Ivory soap, Jan. 1 took out $2,000,000 insurance on all their employees, who will contribute about an hour's work every six weeks toward the premium.

—N. W. Harris, founder of the Harris Trust and Savings bank, retired last week at the age of 66. His son succeeds him as head of the Chicago concern. The father is still chairman of the board of directors and president of the Boston and New York houses. Mr. Harris has had a highly successful career of forty-six years and now desires to husband his strength.

Ministerial Obituary

L. C. Smith, D. D.

L. C. Smith, D. D.

Wisconsin Synod, as well as the whole Presbyterian Church, sustained a great loss in the death of L. C. Smith, D. D., at his home in Waukesha, Wis., Dec. 28. Dr. Smith was born in Albion, N. Y., in 1858, and graduated from Brockport Normal School and Hamilton College. He taught in Canandaigua Academy, of which his brother George was principal, and then entered Auburn Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in 1887. He was for three years pastor of the church in Moravia, N. Y., and then accepted a call to First church of Oshkosh. For seven years he did a magnificent work, largely increasing the membership and erecting one of the most beautiful church buildings in Wisconsin. In 1897 he became superintendent of missions of Wisconsin, which position he filled with remarkable success for fourteen years, and it has often been said that he was the most beloved Presbyterian in the state. Most of these years he has resided in Waukesha, close by Carroll College, from which institution he received the degree of D. D. in 1906.

Dr. Smith was a man of excellent scholarship, rare common sense and splendid executive ability. He will be remembered for his big heartedness and his sympathetic nature. He was one of the charter members of the Gideons, the organization of Christian traveling men, and was their first and only chaplain. The funeral at Waukesha was attended by forty pastors from various parts of the state and a large delegation of the Gideons. The widow and two children, Nina Belle and Warren Braman Smith, survive.

Rev. Newton J. Conklin

Sunday morning, Jan. 5, Rev. Newton James Conklin, one of the prominent ministers of Rochester Presbytery, died at his home in Rochester, N. Y., after several weeks' illness. For many years and until the time of his death he was clerk of presbytery, and since 1894 editor of The Rochester Presbytery News, the organ of presbytery. He was born at Mount Morris, N. Y., Nov. 2, 1834; graduated from Lafayette College in 1861 and from Princeton Seminary in 1864. He was ordained as pastor of the church at Gouverneur, N. Y., in 1866, and had a successful pastorate there until 1879. From 1864 to 1866 he was district secretary of the American Tract Society, with headquarters at Utica, N. Y. He was supply of First church, Geneseo, from 1879 to 1883, and again secretary of the American Tract Society, with headquarters at Rochester, from 1883 to 1893. He was honored with election as a commissioner to General Assembly three times.

Rev. Samuel D. McFadden

Rev. Samuel D. McFadden, vice-president o Highland Park College, Iowa, died at hi home in Des Moines Jan. 7 of perniciou anæmia after three weeks' illness. The funera was held from the college chapel Jan. 9. M McFadden was born in 1869 on a farm nea Crawfordsville, Iowa. He graduated fro Parsons College, Fairfield, Iowa, in 1892, an from McCormick Seminary in 1895. His firs pastorate was LeClair, Iowa, which he serve nearly three years, then he became pasto at Green, Iowa, which church he served nearl seven years. His third and last pastorate wa Westminster church, Des Moines. There h was installed Oct. 25, 1904, and was release Sept. 13, 1911, to accept the vice-presidenc of Highland Park College, which position h held till the end of his life.

From Various Fields

Kansas

Council Grove church is erecting a manse fo the pastor, Rev. George H. Cotton.

Rev. D. C. Smith, pastor-evangelist, spent week at Vesper, Kan., recently holding meetings. Rev. H. C. Bradbury is pastor.

Bethel church, about five miles north Wichita, is served by Rev. David H. M. Boyle pastor of Oak Street church, Wichita. Bethe is building a new house of worship, with ful basement.

A strong men's and boys' organization ha been formed at First church, Emporia, and most cordial relation between the college an the church engendered. The pastor is Rev W. C. Templeton.

The Sunday school of First church, Bucklin has doubled in attendance during the ten week since the coming of Rev. E. Irwin Gilmore who was recently installed. The church ha been redecorated and an individual communio set has been obtained.

Kentucky

Rev. T. W. Williams, pastor of Immanue church, Louisville, recently celebrated his tent anniversary. The guests of the evening wer those who had joined the church since Jan. 1 1912.

The reception by Louisville Presbytery o West Broadway Reformed church is an unusua event. This church was established as a mis

Rich Country Opened to Settlers

There is another land of promise awaitin the ambitious and industrious settler out i the golden West, a land which has been lyin dormant for lack of a railroad to serve it thousands of rich fertile acres.

The railroad now is there, the new Wester Pacific, the line that hewed its path to the coas out of the rocky walls of the Feather Rive canyon, one of the scenic wonders of America The fertile valleys that lie tributary now onl need men to develop magnificently. Grain alfalfa and general farm products flourish unde proper working.

Stock raising has always been profitable, an now is doubly so, with stock cars waiting t take cattle, sheep and hogs to the always read market. The mountain meadows and fores ranges afford free pasturage for countless hea of stock. And these same mountains abound in the finest fishing and hunting that the whol country knows, with the magnificent scenery o the Sierras for a setting.

For round trip tickets to points in Californi and Nevada, over the Western Pacific railwa at very low rates, first and third Tuesdays o each month during 1913, apply to your neares ticket agent. The fare from Missouri rive points, such as Omaha, St. Joseph and Kansa City, is $55 for the round trip, tickets goo twenty-five days. From other points fares ar proportionately low. Ask the agent for ful information and copy of Western Pacific folde entitled "Opportunities," or write for same t E. L. Lomax, Passenger Traffic Manager, Western Pacific railway, San Francisco, Cal.

in 1902 and organized as a church in ;. Desiring to unite with the Presbyterian /, steps were taken to consolidate with ianuel church, located at 24th street and adway, to be known as Immanuel Presbyan church of Louisville, and to be located ;7th street and Broadway. The consolida- was consummated by an agreement between mittees of the Reformed board at Pitts- ; and of the Church Erection Board. ommittee consisting of Dr. Aquilla Webb, Edward L. Warren, Rev. Henry E. Dosker, . Peyton H. Hoge, with Elders William R. cnap, F. W. Curry and George Meldrum, appointed by the presbytery to publicly e the two churches. This was done in a ting held Sunday, Dec. 29, in the Reformed rch, with Dr. Warren in charge of the ice. Rev. T. N. Williams, pastor of Imuel church, will continue as pastor of the solidated church. He outlined plans for a church building to be erected in the near ire.

EDWARD L. WARREN.

Michigan

ev. J. Ambrose Dunkel, Saginaw, is the new irman of home missions in the Synod of higan; succeeding Dr. C. A. Lippincott.

ev. and Mrs. Thomas R. Easterday observed r golden wedding anniversary at their home Sault Ste. Marie Dec. 24. Mr. Easterday formerly pastor of Soo church, and on retirement was elected superintendent of ools for Chippewa county and has been ılarly reelected for many years.

)eckerville and Bridgehampton churches are ting the new year very hopefully. Rev. bert A. Simpson is pastor. The graded ons have been adopted in the Sunday school the housing of the growing school has ome a real problem. Bridgehampton is dis-tively a rural church, the field being divided h three other churches. A "community con-vation club" has been organized among the 1 which meets weekly. The object is to nserve" the religious, industrial and social erests of the community. The club is adily growing.

Texas

'he congregation of Hemphill Street church, t Worth, refused to accept the resignation Rev. J. P. Hicks, who has been pastor there six years. The only church gymnasium the city is conducted by this congregation.

Iembers and friends of First church, Deni- , on Sunday, Dec. 15, extinguished the debt n the church building erected during the torate of Dr. Arthur F. Bishop. Dr. Bishop ached for Dr. A. W. Ringland, the pastor, the morning. At night there was a praise vice, celebrating the cancellation of the en- indebtedness. Dr. A. W. Acheson related idents in the early history of the church, ich was organized in 1872. The canceled es given to the Board of Church Erection i other evidences of indebtedness were ned under the direction of E. C. Waples, senior elder of the church. The congre-ion will now turn its attention to needed provements upon the building.

Oregon

The Presbytery of Southern Oregon dis-ssed at Grants Pass Dec. 24 Rev. Sherwood Grigsby to the Presbytery of Pendleton. The storal relation between Rev. L. M. Anderson l the churches at Merrill and Mount Laki s dissolved that Mr. Anderson might ac-t the work of pastor-evangelist for the sbytery, succeeding Rev. S. L. Grigsby.

Rev. C. W. Higgins has removed from Gold ach to take up work at Ukiah, in Pendleton esbytery. This leaves vacant one of the st difficult fields in Oregon. The church s maintained a work alone in that section the state for years, but last fall a missionary another denomination crowded into the very ce in which the Presbyterians were organ-d. Unfortunately there is no authority to event the minister staying in the community, he is an independent worker.

New Jersey

The state convention of the Lord's Day Al-ce will meet in the Y. M. C. A. building, rk, Jan. 23. The interchurch federation eet the same day. A fight will be made on any bill in the legislature tending to abrogate the Sabbath.

Sunday, Jan. 5, Rev. Robert H. Littell celebrated his third year as pastor of Sixth church, Newark, and Rev. George W. King observed his second anniversary as pastor at Central church.

Ohio

Dr. George D. McCulloch of Cincinnati has accepted a call to Union Congregational church, Cedar Grove, N. J.

Pledges amounting to more than $11,000, besides a large cash offering, were received at the dedicatory service of First church, Canton, recently.

Notorious roadhouses and dance halls in Hamilton have been permanently closed since the close of the evangelistic campaign under Dr. W. E. Biederwolf.

An unusual and interesting vestry service was held Dec. 29 by Wyoming church, Rev. A. L. Wilson, pastor. Nine of the young people who had returned to their homes from college for the holidays made short talks concerning the religious life and work of their colleges.

Mount Vernon church Dec. 15 dedicated a new structure which cost $44,500, all of which was raised through the personal effort of Rev. W. A. Clemmer, pastor. The church has 269 members and seven years ago unsuccessfully attempted to erect a new building. The present structure has an auditorium seating 700 and a Sunday school room accommodating 300. There is a large social room and a kitchen, together with a reception room and study, attractively furnished. A new organ has also been installed. The cost of the church was entirely raised before dedication day.

Church Free of Debt Before Dedication

New York

The children's chorus of Welsh church, Rome, won first prize in a musical contest at a recent eisteddfod at Utica.

Rev. Charles Stelzle will be associated with Dr. W. E. Biederwolf in an evangelistic campaign in Binghamton, beginning Feb. 9. He will give attention to the social service phases of the city work.

Twenty-five scholars and assistant teachers of the Sunday school of Mount Kisco church were presented honor badges at the close of the year for attendance at the church services three-fourths of the Sundays of the year. At the Christmas exercises the pastor was presented with a handsome gold watch by members of the congregation. Because of the growth of the congregation plans must soon be made for a new church building or extensive additions to the present edifice.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Chester—Chester Second, Jan. 28, 10 a. m.
Seattle—Georgetown, Jan. 21, 8 p. m.
Westchester—New York City, Assembly room, 156 5th avenue, Jan. 21, 10:30 a. m.

Stated Clerks Elected

Black Hills—Carrol D. Erskine.
Central Washington—Andrew C. McIver.

Resignations

California—Santa Cruz: Edward C. Philleo; Oakland: Josiah Daniel.
Minnesota—Howard Lake: Arthur A. Palmer.
New Jersey—Newark First: Robert T. Graham.
Oregon—Gold Beach: C. W. Higgins; Merrill: L. M. Anderson.

Calls

California—Santa Cruz: H. B. Mayo.
Delaware—Smyrna: James M. L. Eckard, accepts.
Indiana—Hopewell: John B. Ferguson; Kingston and Clarksburg: Homer M. Campbell, accepts.
Michigan—Coldwater First: Donald McCluer.
Nebraska—Kenesaw: J. W. Hill.
New Jersey—Basking Ridge: L. G. Bennett, accepts; Kearney: R. T. Graham, accepts; Toms River: E. C. Mason, accepts.
Oregon—Gold Beach: J. H. Hoyt, accepts; Eugene: Arthur A. Palmer, accepts.
Pennsylvania—Glen Campbell and Arcadia: J. K. Argo; Pittsburg Providence: George A. Leukel, declines.
South Dakota—Rapid City, Henry McClenaghan.
Wisconsin—North Milwaukee First: J. H. McGreaham, accepts.

Installations

Carbondale: J. R. E. Craighead, Jan. 16.
Michigan — Deckerville: H. A. Simpson, Jan. 16.
Pennsylvania—Seward, Charles A. Waltman, Dec. 27.

Supplies Arranged

California—Sacramento: Edward C. Philleo, Santa Cruz.

Change of Address

Argo, J. K.—Washington, D. C., to Glen Campbell, Pa.
Thompson, J. Milton—Troy to Central avenue, Far Rockaway, N. Y.

Accessions

California—Davis, 23, F. J. Barkler pastor; Fresno, 49, Duncan Wallace pastor; Los Gatos, 9, Henry W. Wintler pastor; San Francisco Richmond, 13, C. S. Tanner pastor.
Illinois—Chicago Endeavor, 14, Jan. 5, E. P. Day pastor; East St. Louis First, 38, Wilson Aull pastor; Du Quoin, 4, Jan. 5, W. M. Maxton pastor; Chicago Windsor Park, 7, Jan. 5, W. E. Shirey pastor; Chicago Roseland, 6, Jan. 5, Robert Owen Thomas, pastor; Chicago Ravenswood, 12, Jan. 5, F. L. Selden pastor; Chicago Hyde Park, 24, Jan. 5, A. Allison, Jr., pastor.
Indiana—Indianapolis Home, 7, Jan. 5, A. S. Buchanan pastor; Indianapolis Seventh, 12, Jan. 5, C. R. Shaver pastor; Indianapolis Irvington, 13, Jan. 5, J. S. Martin pastor; Indianapolis Tabernacle, 12, Jan. 5, E. W. Clippinger pastor.
Michigan—Detroit, Highland Park, 32, Jan. 5, J. D. McDonald pastor; Deckerville, 27, Jan. 5, H. A. Simpson pastor.
Minnesota—Willmar, 18, Jan. 5, L. W. Gade pastor.
Nebraska—Wahoo, 8, Jan. 5, W. N. Halsey supply.
New York—Marlboro, 36, Dec. 25, J. N. Kugler pastor; New York City Adams Memorial, 13, Jan. 5, F. D. Niedermeyer pastor.
Pennsylvania—Philadelphia Bethany, 21, Jan. 5, R. E. L. Jarvis pastor.
South Dakota—Brookings, 6, Dec. 29, A. F. von Tobel pastor.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

COLLINS—Hon. Michael Collins, Peotone, Ill., died at a private hospital at Ann Harbor, Mich., Dec. 3, 1912. He was born in County Clare, Ireland, Oct. 15, 1845. In 1848 his father brought his family to America, living in Vermont and Canada, and finally in 1857 settling in Illinois, where Mr. Collins lived until the day of his death.

Mr. Collins on March 10, 1872, publicly accepted Christ as his Saviour and consecrated himself to God, uniting with the Presbyterian Church, of which he was an active elder for thirty-seven years. He was so large in his sympathy that all classes and conditions of people went to him for the wise counsel he always willingly gave, especially to the young. He was so strong in his moral convictions that in the town and the county his influence for righteousness was deeply felt. He was so liberal in the distribution of his means that the widow and the orphan, the Boards of the Church, charitable and educational institutions and the local congregation, were helped with his gifts. He was so devoted to the extension of the Kingdom that, except for cause, he was never absent from the Sunday services, the Bible school, the prayer meeting and the session.

The death of such a Christian is deeply felt in his home, his church and his community.

Marriages

A charge of one cent per word is made for marriage notices. Payment must accompany copy.

OFF-MISKEY—Dec. 26, at the residence of George Allen, Overbrook, Pa., by John Grant Newman, D.D., Walter F. Off and Mrs. Esther Allen Miskey.

CAMPBELL-DONAGHY—Dec. 21, at the home of the bride, by John Grant Newman, D.D., Harry C. Campbell and Miss Estella M. Donaghy, both of Philadelphia, Pa.

It will pay you to place your next policy in the Postal Life Insurance Company

Assets more than $10,000,000

1912—STATE DEPARTMENT AUDIT—1912

Insurance in force more than $50,000,000

The triennial audit, just concluded, was a most exhaustive inquiry, made possible because the Company eliminates all branch-offices and agents, conducting its business under one roof—from a single headquarters, the Home Office in New York.

The inquiry was made thorough because it was the first examination since the Postal absorbed another, and a larger company, and also because the State Superintendent recognized that his official report would be a practical certification of the Company to other State Superintendents: the latter, mindful of the rigid New York requirements and of the strict supervision of its Insurance Department, have agreed that a company measuring up to New York State standards would be accepted and accredited in other States.

The Outcome Is Therefore Flattering to the Postal Life, and Commends It to Thoughtful Insurers Everywhere.

The Chief Examiner of life companies in his statement submitted to the Honorable William Temple Emmet, Superintendent of Insurance, refers to the high order of the Postal's risks secured by the non-agency method, and to the progress of the Company in bringing its organization to a high standard of efficiency. He adds that the cost of securing business by advertising and correspondence has not increased pro rata, with the new business written; the business-getting expense will therefore, as contended by the Company, decrease from year to year. He also adds that part of the cost of advertising should be charged to old business, as continued publicity has a tendency to keep up the confidence of policyholders and retain them.

The examination covers ma[illegible] pages of a printed document on file in th[illegible] ment.

SparksMarionE †jan13
1205 Springfield av

Net Cost Lower in the POSTAL

because

1st. Commission Dividends, corresponding to the commissions other companies pay their agents, go to Postal Policyholders the first year.

2d. Renewal-Commission Dividends and Office-expense Savings covered by the guaranteed dvididends go to Policyholders in subsequent years.

$9\frac{1}{2}\%$

3d. The Usual contingent policy-dividends, enhanced by Postal Life economies, still further reduce the cost each year after the first.

Superintendent Emmet, in a memorandum filed with the Examiner's Report December 16th, 1912, calls special attention to the writing of insurance by mail as bringing the policyholders into communication with the home office, and states that the report shows a general improvement in the condition of the Company. There is merit, he furthermore states, in the health-work of the Medical Department, not only to the Company and its policyholders, but to the general public as well.

Particular reference is made to the absence of litigation arising from questions with POSTAL policyholders. He speaks of the number of improvements made in the handling of its business, and points out that gains have been made notwithstanding the considerable expenditures in 1912 for betterment of the Company's property.

Thus is the Company commended by the highest authorities to the public. The official endorsements, the conduct of its business through publicity channels, and its operations subject to the United States postal authorities, carry confidence to intending insurers, as well as to its own body of policyholders.

Total Assets and Liabilities

Postal Life Building

At the close of the examination the Company had over $50,000,000 insurance in force; the policy and other liabilities were fully covered by statutory and departmental reserves amounting to $10,029,510.10, with an excess or surplus to policyholders of $226,874.55.

The Company's reserves and other assets are in approved securities, including state, municipal and railroad bonds; bonds and mortgages, real estate, policy loans, accrued interest, deferred net-premiums, cash in bank and various other items, aggregating $10,256,384.65.

In writing the Company for particulars for yourself, please give: First, your full name; Second, your occupation; Third, the exact date of your birth. Also mention THE CONTINENT of January 16th.

Bear in mind no agent will be sent to visit you. The POSTAL dispenses with agents, and pays to you in cash or credits you in equivalent dividends, or paid-up insurance, the amount of agency commissions.

STRONG POSTAL POINTS

First: Old-line legal reserve insurance—not fraternal or assessment.

Second: Standard policy-reserves, now more than $10,000,000. Insurance in force more than $50,000,000.

Third: Standard policy-provisions, approved by the State Insurance Department.

Fourth: Operates under strict State requirements and subject to the United States postal authorities.

Fifth: High medical standards in the selection of risks.

Sixth: Policyholders' Health Bureau arranges one free medical examination each year, if desired.

POSTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

The Only Non-Agency Company in America

WM. R. MALONE, President Postal Life Building 35 NASSAU ST., NEW YORK

THE CONTINENT

JANUARY 23, 1913

Aiding Our Brothers of the Mills

CALVIN DILL WILSON

Are We Forgetting God?

J. H. JOWETT

"Church Has Got Too Polite"

EDITORIAL

The Wayfarer and the Greatest Wonder: A Baby
Equal Suffrage and Woman's Apathy—May B. Loomis

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. The Continent's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of The Continent. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

THE CONTINENT EDUCATIONAL BUREAU
509 Wabash Avenue - - - CHICAGO

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR
Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - . - Chicago, Illinois.

A BOY'S WHOLE TIME

Must be profitably occupied if he is to receive the best kind of education: the kind that stands for moral strength, intellectual alertness, physical fitness. LAKE FOREST ACADEMY merits the serious consideration of those who understand the manifold needs of a boy.

Address WILLIAM MATHER LEWIS,
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE
OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.
IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Tennessee

Greeneville and Tusculum College

Strong Faculty. Healthful climate. Broad and liberal courses. Positive Christian influences. Expenses reasonable. Pres., Rev. C. O. Gray, D.D., Greeneville, Tenn.

Ward Seminary For Girls and Young Women 42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres., Nashville, Tenn.

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place' Catalogue mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN. President.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853
Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.
Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas
Vocational-Cultural for young women

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Memorial Windows

Beautiful in design, highest quality in materials, best workmanship in execution. We number many Presbyterian churches among our patrons. Let us tell you what we can do for you. Write today for particulars.
FLANAGAN & BIEDENWEG CO., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

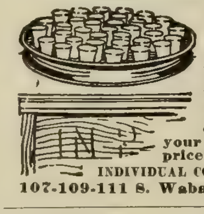
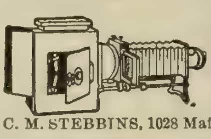
CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS. MICHIGAN.



The Best Way

The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago



Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat, or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus. Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago. | CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
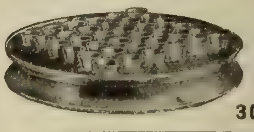
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog FD"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating: valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog FA
School Desks, Catalog FC
American Seating Company 218 S WABASH AV. CHICAGO. NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA



The International
The most practical Communion Service made.
Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

ALEXANDER'S GOSPEL SONGS
OVER A MILLION SOLD
$25.00 per 100.
Sample 30 cents postpaid.
No. 2. An Enlarged Book—Many New Hymns—Now Ready
FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY. New York or Chicago

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

A chance to enlist in a kindly service

To Our Subscribers:

The Continent has many requests every week to place deserving institutions on its free list.

There are thousands of worthy objects. Thus:

Home missionaries
Foreign missionaries
Retired ministers
Orphans' homes
Industrial homes
"Shut ins"
Church libraries
Y. M. C. A. libraries
College libraries
Old people's homes
Soldiers' homes
Institutional churches
Sunday school libraries

And so on. Then there are opportunities to present Christian truths to the public. Christian Scientists are about the only persons who avail themselves of the opportunity to place literature in railway stations. There are thousands of hotels where men cannot secure good literature.

The number of copies The Continent may legally send free is limited; and extra postage is required. And while it may seem a small thing to send one copy one time, every paper represents an actual expenditure of money that, multiplied by fifty-two and by hundreds of beneficiaries, represents an amount no one would expect to be paid out solely by us.

Here is the chance to do a kindly service at a small cost which any one can meet. Think it over. If you do not know of a person or institution that would benefit we can find one readily enough. Send us a card indicating your desire and you will receive information as to rate, and the recipient of your kindness will be informed of it.

Address THE CONTINENT, New York or Chicago

"A FAIR FACE MAY PROVE A FOUL BARGAIN." MARRY A PLAIN GIRL IF SHE USES SAPOLIO

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
Everett Sisson, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE: THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1913

TOLERANCE AND CONVICTION 101

EDITORIAL—

Moral Necrosis 105
Time to Speak for the Children 105
God's Words Waking Up 105
Proof of Mormon Juggling 105

THE WORLD—

Home Rule for Ireland Triumphs 102
Educational Reform Next on Program 102
France Elects a Great President 102
Two Offenders of Note Shut Out 102
Pujo Committee Hearings 102
Impeachment of Judge Archbald 103
President-Elect Opposes Ball 103
Turkey Served with an Ultimatum 103
RELIGIOUS WORLD 103
DO WE FORGET GOD? .... J. H. Jowett 107
HELPING OUR BROTHER OF THE MILLS (Illustrated) .... Calvin Dill Wilson 109
YES OR NO ON SUFFRAGE: WOMAN'S APATHY .... May Brown Loomis 110
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XII. .... Richard S. Holmes 111
JOY FOR A NEW BABY .... The Wayfarer 112
THE HOME COUNCIL—Are You Doing Your Part? .... Lee McCrae 113
YOUNG AMERICA—Why Larry May Become President (with Illustration) .... Sarah C. Rippey 114
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL .... J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 115
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE .... E. A. Wicher 116
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE ...... W. T. Ellis 116
MISSIONARY WORK 117
NEW BOOKS 118
THE OPEN HEARTH 120
WAYS OF WORKING 121
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 123
FINANCIAL SITUATION 129

Around the Shop

Expert advertisers know periodical quality when they see it. In New York there is an organization strictly limited to the leading periodicals, and it is a high official of this body who wrote these comments.

"In reading The Continent from week to week for several years, I have been impressed with the amount of information which it gives, not only of importance to the minister but to the layman as well, inside and outside of the church.

"I have been impressed with the strength of its editorials and the broadness of its view. While it must be preeminently a national Presbyterian publication, it is refreshing to observe that the Methodist and the Baptist and the Congregationalist and other Protestant denominations may go through its pages with spiritual profit. In thus being interesting to all denominations, it is best serving Presbyterianism.

"It is good to see that The Continent is militant. It does not hesitate to attack courageously and constructively conditions which, if left to flourish, would do harm to Christianity and the church at large.

"Its brief articles on world events are written in strong, comprehensive fashion. And The Continent does not hesitate to publish clean, wholesome humor. It is not in sympathy with long-faced Christianity.

"In these days of efficiency and scientific management it is good to note that The Continent believes in making the church interesting, to compel the people to come in. Its stand for attractively advertising church services is along this line. St. Paul, himself, with his epistles, was among the earliest advertisers of moral truths.

"I have said nothing about the mechanical details—its typographical appearance, make-up, printing, good paper, appropriate covers, etc. One needs only glance at The Continent to realize the painstaking care and expenditure involved in keeping these features up to the highest standard.

"I do not know that these 'heart throbs' will interest you, but I could not do less than tell you how strongly The Continent appeals to me."

A West Point on the Mississippi.

An earnest young man plus a little money

Cost of education is not great in institutions where study is the chief aim of life. The total expense of training men for the ministry is only the small sum of $120 a year at

Dubuque German College and Seminary

This includes board and room and is made possible by the generous assistance of friends who contribute to the endowment and equipment of the institution. Most of the students will become preachers in their native tongue and will be able to reach their fellow countrymen with peculiar power. They will help solve the immigration problem on a Christian basis. Many of these men earn their own way, but the supply of work is not inexhaustible and there are many applicants. For more information write Dr. C. M. STEFFENS, President, Dubuque, Iowa.

54 Books in One Great Volume
FREE
To Continent Subscribers

¶ In a year The Continent gives its readers in quantity of reading matter the equivalent of fifty-four copies of Ralph Connor's story book "Black Rock." Bind up your fifty-two issues of The Continent for a year into a complete and permanent volume by

THE EMERSON BINDER—"A Binder That Binds"
Each issue may be inserted week by week as it arrives.

"It's as simple to insert a weekly issue as filing papers and requires but a few seconds."

¶ How often have you wished to read an article or story in some back copy of The Continent only to find that copy lost or mutilated? You can now have your Continents in the form of a durable and attractive bound book, ready to refer to at any time, and a handsome addition to your library. After the volume containing the entire year is completed, you may either remove the copies, to be bound in the usual way, or you may simply place the binder and contents on your library shelf. The words "The Continent" will be stamped in gold on the front. It is bound in full black cloth.

¶ By special arrangement we will send this binder absolutely free and postpaid to any present subscribers who will send us a new yearly subscriber for The Continent at the regular $2.50 yearly price. Here's a chance for you to get that friend to subscribe or, if you prefer, send the paper to him as a present. If you cannot do this, we will, as a special courtesy, send the binder to you postpaid at its regular retail price of one dollar.

Address THE CONTINENT
509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. 156 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

T. & T. Clark's Publications, 1913

Catalogue of T. & T. Clark's Books Sent Free by Post, upon Application.
These books for sale by all booksellers, or will be supplied by

Charles Scribner's Sons, Sole Agents in America

Eternal Life: A Study of Its Implications and Applications

By BARON FRIEDRICH VON HÜGEL

Member of the Cambridge Philological Society. Author of "The Mystical Element of Religion, as Studied in Saint Catherine of Genoa and Her Friends."

The work is divided into three parts: the first, Historical Retrospect, follows its theme from Oriental Religions through Israelitish and Hellenic and so forth up to Modern times; the second, Contemporary Survey, discusses the Philosophies derivative from Kant, Biology and Epigenesis, Socialism, Institutional Religion, etc.; the third, Prospects and Conclusions, speaks for itself.

As the writer says in preface:—"The method is very deliberately an analysis of more or less advanced states of soul—of considerable spiritual experience and of considerable articulation of such experience." Net $3.25

An Introduction to the New Testament

By PROF. THEODORE ZAHN, Erlangen

Translated from the last German edition, and containing Professor ZAHN'S very latest emendations. Three large Volumes, including Full Notes, Chronological Table, and Complete Indexes. Net $12.00

"A storehouse of learning, which will remain one of the great works of New Testament scholarship for generations."—Congregationalist.

The Gospel of Gladness and Its Meaning for Us

By REV. JOHN CLIFFORD

A collection of the most notable sermons of this celebrated London Baptist clergyman, which will appeal strongly to all who have followed his remarkable career as a powerful preacher and civic reformer. $1.75 net

Jesus, the Christ: Historical or Mythological?

A REPLY TO PROF. DREWS' "DIE CHRISTUSMYTHE"

By THOS. J. THORBURN

A masterly defense of the orthodox position regarding the historicity of Christ, in which the author traces in outline the development of the historical heresy concerning him from its rise in the mind of Strauss down to its most recent issues and culmination in the extreme idealism of Prof. Drews.

8vo. $2.50 net

Christ's Message of the Kingdom

A Course of Daily Study for Private Students and for Bible Circles

By A. G. HOGG, M. A.

Professor of Mental and Moral Science in the Madras Christian College.

"It will prove a useful guide for such as desire to penetrate into the secret of the true joy of the Christian life."—Christian Intelligencer.

Cloth 80 cents net

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF MAN

By H. WHEELER ROBINSON, M.A., Tutor in Rawdon College, sometime Senior Kennicott scholar in the University of Oxford. Net $2.25

"The book is one of the finest contributions which has been made for long to Biblical and philosophical theology."—British Weekly.

AN ANGLO-SAXON ABBOT. AELFRIC of EYNSHAM. A Study

By S. HARVEY GEM, M. A.

Net $1.50

An interesting account of one of the great figures of the Early English Church, with a History of the Church in Anglo-Saxon times.

A DISCIPLE'S RELIGION

Sermons by the REV. W. H. HUTTON, D.D., Archdeacon of Northampton, Canon of the Cathedral Church of Peterborough.

Post 8vo. $1.75 net

AT THE TEMPLE CHURCH

Sermons by the REV. H. G. WOODS, D.D., Master of the Temple; Hon. Fellow of Trinity College.

Post 8vo. $1.75 net

THE ATHANASIAN CREED IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

By R. O. P. TAYLOR

$1.50 net

A calm, unbiased, and thorough examination of the Athanasian Creed.

THE KINGDOM AND THE MESSIAH

By E. F. SCOTT, D.D., author of "The Fourth Gospel." $2.25 net

SOME OF GOD'S MINISTRIES

By WM. M. MACGREGOR, of St. Andrew's United Free Church, Edinburgh. $1.75 net

A volume of notable sermons by the famous Edinburgh preacher.

GREECE AND BABYLON

By LOUIS R. FARNELL, Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. A comparative sketch of Mesopotamian, Anatolian and Hellenic Religions. $3.00 net

A scholarly discussion of ancient religious thought, with chapters on the religious temperament of Eastern and Western peoples, religion and morality in the olden times, the deities as nature-powers and social-powers, eschatalogic ideas of East and West, etc.

THE RELIGION OF THE ANCIENT CELTS

By CANON MACCULLOCH, D.D.

$4.00 net

THE PHILOCALIA OF ORIGEN

A Selection of Choice Passages from the Works by St. Gregory and St. Basil of Cæsarea. Translated into English from the Text of Dr. Robinson by the Rev. George Lewis, M.A.

$3.00 net

THE EARLIEST LIFE OF CHRIST

Being the Diatessaron of Tatian. Written about A. D. 160. Literally Translated from the Arabic Version and Containing the Four Gospels Woven Into One Story. With an Introduction and Notes. By the REV. J. HAMLYN HILL, D.D. $1.25 net

VISIONS AND REVELATIONS

By REV. J. T. DEAN. $2.00 net

Discourses on the Apocalypse. A popular exposition in the light of the modern historical method.

AUTHORITY IN RELIGION

By REV. J. H. LECKIE. $2.00 net

CHRIST and CHRIST'S RELIGION

By F. HOLMES DUDDEN, Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. $1.75 net

A History of Creeds and Confessions of Faith in Christendom and Beyond

WITH HISTORICAL TABLES

By WILLIAM A. CURTIS, B.D., D.Litt., (Edin.)

Prof. of Systematic Theology in the University of Aberdeen

"A learned and exhaustive work."—Times.

"We welcome this handy volume, with its stores of information so well classified."—Dr. Burn in The Journal of Theological Studies. $3.00 net

Primitive Christianity and Its Non-Jewish Sources

By CARL CLEMEN

Professor in the University of Bonn.

The first English translation of this notable work so well known to scholars in the original German and so highly esteemed, especially by American students who have studied under Prof. Clemen at Bonn University.

$3.50 net

The Religion of Israel Under the Kingdom

By the REV. ADAM C. WELCH, Theol. D.

Author of "Anselm and His Work."

"Dr. Welch has described the religion throughout the period of the Kingdom with extraordinary success."—Expository Times. $3.00 net

Our Growing Creed:

or, The Evangelical Faith as Developed and Reaffirmed by Current Thought

By WILLIAM D. McLAREN

A volume which makes an honest effort toward theological reconstruction, which is so vitally needed at the present day and which retells the old story in the light of the spirit of the age. $3.50 net

Types of English Piety

By R. H. COATS

A scholarly interpretation of the principal types of piety which have prevailed in England since the Reformation, with a study of some representative examples of each type, intended to indicate the special weaknesses to which they are severally exposed, and to estimate their respective services in the national religious life. $1.50 net

Handbook of the Modern Greek Vernacular: Grammar, Texts, Glossary.

By ALBERT THUMB

Professor of Comparative Philology in Strassburg University, Sometime Professor in the University of Marburg. Translated from the Second Improved and Enlarged German Edition by S. Angus, M.A., Ph.D.

"Students of the Greek language are to be warmly congratulated on the opportunity of using in English this standard work of Thumb, the only grammar of Modern Greek vernacular in the English language. . . They will find this grammar invaluable. . . The work of Thumb needs no praise."—British Review and Expositor.

$4.00 net

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS 153-157 Fifth Avenue, New York

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 4 JANUARY 23, 1913 WHOLE No. 2226

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

Tolerance and Conviction

"THE CHURCH HAS GOT TOO POLITE."

So growls a newspaper writer in San Francisco. He went to hear an eminent pastor assail the views of another eminent pastor. The preacher did the assailing plain enough, but with courteous, polished phrases, and wound up by assuring his auditors that the other man was an esteemed friend of his.

The newspaper man was disgusted. He says the church has lost its fighting spirit. Its controversies are no longer in the old cut-and-slash style, but poor and petty between men who dread to draw blood.

He detests the change mainly because he likes real fighting—no "Pardon me!" duels for him. He is frank to admit that there is his chief discontent. But the critic insists he is also thinking a thought or two for the welfare of the church.

✠

"Where is your church militant?" he demands. There used to be much talk of it, but nowadays what one sees is a church placid and good natured, which is by direct result, he thinks, a church stupid.

If the church militant would only come back and do some more militating, this San Francisco scribe believes the wreck of fine manners and polite talk would be paid for, and more, by the revival of vim and vigor among church people. In the old days, when every disputed clause in the creeds brought out the militia, the churches were astir and nobody was bewailing a "strange lack of interest."

Without doubt this California opinion could find much echo if it went hunting over the country for it. Not outside the church only, but inside it even more, there lurks the feeling that Christianity wants drive and force today just because it has surrendered to an ignoble truce over questions of differing faith and opinion.

Toleration for other people's beliefs, many feel, has gone too far. Fine philosophical arguments for it can be figured out, but the practical effect of unlimited tolerance, we are told, is unlimited indifference; men who don't contend for their convictions turn out soon to have no convictions.

So the red-blooded contentions of the fathers weaken to "After you!" curtsies and finger-tip handshakes among the sons.

✠

But neither tolerance nor yet politeness is to be ruled out of the church on this indictment. For such spineless degeneration of tolerance there is a cause not the fault of the tolerance.

The fault lies instead with the wrong education of the church through many centuries in the vital matter of the way to hold its truth. Now that God's long evolution of nobler ideals is teaching Christians a better lesson on this point, the plague of the situation comes not from the new breadth of sympathy which they are learning, but from remnants of the old bigotry which they are unlearning.

What did that old bigotry say?

It said that any man who had the truth had reason to be mightily set up over it. Being so wise and so good justified him in being vastly vain. Like as men have always done over all their possessions, so it was proper for the possessor of truth to strut about and demand deference to himself.

Out of that but one result was possible when somebody refused the homage demanded—when some skeptic came by and intimated that the boaster's hoarded truth was probably counterfeit after all. The boaster got angry and started out to hurt somebody.

Persecution was first set afoot. And when the world was too civilized to endure persecution any longer, the same old malice wrought itself out in tornadoes of tongue-lashing, being the next most efficient means of hurting somebody.

Undoubtedly through the ages there have always been great souls sincerely fighting battles of opinion for the love of truth. But the commonplace run of theological conflicts have been nothing worthier than the blows and counter blows of injured pride.

✠

Now what has come to pass? Well, the meek Christ has at last taught the churches that pride of opinion is the emptiest and most foolish of all the prides of men. Common sense says, too, that where men think and reason each for himself, each has a right to his own conclusions.

This is sound principle in both details, and sound principle can never do any harm. But what does do harm is the sinister shadow of that old bigotry.

Men argue from it still, even after they have rejected it. They say that if one man's understanding of truth can't be certified by outward authority to be better than another man's, then what can be the use of anybody's holding on to his own opinion or trying to get others to take it? If its value is so uncertain, let it go.

Such is the reason why so many men today set no store by belief.

✠

It is a bad result undoubtedly. And one way to remedy it would be to go back to the selfish prides which made men fight for their doctrines. But it would be a wretched remedy.

The right way to cure laxness of modern faith is in just the opposite direction—by a path that leads up from the high level of Christian toleration to the higher level of this understanding:

Every conviction of truth that a man can attain to by deep living and high thinking and close fellowship with God, he owes to the world; he must hold on to it and live by it for the world's sake.

Truth, that is to say, is a trust fund. It is, in spiritual realms, not acquired by the wise, but granted to the faithful. It becomes not property for the owner's distinction but endowment for mankind's benefit.

And no one man's treasure of it is complete in itself. His part is but a measure to be contributed, more or less, to the full truth-stores of the world.

Whoever sees these things, can neither be vain of his own acquirement nor bitter toward those who for the present will not have his truth. But still less can he cease to care for and cherish that truth in his own breast. As a trustee he must keep his trust undamaged until the world does take it.

Keeping the trust, he must openly testify meantime to its worth as he understands it. Especially must he live it to the highest limit of his power in order to be an illustration commending his faith.

Truth's trustee, conscious of his responsibility, becomes not a dogmatist seeking proselytes but a brother of men desiring to spread the benefit of his own blessings.

It is thus that tolerance and conviction are to be married in the household of faith.

The World

Home Rule for Ireland Triumphs

The first and probably hardest battle for Irish home rule has been won, and while Ulster is grieved and angry, for the most part Ireland rejoices. Last Thursday night saw the climax of the parliamentary drama, when the bill passed the house of commons on final reading by vote of 367 to 257. It was at once sent to the house of lords, where its rejection is expected as a matter of course. But under the revised parliamentary practice the lords have only a suspensory veto, and the measure will become a law in spite of the peers' protest if passed by the commons in two successive sessions of the same or a different parliament.

Reports agree that the closing debates reached an elevated plane of eloquence and statesmanship, though hostilities were bitter and the fighting fierce. Arthur J. Balfour and A. Bonar Law, former and present leaders of the Unionists, appealed to British patriotism and British fears, but were more than matched in emotion and high passion by the Irish veteran leader, John Redmond. Mr. Redmond made the point that after eliminating the Irish vote for the bill the purely British majority remaining was as large as the majorities which in the past had passed some of the great reforms. None of the Nationalist champions, of course, were willing to admit the seriousness of the Ulster Protestants' situation if faced with a Dublin parliament controlled by Romanist sentiment. The exclusion of Ulster from the operation of the bill is still talked of and hoped for, with the threat of civil war in the background.

Premier Asquith and his ministers and the coalition party leaders have succeeded where Gladstone and his associates failed, and their triumph is notable and unmistakable, even though they have reaped the benefit of twenty years' growth of public opinion.

* * *

Educational Reform Next on the Liberal Program

Now that home rule is out of the way, Welsh Church disestablishment and franchise reform are to be disposed of, but still another great step in the social program was announced a few days ago by the British government. Lord Chancellor Haldane, on the authority of Premier Asquith and the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Lloyd George, outlined a colossal scheme for improvement in education, both elementary and higher. The avowed object is to increase the efficiency of the nation as a whole, to make the fullest possible use of the natural abilities of all children, irrespective of their station in life, and to maintain the productive powers of the nation on a high level. It will mean a system of national education at the expense of the state—something America and Germany have long maintained.

English statesmen ascribe the commercial advance of Germany to the prevalence and efficiency of vocational training obtainable in primary and secondary schools supported by the state. The Toronto Globe declares that educational reform in England is long overdue, and should take precedence over the land tax plan of Lloyd George. The latter project cannot well be dealt with until the work of land valuing is completed, which will take two years more.

* * *

France Elects a Great President

Premier Raymond Poincare, reputed to be one of the greatest of contemporary European statesmen, was last Thursday elected president of France. He was chosen by the national assembly, meeting at Versailles, for a term of seven years, and will take office next month. His nearest competitor was M. Pams, minister of agriculture.

Most of the previous presidents of France have been nothing more than well paid figureheads, but it is not probable that M. Poincare's strong personality will be overshadowed by the cabinet. It is predicted that the new president will not only preside but direct, and be the chief executive in fact as well as in name. This he is well qualified to be, by reason of his varied experience as lawyer, diplomat, parliamentarian, minister and premier. He has been particularly happy in dealing with foreign affairs, and has also gained some fame as a writer. His Socialist foes regard him as ultra-conservative. He is in his 53d year, physically unimposing, alert and ambitious. His wife is of Italian birth.

M. Briand, now minister of justice, who settled the national railway strike of a few years ago with a strong hand, has been asked to head a new cabinet.

A deplorable incident attending the election was a challenge to a duel sent by the new president to Georges Clemenceau, an ex-premier and a presidential possibility. Poincare was insulted by a letter written him by Clemenceau and demanded "satisfaction" in the ancient manner, but the matter was adjusted without a personal encounter. Evidently French ideas as to dueling are not keeping step with the republic's progress in other directions.

* * *

Two Offenders of Note Shut Out of the Country

The right of asylum seldom used to be denied by this country to anyone seeking admission, but with the passage of the years the lines have come to be more strictly drawn. Paupers, anarchists and criminals are among those now excluded, and the gantlet at Ellis island is becoming increasingly hard to run. Cipriano Castro, ex-dictator of Venezuela, and Edward F. Mylius, an English editor who served a prison sentence for libeling King George, are the latest noted characters to find the door shut in their faces. Castro has of late been living in France, but American officials have not forgotten his ruffianly defiance of international law and diplomacy, nor the lawless conduct which reduced his country to a condition of chaos. The immigration officials asked him last week as to his responsibility for the killing of General Parades, but he refused to explain, and also professed ignorance of other questionable transactions. Castro certainly is an "undesirable citizen" in Venezuela, but whether he is such here in America is another question. He asserts that he simply wishes to visit the United States as an ordinary tourist.

A similar issue has been raised in the Mylius case. Mylius printed in The Paris Liberator, a newspaper owned by Edward H. James—a nephew of the late Professor William James of Harvard—a story to the effect that the king of England, while still a sailor prince, contracted a morganatic or unrecognized marriage with the daughter of Admiral Seymour. When brought to book in a British court Mylius was wholly unable to substantiate the story. Secretary Nagel branded it, in his statement last week, as a false charge of bigamy against two persons involving moral turpitude and not a "political offense." Both Mylius and Castro have appealed from the adverse rulings.

Some critics of the administration have suggested that like decisions if made and enforced a few decades ago would have kept out many refugees who, in the atmosphere of America, developed into patriotic and useful citizens.

* * *

Pujo Committee Hears Important Testimony

Recent hearings of the Pujo committee—the so-called money trust quiz—give promise that its final recommendations to Congress may be of great value in reconstructing the nation's financial system. In its first sessions the committee apparently attacked at random everything connected with Wall street interests, but in its later stages has shown a serious spirit of inquiry into present-day banking and corporation problems with a view to working out remedies. The tremendous concentration of wealth in the hands of a few men and the perils of this limited control of the country's money and credit is a line of investigation which has been actively followed. Three financiers were named as the dominating figures in the world of finance—J. Pierpont Morgan, George F. Baker of the First National bank of New York and James Stillman of the National City bank.

Mr. Baker told the committee that his bank, starting with a capital of half a million dollars in 1863, had made profits amounting to more than $80,000,000. During the last four years the bank had paid dividends of 226 per cent on its present capitalization of $10,000,000. He rather reluctantly admitted that he thought concentration of capital had gone "about far enough," and that if it got "into bad hands" it might wreck the country. Jacob Schiff, the well-known German-American financier, had no fear of concentration. George W. Perkins, formerly of the Morgan banking house, jestingly referred to himself as a student, but his studies had not enabled him to determine at just what point concentration of capital is a menace. Mr. Untermeyer, attorney for the investigation, had suggested two and a half billions, controlled by nine institutions. Mr. Perkins expressed a belief in government supervision of stock exchanges and in publicity of corporate affairs.

The frankest man among the bankers who have appeared before the committee was George M. Reynolds of Chicago, president of the second largest bank in the United States. He candidly declared that the concentration of money and credit is a grave danger and that he was opposed to it. "Interlocking directorates" he also opposed. He favored legislation which would assure fair treatment to all in the matter of money and credit control, and he believed in competition. Mr. Reynolds' views are said to be supported by the commercial bankers as distinguished from the speculative promoters of the banking fraternity, and, it is believed, will make for the sound prosperity of the country.

* *

Impeachment of Judge Archbald Raises Questions

The United States senate's verdict of guilty in the impeachment trial of Robert W. Archbald of Pennsylvania, a judge of the court of commerce, has again demonstrated two things—first, that when guilt is established by overwhelming evidence impeachment is an effective method of removing erring officials; and second, that the proceeding is exceedingly cumbersome and unwieldy. Only two other federal judges have been similarly convicted—one in 1804 and one in 1862. In all only nine impeachment proceedings have been heard by the senate since the beginning of the country's history. The success of the Archbald case, say the Progressives, can hardly be considered an argument against the proposed idea of the recall of judges as well as other officials.

Congress may again vote to abolish the entire commerce court, which was once before saved by President Taft's veto. There is no reflection on the integrity of the remaining members of the court, but a feeling prevails in Congress that the tribunal is in effect a drag upon the interstate commerce commission, the governmental agency which assures a fair deal between the transportation companies and the public. The judiciary committee of the house of representatives also has before it charges against two members of the federal district bench, Judge Pollock of Kansas and Judge Van Valkenburg of St. Louis. And the commissioner of internal revenue has made complaint against Circuit Judge (formerly senator) Pritchard of North Carolina and District Judge Boyd of the same state. The latter case involves the seizure of whisky on which revenue taxes had not been paid. It has been recently pointed out that the courts as a whole are thoroughly honest and capable—though here and there erratic, as in Idaho—and the coincidence of these sundry charges should not encourage public clamor against the machinery of law administration.

* *

Moving Against Child Labor in New York

Bills have been introduced into the New York legislature to stop the employment of children under 14 years of age in canneries and in tenement houses on work for factories. The latter prohibition is designed to put an end to home "sweat shops," and the former to wipe out the disgraceful conditions which were last year found to prevail in the canning industry of the state. Mere children, hardly more than babies, were found to be working ten, fourteen and sixteen hours a day at sorting and preparing fruits and vegetables for the canners, often in dirty and unsanitary surroundings. New York has laws intended to forbid child labor, but a former attorney general held that a shed adjoining a canning factory was not a "factory" within the legal definition and was therefore outside the scope of the law. This exemption has been shamefully abused, according to evidence adduced before a state commission and before a congressional committee. First-class factories say that they can get along without the toil of children, and the exploiters of childhood should be compelled to do the same.

* *

President-Elect Opposes Inaugural Ball

In a letter to the chairman of the inauguration committee, William C. Eustis, President-Elect Wilson courteously suggests that the traditional inaugural ball be omitted. Governor Wilson says there is a large indirect expense upon the government incidental to the ball, and he believes these balls have ceased to be necessary to the enjoyment of the visitors. The letter caused consternation in Washington, as arrangements had been made to make the function an important part of the social program of inauguration week. But the committee retreated with as good grace as possible and began considering a popular reception as a substitute for the dance.

* *

Turkey Served with a Two Weeks' Ultimatum

According to dispatches from London, Bulgaria, Servia and Montenegro have presented an ultimatum to Turkey giving fourteen days in which to make a favorable reply to their demands, which include the cession of Adrianople and all the Ægean islands. If an agreement is not reached the Bulgarian commander in chief is to resume hostilities four days later. The sultan ordered the Turkish national assembly to convene to consider the situation.

Religious World

Federal Council Measures Advanced

The executive committee named by the quadrennial Federal Council of Churches at Chicago in December did not leave time for anything to sag following the Chicago meeting, but met in New York last week to set afoot promptly and vigorously the work committed to it by the council. The new president, Dean Shailer Mathews of Chicago, was present, and the new chairman of the executive committee, Dr. Frank Mason North of New York, presided. Dr. Rivington D. Lord was continued as recording secretary and Dr. W. I. Haven as chairman of the local New York committee, which is in charge of the headquarters office. This was formerly called the business committee, but is henceforth to be known as the administrative committee.

It is anticipated that new secretaries will be added to the headquarters staff before many months, but nothing to that end was done at this meeting; and Dr. Macfarland and Dr. Lynch will continue to carry the work alone for the present. Steps were taken to fulfill the late council's instruction to open an office representing Protestant interests in the national capital, but whether a secretary will be stationed there is as yet undetermined. The fear that such a secretary would be inevitably classed as a religious lobbyist with Congress has caused hesitation in the minds of many who committed themselves to the plan with doubtless insufficient consideration at the Chicago meeting.

The reorganization of the different branches of the council's work under a new policy which calls for commissions instead of committees, and which provides for an official representation of denominational boards and institutions in those commissions, was a matter given considerable attention; but the reorganization was not completed. One important commission, however, was constituted to formulate and recommend courses of instruction for theological students on social and industrial subjects. The members of this commission on the part of the theological seminaries are Professor Walter Rauschenbusch, Professor Thomas C. Hall, Professor Theodore F. Herman, Dean Mathews and President George B. Stewart; and on the part of the Federal Council Rev. Ernest H. Abbott, Dr. Josiah Strong, Dr. Washington Gladden, Dr. Edward T. Devine, Professor Thomas N. Carver and Rev. Charles S. Macfarland.

There was also named a committee, of which Robert E. Speer is chairman, to arrange plans for cooperation between the council's commission on foreign missions and the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. The most natural way of insuring cooperation would be identifying the two, since their objects can scarcely be divergent; and it is to be trusted that this solution can be worked out. The executive committee provided for investigation and conference looking to a united religious campaign in San Francisco two years hence during the Panama exposition; prepared an appeal to the government for an increase in the number of naval chaplains; indorsed the determination of the social service commission to devote its principal energy to the crusade for one rest day a week for all classes of labor, and adopted a resolution expressing the interest of the churches in the centennial celebration of the 1814 peace treaty with Great Britain.

* *

Success of United Home Mission Effort

That remarkable organization, the Home Missions Council, which has done so much to relieve sectarian rivalry in the United States, held on Tuesday and Wednesday in the Presbyterian building in New York a very successful annual meeting, with Dr. C. L. Thompson of the Presbyterian Board in the chair. Much of the interest of the occasion was centered in reports of the very successful undertaking of the council in the past year. Among these were the "neglected fields survey" in the West last spring, the observance of Home Mission Week during the autumn and the aggressive measures by which a decision was secured at Washington forbidding the employment in government Indian schools of any more teachers wearing a religious garb.

One question before the council was whether Home Mission Week ought to be observed annually. Though difficulties were recognized in the way of making this a fixed institution, strong general sentiment was in favor of doing so, and unless new obstacles arise another Home Mission Week will be appointed for the fall of 1913. But instead of having, as in the autumn past, a program covering all phases of home missions, hereafter each annual program will be devoted to a single aspect. It was proposed at first to take as the theme for 1913 "The American City," but afterwards it was decided to choose "Immigration." The management of this matter was then committed entirely to the Missionary Education Movement, and that society will have full charge of the preparations for Home Mission Week of the present year.

The council was so pleased with the "neglected fields survey" that it indorsed the idea of carrying on the same kind of inquiry in other parts of the country. The work in the West is not yet finished, however, and it is unlikely that any other section will be visited during the coming year.

There was decided opinion in the conference, expressed in more than one paper and address, in favor of the Presbyterian plan of adding to every Home Board departments under charge of trained specialists for such subjects as social service, rural churches, the city and immigration. As these departments multiply arrangements will be made for the specialists of various denominations to work together. Similar indorsement for a Presbyterian idea appeared when the members of the Home Missions Council conferred with the city mission workers of New York, and the Methodists and Baptists in the group indicated a determination to ask the aid of their national boards in evangelizing the nation's metropolis, just as the Presbyterian board has already given aid to the Presbytery of New York.

More radical than all else that the council did was its action in providing that if denominations cannot agree about proper adjustments in overchurched communities the council will appoint a commissioner to arbitrate each specific case. Dr. Thompson put forward this suggestion very dubiously, but it was accepted with applause by every board represented in the meeting, and the plan will go into effect whenever a case arises that requires it.

* *

Foreign Mission Men Confer Fraternally

For the twentieth time in twenty-one years, Protestant foreign mission secretaries and board members of all the denominational names in this country met in conference last week. The spirit of fraternal fellowship in a common work was more strongly marked than ever. The personal friendships which must always make the favorable background for official cooperation were intensified by the circumstance that for two days and a half the members of the conference lived together in the homelike surroundings of the Garden City hotel, suburban to New York. The conference president was Dr. R. P. Mackay, foreign mission leader of the Canadian Presbyterians, and its secretary W. Henry Grant, American representative of Canton Christian College. The total attendance was 126.

The conference naturally devoted much attention to China. The failure of the governments of the civilized world thus far to recognize the new Chinese republic was alluded to at length in the voluminous and statesmanlike report of the committee on reference and counsel. The committee recommended that the conference should call on the American and British governments particularly to exhibit promptly the friendship of recognition to President Yuan Shih Kai and his administration on the ground that the United States and Great Britain are almost wholly responsible through their example and influence for the great revolution which has made China a republic. It was obvious that the whole conference sympathized with this feeling on the part of the committee, but nevertheless the recommendation was stoutly opposed by those who reasoned that recognition is strictly a political matter and missionary agencies ought to keep clear of politics. At first it appeared that the bolder and more radical spirits of the company were in the majority, and that the resolution urging recognition would pass anyhow; but in the end, after the matter had been before the conference at two or three separate times, conservatism prevailed and the resolution was suppressed as a matter whereon the council had no right to act. But the vigorous report of the reference and counsel committee was none the less adopted and put on record.

This reluctance to commit the conference to any aggressive action was obvious at several other stages of the session at Garden City. Voices were frequently heard insisting that the conference must continue a conference and must not attempt to become an executive or administrative body. Lutheran and Episcopalian members were particularly frank in saying that such meetings were invaluable to them as opportunities of consultation, but that their respective churches would doubtless compel them to withdraw if the conference showed any serious tendency to impose upon them an interdenominational policy.

The committee on reference and counsel likewise reported on the missionary situation in Turkey and Korea; referred sympathetically to the misfortunes of the Putumayo Indians in Peru; indorsed the Mission to Lepers in the East and discussed at some length the general movement on mission fields to establish union schools for the education of missionaries' children. But the longest section of the report was devoted to "spiritual emphasis" and contained an appeal to the boards to cultivate deeper prayer habits in their constituencies and to devote more time to prayer in their own meetings.

* *

New Stimuli for Missionary Interest

The report of the committee on missionary education showed that the plan originating in the Presbyterian Church for a missionary committee in every congregation has now been adopted by several other denominations and is continually demonstrating added use and effectiveness. The committee on home base was able to report enthusiastic response to their plan for making the Livingstone centennial in March of this year a great union missionary celebration and rally. The Missionary Education Movement has printed new editions of a Livingstone biography and a number of other Livingstone books, which are being widely circulated.

It was agreed that the foreign mission interests should take part in a conference to be held January 29 to consider what religious movements shall be undertaken in San Francisco during the Panama Exposition there. It is hoped to carry there for that occasion the exhibits which have been shown in several cities as the "world" in Boston, Cincinnati and Baltimore. A conference was also ordered with the Home Missions Council with the hope of developing better means to counteract the introduction into America of the religions which foreign mission forces are fighting in other lands.

The largest matter brought up under the home-base report was a plan for a new foreign mission campaign among the American churches which shall aim at extending missionary Bible study, missionary prayer and missionary information. It was frankly recognized, however, that movements have so multiplied in the modern church that it is no longer easy to find a time for such an undertaking which shall not conflict with similar efforts by other interests. It was therefore ordered that the home base committee shall make careful inquiry for a period that can be devoted to foreign missions without obstructing any other joint church enterprise. The first three months of 1914 are preferred for this movement if no obstacle appears.

Much attention was paid to the work of the committee which seeks to maintain Christian influences in Anglo-American communities of the Orient. Ten American boards are now contributing to a fund which subsidizes English preaching in Yokohama and Kobe, and the committee was authorized to enlarge its work next year sufficiently to add subsidies for Peking and Rio de Janeiro. The same committee has placed a large number of missionary books in the ships' libraries of liners going out to the Orient and India, from which it is hoped that a better opinion of the missionary enterprise will gradually be disseminated among travelers. It is also proposed within the next year to publish a guide book for tourists which will inform them of the missionary work existing in the various cities that they visit.

* *

Incidentals of a Crowded Missionary Week

While practically all the Protestant foreign and home mission secretaries of the United States and Canada were present in New York for the two interdenominational conferences on these lines, the Missionary Education Movement repeated its courtesy of a year ago by inviting these visitors and the leaders of New York City Protestantism to a fellowship dinner in the Astoria hotel Tuesday night, January 14. Dr. Haggard of Boston, chairman of the Missionary Education Movement's directors, presided, and the company of more than 500 in attendance exceeded expectation.

Another incident of the week of the Home Missions Council and the Foreign Missions Conference was the conference on missions to the Moslems held in the Presbyterian building on Tuesday. A great map hung on the wall, with green color spread upon it from the mouth of the Niger in Africa to the shores of the Arctic in Siberia, demonstrated impressively to the conference the proportions of the force which it was proposing to antagonize. The frankest possible acknowledgment was made of the great missionary power which Mohammedanism is developing, not so much by organization as by volunteer individual propaganda. But satisfaction was taken in the evident waning of Moslem political power. Bishop Hartzell of Africa declared that when the green flag was lately carried out from Constantinople to the front lines of the Turkish troops as they lay facing the Bulgarians, and was then carried back again because it produced no effect, dread of a "holy war" forever disappeared. It is now manifest that Christianity confronts in Islam only a bloodless conflict, but it will be none the less sharp and severe for that.

Editorial

Moral Necrosis

THERE IS A MALADY which is either increasing or being more talked about, since we laymen are hearing much more about it. It is called necrosis. As the word implies, it means the death of some part of the tissue of the body, especially the bone. An accident or inflammation or infection interferes with circulation or nutrition and the tissue or the bone dies. One of the books says that it looks old and worm-eaten. If it thereafter remains in the midst of the living organism it becomes a peril to all life.

We do not need Drummond to remind us how these natural facts have their parallels in our spiritual lives. Scripture is ahead of medical science in its statement of this particular malady. The verse in Proverbs (14:30) is profoundly true: "A tranquil heart is the life of the flesh, but envy is the rottenness of the bones." More bones of character break through the rotting of envy than in any other way. It is a kind of necrosis of the moral bone. An accident occurs which is followed by a sense of injustice and the inflammation of envy spreads and the bone rots. The man's moral character goes to pieces.

There is something fine about wanting to improve one's condition, but it is often cheapened by sheer falsehood about one's self. Many men are not half so badly off as they pretend. They do not really need the things they pretend they need. Their lives are much fuller than they are willing to admit. A writer recently called attention to the fact that our necessities are almost as easily available now as they ever were, and that it is our luxuries that are complicating our lives. Soap and water are the essentials of a bath and they continue to be cheap. It is the porcelain tub and the tiled bathroom and the nickeled fixtures which are expensive, and they are purely incidental to the bath. That is true of more serious things. There are men who are fretting and complaining because they cannot have an automobile. It would be pleasant to have, but it is not one of the things which one could pretend is a necessity, and envying someone else the possession of one is foolish enough to make us fear the beginning of moral necrosis.

There are always two parts in envy. There is the overmagnifying of what someone else has and the overminimizing of what we have ourselves. The real trouble is our habit of comparing ourselves with other people who seem better off than we are. And the mean part about it is that we are always selecting on an unfair basis those with whom we compare ourselves. In morals we pick out the worse for comparison. In condition we pick out the best. We envy other people the things they have that we want, but we do not envy them the things we do not want, which yet actually go along with those very things in their lives.

In this way the vital circulation in our moral system is checked and so impeded that nutrition is not kept up and our life tissue dies. We break easily. We cannot endure the strain of common life. We do not take fair views of our condition. Moral necrosis sets in. It always follows envy.

Time to Speak for the Children

Whether the minister feels he can make it the theme of a whole sermon or not, there should certainly be something said in every Presbyterian pulpit on Sunday, January 26, to add all the weight of Presbyterianism to the church protest which the Federal Council and the national child labor committee are organizing for that day against child labor. There is no reason any more for being mealy-mouthed in the pulpit or elsewhere on this subject. The question has been illuminated until it is no longer a question. The justice and right of it are put beyond question.

There is no harm in having children learn to work; there ought educationally to be more of that, in the families of the well-to-do especially. But it is harmful, unjust, wrong, to make or even permit children to work for their living. The thing is bad in practical economics because it sets going the wheel of a vicious circle which first lowers the wages of the head of the family and then makes it more necessary than ever for the children to earn part of the family support. But the church needs to talk not so much about the economic side of the evil as about the moral side. Child labor is morally wrong because it robs children—robs them of the chance for real life. It crowds in on them with a cramping slavery when they ought to be free to prepare to live, and exacts from them a temporary inefficient service which blocks them from ever getting ready to be efficient. It makes all too grossly material a time of life which ought to be learning spiritual ideals.

To be sure, the mere passing of laws against child labor won't restore to childhood its birthright of education and idealism, but this much freedom will clear the way for church and state to bring the child his other rights later. Certainly the church must speak out strong about all this. The followers of him who took little children in his arms and blessed them cannot be silent while men are taking them into their hands and cursing them. The friends of Jesus must cry out against thus mocking the Master's example.

God's Words Waking Up

In Dr. Massee's little book, "Men and the Kingdom," he tells two suggestive stories. One is of an old German, who told a company of believers how in his youth he had been taught the Scriptures. He had wandered away in sin for many years, and utterly neglected God and the Bible. Pausing in the narrative, he said with deep feeling, "But, brethren, after thirty years those beautiful words woke up." The other story is of a Korean convert, who had committed to memory the entire gospel of Matthew. When he was asked how he did it, he replied: "I had great difficulty in making the text stick, but one day I decided that as I read it and tried to commit it by memory, I should practice it, verse by verse, upon my neighbors, and I found that as I practiced it somehow it stuck."

These two stories are true to life. Parents and teachers may well take the first one to heart. They are often distressed over the apparent failure of their teaching. Sunday school teachers are disturbed to find how often boys and girls have missed the whole meaning of what was said, or seemed to have learned nothing at all. But remember that the words of God have a way of waking up. They lie dormant for years. Then, in a time of strain and moral danger, a verse learned years ago wakes up, and it tells the tempted man which way to go.

And one of the best ways to insure the secure lodgment of those words, so that in the time of need they will wake up, is to practice them on one's neighbors. A successful teacher said recently that one verse of the Bible practiced is more secure than a hundred verses learned. There are limits to that, for a child's life does not furnish the opportunity for practice that comes to us who are older. Often it is enough to see that God's words do get securely into a mind, in the assurance that the practicing will follow in due course.

Black-and-White Proof of Mormon Juggling

Documentary evidence of the insincerity of the Mormon hierarchy is open to the sight of every man who looks for it in the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants," which is on sale to the public at the Mormon book store in Salt Lake City. This volume is really the corner stone of Mormon faith. The more famous "Book of Mormon" is simply a story book. But the "Book of Doctrines and Covenants" is a volume of law. It contains the alleged revelations under which Joseph Smith governed the church he set up and is represented as the very word of God to his prophet.

All but a few pages of the book are contained in its main section, which is headed "Covenants and Commandments." Mormons are taught that every line of this section is binding divine law, which it is mortal sin to disobey. Embedded amidst this law, an integral part of it, is printed, in the latest current editions, just as in all that went before, the "revelation" commanding polygamy as a religious rite. Not a line of it has been altered from the time that Joseph Smith set forth the first proclamation of it. There still stands there even that tacit proof of Joseph Smith's dread of his wife—the purported injunction of God that "Emma" should not object when her husband added new wives to his domestic establishment—in spite of which "Emma" did object strenuously.

It was in 1890 that Smith's third successor, Wilford Woodruff, issued the famous manifesto which he said was a new revelation from the Lord to abolish polygamy. But in 1904, when Joseph F. Smith, the present president of the Mormon church, was examined before the United States senate committee in Washington, he confessed that this supposed repeal of polygamy had never been alluded to in any way whatever in this authoritative book of the church's faith. On pressure from the committee, he promised that it should be included thereafter, but this promise went unfulfilled until 1910, when the startling articles of ex-Senator Frank Cannon in Everybody's Magazine aroused the whole country to Mormon perfidy. Then, to make a better face before the people, the Mormons did introduce the manifesto into their law book. But no more than before did they give it the impress of authority. It was not put into the pages headed "Covenants and Commandments." It was not put even into the few pages of subordinate matters that follow under the head of "Appendix." It was printed on the last two pages of the book, separate from all other material, under the noncommittal headline, "Official Declaration." There it will be found today in current editions.

On the very surface of things this "official declaration" is not presented as in any wise on a par with the alleged words of God that precede it. Moreover, when the manifesto itself is examined there is not a syllable to be found which even suggests that it was issued by divine commandment. Indeed, it doesn't command anything. It simply advises that polygamy be discontinued. At its utmost pretension it is only the counsel of men, while the rest of the book purports to be law from heaven. And under that law polygamy shows up as one of the most important and emphatic requirements.

It is idle—in truth, absurd—for the Mormons themselves to claim or for complacent apologists to allege that the church no longer teaches polygamy. If it possessed the least atom of honest intent to turn away from promulgating polygamy, it would assuredly put into "Doctrines and Covenants" some sort of sign that this tenet had been superseded.

—The Presbyterian neighborhood house at Gary, Indiana, planted amid the crisscross and tangle of foreign nationalities in that wonder city of the steel industry, has already been alluded to by The Continent as one peculiarly brotherly thing done by the present-day church for the immigrants. But now a new interest—melancholy but inspiring—has come to attach to the building. Death has intervened to make the Gary neighborhood house a memorial to the life which did most to make it possible. That quiet, steadfast, unconsciously great man, Dr. George Knox, who so long was the unresting superintendent of home missions for the Synod of Indiana, with the eager spirit of a Christian neighbor toward those Gary immigrants, went about Indiana all last year making his principal concern, among a host of concerns, to ask the people for gifts to pay for this significant structure. He had not quite succeeded in getting all the money when one sad night a little before Christmas the big overworked heart suddenly stood still. The Synod of Indiana does not know where it is to get the like of Dr. Knox to carry on his work, but first of all it is going to finish this fund he was raising and it is going to add to it enough to put a tablet into the house which will tell all comers who labored most for it and in what large spirit he gave his life to the Christlike toil.

—An extra special brand of small meanness has developed lately in New York City, where moving-picture show barkers have laid traps on Sunday for small children on their way to Sunday school. The barkers know that a child sent to Sunday school is usually furnished a nickel to put into the collection, and it seems quite a common thing to lure these little folks into spending instead the nickel for a moving-picture ticket. A good many hours in the aggregate have been thus spent in moving-picture shows by children whom their parents supposed to be in Sunday school. But it is unlawful, under New York law, for a child under 16 to go to a moving-picture theater without parent or guardian, and some of the very enterprising proprietors paid for the nickels they thus gathered in with $50 fines. But it seems that these sharks cannot willingly give up the Sunday school nickels, and so they have actually had introduced into the New York legislature a bill to remove the prohibition. Of course the nickel crew will stand a good chance of getting the bill through if citizens who deal in larger values do not rally to prevent it, and the New York Sabbath committee calls for protests to be filed in its office or with the legislature itself sufficient to kill the amendment in short order.

—No finer and more enthusiastic tribute was ever paid to a living missionary than William T. Ellis of The Continent staff has written in his article on the Moslem situation in the December Century. And Samuel M. Zwemer of Cairo deserves it all, for his rugged frame is certainly the mold of a great statesman. It is a great thing for missions to have such a man introduced as its representative in a big secular magazine. A good many people will doubtless see the story there who have been thinking that missionaries are an anæmic and fanatic lot. This article makes a pleasant and wholesome way for them to learn better.

—Though The Continent sympathizes heartily with the rapidly increasing desire to see the United States recognize the republic of China, it is but fair to take into account that aspect of the situation which keeps republican leaders in China itself from feeling that there is any unfriendliness in America's delay. A side of the question which Americans do not generally understand is seen from that angle. The postponement of recognition is no doubt an indirect and unforeseen consequence of a useful bit of diplomacy that Secretary Knox undertook from Washington when the revolutionary movement in China began. He skillfully succeeded in getting all the powers of Europe to enter into a compact with the United States that no one of them would take any action in regard to China separate from the rest. This strategy was intended to help the Chinese progressives by preventing any outside interference in behalf of the Manchus, and the success of the revolution may very possibly be due to this stroke. But that same agreement, which then stood in the way of intervention, now stands in the way of recognition. The European nations in the compact say that their unbroken precedent is against recognizing provisional governments, and the United States, although it doesn't have that scruple, naturally hesitates to break the rule of concerted action which it itself set up. This obstacle, however, will soon be out of the way, for China will have its formal constitutional regime completed about the time that the new administration comes into power at Washington, and President Wilson, without any embarrassing circumstances to hinder, will undoubtedly have the honor of extending recognition to the new twentieth-century China among the earliest acts of his term of office. Meanwhile, no real harm is being done, for the ambassadors of all the powers at Peking are working with President Yuan Shih Kai's government just as freely as if it were already recognized in the fullest degree by their home authorities.

—Though Mr. Nock's article in the American Magazine on alcoholic heredity is written in the best of spirit, it is pointedly challenged by the Scientific Temperance Federation of Boston as being wholly based on an inexcusable misunderstanding. Mr. Nock says that the statistics of the Galton eugenic laboratory in London demonstrate that children of parents taking alcohol and of parents using no alcohol are subject to physical weakness and mental defect in about the same proportion. But the Boston society declares that there is no such comparison in the Galton statistics which Mr. Nock is using; that the comparison is only between families where the parents drink moderately and families where they drink intemperately. The federation agrees that the alcoholic taint works about as serious results with the children of moderate drinkers as with the children of excessive drinkers, but it declares that the figures of Professor Laitinen of Norway show that there is vast difference in health and strength and mentality in favor of the children of total abstainers as compared with the children of even the most abstemious of alcohol users.

—In Dr. Warren H. Wilson's survey of rural life in Ohio he at least discovered a new name for an old fact. The frequent instances in which a minister is obliged, in order that he may have a living, to divide his time among two or three preaching places, Dr. Wilson calls cases of "ministerial vivisection." As so often, getting the right name for an ill condition is the very best way to condemn it. Who would wish to "vivisect" a preacher? The Ohio survey showed that among churches to which ministers give whole time 55 per cent are in process of growth. Of those which have ministers for half time but 38 per cent are growing, and those which have to share pastors with two other congregations make progress in only 36 per cent of all cases. Churches that get along with the fourth of a minister or less were found growing in only one-fourth of the instances studied. Of course the point that Dr. Wilson aims at is to make everybody see how much better it would be to reduce and rearrange the churches of a county on a scale where there would be a minister apiece.

—Australia has adopted a commonwealth law which requires all the young men of the nation to attend military camp at certain seasons and take drills to prepare them for the defense of the nation. The law makes no exemption for those who have religious scruples against war, as Quakers and others who think similarly. The only indulgence extended to such citizens is the promise that if war ever does actually arise, persons who think it wrong to fight shall on application be assigned to the branches of the army that do not enter into actual killing conflict—like the hospital and signal corps. But the Quakers are dissatisfied, declaring that their scruples will not admit of their even belonging to an army or aiding its operations in any way. The supreme court of Australia, however, has decided that their religious liberty is not infringed and that they cannot escape the law on this plea.

Jots and Tittles

—The size of the Bible depends entirely upon the size of the man's faith who reads it.

—The ox that fell into the pit on the Sabbath day was not on its way to church.

—One's distance from God is often determined by the length of his prayers.

DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE

Do We Forget God?

THERE IS ONE WORD of God which runs through the Scriptures like a sad and poignant refrain, "My people have forgotten me." "Forgotten" is an intense and awful word. It surely expresses the final issue in human alienation from the divine. Open and deliberate revolt against God shows, at any rate, some respect to his power. And even formal prayer, empty though it be, offers some recognition of God's existence. But to forget him, to live and plan and work as though he were not, to dismiss him as insignificant—this is surely the last expression of a separated life.

People are never really dead so long as they are remembered. The real death is to be forgotten. How then do we come to forget God? In what sort of conditions is this appalling forgetfulness brought about? I wish to quote two or three descriptive words from the Scriptures in which I think some of these cases are described.

Dread of Humanity Excludes Awe of Divinity

"Afraid of a man that shall die, and forgettest the Lord thy Maker." The fear of men destroys the nobler fear of God. I suppose that one may say that two commanding fears cannot occupy the soul at one and the same time. One fear can drive out another. The fear that is created by the cracking of a whip can drive out the fear which possesses a shying horse when he sees some unfamiliar object upon the road. If a fire break out on a cold wintry night, the fear of the flames can drive out of the soul the fear of the frost. It seems as though one fear draws to itself the energies of the mind, and other fears are left with no sustenance. A big tree in a garden bed sucks into its fibers the juices of the soil for many yards around, other growths are starved, and wither and die.

So it is with the "fear of man." It drains to itself the mental energy and devotion which ought to feed the fear of God. A politician who is moved by fear of man, and who tacks and trims to avoid his hostility, can never retain an efficient thought of God. So it is with a minister who is afraid of man; his mind is not filled with a vision of "the Lord high and lifted up." But indeed the same is true of anybody. If the barometer we consult for our guidance is the opinion and conventions of man, God himself will be nothing. If we are always consulting man, moved and governed by his expediencies, God will vanish away. "The fear of man is a snare," and the power of the snare is found in its fascination to allure our minds from the Lord of hosts. "Afraid of a man that shall die, and forgettest the Lord thy Maker."

And here is another type from the portrait gallery of the Bible: "Thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength." Here is a forgetfulness that is born when we have recovered from some weakness. Pride of strength makes us forget the Rock out of which we were hewn.

Perhaps this is most apparent in our physical weakness. In our weakness we remember the Lord, and the dim things of the unseen come clearly into view. But when our strength is regained the vivid vision fades again, and is sometimes entirely lost. And so our strength is really our drug. It is an opiate which ministers to spiritual forgetfulness.

And so it is with every kind of strength. Frailty in any direction makes us lean upon the power of the Almighty, and in every frailty our remembrance of him is keen and clear. But our strength helps to create a feeling of independence and we become unmindful of our God. And therefore it is that a man who never knows weakness has a stupendous task in maintaining communion with God. People who never know what it is to be ill have so many more barriers to overcome in their fellowship with the Unseen.

The Restful Fold Deserted by Wanderers

And here is a third scriptural type of spiritual forgetfulness. "They have gone from mountain to hill, and have forgotten their resting places." It is the figure of a flock of wandering sheep roaming away over the distant hills and mountains. They have gone from one place to another, and in the range of their goings have forgotten their place of rest. Their very vagrancy has made them insensible to their real home. That is to say, their vagrancy has induced forgetfulness.

Now I think this word is very descriptive of much of our modern life. It is a vagrancy rather than a crusade. We go "from mountain to hill" and from hill to mountain! We are always on the move. We are forever seeking something else and never finding satisfaction. We get weary and tired with one thing and we trudge to another! We are here, there and yonder, and our lives become jaded and stale. But the extraordinary thing is that in all our goings we forget our resting place. "Return unto thy rest, O my soul." Yes, but we turn anywhere and everywhere rather than to this. Our lives can become so vagrant that God is exiled from our minds. It seems as though there is something in vagrancy that stupefies the soul, and renders us insensitive to our true home and rest in God.

When I first came to New York, during the first few months of my ministry, I was being continually asked by people, "Have you got into the whirl?" The very phrase seemed so far removed from the words of the psalmist, "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, he leadeth me beside the still waters." Not that the psalmist luxuriated in indolence, or spent his days in the fatness of ease—the rest was only preparative to a march, "He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness." But from the march he returned to his resting place. But we can be caught in such a whirl in our modern life that we just rush from one thing to another, and we forget the glorious rest that is ours in God. I think the enemy of our souls must love to get us into a whirl! If once we are dizzied with sensations we are likely to lose the thought of God. "They have gone from the mountain to the hill, and have forgotten their resting place."

Satisfactions Which Bring Stupefaction

Let me give one further example from the word of God. "According to their pasture so were they filled: they were filled: and their heart was exalted: therefore have they forgotten me." Here is a rich pasturage, and in the enjoyment of it there is born the spirit of forgetfulness. And surely this is the stupefaction of abundance. In southern France, where attar of roses is distilled, a very curious ailment imperils the workers. The very abundance of the rose leaves induces a sort of sleeping sickness. And surely it is even so in the abundances that are sometimes given to man. They are prone to sink him into the sleep of spiritual forgetfulness.

A man's devotion is apt to dwindle as he becomes more successful. Our piety does not keep pace with our purse. Absorption in bounty makes us forgetful of the Giver. We can be so concerned in the pasturage that the Shepherd is forgotten. Our very fullness is apt to become our foe. Our clearest visions are given us in the winter time when nature is scanty and poor. The fullness of the leaf blocks the outlook and the distance is hid. And the summertime of life, when leaves and flowers are plentiful, is apt to bring a veil. And the very plentifulness impedes our communion.

These are some of the types of forgetfulness which are mentioned and described in the word of God. Is there any help for us? There is a very gracious promise of the Master, in which I think all these perils are anticipated, and in the strength of which they can be met and overcome. "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." Here is the promise of a gracious minister to the memory, strengthening it in its hold upon the unseen.

I suppose that one of the most urgent needs of the common life is the sanctification of the memory. If the memory were to be really hallowed it would forget many things which it now remembers, and it would certainly remember many things which it now forgets. We are apt to retain worthless things and destructive things—things that ought to be dropped and buried and left in their graves in past years. But we carry them with us to our undoing. The ministry of the Holy Spirit will deal with this unwise retention, and will make a memory leaky where it is wise for it to lose.

But, more than that, it will strengthen its powers of spiritual comprehension, and will enable it to keep hold of the unseen and the eternal. What should I most like to remember? I should like to remember with unfailing constancy the glorious, holy Being of the eternal God. I should like to remember the unspeakable ministry of his grace, which worked in my redemption in Christ Jesus, my Lord. I should like to remember the benefits of his daily providence which shine along my road in unfailing succession. I should like to remember the eternal significance of transient events and hold the lessons of yesterday's happenings to guide me in my march today. And when new occasions and new duties arise, and I am face to face with novel circumstances, I should like to be reminded of those words of the Lord Jesus which would give me the needful illumination: "He shall bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." J. H. JOWETT

A Strictly "Homemade" House

This stone house, of one room, was built by a Roumanian with his own hands after his daily work of twelve hours. In this he and his wife and one child lived last winter and here a second child was born

"The Stone Jug"

Once pretentious house on the edge of the village, in which lived sixty or seventy foreigners. The woman in the doorway is a Hungarian. On the third floor is the reading room where English classes met

Helping Our Brother of the Mills

BY CALVIN DILL WILSON

A HUGE, ill-formed, unwashed, unshaved man was lying on his back on the coarse, uncleanly bed in the second story of the company house. It was Sunday afternoon in February. The windows were closed and the air was foul. At one end of the room were half a dozen Italians playing cards on a box. At the other extreme were ten Greeks, sitting on their beds and talking. On other beds were a few Roumanians, a German, an Irishman and one American. On that day only a small number of men were engaged at the mill in repair work, so that a majority were idling.

I went up to the big fellow, scanned him for some sign of his nationality, drew my conclusion and said, "Slav?" He nodded affirmatively. I took from my pocket a copy of the gospel according to Matthew in Slavic, the Cyrillic alphabet, and handed it to him. His dull eyes brightened as I held the open book toward him. He reached out a rough hand, clutched the book, pulled it from me with a jerk, held it in both his hands and began to read in a muttering tone, while his face beamed with pleasure. No other man in that room knew his language or could speak a word with him. He could read no other tongue. Here, among aliens, there had fallen into his hands, as from the sky, his own printed language. I remained in that room for perhaps fifteen minutes longer, but the Slav never raised his eyes from his book, never uttered, nor tried to utter, any thanks, but he read on, absorbed, in an ecstasy like a child with a fairy tale. He had been transported to his own home land, to old scenes; his own language was in his ears again, though from his own lips. The man was evidently very happy. The dull Slavic face was changed. I marveled for the thousandth time at the great work of the Bible society, and thought that the veriest heathen in our land should rejoice at the existence of an organization that makes it easy to put into every man's hand a book in his own tongue for a few pennies; that Slavic gospel cost 10 cents, and that is two-thirds more than the price of one in the Roman alphabet.

HOW a book of the Bible in his native tongue delighted a lonely Slav giant is here vividly told by Dr. Wilson, who is an active pastor near the city of Cincinnati. In the course of his work he has had experience in bringing brightness to the lives of Hungarians, Greeks and other alien strangers. He has found them most interesting, and he has learned much from them.

Getting a Job for a Hungarian Carpenter

A Hungarian mill worker, whom I had come to know well and who spoke English fairly, came to me and said, "Stevie not strong. Iron too heavy. Get him good job. He carpenter." I understood he referred to another Hungarian, of slender build, who recently had arrived at the mill. Daniel, with many gestures, made it clear that Stevie staggered under the weight of the loads he had to carry at the mill and needed friendly offices to procure him work suited to his frame and strength. I said, "Find Stevie and come along." The three of us soon arrived where a carpenter was at work on a garage. I explained the situation and asked him if he could give Stevie work. He said one of his employees had been drunk for several days and he needed a man at once. He did not know, however, how he could get along with a man who knew no English, but he would try him. We looked for Stevie, who had vanished for a moment, and found him at a bench with a plane in his hands. He was smiling and talking to himself and fondling the tool lovingly. I asked when Stevie could go to work. The employer said, "At once, if he wants to." It was then 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Daniel communicated this to Stevie. His eyes twinkled, and he set off at a run up the street. Daniel explained that he was going to put on his working clothes and would be back in a few minutes. Stevie returned on a trot in ten minutes. We gave him a lesson in the names of the tools. His employer had Daniel explain what Stevie was to set about. Whistling, and with his cap on the back of his head, Stevie was soon merrily at work at the job he loved and one suited to his capacity. He was lifted out of the foul surroundings of the mill at double the wages he had received there, proved to be a fine workman, saved money in the postal savings bank, sent to Hungary for his wife, rented a clean little house and was started on a new career.

Daniel was a big, strong Hungarian, with some knowledge of English. He was quite able for mill work, but did not like the filthy conditions there. When he found Stevie well placed he was seized with an ambition to better himself. We talked the matter over and I learned that he was accustomed to horses, cows, gardening, the care of lawns, and such things. One of the wealthy women of the village was in need of a man who was capable and sober, and she was willing to give Daniel a trial. After two weeks he had demonstrated that he could fill the place. He was engaged for a month at $50, while he would have to find room and board for himself. He soon proved so useful that he was given a good room on his employer's grounds and his meals, in addition to his wages. He was so trustworthy, polite and willing that his employer considered herself fortunate in having him.

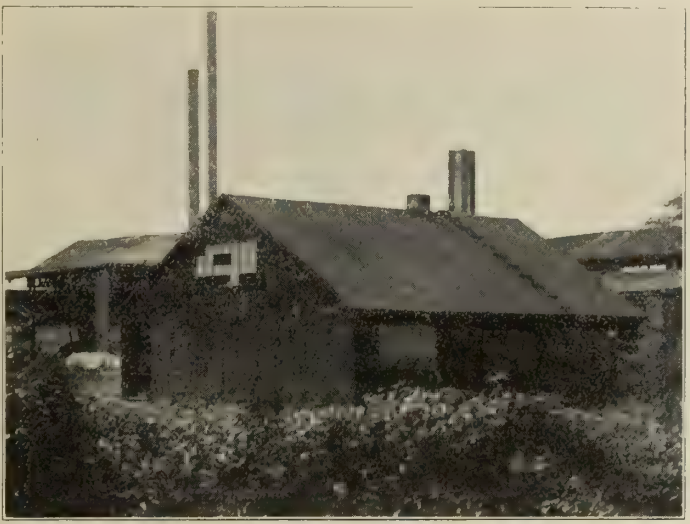
The group of ten Greeks was composed of men who were, to me personally, the most interesting of all. They were mostly from Crete. One of them had been a student at the University of Athens. I found these men promptly stirred by the mere mention of the Parthenon and the names of famous battles of their nation. One day, when I entered their corner of the miserable lodgings where they were cast, they were chatting with great animation. One of them had in his hands several very soiled sheets of paper.

I found they had written down a list of over a hundred names of heroes and heroines of Greece. They had done this from memory and were now discussing the stories and events connected with these names. We spent an hour going over the list, and every man of them was fairly familiar with the chief personages and events of the old Greek story. One of them had underneath the unspeakably dirty mattress of his bed a much-soiled copy of one of the old classics of his land.

Reading Homer in the Original

I invited these men to visit me in my library, much against the wishes of the feminine part of the household. When they found I had Greek books on the shelves they were delighted. We sat an hour while one of them read aloud from Homer. He read not only well but finely, with expression and feeling. For that hour these workingmen were delivered from the atmosphere of the mill and were again Greeks, filled with the pride and consciousness of their race.

After that they came every now and then to talk and to read and to look at pictures of famous buildings and statues of the old Greeks. During one of these visits the feminine part of the household relented enough to come and speak to these men. She was impressed by their politeness, their handsome teeth and good figures. She suggested that at some time, when there was no work at the mill, they might do some jobs about the place. They agreed to come. It was winter, and after a heavy snowfall one morning three of the Greeks appeared. I set them to work to shovel snow paths and to do some other jobs. As it was cold, I offered them gloves, but they refused them. After three hours their work was done and I offered them money. They flatly refused to take it. I persisted, but they said, "No money. You like the Greeks. Greeks take no money."



"Home" for Nearly Seventy-Five Men

In the house in foreground fifty men were sheltered downstairs and twenty-four on the second floor. The Greeks lived upstairs, their beds being just back of the broken window. The mill is in the background

Several of us rented and fitted up a room in which to teach English to such of the foreigners as we could interest. Blackboards, primers and copies of the gospels in several tongues were used. Certain of the lessons were given in translating by the foreigners from their own languages into English. One Hungarian gave a novel rendering for a portion of the parable of the prodigal son. He said, "The big boss said, 'Come back and I'll give you good job.'" "Boss" and "job" are always among the first words of English they acquire

Some of these people find it hard to understand how any Americans can take an interest in them without ulterior motives. If you offer them a book their first thought is that you expect money for it. If such as are Catholics find you are a Protestant they suspect you design to win them from their form of worship. It is only after a considerable lapse of time and frequent visits among them it dawns on them that you may wish only to benefit them. Even then a few of them are not convinced. I was much disappointed, after a year of familiar and frequent converse at our mill, to have an old, gray-mustached Hungarian take me to one side one afternoon and, with fingers at his lips, half whisper that he wanted a better job, saying, "Get me good job. Give you $10."

The foreigners at our mill represent several churches. Some belong to the Greek church, many are Protestants of one branch or another, some are Catholics, some are Nestorians and some are Greek Orientals. Some of these people called me "father," some "priest," some "Mr. Priest," and finally, after explanations, some adopted "Mr. Pastor" and others "Mr. Dr. Pastor."

One man, a Roumanian, with a wife and two chidren, to save the rent charged by the company for the shanties, put up a tent on the mill grounds, and this was occupied by himself and family during warm weather and until late in the autumn. By that time he had completed a little stone house, of one room, which he had been building after factory hours. He gathered flat stones from the vicinity, made his own mortar and constructed a room ten by twelve feet and seven feet to the roof. The walls were more than a foot thick and the inside was lined with plaster. He had two little windows, a door and a hole in the side through which a stove pipe stuck out. While this hut was being made we had thought it would be necessary to complain to the health officer and compel the man to shelter his family properly. But when the work was done we found that his house was warm and clean, and really to be preferred to the quarters of the other women at the mill. There was indeed something impressive in the ingenuity and capability of the man who could construct so good a shelter for his family as this man did with his own hands, out of stones and mud, and after hard daily work at the mill. I admired the primitive man in this fellow and his capacity to take care of himself and his dependents.

There were a dozen or more children about this mill, most of them scarcely more than babes, but three or four of them old enough to attend the township school near by. One of these, a girl of about 9 years, was a bright little thing, who spoke English very well. Jennie was a Roumanian and often trotted about with me and acted as an interpreter among her people. It made one shudder at the calmness and matter-of-courseness with which the child would state, when on my arrival at the mill I noted absence of many men, "The men are drunk today." Drinking, however, was by no means universal among them, some of the men being total abstainers, while others were inclined to drink but little, and that of beer.

The women, wives of the half dozen boarding house bosses, were all pleasant, motherly persons. They were driven from morning to night in preparation of the huge meals for the toilers. They did the best they could under the circumstances to keep their homes approximately clean, but dozens of unwashed mill workers stalking in and out for meals in all kinds of weather made the housekeepers despair. These women appreciated our efforts to cheer and befriend them and the men. We carried flowers and potted plants to them and begged second-hand clothing from the village and distributed it, much to their satisfaction and comfort. But little could be done to ameliorate conditions for these women and children compelled to live in circumstances unspeakably foul.

Ludwig was a short, stout Austrian, whose set-up and manner of speech revealed military training. He said he had served in the Austrian army. He stood very erect and spoke with deep guttural tones. He was a hard drinker, but always ready for his job at the hour when he was due. He never had a penny ahead and was usually in rags. When his money was gone and he was compelled to be sober till next pay day his face and eyes cleared up and his looks improved. During such periods his blue eyes were indeed decidedly good looking and intelligent. Like many of the men at the mill, he spoke half a dozen languages. After Ludwig found I had been distributing second-hand garments, from time to time, among the men who appeared in need, and willing to accept them, he frequently came to me with doleful tales about how hard the mill was on clothes and how needy he was. He was a cobbler by trade and between times he did much repairing of shoes for his fellow workers. His work seemed to have promise of lasting qualities, but it was crude and rude, so that I am sure he could never hold a job in a repair shop in our country. Ludwig had a melancholy vein in him and wept often, and in this respect was much in contrast to the stoical ways of most of the men.

Have Plenty of Pluck and Hopefulness

I was constantly amazed at the vast fund of good humor among these people. Each group had its own amusements, music, games. The men all seemed talkative with each other, and there was much laughter and fun. They all seemed to have plenty of pluck, courage and hopefulness, and to the last man they were industrious. Certain of the men were splendidly developed physically; their half-naked bodies, as they worked in the mill, would have been a joy to sculptors.

An occasional man among them was so well made, so graceful in movement, so well molded in face, as, in spite of grime, to make one pause to consider if he must not be a prodigal son of some superior family in the Old World. I observed that the few men of this make were the most unapproachable and that they usually did not stay long at the mill. I fancy that these wanderers had their own reasons for not cultivating acquaintances among Americans who were strangers to them.

Two or three Poles came into the room one afternoon where I was sitting and talking with a couple of Greeks. They had a case of beer. They sat on one of the beds and began to drink. One of them held up a bottle toward me, but I shook my head. Apparently he felt he had not done all he should; so he opened the bottle and then brought it to me. I declined by gestures and he seemed quite astonished and somewhat confused. Evidently he meant to be friendly and thought he was showing politeness. He consoled himself, however, by turning the bottle up and emptying it into his own throat. Every now and then one of the men would offer me whisky out of an enormous bottle, but most of them refrained from such proffers. Generally the men who were drinking when I was at the mill went on with their imbibings as before.

Homes Left to Avoid Military Service

A large proportion of these men were from farms and small villages in their own countries. Many had trades. Some had left their own land to escape from military service and some had deserted from the army. One fine young fellow was much concerned as to how he would be received if he went home. He had saved up and sent to his father $800 with which to purchase land on which he hoped to live when he went back. He was planning to save more funds and forward these for the same end. But as he had left home before called on for army service, he feared that on going back he would have to give some years to a kind of life for which he had no inclination.

The greater number of the men who gave me their confidence said they were sending money to their parents or wives at home. Part of their object in coming here was to be able to help friends at the other end. They evidently had the domestic virtues strongly developed. They were willing to endure almost unendurable conditions under which they worked at this place to help friends across the sea.

None of these men manifested any leanings toward anarchy or antagonism toward this or any other government. They knew about the heroes of their own lands and were proud of them and proud when they learned that an American knew about them. They showed patriotism in regard to their own countries. One of the Italians resented a remark, during the war with Turkey, that his nation had no business in Tripoli; he said it had belonged to Italy before and should again.

Our mill workers, almost to a man, could read their own language and a considerable per cent of them could read and speak from two to half a dozen other languages. They were informed as to the history of their own countries, and in many cases they knew quite a little of general history. All of them considered themselves as belonging to some church.

Altogether, I found the association with them, the effort to help them some little and to brighten their lives, most interesting. I learned much from them and about them. I found that they respond to friendly treatment and that they appreciate very greatly human kindness.

Yes or No on Suffrage: Woman's Apathy

BY MAY BROWN LOOMIS

Many women fail to realize that only through their intelligent cooperation with men in the vital issues of the day can highest results be achieved. One of these issues is the question of equal suffrage, and this article shows how the apathy of women toward the matter may be a sin against the great human family.

THE OTHER DAY I happened to mention the subject of equal suffrage to a friend who had dropped in for afternoon tea. She had just finished describing, with much enthusiasm, a piece of fancy work recently completed, but the moment I began to talk of the suffrage victory her manner became apathetic as she said with a shrug, "I don't take any interest in such things, and I'm sick of hearing about them." While I promptly begged her pardon for boring her, and at once changed the subject, I wondered, and have been wondering ever since, that a good woman could be indifferent to such a vital issue.

Anyone who has learned in some degree to make a working principle of the motto "Put yourself in his place" must find it hard indeed to comprehend a wholesale dismissal of a crucial question. Either women should vote, or they should not. Do we not owe to the necessarily self-supporting sisters claiming that they need the ballot for self-protection a careful and dispassionate examination of these claims? Before dismissing the subject from our minds and hearts should we not be very sure, through having considered prayerfully and carefully the arguments for the extension of our direct influence upon the body politic, that we could not by the conscientious use of the ballot do much toward the safeguarding of "home, the woman's kingdom"? Remember Whittier's famous lines:

"Not lightly fall
Beyond recall
These fleeting scrolls a breath may float;
The crowning fact,
The kingliest act
Of freedom is the freeman's vote!"

Now, consider for a moment the importance of the ballot in the hands of the average man. Let him tell you what he would do if deprived of it. How he would struggle to regain the privilege! Not long ago a man said to me, "I'm willing women should vote if they want to, but I don't take much interest in the subject of equal suffrage." "How would it be if you couldn't vote?" I queried smiling. "Wouldn't you then take more interest in the matter?" Laughing aloud, he threw back his head with a most emphatic "I should say I would!"

Isolation in the Home Is Impossible

We do not always stop to realize that there are at present in the limited states fully 7,000,000 women taking care of themselves, for the most part under trying conditions, and because they must. As the majority of them want the ballot their claims should not be lightly dismissed by women leading more sheltered lives. Every woman owes it to humanity to at least give these claims respectful consideration by reading reliable arguments for the extension of the franchise, as well as by attending meetings "on both sides." Remember that complete isolation in the home is impossible if it were desirable; that women and children in this country cannot be segregated in harems even if they would. Having done this, does it not become apparent to any normal mind that all persons, whether male or female, are intimately affected by the laws of the country? The simplest act of every life in a corporate community can be subtly regulated by the ballots of which some women will not even try to think. Mrs. Jones cannot consider all the interests of her little Johnnie without including those of Tommie Smith across the street, together with all the other little Tommies and Johnnies of the city, state and nation.

Morally Bound to Weigh the Question

We cannot go back to the days of our grandmothers. Modern industrial conditions forbid it. We are forced to work with new weapons for the coming of justice to all the people of our land. But the golden rule—that old, old measure of conduct—is useful today, and forever. That rule bids us think for others first, and then act for others. If, upon reflection, we are not stirred with "divine discontent" regarding the conditions under which many women and little children work in factories and sweat shops there is something radically wrong with us. In the Bible few sins are more forcibly condemned than that of apathy. "Lukewarmness," the "blowing neither hot nor cold," receives therein a stinging reprimand. How can any woman partake of the holy sacrament in memory of the Friend of little children, of the One who died to save others, and go away content with having done something toward the saving of her own soul, resting satisfied to ignore questions of the day directly affecting countless souls and bodies?

The subject of equal suffrage is at present agitating the entire country. No woman can escape a moral responsibility to weigh the question in her own mind. Consideration of it cannot be shifted to the obliging shoulders of masculine friends. The stock anti-suffrage argument that woman can do more good through "indirect influence" than by taking an active interest in political affairs certainly cannot be applied to women who do not know what they are talking about when they try to discuss public movements. It is hard to understand, in any case, why the "indirect influence" of a good woman should be greater than that of a good man, but when the application is made to an apathetic female, mentally too lazy to think at all, the situation becomes ludicrous, and pathetic as well.

"Being a woman," or "being a mother," solely on a physical plane, will not help matters. One must be a thinking mother to accomplish lasting good in the education of one's children. Countless spinster schoolteachers—mothers in spirit—spend their lives teaching the offspring of other women many things which they ought to learn at home. If some of these women come to think that they accomplish more good in the world by guiding the many poor little ill-born souls already here than by rushing into matrimony and having half a dozen babies of their own, it is small wonder. No one knows as well as a schoolteacher or a settlement worker the deplorable conditions under which many children are born and reared. Selfish lack of thought in both parents, for, of course, all children have a father, is most frequently the foundation of the trouble, and the little emphasized "business of being a father" is really so important (though it ought not to interfere with his duty as a citizen), that radical reforms can never be accomplished until fathers and mothers work together, everywhere, for the benefit of the coming generation.

The Providing of Hair Ribbons Not Enough

If, in the meantime, "old maid" teachers, having no one to protect them, think they need the ballot for their own defense, mothers in name should be mothers in deed, and arouse themselves to a sense of obligation in the intelligent consideration of these claims before deciding against them.

I know a mother, representative of a large class, whose sense of responsibility seems to end when she has provided her little daughters with clothes. She feels herself to be an especially caretaking parent because they have an unusually large assortment of choice hair ribbons. As for her social duties, they are summed up in a feeling of obligation to invite for "bridge" before the close of each season every other woman who has during that time entertained her at a card party. That it is a "home duty," or a social duty, to consider the welfare of the teachers of her children, the highest good of their young companions, as well as that of the maids who serve her and them, simply never enters her mind. This indifference is sinful. It proceeds from selfish lack of heart, as well as lack of thought.

A Plea for Thought and Action

Wake up, sister women! You and your homes belong to the nation! Think, feel, act, in some decided manner, not only with regard to the extension of the suffrage but upon each and every important issue of the day. The home is your kingdom, but all the members of the great human family are your brothers and sisters, every little child you meet has a claim upon your mother heart. If you shut out one of the least of these you harm yourselves. You best serve self in serving them. Anything is better than inertia in any phase of living. One would not be a wet blanket, a drifting mist, a big, damp fog bank in the way of progress.

Save us, dear Lord, from the deadly sin of apathy! Force us to realize that the greatest good of the greatest number does indeed concern us, each and every one; that we must work for the coming of thy kingdom with the weapons within our reach today; and bless our earnest efforts, for thy name's sake

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS—Bradford Horton is working his way through Prestonbury Theological Seminary. A fellow student, Austin Sleighton, becomes his loyal friend; but Oren-Toole, a jealous fellow bank employee, attempts to involve him in a money theft, using as his tool an old beggar, Andrew Drum, who proves to be Horton's own father. Miss Elmore, daughter of the bank's president, to whom Horton is greatly attracted, believes in his innocence, which is finally proved. Oren-Toole and Drum, however, are incriminated. Drum dies before his trial, and Horton begs that the case against Oren-Toole be dropped. This angers Mr. Elmore, and he writes Horton a note which causes him to resign from the bank and to give up his position as tutor to Mr. Elmore's grandson.

CHAPTER XII.

THE PRICE OF A KEPT PROMISE

"WHAT'S THAT YOU'RE scowling over, Brad?" "A note from young Mrs. Elmore asking me to call, and I can't think how to decline it without making our choir relations unpleasant." "Well, don't. There's no need. She's no young girl that wants to marry you and run away with you."

"Well, it's just as bad. She wants to talk to me about tutoring Charlie."

"Nothing the matter with that. You do tutor him."

"No. I did. I don't now."

"Since when?"

"This morning."

"What's the row?"

Horton tossed Mr. Elmore's note over to Sleighton, and that matter of fact young man perused it. "Bradford Horton," he declared, "you are more or less of a fool. You throw up $5 a week because a man calls you Drum. He might call me a whole brass band."

"All right for you, A. S., but it won't go for me. I've left the bank and I've sent back his check."

"You have? Well, you are a——" Sleighton stopped suddenly and changed his tone. "I'll stand by you, Horton. Now, you go make that call."

So he called. It was of no avail. She was very earnest, and he very polite, but he would not accede to her request. As he went away, he was thinking with pleasure that he could number this very pleasant lady among his friends. And she, at home, said to Charlie, "We will have to find another teacher, dear boy; but Mr. Horton is as fine a gentleman as I have ever known."

Charlie accepted the situation, but he poured out his soul in a letter which his mother did not see.

"Dear Aunt Lennie: You know from the papers all about Mr. Horton and Oren-Toole and the old man who carried off the money. And what do you think? Grandfather believes that the old man told the truth when he said Mr. Horton was his son, and that his name was Drum. Grandfather wrote Mr. Horton a letter which I carried when I went to recite. I don't know what was in it, but it made Mr. Horton awful mad. He won't hear me recite any more. I'll bet grandfather called him Drum in that letter. Anyway, my chance of Yale's gone, and if I can't go this fall I'll never go. So there! Good-by. CHARLIE."

Not satisfied, however, with merely relieving his feelings, and determined to know what had made the break, the boy went next morning over to the Sunset hill house and straight into his grandfather's office, where without hesitation he blurted out the thought that had taken possession of him. "Say, grandfather, did you call Mr. Horton William Drum in that note I carried?"

The question was unexpected, and surprised Mr. Elmore into answering before he thought. "Yes, Charlie. What of it? That's his name."

"No, it ain't, grandfather! And it's awful mean!" He rushed out of the room in a rage. Boylike, he went for his chum Elmore Miller and told him the whole story. The Miller boy told a Tappan boy, and so it came about that the Miller and Tappan families discussed the matter in its various phases, and, as was natural, took Mr. Elmore's view. So the story went the round of the select circle, and out finally into a wider one, and ere long the name William Drum was to be heard quite commonly when people spoke of Bradford, though never when they addressed him.

Sleighton came in one night from the Shakespeare Club and entered Horton's room in some disturbance of mind. "Horton," he said seriously, "there's only one way for you to end this talk about you. You'll have to come to it sooner or later, and you'd better make it sooner."

"I don't care what they say."

"Oh, yes, you do! You want friends. You have some, but you want more. You've got to stop people from saying you're an impostor. They'll believe it up here at the seminary pretty soon, and old Dragham'll tell you you haven't a call."

"Well, I don't care, as I said before."

"Yes, you do. You don't want to leave Prestonbury; anyway, not under a cloud."

"Austin, what has started you off on this tack so suddenly?"

"The Shakespeare Club."

"Oh, hang the Shakespeare Club!"

"No, that won't do. I belong to that club; so do Ansley Jickers and Miss Lucy, and Mrs. Elmore, Charlie's mother. You can't afford to hang one of us."

"Well, what has the Shakespeare Club been saying?"

"All but those I mentioned, that you are an impostor."

"Where did such a thing start?"

"With Mr. Elmore. He says you deliberately told him you were one man's son, and it has been clearly shown you are the son of another, to wit, of the disreputable old vagabond whom you nursed and buried. Says your caring for him at such expense goes to prove it. Clear it up, Bradford; clear it up right away."

"Did they say that in the club?"

"Yes."

"And did you stand by and hear and not contradict?"

"How could I contradict? You've given me no permission to tell your story. I could only say you weren't any impostor, that I was sure of it, and some day they would be."

"Good! Now let it rest right there."

"But it won't rest there. You've got to tell the whole truth."

"See here, A. S., get to my point of view if you can. I can't tell that story in Prestonbury. Just remember that that broken old vagabond married my mother here, years ago, as he told me, against the will of her family. On his deathbed he was constantly worrying lest the town should know who he was, and identify him with the man they knew before. He didn't want those people who prophesied ill of him then to know how he'd fully justified their opposition to his marriage. So I told him in those last days that nobody here should ever know from me the truth about him.

"Austin Sleighton, I mean to keep that promise. My father's dead, you say, and won't know the difference? I won't save myself by smirching the character of a dead man, nor by breaking promises to the dead. Let Prestonbury think of him as they used to know him—I'll say nothing to let them know the truth. I treated my father like a brute once, A. S., to save myself mortification. I won't do it again."

Sleighton had listened, much impressed. "Bradford," he said soberly, when the breathless sentences ceased, "here's my last word. You go to Mr. Elmore tomorrow morning and tell him exactly what you now say to me. He'll believe every word you say. He'll recall that letter he wrote. You'll go back to the bank, and Charlie to his Greek. Mr. Elmore will reinstate you in public esteem, and life here will be a vastly different thing for you from what I fear it will be otherwise."

"Sleighton," was the answer, "you're a good man, and that advice is good. But I can't do it. It was the Elmore family who objected to my mother's marriage. No; I've marked out my way, and I must walk it to the end—the way of loyalty to my own father."

Returning to his own room, "That fellow has the spirit of a Bayard," thought Sleighton. "He'll lose his friends, lose Prestonbury, lose that girl, just for chivalric loyalty to an old reprobate. Not smirch his father's character? Where was his character?"

CHAPTER XIII.

THE WEALTH OF A GOOD NAME

THAT WINTER was cold and long. For seventy days Bradford tramped through the bitter weather wearing only his ordinary clothing. He shivered sometimes, but his heart was strong. The spring was a great joy to him. One April evening after a day of warmth and brightness he sat with Sleighton on the steps at the front of Morton hall.

"I told you, Austin, that people would forget the Drum business after a while."

(Continued on page 121)

THE WAYFARER

Joy for a New Baby

THIS WAYFARER is a world wanderer, and he has seen most of the great sights that allure travelers—the highest mountain on the earth, the deepest depression in the earth; the seven seas and four continents; the oldest cities and the newest wonders of science; the famous museums and galleries, and the diverse living peoples which are more worth while than all museums and galleries. Nevertheless, here the Wayfarer writes down his conviction that the greatest wonders, like the greatest joys, are to be found by the hearth of home.

* * * * *

At the moment, the Wayfarer is under the spell of a newborn baby, who is doubtless not greatly different (although it would be hard to make the parents believe this!) from all the other babies that have blessed families since mother Eve held the infant Cain in her arms and dreamed a mother's high dreams of the future of her first-born. Who can foresee the future of a babe—the empires he may hold in that wee fist, the souls he may sway by that piping voice, the paths of service and glory those tiny feet may tread! Every child is incarnate Possibility.

* * * * *

Mystery enwraps a babe as a garment. The first chapter of Genesis need present no difficulties to the person who has contemplated the unsolved mystery of every new life—the personality which was not, and now is; the human individuality which has entered this inscrutable world, endowed with a whole store of peculiar characteristics, traits and inclinations. See how this babe wrinkles his forehead and lifts his left eyebrow in the exact mannerism of his father's father. Yet his head is that of his mother's father, as every relative perceives. Come, ye scientists, with your pack of lore and learning, and set forth this wonder, and make answer to this fresh assertion of the inexplicableness and sanctity of life, this intricate interweaving of the past with the future, this mysterious compound called personality. Let us uncover our heads in the presence of the babe, for the very mystery of heaven still clings about him.

* * * * *

The mother best knows this. The father may boast and rejoice; but the mother reveres. She looks with a love that is half awe upon this other self, this new life which links her with posterity. The helpless babe in the mother's arms insures her future. Thereby her personality is projected forward into the unmeasured succession of the race. Is it any cause for wonder that the passion for posterity outweighs all other passions among those peoples who have the longest history to teach them relative values?

The helplessness of a babe is his scepter of sovereignty. He rules by weakness. His power lies in his powerlessness. Because he is utterly dependent, the paternal, protective providing instinct is called forth. Parenthood is manhood and womanhood at their height, for it represents love in its loftiest function of service.

No Madonna has ever been painted which can equal in beauty and spiritual significance a living mother caring for a living babe.

* * * * *

Not that the service is not its own reward. To know a baby intimately; to be familiar with the sweet little cooing, cuddling, gurgling sounds which he makes as he settles to sleep after he has drunk of the fountain of life; to watch the wise wrinklings of that wee, and, oh, so delicate face, and the yawns that are ludicrous in their venerable world-weariness; to study that rose-leaf ear, so small, so soft, so shapely, so delicately colored and molded—to hold the tiny hand, so absurdly little and yet so wondrously complete, even to the long finger nails—oh, is there any joy quite like the joy in one's own baby? Let the prideful world wear its royal decorations and its rich diamonds; the Wayfarer wots that the parent with a child in his arms covets nothing.

* * * * *

As under the land there flow deep streams of water which satisfy the thirst, so in the depths of our common human nature there are rivers of sentiment which gush forth to greet a baby's advent. This elemental experience, essential to the perpetuation of the race, is the "touch of nature" which "makes the whole world kin." The best that is in everybody is brought forth, like the Wise Men's gifts, as an offering to the babe. The fellowship of friends is never so sweet as when they rejoice with happy parents over a newborn child. And how royal, in the lavishness of their interest and kindly expressions, are the friends whom all of us, alas! underprize in our busy lives of stress and activity. We need the help of a baby to call us back to first things, the things that draw us nearer to one another and to God.

THE WAYFARER.

THE HOME COUNCIL

ARE YOU DOING YOUR PART? By Lee McCrae

Is your Sunday school running down? Perhaps you are directly responsible for it. You are, if your sole interest in it consists in starting your children off to their classes. The salvation of the school and, through it, of the church, may rest with you. This article explains how.

RECENTLY I SAT listening to a prominent Sunday school leader plead with a group of mothers for their cooperation. The address, informal but eloquent, almost brought tears to my eyes because of its earnestness.

Suddenly a sense of the incongruousness of it all swept over me. Imagine a day school teacher or a teacher of music or of art saying, virtually, "I am giving free lessons here, sacrificing my own time and interests to educate your children's brains and hands. Please help me!"

A little later, while we were eating the dainty refreshments served by her assistants, I said to the leader: "Your party is a fine success. I am sure the mothers are interested."

She gave a gasp and then whispered confidentially: "Oh, no! The teachers and I are so disappointed. Why, we have only twenty-five mothers here out of sixty; and we sent written invitations with 'Please respond' underscored; yet only two of the thirty-five absentees were gracious enough to call us up by phone and excuse themselves. We decorated, as you see, and hired a special caterer, so it has cost each of us several dollars—though we would not mind that in the least if the mothers only cared."

What could I say to cheer her? By all the laws of compensation those mothers ought to have been entertaining those teachers.

"Why, don't you and Mrs. V—— know each other?" I exclaimed after a splendid little primary teacher and I had passed a fashionably dressed woman on the street without speaking.

"No," she answered without the slightest bitterness, "though I have two of her children in my class, and called on her once—when she was out. I am not 'in society,' you see, and have not been properly introduced."

Again I smothered my indignation and hurried to change the subject. There is no use making a bad matter worse by discussing it. But which woman was under obligation to which, think you? Which one should have sought the other?

Talk about the Japanese having "left-handed brains" and doing things backward! Haven't we Americans got some things topsy-turvy and wrong side out as well? One thing I am sure of—it is just such disheartening little incidents as these that make the way of Christian service a thorny, rugged path.

"Oh, but Christians are not working for appreciation or any sort of earthly reward," we are promptly told. "They are clearing their consciences of obligation to their fellow men, following His command to teach all nations, looking only for rewards in heaven."

True enough—and well that it is true! An approving conscience, the feeling of usefulness, the joy of doing the Lord's work and, not least, the unstinted love of little pupils—these make a splendid return, let alone the promise of treasures in heaven.

And it is just these things that keep our Sunday schools open year after year. Only a very few fathers and mothers (aside from those who are actively engaged in the work themselves and therefore understand) can take any credit to themselves for the open door.

(Continued on page 122)

VERSES OLD AND NEW

The House by the Side of the Road

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
  In the peace of their self-content;
There are souls, like stars, that dwell apart
  In a fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
  Where the highways never ran—
But let me live by the side of the road
  And be a friend of man.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
  Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good and the men who are bad,
  As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
  Or hurl the cynic's ban—
Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
  And be a friend to man.

I see from my house by the side of the road,
  By the side of the highway of life,
The men who press with the ardor of hope,
  The men who are faint with the strife.
But I turn not away from their smiles nor their tears—
  Both parts of an infinite plan.
Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
  And be a friend to man.

I know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead,
  And mountains of wearisome height;
And the road passes on through the long afternoon,
  And stretches away to the night.
But still I rejoice when the travelers rejoice,
  And weep with the strangers that moan,
Nor live in my house by the side of the road
  Like a man who dwells alone.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
  Where the race of men go by—
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
  Wise, foolish—so am I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat,
  Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
  And be a friend to man.

—Sam Walter Foss.

The Interior printed this poem a few years ago, explaining that the idea came to the author one day during a Greek recitation, when a bit of translation of the text in hand read, "He was a friend to man, and he lived in a house by the side of the road."

The author carried the germ of the thought in his heart a long time before it developed and bore fruit in this greatly beloved poem (which could be read and pondered daily with profit). The Deaconess Advocate has a suggestion to offer as to what it was which finally prompted the writing of the verses:

Foss was an enthusiastic traveler, and on one of his trips through New England he came, at the top of a long hill, to a little unpainted house, set almost in the road, so close it was. Near one side was a queerly constructed signpost finger pointing to a well-worn path and a sign, "Come in and have a cool drink." Following the path, he found in the side of the bank some distance from the house a spring of cold water into which a barrel had been sunk, and above which hung an old-fashioned gourd dipper. And on a bench near by was a basket of fragrant apples with another sign, "Help yourself."

Scenting a story, Foss went back to the house, where he found a childless old couple in straitened circumstances, with the rocky farm as their only source of livelihood. But it was rich in the delicious spring of water and an abundance of fruit, so the sign was placed guiding to the water, and from the time of the ripening of the first purple plum to the harvesting of the last red apple a basket of whatever fruit might be in season was placed near, that anyone passing might rest and refresh himself. The old gentleman explained that they were too poor to give money, so took this way to add their mite to the world's well doing.

The beautiful thought so impressed Mr. Foss that he immortalized with his pen the spirit of the ideal home.

Fun, and Education Too

Last spring my nephew, who lives with us, was 5 years old. He has always been a great lover of books, and I devised this plan to encourage his taste for them. We called it "playing history."

I bought a large scrapbook and we took for our first subject the history of the Christ child. Each evening before I tucked him in we took one picture—first, the Babe in the manger—and pasted it in our scrapbook. Then we talked about it. First, I told the story to him and then questioned him about it; and questions and answers kept him busy until sleep claimed him. In this way we studied the life of Jesus, the life of Daniel and of David, and then we came up to our later history and the lives of the men our nation honors.

Of course it takes time and thought, but it more than repays me by the delight it gives my little man and the knowledge he is storing away.

He is so proud of his scrapbook because the pictures in it are all like friends to him.

I wish all mothers, and especially those with limited means, would try this plan. They will find that it more than pays in the interest that is taken.

MRS. N. M.

[We are always glad to have helpful suggestions about "things to do." The thing that has helped you will be pretty sure to help someone else. May we not have more of your individual experiences?]

Helping to Put Father in a Conciliatory Mood

It was one of those dreary, dark days when everything went wrong. Tommy had not meant to knock over the best flower vase; he had not meant to upset his tea, or to sit down upon the kitten. But, as the fates were frowning, he had happened to do all these things, and had been severely reprimanded in consequence.

He bore his trials bravely, says Answers. But when curiosity led him into his mother's boudoir, and—by the merest misfortune—his elbow knocked over an inkpot and sent a blue-black stream over a new spring gown, he looked grave, and his heart sank within him.

"Oh, you naughty, naughty boy!" his mother cried, after the inevitable discovery. "I shall tell your father when he returns!"

"Really, mother?" whispered Tommy, in an awestruck voice.

She nodded firmly.

"Before or after dinner?"

"After," answered his mother. "I don't want to spoil his meal."

There was a pause. Visions of the parental birch loomed ominously. Then the youthful defaulter sidled up to his mother and asked:

"Mother, will you give him rhubarb tart and cream for his pudding—will you do that much for me?"

YOUNG AMERICA

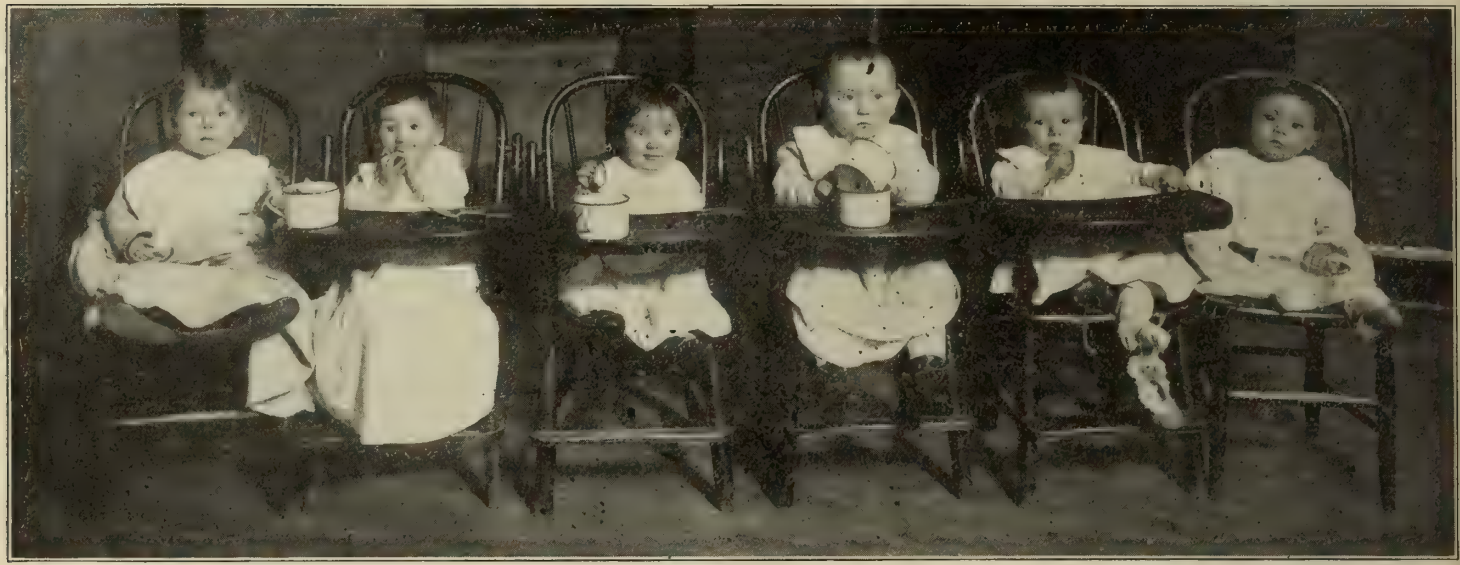
Why Larry May Become President

BY SARAH CORY RIPPEY

IT WAS ON A VERY cold winter's day that wee Larry Killduff was born; and apparently he didn't find the snow and the smoke and the gloom of Polk street at all to his liking, for the very first thing he did was to scream—and the second, and the third. Indeed, about all that Larry did those first weeks of his life was to scream. Nothing seemed to suit him. He ate too much, he didn't eat enough; he was too warm, he was not warm enough, till finally Mrs. Killduff was quite at her wits' ends.

"Oh, dear!" she sighed one day when patting, and rocking, and loving seemed only to make Larry scream the louder; "whatever shall I do with him? And me havin' t' go t' work at the factory next week, too!"

The four other little Killduffs, who were much older than Larry, but still not old enough to have all the care of a baby who did nothing but scream, stood and looked at the kicking, red-faced, unhappy little bundle of long clothes and wondered. For the Killduffs were poor, and food and coal were high, and shoes would wear out; and the children realized that the money mother would bring in from her work meant lots of comforts they couldn't have without it. But there was Larry! They were happy because there was a Larry, even if he did scream; but it did seem a little inconvenient to have him choose just that time to join the family.



At Mary Crane Nursery the Babies Are Happy and "Comfy" and Jolly from Morning Till Night

Suddenly Mary, the oldest little girl, gave a little cry of relief.

"The nursery!" she exclaimed. "We'll take Larry to Mary Crane nursery!"

"Of course!" said Mrs. Killduff. "Why didn't we think of that before?"

And to Mary Crane nursery Larry went, screams and all.

Now this nursery is not at all such a nursery as you perhaps have in your house. It is a very large building, erected just for little children who cannot be properly cared for at home. There are children, you know, poor children, whose mothers are ill, or who have to go out to work, as Larry's mother did, and so cannot look after their babies. And there is even, now and then, a little boy or girl who has no mother. To all such children in its neighborhood Mary Crane nursery plays mother.

It was a happy day for Larry when Mrs. Killduff wrapped him up carefully in her gray shawl and carried him to the nursery. The nursery doctor had looked him over the day before and said it would be perfectly safe for him to join the nursery family, as he hadn't the measles, or the mumps, or the chickenpox, or any other of the diseases children give to each other. The doctor had also discovered what it was that made Larry so cross and fretful all the time, and had given him something to relieve the trouble. Therefore when Mrs. Killduff unrolled him and handed him over to the nurse-mother in charge Larry actually smiled, for the first time in his life, and forgot to scream.

"He's feelin' better," said Mrs. Killduff as she kissed his little cheek. "Good-by, Larry. Be a good boy. Your ma'll come for you tonight." And she wrapped herself in Larry's shawl and started off for the factory.

It was early in the morning, only 6:30. The nurse, who knew all about babies, and what they liked and didn't like, cuddled the tiny boy up close in her arms and gave him a comforting pat or two.

"You must go to bed and finish your nap out, young man," she said. "It's too early for such a small person as you to be up." She carried him into a little "silence" room, which is away by itself, where house noises cannot waken the wee sleepers, and tucked him into a dainty white iron crib, drew the sheet and pretty blue and white blanket up around him, and left him, with three other little sleepers in three other little cribs for company.

It was 9 o'clock before a scream from the "silence" room announced that Larry thought it time he had his breakfast. The nurse who could give such comforting pats picked him up and carried him out to the bathroom, gave him a nice warm bath, brushed his funny little wisps of red hair and slipped him into a tiny nursery dress. And then he went to bed again and had a bottle of breakfast, and fell asleep before he had time to remember about screaming. You see he had been so busy enjoying himself that he had forgotten all about being cross. Besides, his "tummy" didn't ache now.

All day long Larry slept, and drank out of his bottle, and kicked up his heels and was happy. When he wasn't sleeping he was brought out into a big sunny room where the other children were, and where he liked the brightness. Larry's home was dark, and he had never known how much fun a baby can have blinking at a sunbeam.

Larry would have been quite contented to stay there all night and not go home at all. But babies may only stay at the nursery till 6:30, and so when Mrs. Killduff called for him at that hour, on her way home from the factory, Larry had to be made into another little bundle of shawl and baby, in spite of his protests, and to be carried back to the place where sunbeams never dance.

Every morning now Larry was left at the nursery, and at night he was taken home; and there wasn't a happier baby in all Chicago than Larry Killduff. He was so fat, and his eyes were so blue, and his cheeks were so red, and his auburn hair was so thick that everybody who came to the nursery to visit the babies and saw Larry in his crib, laughing to himself and cooing to his Teddy bear, said, "What a beautiful baby!"

If Larry had been able to talk he probably would have had a word to say on the subject. "Of course I'm beautiful," he would have said. "I feel beautiful! But you just ought to have seen me when I had that pain in my tummy!"

When Larry's little back grew strong enough he was allowed to sit in a chair with a tray across the front, just as he is sitting among the babies in the picture. He thought that great fun, because a tray is so very nice to spat your hands on; and you can reach after the sunbeams a great deal better sitting up than lying down. Moreover, if you are mischievous—and Larry certainly was mischievous—you can have considerable entertainment dropping your Teddy bear overboard for someone else to pick up.

On warm days Larry was allowed to stay out on the big stone porch, where, when he was a bit older, he dug holes in the clean white sand put there to play in and made wonderful pies and had almost as good a time as if he were down on the sandy lake shore itself.

Larry is now 18 months old, and he can sit at the low kindergarten table with his other little mates; and not only can he sit there but he can feed himself, too, without a bit of help from anybody. He felt himself a very big boy, indeed, the first time he did that, and well he might. To take your very own milk and bread, or soup and bread, out of your very own white-enameled mug, with your very own teaspoon, and put it into your very own mouth, without spilling more than a drop or two on your bib, is no small trick—when you are only 18 months old.

But before he begins to eat Larry says grace with the other babies. With his auburn head bowed, his dancing blue eyes shut tight, his tiny hands folded on the table before him, he lisps:

"God is great,
God is good,
And we thank him
For this food.
Amen."

Larry doesn't talk very plainly, and so you can't always understand the other words, but

(Continued on page 122)

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

February 2, 1913—The Flood

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 6:9-22; 7:11-24. Golden Text, Romans 6:23: The wages of sin is death; but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Events have two important factors—date and purpose. One deals with time and the other with conditions. This applies with peculiar force to the present lesson. When the deluge occurred is conjecture; why it occurred is a very different matter. About three hundred and fifty years ago there lived in Ireland a great man known as Archbishop Ussher. He devised a system of chronology by which dates were assigned to the marked events of Scripture. It was an ingenious effort, and accepted by the scholars of his time. One finds it today printed on the margins of the Bible, but it must not be regarded as part of the word. According to Archbishop Ussher, the deluge took place 2,348 years before our era. This is no longer regarded as accurate. The actual time is unknown. Events do not depend for significance entirely upon the time when they occurred.

Ethical Value of Deluge Independent of Time of Occurrence

We accept the deluge as a fact and then leave it. Time and place do not necessarily belong to the purpose of history. Tell me, said Herod, where the Messiah should be born and at what time the star appeared. But Jesus made no such appeal. When John doubted he could think of nothing stronger than this: "Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see." He based the evidence of his Messiahship upon the facts of his life.

This lesson is best understood from its ethical side. What are the teachings involved, and why did it occur? Like everything else, the deluge has a history-long previous to itself. It was a rain, the first sprinking of which fell just outside of Eden. It will be remembered that Adam had two sons, Cain and Abel. The latter was slain, but another son, Seth, took his place. These were the two streams that formed the headwaters of the deluge. They held their own courses, each distinct from the other. The descendants of Cain and Seth were as widely separated as were their ancestors. The former built cities and the latter altars. They were distinguished as the sons of men and the sons of God. But in the process of time those two streams came closer together. The sons of God became enamored of the daughters of men, and "took them wives of all that they chose." The result was that earth became corrupt and was filled with violence.

Noah the One Exception to Corruption That Filled the Earth

There was one exception, however—the patriarch Noah. This man walked with God and was perfect in his generation. His family consisted of three sons—Shem, Ham and Japheth—all of whom, with their wives, God determined to preserve as a remnant of the race. God has never left himself without a witness. There is an oasis in every desert, and no community is ever so bad that some Noah does not rise up to redeem it. The Almighty cannot be indifferent to the moral condition of mankind. He noted the sins of the race and also the righteousness of this one solitary servant. That God would have saved the race by other means is but a natural inference. His Spirit was striving with men, and the patriarch by word and life urged them to repent.

For over a hundred years he toiled at his work and preached the impending doom of the world. But all without effect. The people only mocked and sank deeper in their sins. That Noah should have persevered, in the face of scorn and unbelief, shows his confidence in God. It places him among the faith heroes of history. "By faith," says the author of Hebrews, "Noah, being warned of God concerning things not seen as yet, moved with godly fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." God's word to him was sufficient. During all this time he saw no sign of the threatened flood. The sky was clear and all nature smiled upon the earth, but God is not mocked. The race was sowing to the wind while the whirlwind harvest awaited to be gathered. The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind. Men persist in lives that can lead to but one result, but the end seems far away, if indeed it ever comes at all. Others may have fallen, but no fall will come to them. The flood that submerged them brings with it neither force nor fear.

We forget that life is only another accent of the voice of God. Whether he speaks by inspiration or nature, yes and no never exchange places. As in the days of Noah, so shall it be with the men of this generation. Sin is ever the same with God. Its terrible nature time fails to soften. Then comes a time when his Spirit no more strives with man. This was true in the days of Noah, and it is true still. Infinite Love was grieved at heart. "And it repented Jehovah that he had made man." The expression is a hard one and must be understood within the limitations of our comprehension. One of two things was inevitable—either God must destroy the race or else the race would destroy itself. Excessive immoralities lead to death. Death is the wages of sin. And that was the end toward which the race was drifting. Urged to repent, it still refused, so God recalled his rejected Spirit, and the end of all flesh had come.

God Always Provides a Way of Escape for His Own

God always provides an ark for his own. Noah, his family and two types of every living creature entered in and God shut the door. The fountains of the great deep were broken up, and for forty days and forty nights the earth rocked as if smitten by falling seas. Mountains were transformed into islands, until, as at the first, the earth became a shoreless waste. But the Spirit of God moved again upon the waters, not as a fiat but as an ark, prepared to save the race.

It was an emblem of the Cross. Sinners were lost, but the righteous were saved, and this we believe to be the lesson of the deluge. It is history with a meaning, and the meaning involves the justice and mercy of God. Other peoples have their flood narratives. In some instances the details bear a striking resemblance to this narrative, but all lack the one grand exalted purpose. They differ from Genesis as the Bible differs from every other book, as the sons of God differ in their faith from the sons of men.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins.

Analysis—Traditions of a life-destroying flood are practically universal. But even in an age requiring a deluge for its punishment it is possible for a good man to live godly. Amidst the deepest of deep waters the redeemed of Jehovah are safe. The forces which destroy the wicked save the just.

That there was once a flood which might be spoken of as universal appears from all the records of the past. That the earth is still subject to great physical disturbances no one would deny who visited San Francisco after the earthquake or Martinique after the eruption of the neighboring volcano. That in the remote past these changes were more violent, sudden and overwhelming, every geologist knows. In polar regions, where summer is scarcely more than a dream, subtropical vegetation once flourished, and in the arid sections of our Central West great seas formerly supported a vast marine flora and fauna.

Clay tablets from the library of Sardanapalus (668-623 B. C.) give us one version of the flood story, and a deluge tablet found at Nippur (Calneh of Gen. 10:10), which was probably inscribed about 2100 B. C., is strikingly like the account in Genesis. But none of these accounts presents the pure monotheism of Genesis or the moral lessons which the Old Testament narrative embodies. We would hardly admire the historian who might give us the sickening details of our late civil war and pass lightly by the revolution which that period brought about in the conditions of American labor. History without a philosophy of history becomes a mere ruck of annals and incidents. The purpose of the Old Testament study is that we may see God in each event, accomplishing redemption now by reward and again by punishment.

Companionship with God the Secret of Religious Constancy

Verse 6—"Noah walked with God." That is the secret of religious constancy. Even though the times be "out of joint," we need not join the general apostasy. Elijah was a lone man, but the surrounding wickedness roused him to an intensity of action which he might not have known in days with less opposition in them. Savonarola never compromised with the dissolute court or corrupt church of his day. When Luther was threatened he nailed his challenge on the door of his church so that every eye could see it. No man who walks with God can be a coward.

Verse 11—"The earth was corrupt . . . filled with violence." Wicked men are as a rule heartless men. Noah had to meet not only the jeers of the ungodly but their threats. But the surrounding depravity only enables good men to throw farther their beams of light—"so shines a good deed in a naughty world."

Chapter 7:11—Noah was a very old man when his great trial came. He was a very old man when he began to build the ark and a much older man when it was completed. Age may be favorable to faith, but not to activity. Noah was evidently not looking for excuses to "quit work." There are thousands of Christians who were once active church workers, but who now are content to "leave all that to younger men."

Obedient Child of God Safe in Midst of Perils

Verse 16—One finds in the catacombs of Rome, where the early Christians were buried, many rude drawings of Bible scenes showing what thoughts supported them in their bereavements and persecutions. And one of the most common is that of the ark, closed tight and riding safely amid rising seas. So often was this story told, with its spiritual meaning emphasized, that the ark became then, and has continued to be to our own day, an emblem of the believer's security.

It may be noted that Noah walked in, but "God shut the door." He was free to choose, but divinely secure when he had chosen.

Verse 17—We have not dwelt much in this lesson upon the physical details of the flood, because it is of more importance that we should keep before our eyes the spiritual aim of the narrator; but the trial of Noah's faith was one extending over a very considerable lapse of time. A long continued flood was necessary not only to cut off evildoers effectually but to wash away and utterly destroy wrecks and relics of the flood which would have otherwise rendered the region of Noah's disembarkation uninhabitable. Yet many a man who can rush into a battle with a shout hesitates before enlisting for a campaign. It is easier to be faithful for an hour than for forty days. "O Lord, how long!" is one of our most bitter cries. It is well to remember that not only our experiences but our "times" are in God's hands (Ps. 31:15).

The Waters That Drowned the Wicked Bore Up the Ark

Verse 18—"And the waters prevailed." In such a cataclysm as here described the waters rise and the earth recedes. "We may regard the deluge as an historical fact preserved in a multitude of forms, an actual and terrible event which made so powerful an impression upon the imagination of the first parents of our species that their descendants could never forget it. This event took place near the primitive cradle of mankind. The deluge was a fact; it was a part of a great plan. Its record as handed down in the Hebrew Scriptures is the one clear, distant account, and when compared with other accounts bears on its face indications of divine origin."—Harper.

We are perhaps now far enough from the events of the civil war to agree upon many things which at its inception were open to debate. The French revolution was at once a reign of terror and the birth of a new era. The fall of Jerusalem scattered the disciples, who "went everywhere preaching the word"; but the horrors of that siege exterminated the men and the families of the men who put Jesus to death.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning January 26, 1913

Topic—The two sons. Matthew 21:28-30.

This parable comes from the closing days of the ministry of Jesus. He was teaching in the temple court on Tuesday of the week in which he was crucified. He had assumed rights so extensive within the sacred precincts that the Jewish rulers sent some of their number to investigate his claims. They asked by what authority he did these things. Who gave him this authority?

—

Instead of answering them directly Jesus asked them another question, promising that if they should answer his, he would answer theirs. "The baptism of John, whence was it? From heaven or from men?" The Pharisees were in a quandary. If they were to answer "From heaven," he would say, "Why then did ye not believe?" On the other hand, they were afraid to say "From men," for the people regarded John as a prophet; and the Pharisees were under the necessity of affecting something of the same regard, lest they should lose their religious leadership. They would have been glad to oppose John openly, but the current of public praise ran so strongly toward him that they found it safest to fall in with the popular accord and seem to swell its volume, while, at the same time, they privately endeavored to turn public attention in another direction. So they could answer Jesus nothing.

—

But it is not a mere skirmish of wits that we look upon in this scene. Jesus had, of course, a keen intellect; and he could silence his opponents when he pleased. But he was too great to take any pleasure in such dialectics. He was too serious to desire to win a battle of words. In the question he addressed to the Pharisees he gave them, in substance, the answer to the question they had addressed to him. He said in effect: "John's was a baptism unto repentance. If ye had repented, ye would have known by what authority I do these things. My authority can be discerned only by the pure of heart, and to them it needs no formal proof." If they had followed the leading of Jesus, they would soon have come to the understanding of his authority. And this brings us to our parable.

—

The first son did not like the vineyard. There were other things he would rather do. At best, he was only a thoughtless, undisciplined fellow, not at all careful of his father's feelings. Jesus never assumes that he is perfect. But at least he is not a hypocrite. And if he has no intention of working in the vineyard, he will not pretend that he has.

—

The other son is full of pretensions. When his father says to him, "Son, go work today in my vineyard," he answers at once, with a certain smug complacence, "I go, sir." He is polite and respectful in his language. He is also extremely self-satisfied with his politeness. The "I" is emphatic. But he does not go. He is only a hypocrite.

—

Jesus did not need to explain this parable; the Pharisees understood it. Standing in the temple, Jesus pointed out that the penitent publicans and harlots would shame the impenitent Pharisees, and take precedence of them in entering the kingdom. Those wicked people had apparently been far away from the kingdom; but, nevertheless, they had accepted John's baptism and obeyed Christ's call. And the Pharisees, who had observed punctiliously all the ceremonial ablutions of their sect, and had professed themselves eagerly waiting for the coming of the kingdom, did not accept John's baptism nor recognize Jesus as the King.

—

The parable does not finally shut the door of hope upon the Pharisee; but it takes the precedence from him and gives it to the sinner. The Pharisee may still be saved; but if he is, he is hardly saved.

—

And yet is it not better to live a correct life, as the ordinary scribe and Pharisee undoubtedly did, than an irregular life, as the publican and sinner did? Certainly it is. A moral life is always better than an immoral life. And the teaching of Jesus upon this point goes far beyond the doctrine of the scribes. But the present question is different. The moral life of these Pharisees was not perfect, and it needed cleansing as much as the immoral life of the sinners. The Pharisee's self-righteousness would not permit him to undergo the humiliation of confessing that he had ever been wrong. On the other side the sinner felt a poignancy of grief for his sin, and a revulsion of heart against it, that left a lasting sense of unworthiness and an abiding power of purification that remained throughout all his life.

—

The truth is that the Pharisee was a very much worse man than he seemed to be; and the sinner was often very much better. Hypocrisy is the worst of all sins, because it hardens the heart and makes repentance impossible. And hypocrisy is inseparable from pride.

—

Both sons are with us still. This parable of Jesus was spoken to very religious men, and should cause us the utmost heart-searching. Are we among those Christians who are so abundant in promise and profession, and so poor in performance?

—

We smile at the promises of some politicians, and some tradesmen. We do not expect them to keep their word. But upon how many of us can the minister, or the superintendent of the Sabbath school, depend to do just what we have promised? How often in our hours of devotion have we said to God himself, "I go," and we have never gone.

—

The whole church of Jesus Christ, by its very existence, name and creed, professes to be ready to go. Has the church of the Crucified kept its express, or implied, promises?

—

Those who travel among the Swiss mountains, or through the deserts of the East, need a guide. Not knowing the way, nor its dangers, they need someone who has been over the whole way before, and can guide them safely. God knows all the dangers of our life from its beginning to its end, and he offers to be our Guide. He says, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye." Let us thank him for his sweet promise, and follow him closely all our life long.

A divided heart is the secret of most wrecks in life. Men are unwilling to make a square and definite choice that means a rejection of the world as well as a surrender to God. Our business in the world is to help, to serve, to uplift, and to make the world around us better because we have lived. The test is, what have we done for our fellowmen? "He who hears these words of mine," says Jesus, "and lives them out in his daily life, I will liken him to a wise man who built his house upon a rock."
—E. A. King.

If you do not wish for his kingdom, don't pray for it; but if you do, you must do more than pray, you must work.—John Ruskin.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

February 2, 1913

PROVING CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR'S SUCCESS

Topic—Christian Endeavor principles, and how to uphold them. John 14:6-15.

Who traces the river back to its springs? What publicist is interested and acute enough to follow the present social and political changes back to their beginnings? Some of us are assured that it would be found by such testing that the modern young people's movement, of which Christian Endeavor is the first and foremost exponent, has been a tremendous factor in setting up the new ideals which have worked out so wonderfully. Literally millions of young men and women have been indoctrinated with practical idealism in these societies. They have been inspired to a conception of religion wrought in ministry. Their life motto, which has not been forgotten when they ceased to be active members, has been, "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

—

The potency of Christian Endeavor was not fully realized by its members; nor is it to be measured by their followers. It belongs among the unmeasured spiritual forces of our generation.

—

The fashion is growing of calling the roll of the present generation of leaders in all forms of Christian work, and of pointing out that with few exceptions they had their training in the young people's societies. Likewise the list of Christian Endeavor governors, congressmen, mayors and other public servants is a long one, and growing longer. These all, together with the myriads who serve men and God in less conspicuous ways, are the proof of the quality of Christian Endeavor principles.

—

There are now many hundreds of Christian Endeavorers on the foreign field as missionaries. There is no better place or way to exemplify the teachings of Christian Endeavor.

—

The covenant idea is basic in Christian Endeavor. The societies are built on the idea of pledged allegiance. Every member subscribes to some form of pledge. The habit of keeping faith is formed, and the sacredness of an obligation is taught. The very danger that pledges will be broken has but stimulated thought upon their solemnity. The young people's movement is a crusade of covenant keepers. They have vowed their lives unto the Lord.

—

Pray that He may prosper ever
Each endeavor
When the aim is good and true;
But that he may ever thwart thee,
And convert thee,
When thou evil wouldst pursue.
—Baron Von Canitz.

—

The old notion that spirituality is something for the aged and ready to die has been killed by Christian Endeavor. The norm of life, and of life at its fullest tide, is a character in fellowship with God. Strong, symmetrical and winsome young people have proved that religion is altogether normal and entirely consistent with the most wholesome type of life.

—

One Christian Endeavor principle is that of obligation—if anything is worth doing, it is worth promising to try to do.

Another principle of Christian Endeavor is cooperation. Two are more than twice one. In union not only is strength but multiplied strength.

Testimony is a Christian Endeavor principle. Speech, that godlike faculty, should be consecrated to the most godlike uses.

Training is a Christian Endeavor principle. In this school of religious education we learn to do by doing. We are to become all-round workers and also specialists.
—Amos R. Wells.

—

The school of doers teaches the skill that most directly counts. In Christian Endeavor, where youth learns by doing, the idea of service has been dominant. It really antedated the present social service movement in the churches, and prefigured it. That there are many tasks of Christian work wholly within the range of young people's ability was a new idea thirty years ago; but now we see how this principle has led devoted disciples into a wide field of activities, ranging from the teaching of a Sunday school class to work in a rescue mission. Youth can—that truth is written large in Christian Endeavor history.

—

"So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, 'Thou must,'
The Youth replies, 'I can.'"

MISSIONARY WORK

Dr. Young Champion for Alaska

Dr. S. Hall Young has been named by the Board of Home Missions as its special representative dealing with missions in Alaska. Dr. Young, who has spent practically his whole ministerial life in Alaska and whose latest work has been the establishment of a strong church in the new mining camp of Iditarod, is now, at the age of 65, plainly entitled to some respite from the hard service required amid Alaskan winters. The board therefore has arranged for him to spend the remainder of his active service period in making known the needs and possibilities of Alaska to the churches in the states. He is to travel widely, lecturing and preaching in Alaska's behalf, and is likewise to revise and to enlarge the board's literature on Alaska. But more than all, it will be his duty to search for the right kind of consecrated material out of which to make Alaska preachers. The contagion of Dr. Young's eloquence is well known to all who have heard him speak, and his service among the churches is certain to multiply the funds available for Alaskan work; while any young ministerial candidate whom Dr. Young believes red-blooded enough to meet Alaska requirements might as well surrender at discretion to his appeal, for in the end this enthusiastic pioneer will undoubtedly convince him that there is no other place than Alaska quite fit for a full-grown man to live and preach the gospel in.

Economy and Opportunity at Syen Chun

The persecutions endured by students of the Hugh O'Neill Junior Academy at Syen Chun, Korea, have brought to the focus of public attention one of the most useful of missionary educational institutions. Rev. George S. McCune, who is in charge of the school, has worked out a system which reduces costs per pupil to a remarkably low figure. Students are expected to provide their own food and pay a small tuition charge. Beyond that, the sum of $5 covers the expense of maintaining one student in school for the whole year. Where a donation of $20 is available, the academy is usually able to provide the student with work which will support him and enable him to earn an education by his own efforts. One form of work which is thus available and which is of exceedingly great value to the school is the use of the mimeograph on which are prepared the lesson sheets that serve the students instead of textbooks. The girls' academy is run on similar plans, and at equivalent expense.

In fact, all the activities of Syen Chun station are maintained on a corresponding scale of economy and efficiency. Dr. Sharrocks's invaluable hospital costs the board in America only $325 for its maintenance. He has two assistant physicians whose salary is $10 a month. Colporteurs serve at $5 a month, half of which is provided by the Bible society. Bible women are paid but $50 a year. A new hospital building, a library and a science hall for the O'Neill Academy and a Bible institute building have all been approved by the board at New York for this station, to be built as soon as gifts for the purpose are in hand. The total funds needed for these purposes are approximately $30,000.

Christian Japanese Reject Compromise

When Vice-Minister Tokonami of the home affairs office in the Japanese government summoned representatives of Buddhism, Shintoism and Christianity to confer at Tokyo on the state of religion in Japan he set going a discussion which still continues as to the possibility of a synthetic national faith. Shintoism shows so little vitality that few even of the most speculative consider it an element in the problem. But there have been a number of voices urging that Christianity and Buddhism are not very different, and perhaps might be harmonized. But this view of the case has not received any encouragement from Japanese Christians. The Unitarian organ of the empire did indeed publish an article from Dr. Kato, in which he declared that he considered himself at the same time both a Christian and a Buddhist; but Dr. Kato is not a member of any church, and doesn't affiliate even with the Unitarians.

As for the evangelical churches, even the most liberal of their adherents repudiate all notion that Christianity can be compromised with anything else. Dr. Ebina, the editor of The Shinjin, who is regarded as the leader of the liberal wing of the American Board's churches and so, perhaps, the most advanced of Japanese Trinitarians, says in the plainest fashion that those who plan to blend Christianity with either Confucianism, Buddhism or Shintoism "do not know the real nature of Christianity, nor understand the history of religion." He admits that the talk of synthesis is agreeable to the mind of Japan today, but such a method he considers "temporizing," which will "bequeath not a little misfortune to future generations." He thinks that Buddhism might be revived by the effort, but as for "enriching Christianity, it would be a superfluous embarrassment of riches."

Success of Mott and Eddy in India

A letter from Allahabad dated Dec. 13 tells of the results of the mission of John R. Mott and Sherwood Eddy in the university centers in India. Beginning in Ceylon, then up to Madras, over to Bombay, the party journeyed. Christian students were inspired to further efforts in conferences and great audiences of non-Christians from the colleges heard the Christian appeal. During the first week in December Allahabad was greatly moved.

"About 200 men signed cards promising to read the gospels daily and to make an open-minded investigation of Christianity, following and practicing truth as they were convinced of it. There were eighty from the Arthur Ewing Christian College among these. The Christian students entertained the speakers at dinner in their dormitory, Princeton hall, Wednesday night, together with Messrs. Farquhar, E. C. Carter and Moffatt, the Y. M. C. A. secretaries. We are busy following up results and are organizing a number of Bible groups for inquirers."

Afflictions Further Gospel in Siam

From Lampoon, Siam, Rev. J. H. Freeman writes that the epidemics of smallpox and malignant malaria prevailing among the Laos in the year past have wonderfully increased the opportunity of the missionaries; so that what has been a painful and bereaving physical scourge to the populace may turn out in the long run to be a great blessing spiritually. Of course the most direct results arise from the deep gratitude of the people for the devotion with which the missionaries served them in their great need. Not only did the medical missionaries give themselves with unresting labor to the service of the multitudes of sick but the evangelistic and teaching missionaries likewise dropped everything else to nurse the ailing.

Besides the impression made by this Christian unselfishness, there also went out through the Laos communities a profound awe in the presence of what seemed most evident divine protection for Christian converts. The missionaries themselves could not help regarding the immunity of the Christians as a real present-day miracle. The mission physicians instructed the native evangelists and leaders in the use of a few simple precautions and remedies to be used among the church families, and these means, under the blessing of God, were so effectual that Christian homes escaped almost entirely the sickness and death that befell so many of the heathen households. Of course the impressionable Laos have taken note of this fact, and it has been to many of them a convincing sign of the truth of Christian teaching.

In consequence of these influences the ingathering of converts at all the Laos stations was larger in 1912 than ever before. The year being reduced to eleven months by a rule requiring reports thirty days earlier than ordinarily, the Laos field reported a total of 1,034 persons received on confession of faith during the year, while full-year reports for 1911 and 1910 returned only 628 and 398 respectively. The additions in fact were so large as to increase the total of communicants 24 per cent in one year. And besides those received to membership, a much larger number have renounced spirit worship and Buddhism and applied for instruction in Christianity. These will be admitted to full membership within the period of a year.

And beyond the circle of those who have thus openly decided for Christ, there are thousands who are now giving unprecedented attention to the gospel message, and who may be regarded as the most hopeful possible material for missionary effort. In view of this condition the Laos mission becomes more anxious than ever for reenforcements. Reenforcements are needful for it to hold effectively the land now occupied, and as Dr. Freeman has pointed out, there are the strongest reasons for spreading a network of new missions out over the country occupied by Laos people in French territory to the east and Chinese territory to the north. The area in which millions of Laos people now live totally unreached by any Christian mission force whatever is two-thirds as large as the extent of the United States east of the Mississippi river.

Native Pastor Arrested in Africa

A case in some respects similar to the sensational conspiracy arrests in Korea has developed on the mission field of Sierra Leone, West Africa. Sierra Leone is a British colony, and the district commissioner who represents the British government in the territory that includes the prosperous coast town of Bonthe has caused the arrest of nearly 300 natives on charge of abetting or taking part in certain native heathen religious rites revived from the old period of savagery, which includes the prac- of cannibalism. Among the number arrested are a considerable portion of Christian converts, and the two most conspicuous prisoners are Rev. D. F. Wilberforce, pastor of the United Brethren church in Bonthe, and the principal layman of the congregation, Mr. Margai.

Mr. Wilberforce is the outstanding native member of a conference maintained by the United Brethren congregation in Sierra Leone, including nearly fifty native preachers, ordained and licensed. He is a man of middle age, educated in America, and enjoys the absolute confidence of his white coworkers in the mission. Mr. Wilberforce has, however, undergone a similar experience before. Six years ago, when the present district commissioner was previously in control at Bonthe, the colored pastor was arrested on a very similar charge, but on trial he was triumphantly acquitted, and three years later his innocence was more fully established by a confession of perjury from the chief witness against him. Mr. Wilberforce was not further annoyed until he fell again under the jurisdiction of the same British official.

Under these circumstances, the missionary feeling is that Mr. Wilberforce will be again vindicated. And while there is strong suspicion that the local British authorities at Bonthe may be prejudiced against the missionaries and their converts—perhaps subject to adverse Mohammedan influences also—full confidence is felt in the governor of the colony, and it is not believed that he will permit injustice to be done.

—William W. Borden, the Princeton Seminary graduate who is going out to China to found a large mission among the Mohammedans at his own expense, is now with Dr. Samuel Zwemer in Cairo studying Arabic in preparation for his work. Meanwhile, his mother at home is spiritually supporting him by conducting every Monday at 12 o'clock in her residence, 60 East 55th street, New York City, a meeting of prayer for the conversion of the Moslem world.

Board Notes and Announcements

—Mrs. Williamson of Calvary church, who led Friday morning, chose the subject "Prayer." Among those who led in prayer were Rev. C. H. Bandy of India, Mrs. Brown, mother of Mrs. Cleland McAfee; Mrs. Berry, Mrs. Coy and Mrs. Shaw. Miss Lamme of Persia told of the pleasure she had had in meeting in Fourth church Syrians whom she had known in Urumia, especially a mountaineer girl, a graduate of Fiske Seminary. Mrs. Bandy told an impressive story of her visit to a temple and of the appreciative high caste visitors to Fategarh school's exhibition, giving good reason for her belief that as ready access to high caste women as to low can be found for the gospel if enough missionaries can be found

NEW BOOKS

A Catholic View of Socialism

SOCIALISM FROM THE CHRISTIAN STANDPOINT, by Father Bernard Vaughan. This book would be more accurately named "Socialism from the Roman Catholic Standpoint," for Father Vaughan pays little heed to other forms of Christian faith. "I believe that Christianity exists in its fullness and integrity in the Roman Catholic Church, and it it alone," he says, though he is ready to praise the social action of those who are outside of its fold. The writer is a well-known Catholic priest in London, and was brought to this country in the spring of 1912 to give a series of addresses against socialism in New York City. He sets out to show that socialism is economically unsound, philosophically false and ethically wrong; "bad in theory, it would be even worse in practice." He will not admit such a thing as Christian socialism, reserving the name for that movement which condemns and despises Christianity. The so-called Christian socialists have "a feeble socialism and an eviscerated Christianity." The facts of social evil are frankly faced, but Christianity is considered a religion of the individual, "concerned first and foremost with man's (the individual's) redemption and sanctification." Socialism is charged with an overaccent on the present, and its practical difficulties are pointed out.

Readers of history will be interested in the writer's declaration about the relation of the papacy to human freedom. Cardinal Newman said that there is no one of those who speak bravely against the church today but owes it to the church that he can speak at all. Father Vaughan goes him one better in saying, "Catholicism, I tell you, is woven into the warp and woof of all our great democratic institutions, and it is the bishops of that church to whom democracy stands eternally indebted." Supporting such views, he quotes Augustine's reference to the church, as though it were to be applied to the Roman Catholic Church of today! It would be interesting to know what the missionaries from Chile, and all South America, would think of this declaration. There is grim humor in the fact that before Father Vaughan could publish his book he had to have three different consents from his religious superiors in this country! If he had not secured those consents he would probably have found that the Roman Church is not a democracy where a man has entire freedom to speak his own mind. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.50

Some Recent Fiction

ATLANTIS, by Gerhart Hauptmann; translated by Adele and Thomas Seltzer. It is a curious mixture of realism and romantic fantasy, this loudly heralded novel from the pen of the author of "The Sunken Bell" and "The Fool in Christ." The story is that of the dangerous period of unrest in the life of a scientist who has overshot his powers, been discredited and then fallen into the toils of a forbidden sexual passion. One can readily see the possibilities for compelling psychological analysis in such material. But Hauptmann evidently suffers from the disease of a divided mind. He is a realist, he is one of the great brotherhood of the disillusioned; yet, like his hero, his breast is not wholly occupied by one love but is the theater of a struggle. Realist though he be, he cannot banish the powers of fantasy from his breast. Much of the motivation for the course of Frederick von Kammacher is derived from the realm of dream—dream which encompasses his soul, brings it to the lost Atlantis where he converses with dead friends and is given revelation of the future. The mixture is incongruous. The dualism is not a logical one. Either the world is potentially divine or it isn't. If it were divine Hauptmann's characters would not be the characters they are. If it be not divine, let us not turn to lost Atlantis or newly found spooks. Let us work out our problems in fiction and in life in the world of nature as we find it. The reader of "Atlantis" may well question the one factor, the supernatural, without which Hauptmann seems unable to solve his problem. [B. W. Huebsch, New York. $1.50 net.

MARY PECHELL, by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes. Would you hold against a man a sin that he had committed in his youth and for which he had made all possible atonement? That is the question Mary Pechell had to decide. Her decision and the events that led up to it are told by Mrs. Lowndes in a way that discredits the statement that the days of romance and adventure are dead. [Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $1.30 net.

AN AMERICAN GIRL AT THE DURBAR, by Shelland Bradley, is a book of impressions only, and does not attempt to probe beneath the surface of things Indian. It is interesting to note, however, that the author brought away with her from the durbar a sense of the deep and abiding loyalty to the emperor-king of his Indian subjects. A simple plot gives the book its reason for being, and it is written in a vivacious and entertaining way, verging, however, on a forced sprightliness which soon becomes wearisome. An almost fatal defect is the absence of illustrations, which would have given a real value to a book which, lacking them, slips into a place among works of fiction rather than of travel. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.25 net.

Books for the Home

INCREASING HOME EFFICIENCY, by Martha Bensley Bruere and Robert W. Bruere. In these days when all housekeepers and home makers are interested in running their households efficiently, even scientifically, this book by Mr. and Mrs. Bruere will prove interesting and instructive. Perhaps we may not agree with all the ideas expressed—probably that is not expected; but the object of the book is to make one think. After finishing it the woman reader or her husband will wonder whether the individual home in which they are most concerned is being conducted on the lines of greatest possible efficiency. The book consists largely of intimate information, such as family budgets and financial secrets which Mr. and Mrs. Bruere obtained from mothers and fathers in all walks of life, accompanied by some illuminating comments by the authors. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.50 net.

A NEW BOOK OF COOKERY, by Fannie Merritt Farmer. Much in the form and spirit of the famous "Boston Cooking School Cookbook," by the same author, is this volume that will delight any housewife. The thirty-six chapters cover the whole range of cookery, giving the most explicit directions; and no fewer than 400 illustrations visualize the processes and products. As should be the case with every volume frequently to be consulted, the book is solidly bound; the print is clear, and the whole makeup is in excellent taste. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.50 net.

CONVERSATION: What to Say and How to Say It, by Mary Greer Conklin. No one will dispute the fact that people everywhere—people who ought to know better, and in many instances do know better—converse badly, yes, even atrociously. The author, who hails, naturally enough, from Boston, defines conversation historically and rhetorically; but the average reader will be more interested in the practical coaching contained in the book—for example: "What Should Guests Talk About at Dinner?" Mrs. Conklin points out certain bad conversational habits and suggests good ones, quoting Buckle's classic classification of talkers into three orders of intelligence—those who talk about nothing but persons, those who talk about things and those who discuss ideas. [Funk and Wagnalls Company, New York. 75 cents net.

Religion and Theology

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, by M. Scott Fletcher. Some knowledge of biblical psychology is necessary to an intelligent study of the Scriptures. The translation of the languages of the Bible into English does not of itself put the reader in possession of a clear understanding of the mental processes of the writers of the books, for many of the words they used had a psychological value different from that of the English words necessarily used to represent them. "Mind," "heart," "soul," "spirit," did not mean to them exactly what they mean to us. Mr. Fletcher makes a careful study of these and other terms used by the New Testament writers, with references to Old Testament usage by way of comparison, and also points out that these writers in some respects differ among themselves in their usage. Upon this elucidation he bases an explanation of religious experiences set forth in the New Testament, particularly that of Paul. In this section the chapters on "Spiritual Conditions of Entrance to the New Life" and "The Psychology of Repentance and Faith" are of special interest. The book closes with a comparative study of the Jewish, Greek and Christian conceptions of personality, and the relation of the Christian conception to modern theories. An elementary acquaintance with modern psychology will make the book easily intelligible, and it will be useful to minister and layman alike. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.50 net.

THE FRAGRANCE OF CHRISTIAN IDEALS, by Malcolm James McLeod, is a little book which might be easily overlooked in the rush of fall issues, but it would be a pity for anyone to miss, for example, the chapter on "The Family Altar." Those who know their own debt to prayer in the home will be grateful for this essay with its reminder that the decay of the family altar "is the greatest blow the church has yet received." These nine essays are full of beautiful thoughts happily expressed. Dr. McLeod is a real acquisition to the preaching force of New York City. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 50 cents net.

ESSAYS AND VERSES, by John Harrington Edwards. This little book, printed primarily for private circulation among the friends of the author, a retired Presbyterian minister living in Brooklyn, deserves a wider circulation. The most considerable essay in the book, dealing with "The First Home of the Huguenots in North America," is a paper of keen historical interest, and the next in importance, "The Vanishing Sense of Sin," grips closely one of the biggest moral problems of the age. [Published by the author.

OUTLINE STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF ROMANS, by Ward W. Adair. This very simple analysis of the epistle to the Romans, arranged by a clear-headed and experienced Bible teacher, contains neither comment nor illustration; but simply by reducing to orderly arrangement the themes and teaching of the book, it makes a plain pathway through a part of the Bible which laymen are disposed to regard as hard to read and hard to understand. [Association Press, New York. 25 cents.

THE MAN WITH THE PITCHER, by John F. Genung, purports to give the story of that friend at whose house our Lord partook of the last passover, instituting at its close the holy supper. Many incidents of our Saviour's life are ingeniously interwoven, but to some reverent students it will seem a doubtful way of teaching our Lord's life, mingling thus the evangelical history with the author's fancy. [T. Y. Crowell Company, New York. 50 cents.

Pentecostal Divinity School of Many Tongues

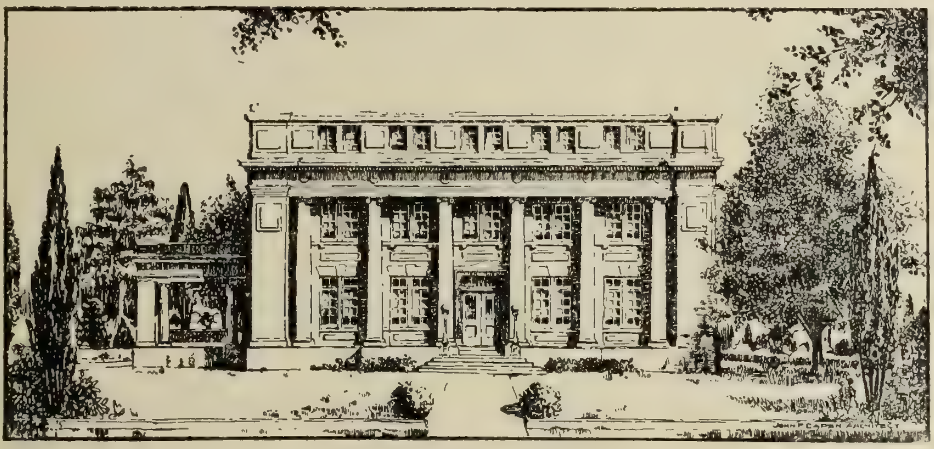
Bloomfield Seminary Inaugurates a Complete Polyglot College Curriculum and Enlarges Its Building Capacity by the Erection of Knox Hall

BY ARNOLD W. FISMER

BLOOMFIELD Seminary, hitherto known as the German Theological School of Newark, N. J., has had a small beginning. But its hopeful, fruitful growth is in proportion to its larger mission in the Master's kingdom.

Every generation has a God-imposed task to perform. Our honored fathers have fulfilled theirs in creating and founding our school, it becomes ours by enlarging it, and to enlarge it by making it stronger in accomplishing the purpose for which it was intended, and in solving the problem of the hour—a problem brought forcibly to the attention of the church by the great flood-tide of immigration of late years coming to our shores. Ten million men of many nations, led by the hand of Providence, have come within the zone and sunshine of American Christendom, and the American church owes the gospel to them.

Bloomfield Seminary has heard the call of the church for a suitable ministry for these peoples of foreign speech, and has answered it. True to the spirit of the founders of the institution organized to meet the demand for a German-speaking ministry for Germans in America, when new elements began to preponderate in more recent immigration, arrangements were speedily made to extend to young men of other races a similar practical fitting for the gospel ministry among their own people.



Knox Hall

Student Body of Many Races

Since the inauguration of the polyglot curriculum more than 100 students, representing twelve different nationalities, have come to Bloomfield from all parts of the globe. Many came from various American colleges and seminaries, while others came direct from colleges and universities in Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, Italy, Hungary, Dalmatia, Ruthenia, Syria, Monaco, Galicia, Moravia. Why did they come to Bloomfield? Because, with the single exception of Dubuque Seminary, which is so successfully carrying on a similar work, there were no other institutions in the country equipped for foreign work.

To send such candidates to our established American theological seminaries would put in peril the very object for which they are sent. The practical effect of the education of foreign-speaking young men by such seminaries has been to educate the student away from linguistic and social affinities with his own people, thus gaining the individual pastor but losing the flock.

In Bloomfield Seminary every student is taught in his own tongue wherein he was born, to enable him to preach in his own tongue when the time comes for him to go forth to his labors among his own people.

By having the students of each race room together and study together in separate classes under instructors of their own nationality, they are kept in sympathy with their own people, while at the same time a thorough English course for all makes ample provision for the development of American thought, feeling and speech, so as to enable the candidate in due time to preach to his own people in English.

Academy, College and Seminary

The Bloomfield school was providentially planned in a way to provide a course of studies adapted to the peculiar needs of these newcomers. As there are no academies or colleges in our land to fit foreign-speaking young men for the study of theology, the founders of our school had made timely provision for the present need by instituting what had been practically an academy, college and seminary, all three in one. This school, especially organized for foreign work, had but to extend its plan to include young men of other races. And, so far as the limited funds warranted, this was cheerfully done. A polyglot teaching force was promptly installed. Standard academy and college curricula were laid out, covering a period of nine years and leading to the degree of bachelor of arts. By an action of the legislature of the state of New Jersey in 1909 our school has received college standing, with power to grant academic and honorary degrees.

The polyglot scheme had its incipiency in the mind of the late President Charles E. Knox, who, eighteen years ago, had actually introduced this feature in connection with the regular curriculum. But owing partly to the straitened condition in which the institution found itself financially, and partly to the utter lack of appreciation on the part of the church generally of a forward movement so unique in character and scheme, Dr. Knox was compelled to abandon the project, which was to him a matter of real distress and disappointment. If Dr. Knox could but have endured the great burden of his life work a few years longer he would now be able fully to enjoy the realization of his prophetic vision, the fulfillment of his inspired hopes.

The polyglot departments planned and inaugurated by President Knox are now in successful operation and have become a strong adjunct of our seminary's work. The large accession of students and the new interest manifested by friends of education through their gifts attest the value of the new work and the wisdom of its inauguration. As soon as the character of the new work was made known there was a ready response in generous gifts and bequests amounting to over $145,000; so that the assets, including buildings and invested funds, approximate $245,521.

New Work Presents New Problems

A request has come to us that we establish also a Polish department. This we would gladly do, were the funds for the support of this extra work provided.

In compliance with numerous requests of patrons it is proposed to change the name of our school to that of "Bloomfield Theological Seminary." Elimination of the German name, however, is by no means to be taken as synonymous with elimination of German work. It was, fortunately, not necessary that the German alma mater should die in order that her polyglot daughters might be born. The time-honored German department shall continue as heretofore. It has, in fact, been strengthened by additional German instruction in the academy, and by a more careful selection of students more thoroughly grounded in German.

The old-time restriction pledging entering students on graduation to preach in their own foreign mother tongue, a requirement entailing upon many students a serious handicap, resulting in regrettable failures and desertions, has been duly removed.

The supreme need is more students of the right sort, spiritually minded, intellectually and temperamentally fitted for the task, their hearts filled with burning passion for souls, aflame with Christ-love for their fellow countrymen. Will not pastors seek out and by earnest prayer and labor raise up such young men and direct them to Bloomfield? With the erection of Knox Hall we will be ready to receive double our present number.

The endowment fund should advance with our growth. For immediate needs we should have at least $200,000 more. To secure this we need the heartiest support of friends of Christian education. The plea of those who in former years appealed for funds was, "Give to save the institution from extinction." The plea now is, "Give to save the institution from the embarrassment of its own remarkable success." While older seminaries in the church are receiving hundreds of thousands of dollars, shall this child of the church be forgotten? We hope not! We believe that it shall be given to us, because the Father knows we need it. He will in due time cause some of God's stewards to see here a signal opportunity for a worthy memorial to the Redeemer's glory.

A Memorial to Dr. Knox

It will be just eighteen years in March since Dr. Knox published an urgent appeal emphasizing the special needs of that time. Here are his ipsissima verba: "We should have another building at once. Students from the other nations will increase in number as we make provision for them. An Italian house and an Italian instructor would attract a house full of Italian young men. We can now greatly enlarge our power among the foreign people. Soon these foreign people will come again across the seas in great numbers. At the hour when our national prosperity returns the tide will flood. Will not Christian men and women give us the needed building and appliances? Here is a fine opportunity for a memorial."

This pathetic appeal proved to be a prophecy indeed, and it is now being fulfilled in every particular. Our national prosperity has returned. The flood-tide of immigration has come. We have a house full of Italian, Hungarian and other students under able instructors of their own nationality. And the house is in sight. The fine opportunity for a memorial is at hand. The $70,000 building fund is secured. The foundation of the new building will be laid in March next, and it is to be known as Knox Hall in loving remembrance and grateful recognition of the faithful services of the first president, who for thirty years had borne the burden of Bloomfield Seminary on his good, great heart.

The Open Hearth

A Plea for Ministerial Relief

As a church we have reasons for gratitude in view of the outlook for enlarged results of the federated agencies of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation.

The wisdom, perseverance and splendid results of the honored brethren who have achieved so much for this board are but a prophecy of still enlarged helpfulness for the aged "members of the household of faith," who have stood heroically at their posts of duty, valiant soldiers of the cross, until the twilight of human life has settled down upon them.

The large vision of the General Assembly asking for an endowment of $10,000,000 is not larger than the ability of our beloved church to meet—an obligation that becomes a matter of honor as well as duty. No better investment, with assurance of large dividends, is available to those whom God has blessed with this world's goods or the ability to accumulate. We feel such a worthy cause will not be overlooked or delayed when it is well known that 225 ministers on the honor roll, with an average of 78 years of age, are reciving but $342 a year, and 650 handmaids of the church but an average of $175.

While we look to the so-called well-to-do for the larger gifts, the obligation rests on all alike as the Lord has prospered, even to the widow's mite. When we consider the numerical strength of our church of 9,000 ministers on the roll, 40,000 elders and 1,400,000 communicants, with faith in the justice of this noble cause, we will not doubt but that the high mark held out by the efficient members of this board will be reached.

The president of this board in a recent article stated what could be done to further this cause by pastor, elder and member, to which let me add a word on what can be done by those of us who are chairmen of the board in each presbytery. We can keep in close touch with Dr. W. H. Foulkes, the corresponding secretary, and see that all printed matter issued by this board is placed in the hands of every pastor, especially the recently issued pamphlet on the "Ten Million Fund," urging that such matter be freely distributed among the people; make the appeal clear and emphatic; send personal letters to all from whom we may have a reasonable hope for special gifts and use our best offices to induce the brethren to take out a policy in the sustentation. When the desired financial goal is reached the home missionary pastor will be greatly relieved of the anxiety that now must come for himself and loved ones as he nears the eventide of human activities.

J. M. Bain.

An Overture Unfair and Unwise

The overture on the reduction of the size of the Assembly by a change of basis of representation from twenty-four to forty is now before the presbyteries. A negative answer was given by Pittsburg Presbytery not because anyone was unfavorable to reduction but because the plan proposed was seen to be unfair, unwise and ineffective.

The plan is unfair, because only ninety-four presbyteries have a membership of thirty-six and over, and it proposes to cut down the representation of this one-fourth of the presbyteries and leave the other three-fourths (298) unchanged. The inequality and the unfairness become even more apparent when it is seen by an exact count that half of the presbyteries have now and will continue to have an average of two representatives to every fifteen ministers, while the other half will have only two to forty. In the first half a minister may be sent to the Assembly every ten or fifteen years. In the second he will be fortunate to be chosen once in a lifetime. This surely is not fair to all. It is not equable representation.

The plan is unwise because the reduction will be made entirely from the larger presbyteries from which come most of the "sinews of war." Only twenty presbyteries will be entitled to more than one ministerial delegate. The larger presbyteries are required from their circumstances to represent diversified interests. Together with the care of their churches, they have many city problems and the support of missions at home and abroad, the support and general interests of the colleges, and especially of the theological seminaries and the general work of the church.

The plan is ineffective because it does not make a sufficient reduction, and because it cannot be applied to a further reduction which the growth of the church will soon require; and further it does not involve a reduction of the permanent and special committee and other needed reforms. The Assembly now has, with committees and officers, about 900 members. If the proposed reduction is made, it will still have 650 delegates and, with officers and others, more than 700 members. This is still too large for a deliberative body. Matters will still be prepared by special committees and then pushed through by speakers prepared, or set aside by some impulsive outburst. The overtures on union churches sent down by the last Assembly are examples of unwise and inconsiderate action. The purpose was good, but the plan was crude and unpractical. A more deliberative Assembly would not have made that mistake.

The growth of the church and the coming union with other churches will soon require a reduction on a more effective plan. It would be wise to vote down the plan before us and take up one which must sooner or later be adopted. Synodical representation, with the provision that the number to be chosen be distributed systematically by the synod to the presbyteries for election, is the most equitable system.

J. S. Axtell.

Authority Wrongly Assumed

Presbyterians do not believe in the office of "bishop" as implying authority of one minister over another. Men are sometimes called to oversee the work in fields that are "dependent," or which draw their support, in part, from mission funds. Appointment to such position does not give these men authority over ministers or churches where the church is self-supporting. However, ministers and the self-supporting churches are sometimes harassed by the dictation of those who have assumed authority. Discontented persons in churches sometimes go to these officials with complaints. They then return to the churches with which they are identified and announce that they have the backing of the presbytery. Such moves are a positive hindrance to the real work of the church. The pastor is discouraged, the other workers in the church find that their efforts are hindered, the spiritual life in the church wanes, and the community looks with marked disfavor on the church court which will contribute in such manner to the crippling of the work of one of its own branches.

Criticism of this kind has come from so many churches in so many presbyteries that it is time to "speak out in meeting." Ministers have already left the active work of the ministry just because they will not endure the humiliation of such treatment. Presbyteries must speedily put a check on this assumption of power, or the church will suffer far more than it has done.

Pastor.

"Are There Texts Enough?"

I am prompted by your editorial on the above subject to say a few things about texts and preaching.

A preacher is not a text treater. I know of no text that needs treatment. Men and women, boys and girls, are a great need, an unlimited want. The Bible is the divinely appointed cure for needs and wants. A parallel in the medical world to that of a text treater would be a doctor who treated his quinine and potassium rather than his patient. After diagnosis comes the choice of medicine (a text). Let the pastor study the needs of his people and he then needs a text and is prepared to choose one—a Scripture capsule containing the specific for the discovered need. Bible reading and textual study will help the preacher to know his people. A sermon that does not meet a need of the people has no legal origin and no right to be either preached or heard.

A Chicago editor asked a ministerial acquaintance, "What are you doing?" "I am trying to preach the gospel," answered the minister. "Glad to hear it," said the editor; "many ministers are not." Then he illustrated as follows: "I noticed that a certain young woman in our employ was not going to church and I mentioned the matter to her. 'Well,' said she, 'I went to church a few Sabbaths ago feeling that I needed the help and encouragement that we expect to get at church. The minister took his text and announced his theme "The Harmony Between Science and the Bible." I haven't gone back since. There was nothing there to help me.'"

Had that pastor known more of his people's needs, their heartaches, their sorrows, their hopes and disappointments, the text and theme of the sermon that morning would have been different.

Sometimes texts chosen simply for the sake of themselves serve only as milestones to show the distance between the pastor and his flock. The preacher is under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to prescribe the contents of a text, the word, for the cure of a known want or need.

Charles L. Work.

Not All Women for Temperance

In The Continent Jan. 2 J. Q. A. Campbell in a letter on "The Pulpit and Suffrage" refers to the recent defeat of woman's suffrage in Ohio. He claims the church was against the movement, and he implies this was sinful, and he quotes Scripture which he thinks proves it. He seems to feel perfectly certain that if women could vote all vice would be done away and intemperance would be a thing of the past. I wonder if it ever occurred to him that not all women are in favor of temperance?

There was a mighty effort last fall to make Colorado a dry state, and the Christian people worked hard to win. They failed. Why? The newspapers and the liquor men claimed that it was the woman's vote, and the rest of us believe it. One way in which the forces for evil worked was to station at or near the polls women of such character that self-respecting women stayed away, excepting such as felt impelled by a strong sense of duty.

Other instances might be cited to prove that the ballot in woman's hand is not an instrument for good alone. In this same issue of Jan. 2 P. W. Snyder bids us rejoice over defeated saloons in Oakmont and McKeesport, Pa., where there is no woman's vote. Woman's influence, without the ballot, goes farther than with it, and is very much safer.

S. McN. G.

No Substitute for the Man

I have greatly enjoyed sitting about the Open Hearth during these winter months and "communing with the saints." There have been a multitude of topics discussed, ranging from whether a minister should smoke to Jonah and "the great fish." It is very delightful to meditate upon these ethical and theological questions. Many of them have some practical relation to the duties and responsibilities of the modern parish. It is well to read and to think about all the latest and wisest methods of managing a parish. However, in reading so much about various remedies proposed for the present-day ills of the ministry and the church, one is tempted to ask, "Is there any substitute for a man?" No doubt the remedies for long pastorates and the antidotes for short pastorates are all good when properly administered, but after all it is the man that counts. As Dr. Jowett so finely says, "You can exhaust a horse by too much harness. You can put upon him so many trappings that he has no margin of strength for real and useful service."

Telephones, postal cards, printed bulletins and the like are helpful auxiliaries, but they cannot take the place of a man. We are a great believer in printer's ink as a useful helper, but a ministry of printer's ink alone will never crowd the pews or fill the contribution plate for benevolences. There is no substitute for the man. It has been found that ministers of large and important churches have great difficulty in transferring even a small portion of their labors to assistants, because of the peculiar personal character of their work. Only those ministers who can delegate the impersonal routine to others, and keep within their own grasp the heart of their ministry, become and remain great. The real product of the ministry is not of a nature to be put up in packages and delivered by others; in every department of church work it is the man that counts! The man in the pulpit, the man in the home, the man in the sorrow and the man in the joy—not alone the message but the man who brings the message. The work is unique. It is not comparable to other occupations. The true ministry is a message from God incarnate in a man as truly today as it was 1,900 years ago.

Frank R. Zugg.

Ways of Working

To Make the Prayer Meeting Alive

A little request by a contributor to The Open Hearth several weeks ago asking suggestions regarding the prayer meeting brought forth a number of interesting replies from pastors and laymen who have participated in meetings which distinctly stimulated the interest of attendants. It has been suggested that even a change in the location of the chairs in the room often serves the purpose of introducing a variety in the meetings which will show people that they need not expect the same stereotyped form at each service.

From Philadelphia comes a suggestion of a plan which has been found successful in a New York congregation. The first fifteen minutes is spent in social greeting. The meeting opens in the usual way with reading of the Scripture, prayer and hymns. Then four men who have been assigned subjects occupy not more than six minutes each pressing home one clear cut point. It is understood that no one is to be called upon without previous notice, although there is time for voluntary prayer or remarks. Men are attracted to this service who formerly have not attended through fear of being called upon.

At First church, Gloversville, N. Y., a plan has been used by a tactful pastor. He believed that if people did not attend a meeting on which he spent much earnest preparation he was entitled to know the reason, in order that the next meeting might be more attractive. He accordingly circulated a card which read: "With a desire to increase the attendance and effectiveness of our Wednesday evening prayer service the pastor would urge you to answer the questions below. Individual replies will in every instance be regarded as strictly confidential, but the pastor reserves the privilege of using the information as a basis of remark." The member was asked to tell why he didn't habitually attend the meeting and what features he regarded most helpful and how the meetings could be improved.

Enthusiastic Welcome in Cleveland

The man who first suggested the Presbyterian Brotherhood organization—Dr. R. R. Bigger—is pastor of Westminster church in Cleveland now, and his brotherhood enthusiasm has not a whit abated. The brotherhood, with its social, athletic, musical, educational and spiritual phases, is a live proposition in Dr. Bigger's congregation. It believes in advertising and is not bound by conventionalities in that line. The invitations of the brotherhood distributed to men outside carry a graphic, if not artistic, sketch showing an eager bunch of men crowding around a newcomer with hands outstretched, and the air is filled with such greetings as these: "Delighted to see you!" "Shake, old man!" "Welcome!" "Let's shake!" "My turn next!" "Glad to see you!" "Me next!" "You are the fellow we want" and "You are one of us now!"

Good Use of Continent Ideas

An example of the way one of the good things in The Continent was used by a live pastor is shown in the cantata given by First church, Tahlequah, Okla., at Christmas, "The Return of the Christmas Missionaries." It was written by the pastor, Rev. G. S. Sutton, and is a sequel to the one printed in The Continent over a year ago written for this paper by Dr. W. C. Covert of Chicago.

Boys Make Things After School

In the basement of Westminster church, Auburn, N. Y., Rev. Leon A. Losey has had fitted up a number of rooms for the use of the boys of the church every afternoon after school. There is a modest equipment for rooms devoted to printing, typewriting, telegraphy and carpentering. There are also a shoe cobbling outfit and tools for caning chairs. About thirty boys every day enjoy themselves here.

University Workers to Confer

The conference of church workers in state universities meets in Lawrence, Kan., Feb. 4-6. Among the prominent speakers are Chancellor Strong of the University of Kansas, Bishop F. I. McConnell of the M. E. Church, Bishop F. S. Spalding of Utah, Episcopal Church; Dr. A. Holmes, vice-president of Pennsylvania State College; C. D. Hurrey of the international Y. M. C. A., Henry F. Cope of the Religious Education Association, Dr. R. C. Hughes of the Presbyterian Church.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 112)

"I know people do not talk about it," was the answer. "But there are two persons who have not forgotten it, and will not."

"Who?"

"You and Mr. Elmore."

"Humph!" was Horton's only reply, but the silence that followed was eloquent. Horton spoke at last, but not apparently about the Drum matter.

"I'm dead broke, Austin. My capital last September was a half dollar, but though I've made money this year, I haven't a half cent now."

"You don't seem to be worrying much."

"Well, what's the use? If God chooses to have me penniless why should I worry? I can't say I enjoyed paying my father's expenses, but God probably gave me the money for that purpose. Perhaps he wanted to see if I was man enough to meet the demand."

"Do you think God was interested enough in the old fellow to provide a way to get him buried and the bills paid?"

"Absolutely. Have you forgotten about that sparrow that cannot fall?"

"How much did all that cost you, Brad?"

"Seven hundred and fifty."

"You don't mean it? Did you have it?"

"Not all. But I've made it since. That last day at St. Batholomew's helped me out."

"I wish I had your dogged pluck, Horton."

"Impossible, unless you're from the same quarry. Our stock was English. No fiber in the world more tough than that." After another interval of silence he continued: "Austin, this matter of a divine call is the most tremendous thing in the world. Since last September I've had call after call to honest independence."

"Do you think your stubbornness about the Drum episode was one of God's calls?" The organist laughed as he asked the question.

"Stop joking, Austin. God called me to resent insult, and I obeyed. Now he is calling me to know the worth of poverty. See that star yonder. He made it. Think of it! He who holds it there keeps it swinging æon after æon, never a hand's breadth out of place, never a second out of time, and he finds leisure to think of me and say, 'Son, I want your last penny.'"

Sleighton did not answer at once. At last he said, "You are a better man than I am, Bradford; a better man. God will call you to something besides poverty by and by," and rising abruptly he went to his room.

Bradford sat on the steps yet a few moments ere he, too, went to his evening's work. On his table lay a letter which he saw was from Samuel Maxwell. It suggested that if Mr. Horton would call at the bank at his convenience it would be gratifying to the writer. Bradford replied declining the call, pleading his engagements preparatory to the spring examinations.

But the cashier was not a man to be put off by what he knew was a conventional answer. In a fortnight Horton received another letter, more urgent than the first, naming a definite time for the call. Bradford's reply was again a refusal, so written, he thought, as to end the matter. But he was mistaken.

One morning the cashier appeared at Bradford's door and asked him to go for a drive. Horton saw positive advantage in this and accepted. Maxwell went straight to his business.

"I want you back in the bank, Mr. Horton."

"That is gratifying. Men like me enjoy being wanted."

"Wouldn't you like to take the books for us once more?"

"Yes, I would."

"All right. The seminary will close in about four weeks, and you will have four months

Renouncing the Ministry

[Editorial from The Philadelphia Evening Telegraph]

A clergyman enters upon more than a one-sided obligation when he is ordained. He enters into a mutual contract with the church that deprives him from any other gainful pursuit, and puts him absolutely on the charity of the church, and at its mercy. Every honest parson earns his pitiful dole twice over, but few ever realize on their deserts. Many a parsonage is an altar of sacrifice, and many a parson is a victim. The breaking of the church's part of its solemn ordination covenant ought to be sufficient grounds for releasing a clergyman from his side of it.

The church is weak today because it is inefficient. It is inefficient because it does not believe in its mission sufficiently to pay for a propaganda along such lines as every other successful living organization has found necessary—a well paid executive force. Personal and family obligations must take precedence over all other secondary ones. And those clergymen who prefer self-respect and honesty, and are driven out of the church to find them in secular pursuits, are the very executives the church can least afford to lose. The church, if forced to let them go, should bow her head in shame, and either do her duty by them or let them depart in peace, and with her blessing.

Is it true?
Is it half true?
What can the church do?
It can adequately provide for its aged and disabled ministers, their widows and orphans, and thus fully meet this criticism of the world.
If you care to help, consult your pastor, or write to vacation. Now for those four months I'll give you $400 to keep our books."

MINISTERIAL RELIEF AND SUSTENTATION
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Does Mr. Elmore know about this?"

"No. He leaves such things to me, but, of course, I shall tell him you are coming. He will be pleased. He values your services highly."

"My services? Yes, as he would those of a wheelbarrow! But a wheelbarrow and its services are utterly separate, and I and mine cannot be separated."

"But Mr. Elmore makes no separation between you and your services. He knows, of course, the handicap under which you are compelled to live here, but that is nothing against you."

"Please drive me back to the seminary, Mr. Maxwell."

The suddenness of the request startled Maxwell. "Are you ill?" he asked.

"Yes, ill at ease. You have made me so. Handicapped? I under a handicap? I understand. Please drive me back to the seminary."

"Don't be offended, Mr. Horton. I meant no offense."

"But I am offended, sir. In the most matter-of-fact way you call in question my integrity. I came here saying I was Bradford Horton. I am. If I am not, I am an impostor and my integrity is gone. Your president believes, as I bitterly feel, that I am an impostor, and he sows the seeds of that belief broadcast. They have taken root in your mind. I work for a man, or an institution, that would take from me both my name and my integrity? Never!"

"But the testimony of Andrew Drum——"

"Was perjury. So said the magistrate. Please drive me back to the seminary."

"So you refuse to work for the bank on account of Mr. Elmore's attitude?" As he spoke, Maxwell turned the horses.

"Yes, sir; his and yours."

In silence they finished the drive. The older man glanced sidewise from time to time at the open face of his companion, clear cut and highbred even under its cloud of anger. The conviction was growing in his liberal mind that it was impossible to disbelieve a man whose character and bearing were such evident proofs of his truthfulness. He must hold his own opinions, regardless of Mr. Elmore.

As Horton stepped from the carriage Maxwell offered his hand. "Mr. Horton, I'm glad we've had this drive. It has cleared the air for me. I believe you. You are transparently honest. May I tell Mr. Elmore about this?"

"Yes. It will do no good, nor any harm, that I can see."

"Good-by, Mr. Horton. I hope this will work out right by and by."

"Good-by."

As Maxwell drove away he thought, "He's poor and proud and plucky, and he's honest, too. I must make Mr. Elmore see it." He stopped his horses in front of the drug store and asked that Mr. Jickers come out for a moment.

"Joe, I've a job for you. Get your 'new type' friend to take the books at the bank this summer."

"Get him yourself, your honor."

"I can't. I've tried."

"Your honor, counsel can't. No one can get him by a mandamus."

"Joe, stop your nonsense. I want Horton in the bank."

"Since when did your honor substitute Horton for Drum in your honor's vocabulary?"

Maxwell told the story of the drive, and ended, "Joe, I want that man. Will you try to get him?"

"Yes, I'll try. But don't pay him for his work before he does it, your honor."

"Behave yourself, Joe. I'm in dead earnest. He's offended at Mr. Elmore. For some reason Mr. Elmore is all out with him. Sometimes I think it's because he's afraid Horton will make love to Eleanor. I want you to try to get those two men together."

"All right, Sam. I'll see Horton, but you must see the president."

"All right." (To be continued)

A GOOD BREAKFAST

Some Persons Never Know What It Means

A good breakfast, a good appetite and good digestion mean everything to the man, woman or child who has anything to do, and wants to get a good start toward doing it.

A Missouri man tells of his wife's "good breakfast," and also supper, made out of Grape-Nuts and cream. He says:

"I should like to tell you how much good Grape-Nuts has done for my wife. After being in poor health for the last eighteen years (during part of the time scarcely anything would stay on her stomach long enough to nourish her), finally at the suggestion of a friend she tried Grape-Nuts.

"Now, after about four weeks on this delicious and nutritious food, she has picked up most wonderfully and seems as well as anyone can be.

"Every morning she makes a good breakfast on Grape-Nuts, eaten just as it comes from the package, with cream or milk added; and then again the same at supper, and the change in her is wonderful.

"We can't speak too highly of Grape-Nuts as a food after our remarkable experience." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

Are You Doing Your Part?

(Continued from page 113)

Possibly—nay, probably—if the indifferent ones were paying tuition their children would come as regularly as they go to day school, and a higher value would be put upon the instruction itself.

It is a case of mixed up valuations. The careless ones forget that the Sunday school is not educating brains and hands for the business of a few brief years, but educating souls and directing wills for the unnumbered years of forever. The little affairs of now, like motes in the eye, have loomed large and obscured the great objects on life's horizon.

I don't mean to scold or to complain. And I sincerely hope not a single teacher will read this and be led to realize the inequality of things, the personal injustice. But I would cry aloud to waken the sleeping parents of our Sunday school children:

"Give us your help! We sorely need it! But if you can't spare that, please give us your encouragement, an occasional 'godspeed'!"

Such cooperation would be oil on the wheels when the load is heavy and the bearers are "weary in well doing." Suppose you put yourself in their place and see if you would enjoy sacrificing yourself year after year for other people's children, with never a thank you.

Just a little cheering, just a little approval when it can be justly given, just a little sharing of the load would do wonders. Do you know it?

I am well acquainted with hundreds of the whole-souled unselfish people who, in all our churches, are patiently persevering; and I know they would work like beavers—under encouragement.

Oh, parents, can't you see it? You are robbing yourselves and your children, clouding over your own sky, and by so doing, hindering the growth of souls—the soul of the teacher, which needs to develop and broaden, and the soul of your child, which needs better instruction.

If your Sunday school is not what it ought to be, you can do much to make it better by encouraging the good there is there. If you won't put on the harness and help pull, you can steady the load and push from behind.

Why Larry May Become President

(Continued from page 114)

there is never any doubt at all about the "amen." That is clear and loud and emphatic.

Larry is learning, too, to be a little gentleman at the table, and to pass on the cups of soup or milk, if he sits near the nurse at the head of the table who fills the cups, to the little boys and girls beyond, before himself beginning to eat. And though at dinner there is always fruit, or bread and jelly, or some other treat on the table for dessert, Larry never jerks himself and says, "Ya-a-a! I don't want my soup! I want bread and jelly!" And trademark worth $1,600,000

A
a letter

Those in a position to know what they are talking about say that the trademark name "Royal," owned by the Royal Baking Powder Company, is worth $8,000,000.

If some tremendous catastrophe should utterly destroy all the other properties and assets of the company, all it would have to do would be to scurry around and provide new means for turning out the baking powder—which would be easy enough.

The value of the trademark would not be impaired one penny's worth. Have you a trademark? Are you advertising it?

THE ADVERTISING
MANAGER

To Churches Considering New Hymnals

Don't decide until you have seen the new

Hymns of the Centuries

(Church ana Chapel Editions)

Includes the hymns which ought to be there and omits those that no one wants to use.
Representative churches in twenty-six states already using it.

Words printed with the music

SEND TODAY FOR RETURNABLE COPIES

THE A. S. BARNES COMPANY
Publishers of Hymn Books since 1855
381 Fourth Avenue (27th St.), New York

Ask The Teacher Who Uses

TARBELL'S

TEACHERS' GUIDE, 1913

By MARTHA TARBELL, PH.D.

Primary Teachers, Junior, Intermediate and Senior Teachers and Bible Class Teachers always find their needs more than met. Senior students, Members of the Home Department, Workers in Young People's Societies, find the book invaluable.

"It is exceedingly wise in its adaptation to the various grades." Bishop John H. Vincent.

Nearly 500 pp. Illustrated, 8vo, cloth, $1.00 net; postpaid $1.15

F. H. REVELL CO., New York, 158 Fifth Avenue
Chicago, 125 N. Wabash Ave.

CHURCH MONEY

Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their

OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER

This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.

Write us at once for information and prices.

THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., CHICAGO

THE AMERICAN HYMNAL

Just off the press

A MODERN BOOK FOR THE MODERN CHURCH

Contains the important familiar hymns with their associated tunes, and is rich in hymns that emphasize the present thought and action of the day.

726 Hymns, Chants, and Responses, with modern aids to worship. Responsive Readings from the American Revised or the King James Version of the Bible.

Send for sample copies

THE CENTURY CO.
UNION SQUARE, NORTH NEW YORK

he never reaches out and tries to snatch it. No, Larry has learned that he must eat his soup first, one cup, two, three, just as much as he wants; and that only then can he have the coveted goody.

Sometimes a new baby comes to stay at the nursery, and then Larry and the others all take a hand in showing him the way they do things. The little stranger seems to take kindly to that sort of teaching.

Larry has three meals each day at the nursery—bread and milk morning and night, and dinner at noon. After dinner his soupy bib is taken off and he is washed and put to bed for a three hours' nap. He is too big for the "silence" room now, and has for his very own one of the little cribs in the big room where the other children nap. Here, too, he has his own nice little white pillow and sheets, and his blue and white blanket. The shades are drawn down to shut out the dancing sunbeams that might keep open sleepy eyes, and almost before you can say "Jack Robinson" seventeen or more little heads—red heads, white heads, yellow heads, black heads, brown heads—are quiet on seventeen little pillows, seventeen pairs of eyes are tight shut and seventeen nursery babies have drifted away to the Land of Dreams.

After Larry wakens he is made tidy for his tea; that over, he plays games with the other babies. You would be quite astonished to see how well Larry can play "Bean Porridge Hot" and "Thumbkins Says 'I'll Dance,'" and other games with music and motion, and how like a little soldier he can march. Then he amuses himself with toys—chief loved of which is a yellow wooden duck, with the wheels off, that he pulls about by a string—till his mother comes to take him home.

Larry likes to go home now even less than he did on that first day. Sometimes he cries when his mother takes off his nursery dress, striped blue and white now he is older, and gets him into his own things. Sometimes, I regret to say, he even screams; and now when he screams it is no longer a case of "tummy" but of disposition. Larry never screams, however, except at going home time.

There is just one day in the week that Larry doesn't like, and that is Sunday, when the nursery is closed. He is lonely then without the other little folks, and he misses the gentle care to which he is accustomed, and the food that agrees with him, and his own comfy crib. He also misses the sunbeams, and the very happiest day of all the week for Larry is Monday, the day that sees him back once more in the sunny nursery.

For all this tender, loving care of him Larry's mother pays 10 cents a day when she is able. When she is not able it is a free gift.

When Larry is 3 he will be promoted to the kindergarten department of the nursery. When he leaves that, at 6, to go to the public school, he will be a very well grounded little boy in health and manners and knowledge.

Because he has such a very good beginning, Larry may grow up to be President. Who knows? Some day he may come back from the White House to visit Mary Crane nursery with a little Larry of his own. I shouldn't be at all surprised if he did. And he will perhaps say to that other small Larry:

"This is the place, little son, that helped your father to be President and, better still, to be a man."

If he is man enough to be made President, I believe he will say it. Don't you?

Polytechnic Church for Students

The Eaton brothers, Lewis and Ernest, are developing the Billings Polytechnic Institute at Billings, Mont. The citizens of Billings gave sixty acres of land, and James J. Hill gave $25,000 to buy and stock 100 additional acres. The students, working in orchard, dairy, poultry yard and grain fields, were so diligent and so successful that they rewarded Mr. Hill's interest in them by taking a prize which he offered for the best farm and exhibit in eastern Montana. The institution is organized as an independent republic, and the students make the laws of "the Polytechnic state." The "Polytechnic church" is an undenominational organization, to which nearly all the students belong, and it is conducted with a strong evangelistic spirit. The school is now able to accommodate only 100 students. Its opportunities can be open to another hundred for every $50,000 invested.

The Latest Word on the Subject

The Deacon and His Office By HARRY PRINGLE FORD
10 cents net, postpaid
EVERY PASTOR should see to it that EVERY DEACON in his church has a copy of this complete manual

Address to Young Converts By ARTHUR J. BROWN, D.D.
5 cents net, postpaid $2.00 per 100 net, $2.36 by mail
Just what a pastor needs to present to those seeking membership in the church on profession of faith

Coming to the Communion By CHARLES R. ERDMAN, D.D.
Paper, 15 cents net, postpaid Boards, 25 cents net, postpaid
Outline studies of the great truths which should be presented to those who are about to partake of "the supper of the Lord"

Meaning and Form of Water Baptism By REV. HENRY V. CLARK
15 cents net, postpaid
A Bible Reading. Many will welcome this study in the Scriptural foundation of our position in regard to Baptism

Home Training in Religion By A. H. McKINNEY, PH.D.
10 cents, postpaid
Suggestions for parents in the religious instruction and training of children

Presbyterian Handbook for 1913
Single copy, 5 cents, postpaid 10 copies, 25 cents, postpaid
In quantities, $2.00 per 100, carriage paid
A treasury of information indispensable to Presbyterians

THE PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION
Headquarters: PHILADELPHIA, Witherspoon Building
New York, 156 Fifth Ave.
Chicago, 509 S. Wabash Ave.
St. Louis, 505 N. Seventh St.
San Francisco, 400 Sutter St.
Nashville, 415 Church St.
Pittsburgh, 204 Fulton Bldg.
Cincinnati, 420 Elm St.

Moral and Religious Forces Unite

St. Louis Men's Clubs and Other Organizations Federate for Good Citizenship — Dr. Mauze Heads Commission on Morals.

ST. LOUIS—A federation of the men's clubs of the moral and religious organizations of St. Louis was formed Jan. 16. Its purpose is to unite the moral and religious forces of the city in a nonpartisan organization for the promotion of civic patriotism and education in good citizenship. Thirty-one churches were represented, eight of them Presbyterian—First, King's Highway, North-Covenant, Lee Avenue, Oak Hill, Tyler Place, Curby and Markham Memorial. The motto of the new federation is given in the words of George Washington: "Let us erect a standard to which the good and honest may repair."

Miss Maud Maxwell, who has been a worker in Markham Institutional church for the last five years, has entered the Presbyterian Training School in Baltimore to complete her studies. Three workers have recently been added to the Markham staff. Miss Agnes E. Hornicek, the Slavic missionary, has been stationed by the St. Louis Presbyterial Missionary Society at Third Street branch; Miss Bertha Engelder of Wellsville, N. Y., daughter of a German pastor and a college graduate, is church visitor, and Miss Ella J. Nollau, daughter of the late Rev. Louis G. Nollau of St. Marcus' church, has been engaged for special musical work in Third Street branch.

The executive committee of the joint commission on public morals, which represents the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish societies of St. Louis, with thirty medical and charitable or philanthropic associations, has selected Dr. J. Layton Mauze, pastor of Central Presbyterian church, as chairman to succeed Rev. M. H. Lichliter, who goes to Baltimore Feb. 1.

The January conference of East end workers in Presbyterian churches, missions and schools was held Jan. 8 at the Boyle Memorial center. Rev. E. V. Ghidoni, pastor of the Italian congregation meeting at Niedringhaus mission, Rev. G. W. King, Rev. W. Clyde Smith and S. J. Niccolls, D. D., took part in the program.

North-Covenant church has issued an elaborate manual giving the history of the church and details of its work. Rev. Williamson Dunn Vater is pastor. The church was formed in 1911 by the union of the North and the Covenant congregations. It is proposed to raise $25,000 to complete the building at St. Louis and Warne avenues.

GEORGE W. KING.

The Modern
Individual Communion Service
Made by Reed & Barton, has many advantages over the old style. Ask us for illustrations.

REED & BARTON, Silversmiths
Established 1824 Represented at TAUNTON, MASS.
Fifth Avenue and 32nd Street 4 Maiden Lane
New York

CHAUTAUQUA ORIENTAL TOURS

Sailing Jan. 21, Jan. 30 and Feb. 18, 1913. The finest obtainable throughout. Special Comfort Tour, EGYPT and PALESTINE, May 10, $470; Four Sunday School Convention Tours; Fifteen Tours to Europe, Norway and Russia.

The Chautauqua Tours (Inc.)
Marquette Building Chicago, Ill.

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments
Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings
COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.
Will Send BOOKLET on Receipt of Six Cents Postage

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

Will Help Evangelize New York

Open Air Service Urged on Pastors–Presbytery Holds Important Meeting — Boards Get Bequests of Former Preacher.

NEW YORK—Rev. William T. Elsing, chairman of presbytery's evangelistic committee, presented a report at the meeting of presbytery Jan. 13 which was adopted, recommending that an approved Presbyterian evangelist be engaged, provided the salary can be underwritten, to labor in the Bronx. The committee urged on all pastors the great importance of holding open air services and recommended that a circular with return stamped envelope be sent by pastors to all church members asking for a list of unchurched families, with addresses, especially those near the church.

The session of presbytery was the first "open" meeting for almost a score of years. Doctors Jesse F. Forbes, stated clerk, and Dr. James H. Hoadley, permanent clerk, were reelected. Rev. Albert Dale Gantz of Williamsbridge church was elected as temporary clerk to take the place of Dr. John C. Palmer, now of Washington, D. C.

Will Organize a New Church

Dr. Anthony H. Evans and Dr. Anson P. Atterbury, copastors of West-Park church, have received permission to organize sixty persons into a new church on Washington Heights. Plans have been adopted for building a church.

Dr. David G. Wylie, chairman of the Sabbath school committee, in reporting to presbytery told of canvassing several neighborhoods with the desire to establish Sunday schools, but of the failure to do so because rent was so high. The committee in each case turned the cards of the canvassers over to the pastor of the nearest Presbyterian church. The chairman deeply regretted that the Sunday schools were falling off, but in the case of his own church he said a canvass had been made which showed the parish was one-half Roman Catholic, one-fourth Hebrew and much of the other fourth Christian Scientist. In one apartment house he said there were six Presbyterians and sixty-four Jews.

Brick church has started the publication of a monthly magazine, The Brick Church Record. The first issue contains the Christmas sermon of Dr. William P. Merrill, pastor; a letter from George Washington to the first pastor, Dr. John Rogers, and accounts of the activities of the church.

The new Olmstead Avenue church at the corner of Newbold avenue, on the outskirts of the Bronx, will be dedicated Jan. 23 at 8 p. m. The dedication sermon will be preached by Dr. Wilton Merle-Smith, chairman of the church extension committee, which built the church. A week of special services will follow. The pastor is Rev. C. E. B. Ward.

A young people's interdenominational institute for Greater New York was held Jan. 20-23 in Scotch church. Among organizations participating were the Presbyterian Young People's Union and the New York City Christian Endeavor Union.

Dr. John R. Mackay of North church recently received over fifty members into his church.

Fifth Avenue church has asked $40,000 in its foreign mission collection this month. Last year the offering for this cause amounted to almost $20,000. The budget for the Shuntefu mission alone, which this church has supported for the last ten years, is $10,059.

Minister's Estate to Benevolences

Rev. W. Wallace Atterbury of New York Presbytery, who died Aug. 6, 1911, at Bennington, Vt., out of an estate of $150,000 left $130,000 to benevolences, mostly to the Presbyterian Church. Some of these gifts were $36,944 each to the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions, $9,236 each to the Boards of Church Erection, Relief, Freedmen's and College. Dr. Anson P. Atterbury of West-Park church is a nephew.

The new gymnasium of Union Seminary was formally opened Jan. 9.

At a meeting held in Home Street church Jan. 7 an organization was consummated called the "Bronx Clergy and Laity League." Its purpose is to carry on the work indicated by the Men and Religion Movement, especially along the lines of social service and evangelism. Rev. Graham C. Hunter of Hunt's Point church was elected president.

Through the efforts of the members of a league of First Union church attendance at prayer meetings during the fall has been sixty. Members of the league promise to attend all church services. The membership has largely increased under Rev. Charles W. Welch.

Strikers Use Labor Temple

The 35,000 employees involved in the strike of the white goods workers in New York have been given Labor temple as headquarters. Girls and women constitute 95 per cent of the strikers in this line.

Will Be Head of Charity Work

Pittsburg Pastor Goes to Philadelphia Organization — Evening Attendance Larger than Morning Congregation at Grove City.

PITTSBURG—Rev. R. M. Little, who for the past five years has been pastor of Bellevue church, North side, announced his resignation last Sunday. The resignation came as a surprise to friends of the pastor. A new church building is just about completed and will be dedicated in a few weeks, and prospects were never better, but a call came from the Philadelphia Society for the Organization of Charity and Mr. Little felt that it afforded him an opportunity to enter a field of service which has appealed to him for years. He will be general secretary of the organized charity work of Philadelphia. During the pastorate at Bellevue Mr. Little has been the moving spirit in the Associated Charities of Pittsburg, was connected with the Milk and Ice Association, the Hungry Club and Boys' Industrial Home. The pastor will leave immediately after the dedication of the new church.

At the meeting of the ministerial union Jan. 13 reports were heard from the commission appointed to cooperate with the vice commission of the city appointed by the mayor some time ago. Dr. W. I. Wishart, president of the Federation of Churches in Pittsburg, presented the work of the federation to the ministers and made an earnest plea for support.

The Y. M. C. A. recently began a short campaign for $80,000 necessary to defray expenses of the organization for the coming year.

The McKees Rocks church, O. N. Verner, D. D., pastor, welcomed ninety-five members Jan. 12. This is one of the largest additions in the history of the church and is the result of special meetings in the fall and a campaign of personal work by pastor and people.

Grove City church is one of the few churches where the evening attendance is larger than the morning. By actual count during the month of December the average morning attendance was 591 and the evening 635. Rev. Herbert Hezlep is pastor. P. W. SNYDER.

Big Churches Help the Smaller

Cooperation in Buffalo Congregations Is Practical — Mingle in Social Affairs — Confer on Plans for Evangelism.

BUFFALO—The big brother idea as applied to the churches is being used for the benefit of churches which are in no sense missions. They are grouped with stronger congregations and the members of each mingle together in social functions, one church providing the program of the evening and the other the refreshments. The sessions confer; the bigger brother provides an occasional Sunday musical service in the church of the younger brother and undertakes a wise and impressive announcement throughout the community of such special event.

This same idea is being used with settlement work. Four churches have, with notable success, brought their members into personal social touch at social functions with the members of organizations with which they have affiliated themselves in this brotherhood relation.

Lafayette church realized its brightest hopes in changing its pew rental system to voluntary offerings for both its benevolences and church support. A much larger number of persons have become contributors and the income materially increased.

An institute on presbyterial and pastoral evangelism was given at the Lafayette hotel Jan. 21 and 22 under the arrangement of the Assembly's evangelistic committee.

Dr. Janvier May Go to India

Asked to Take Presidency of Ewing College — Midweek Sermons on Genesis Attract Many —Protest Against Sunday Newspaper.

PHILADELPHIA—Interest is felt in Presbyterian circles in the call of Dr. C. A. R. Janvier to the presidency of Ewing (formerly Allahabad Christian) College, India, as successor to Dr. Arthur H. Ewing. Dr. Janvier has been pastor of Hollond Memorial church ten years and has been indefatigable as a city worker along many lines. Previous to coming to Philadelphia he was for fourteen years a missionary in India. His son is now an instructor in Ewing College and Dr. Janvier has for years been greatly interested in it. His acceptance of the call is highly probable. His removal from Philadelphia will be a great loss to the working force of the city.

At the January meeting of Philadelphia North Presbytery Rev. James McConaughy was received from Franklin Congregational Association of Massachusetts. He is managing editor of The Sunday School Times in Philadelphia. Rev. L. G. Bennett of Morrisville church was dismissed to Elizabeth Presbytery. Overtures on reduction of Assembly membership, rolls of members and roll of suspended members were answered in the affirmative and those on federated churches were referred to a committee.

Rev. James H. McArthur, for two years pastor of Bethesda church of Philadelphia, has been called to Park church of Newark, N. Y., to succeed Rev. Carl W. Scovell.

Editor Dies in Hospital

The death of Walter H. Brooks, D. D., in the German hospital, following an operation, on Jan. 12 brought sorrow to many hearts. He was 62 years of age, a graduate of the University of Michigan and Union Theological Seminary. He was for thirty years pastor of Prospect Street church of Trenton and for twenty-four years stated clerk of New Jersey Synod. He was also stated clerk of New Brunswick Presbytery and secretary of the Presbyterian Historical Society. From 1906 to 1912 he was connected with the editorial staff of The Presbyterian in Philadelphia.

The Sunday evening congregations of Disston Memorial church, Tacony, have recently been crowding the capacity of the church. The pastor, Rev. Hugh McBride, received at Christmas a watch and purse from the congregation.

Carefully prepared sermons, from the book of Genesis, at the Wednesday evening service by Dr. R. H. Morris of Central-North Broad Street church during the past few months increased the average attendance over 100.

Dr. W. H. Oxtoby of Tabernacle church is president of the Philadelphia Waldensian Society. He visited the Waldensians last summer and took a number of pictures. They will be used in an illustrated lecture by him on "Waldensian Progress in Italy and Sicily" in Westminster hall, Jan. 27, at 3:30 o'clock, to which the public is invited.

Dr. W. F. Crafts of Washington secured from the Presbyterian ministers a resolution calling upon Congress to pass the Kenyon "red-light" bill. A paper read by President Evans of Crozer Theological Seminary (Baptist) on "The Deification of Jesus of Nazareth" met with very sharp dissent on the part of some.

Try to Stop Sunday Paper

Both Presbyterian and Methodist ministers' meetings have expressed gratification at the purchase of The Public Ledger by the Curtis Publishing Company and petitioned the latter to discontinue the Sunday edition of the newspaper. The answer was to the effect that if there were no such edition the starting of one would probably not be considered, but being in existence, it was not deemed best to discontinue it. W. P. WHITE.

Will Visit Foreign Sunday Schools

An interdenominational commission of practical Sunday school workers will sail from San Francisco March 1. The members will visit mission stations and Sunday schools in the Philippines, Japan, China and Korea and report conditions found at the world Sunday school convention, Zurich, in July. A like commission from England will visit India and other Oriental countries and also report at Zurich.

Join in Meetings for a Week

Detroit Churches Try New Plans for Week of Prayer—Covenant Church Will Observe a Double Fifth Anniversary.

DETROIT—Some churches observed the week of prayer in unusual ways this year. Immanuel church held a Pentecostal week, after the plan of Andrew Murray of South Africa, Rev. A. H. Cameron speaking every evening upon the general theme of "Deeper Spirituality." Jefferson Avenue, Bethany, Covenant and Memorial churches met together for four evenings, reserving Wednesday for services in each church. The other evenings were occupied by addresses by the pastor on the claims of Christ on home and school life, on business life, on social life and in church life.

The Church of the Covenant is to observe its fifth anniversary, also the fifth anniversary of Dr. Young's pastorate, Jan. 31, under the direction of the Woman's Missionary Society. An address will be given by Miss Lucia Lyons, home on furlough from China. She is a granddaughter of Dr. Zachary Eddy, well known in Michigan Presbyterianism. This church has recently organized the Boy Scouts and a young men's debating club.

Cadillac Avenue church has completed payment for the five lots purchased for a new church and is now commencing to save for the building fund, a larger building being an absolute necessity.

Dr. W. T. Jaquess in his new position as superintendent of church extension in Detroit Presbytery is addressing the churches on "Detroit a Field and a Force." Jan. 5 he spoke at First church and Jan. 12 at Jefferson Avenue church.

Joseph A. Vance, D. D., held a special patriotic service Jan. 12, addressing members of several patriotic societies.

Evangelist Ferdinand Schiverea is to lead a series of evangelistic services at Scovel Memorial church, of which Rev. J. D. Jeffrey is the pastor. Meetings will commence this month.

Highland Park church, after two weeks of cottage prayer meetings, will commence evangelistic services this week under the leadership of J. B. Worrall, D. D., of Pennsylvania.

William Bryant.

The young women composing the Philalethea Sunday school class of Immanuel church gave their pastor, Rev. Angus H. Cameron, a check for $500 to be applied toward the purchase of a motor car. The young women raised the money through the sale of 1,900 calendars.

Chicago Y. M. C. A. Growing

The widespread influence of the Y. M. C. A. on Chicago was shown in the report of the general secretary, L. Wilbur Messer, at the annual meeting of the board of managers Jan. 16. The membership of the association during the year was 18,570, 31 per cent larger than the previous year, and the physical work activities have increased 49 per cent. Large additions have been made to the equipment, including the completion of the Sears-Roebuck branch and the West side building. The building for colored men was erected and three stories added to the Central branch. The association feeds nearly 2,000 people a day in ten restaurants and has sleeping accommodations for 1,308 men, fully occupied. Of the total cost of $346,000 of running the association but $45,000 came from public subscription. Recommendations were made for four new buildings for railway men, and buildings for the North side work.

For New York Readers Especially

The Continent has elsewhere alluded to the peculiarly sneaking and vicious bill introduced into the New York legislature at Albany calling for the repeal of the law which has made the moving-picture proprietors trouble when Sunday school children played truant and spent at nickel theaters time which they were supposed to be spending at Sunday school. There are also two other anti-Sabbath bills pending at Albany—one introduced by Mr. Goldberg, which would wipe out the statutory penalties for Sabbath breaking, and so invalidate the Sabbath law all over the state, and another introduced by Mr. Greenberg, which would leave Sabbath laws in New York to be enacted by the local aldermen, which would very likely mean no laws at all. All three of these measures are vicious in effect, if not in intent. They will necessarily be opposed by persons who value the Sabbath as a religious observance or as a day of rest—the last named in particular by those who realize how necessary to the government of American cities is the check and balance of the rural influence. Attention to the peril of these pending measures is directed especially by the New York Sabbath committee, which has office at 31 Bible House, and Dr. W. T. Swartz, the general secretary, earnestly calls upon the sympathetic citizens to make their protest either to the chairman of the committee having these bills in charge, Patrick J. McGrath, 300 East 81st street, New York City, or to their own assemblyman, or else, if they prefer, they are invited to file their protests in writing with the committee itself.

Brotherhood Entertains the Boys

Coming Generation for Guests at Dinner—President W. H. Harrison Once Elder in Church Near Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI—Norwood's chapter of the brotherhood—the first in America—took the "younger set" under its wing at a big chicken dinner served by the ladies of the church recently. This rubbing elbows with the boys was about the best affair in its history. One all but forgotten historical fact was told by Rev. S. D. Crouch of St. Bernard. He was talking of the problems of the church in the country and said: "Down at North Bend there is sepulchered a former President of the United States—William Henry Harrison—and not very far from his tomb is the little Presbyterian church of which this ex-President was once an honored elder. That little church, with a history of over 100 years, is almost dead. I believe Sunday school sessions are held there every Sabbath morning, but church services have been abandoned."

A chapter of the Knights of St. Paul has been organized at Clifford church, of which Rev. Frank Marston is pastor. St. Bernard church also recently formed a chapter of this organization of young Christians.

"Immigrants in Cincinnati" was the subject of Dr. John F. Herget's address at the January meeting of Woman's Missionary Societies at the Italian church.

Dr. Calvin D. Wilson of Glendale, who has traveled through the war-troubled Balkans, was a recent speaker at the Y. M. C. A.

The week of prayer was marked by special services in many churches. All denominations on Mount Auburn united in a series of meetings held at Mount Auburn church, Rev. Charles L. Neibel pastor.

Ren Mulford, Jr.

The Leaders of the World

The Greatest Bible in 300 years

THE 1911 BIBLE
OXFORD EDITION

"Just the Bible the world has been waiting for."

Oxford Teachers' Bibles

WITH NEW AND UP-TO-DATE HELPS ARRANGED UNDER ONE ALPHABET

Over 3,000,000 Copies Sold

"They are known from Greenland's Icy Mountains to India's Coral Strand."—The Bookshelf.

From $1.50 upward

The Scofield Reference Bible

A wonderful Book for the English-speaking world. With an entirely new system of helps and references.

From $1.50 upward

Full explanatory booklet on application.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
American Branch, 35 West 32nd Street, New York

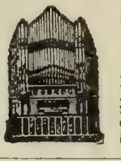
The American Epic: "Manson's Vision"

A poem by Rev. Thomas Nield. Pp. 280; price $1.50.

"It is unquestionably the best epic yet produced in America, and there have been many attempts at epic poetry in this country. Indeed, I consider this a real contribution to the literature of America."—Paul E. Doran, Cumberland University.

"A work of high literary excellence and profound and original thought—an unusually good piece of work of its class."—J. E. Clarke, Editor The Presbyterian Advance.

The Advance Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.



PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS

Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., PEKIN, ILL.

SELL'S NEW METHOD STUDIES

FOR BIBLE CLASSES. Eight Distinct Series--popular throughout English-speaking world. Send for Full Descriptive Circulars.

F. H REVELL CO. 158 5th Av., N.Y. 125 N. Wabash, Chicago

Just a Little from You

And a Little More from Everybody Else Will Lift This Load, Make Many Happy Hearts, and Accomplish a Great Good

THE PLACE! LEOLA is the county seat of McPherson County, South Dakota. It has about 500 people, and is the trading center for the population in the country round for 20 miles. The state is new, the conditions are those of any pioneer land, and the environments of living are trying and rigorous. Take a map of the United States and find ABERDEEN, then draw a line almost straight northwest until you find LEOLA.

THE NEED! Ours is a mission church aided in its work by the Home Mission Society. The Presbyterian Church is the only English Protestant Church whose doors are open in an area more than 15 miles square. The Roman Catholics are quite strong. Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists and others receive, through us, the only religious ministrations possible.

The town has two saloons—regular dens of iniquity. There are two pool halls open, neither place being of an inviting or elevating character. We have no theater, no picture shows, no public library, in fact nothing either good or bad, to which the young people CAN go apart from the Church services.

Our building is small, with only one room, in which can be seated about 200 people. We have no Sunday School class rooms and as our basement is not finished, no place that can be fitted up for the good of the young men and women.

WHAT WE PROPOSE TO DO! The minister has planned and partially arranged for the opening of a public center and "reading room." A business man here has offered rooms rent free until spring. Other necessary things have been freely proffered by those who have, but our need is still great.

No other one thing, aside from the actual spiritual ministrations of the church, will reach so many of our young men and women, and the lasting good done can hardly be calculated. If the people back East who read this appeal could understand by actual experience the problems the missionary pastor has to face, the difficulties he MUST overcome, and often on a mere pittance at that, a little more personal help would be given the struggling, battling, never-give-up missionary pastors who are laying the foundations for the Presbyterian Church in coming years in this state.

HOW YOU CAN HELP! 1st. Send by mail or express, prepaid, all books, magazines, and papers that you can spare.

2nd. Get that Sunday School of which YOU are a member to give us just ONE Sunday's offering. NOT MUCH TO YOU, but a big boost to us. Or, get your Aid Society or that Missionary Society in your church, to give us a little help. Even five dollars will work a great blessing here. We will write the Society a personal letter as to exactly how the money was spent, and the story of its investment will spur the Society on its own Missionary activities.

3rd. Some well-to-do, perhaps rich, people will read this. Ten dollars, or even twice that sum, will hard be missed. Send us this greatly needed assistance.

DO IT NOW! Out here in this missionary pastor's home we look forward to very little for ourselves. Gladly will we go without if someone who reads these lines will make it possible for us to do the WORK our heart is set upon. DO IT NOW.

L. L. SANDERS, MINISTER, LEOLA, SOUTH DAKOTA. Ref.: Rev. C. C. TODD, Aberdeen.

Two Chicago Women Volunteer

China Campaign Progress Encourages Leaders —Ministers Show Large Interest—Dr. Robinson to Palestine.

CHICAGO—Before the China campaign team reached this city there had been pledged to this special fund $200,000 from cities of the East and nearly forty of the 160 additional missionaries needed have volunteered. This number includes two women from Chicago and one-third of the senior class of Princeton Seminary. None of these volunteers have yet been examined and accepted. Members of the team were much encouraged in Chicago. The results are not yet available. Dr. C. E. Bradt, who has charge of this invasion of the Central West, which began in Chicago and ends in Kansas City, felt that the reception of the special speakers Sunday was very encouraging. At the ministers' meeting Monday morning Dr. A. J. Brown and several of the missionaries spoke and plans were made for a large attendance at the dinner Tuesday to hear Mr. Speer.

A number of the more prominent pastors of presbytery will participate in the installation of Dr. W. C. Covert as pastor of First church Friday night.

Next Monday morning the ministers join in the meeting of the federated churches in the Y. M. C. A.

Dr. G. N. Luccock of First church, Oak Park, is preparing for Easter by printing in the church bulletin a series of questions and answers, the first of which was, "What is it to be a Christian?" It is designed that young people shall study the series at home.

The ladies' aid society of Fifty-Second Avenue church has raised $150 toward the first payment on a mortgage, to be added with larger amounts raised in the congregation. Rev. W. E. Donaldson is pastor.

The funeral of John B. Harrison was held in Central church Jan. 12. He had been the church's only treasurer, serving more than twenty-five years.

PALESTINE WORK FOR DR. ROBINSON

Dr. George L. Robinson of McCormick Seminary will leave Chicago with his family early in May for Jerusalem, where he will be director of the American Archæological School of Biblical Research for sixteen months. He has been granted leave of absence from the seminary. Dr. Robinson has been in Palestine several times before and is much interested in explorations of historic places in connection with biblical history.

Weaver Memorial U. P. church is gaining large attendance through the use of letters sent to people in the vicinity of the church who were "prospects." A printing press and a class of Sunday school boys help in this advertising campaign.

The Men's Neighborhood Club has been organized at Belden Avenue church. It will have charge of the monthly meetings of men which have become a feature of this church.

Dr. William P. Merrill, formerly pastor of Sixth church and now of Brick church, New York, addressed the Sunday Evening Club last Sabbath. Dr. Merrill, who is one of the contributors to The Continent, spent several days in the city calling on friends.

Fourth church has ninety-four stewards for "The World in Chicago," standing in the front rank of all local churches in supporting this big missionary enterprise. Dr. John Timothy Stone, pastor, is captain of stewards.

Dwight E. Worrell, son of Dr. E. R. Worrell, has been commissioned by General Assembly's temperance committee to visit the ministers and churches of Chicago Presbytery in the interest of that work. Mr. Worrell is finding an encouraging reception.

John Balcom Shaw, D. D., pastor of Second church, will attend the twenty-fifth anniversary of West End church of New York City, which he founded, on Feb. 9, preaching both morning and evening to his former congregation and attending the other services of commemoration.

Olivet Institute by urging weekday patronage of the shops which close on Sunday is stimulating the observance of the Sabbath in its community.

Clergy and Laity

Dr. Griffin W. Bull, pastor of First church, Scranton, Pa., recently created comment in the papers by climbing to the top of his church spire to complete an aerial apparatus for a wireless telegraph outfit.

Rev. J. Frank Smith, Central church, Dallas, Texas, was a recent visitor in New York and preached in Labor temple.

Charles Franklin Ensign, D. D., of Marion, Iowa, who has been sick, was able to attend the service Jan. 12, but will not be able to take up his regular work for some weeks.

Rev. Isaac Contant of Holland Reformed Congregation, Lodi, N. Y., celebrated his 70th birthday Jan. 5 by preaching his 5,503d sermon. He entered the ministry in Holland thirty-nine years ago.

Dr. Pressly Thompson, pastor of Westminster church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was taken to Colorado Springs Jan. 17 for his health. He took up this work in September and has been able to preach but six Sabbaths. He has since been confined to his bed.

J. T. Black, D. D., pastor of Bethany church, Detroit, who is a delegate to the World's Presbyterian Alliance to be held at Aberdeen, Scotland, next July, has been granted three months' leave of absence. He expects to visit Ireland next May and June before going to Scotland.

From Various Fields

Washington

Seattle First Has Good Year

Though the pastor, Mark A. Matthews, D. D., was absent for considerable periods on account of his duties in connection with the moderatorship of the General Assembly, First church of Seattle learned from the reports at its recent meeting that the year had shown very satisfactory gains. The total membership is now in excess of 5,000, there being a net increase of 171 during the twelve months. The numerous organizations engaged in a wide range of activities might easily have filled a good sized volume with the statement of what they had done. Dr. Matthews in his report expressed the opinion that the future prospects of the church are exceptionally bright, and from the financial side it was stated that the pledges were larger in the aggregate than ever before in the history of the church. The Japanese work under Rev. O. Inouye has been a beneficial force among that element of the population.

Activities in Tacoma

The Sunday school missionary, Rev. Frank H. Mixsell, gave a lecture on Syria in Bethany church Jan. 16.

Rev. Hugh T. Mitchelmore, assistant pastor of First church, has been elected president of the Ministerial Alliance.

The week of prayer was observed by First church with encouraging results. Some of the churches deferred their devotional period to Passion week.

Fortnightly services are now being held at Knox mission. The men of Bethany church are undertaking to give the mission a monthly service. Most of the Tacoma churches are planning with great care to observe Decision Day in the Sunday schools.

The home mission committee held a conference Jan. 14 with all the home mission pastors and workers. It gave an opportunity to consider together all the problems of the various fields. In the evening of that day Dr. McLeod addressed the missionaries and the church officers of the city in First church. Dr. McLeod is a member of the Assembly's evangelistic committee.

The Inter-Church Forum is a new paper published by the Interchurch Council, one the results of the Men and Religion Movement in Spokane a year ago. The editors are Reverends Conrad Bluhm, John W. Johnson and J. O. Johnson, from three different denominations. The council holds meetings each Sunday afternoon, emphasizing the social aspect of the gospel.

Arizona

George H. Gebby, missionary to the Mojave-Apache Indians, attends to his duties in an automobile and covers a parish 150 miles in length.

Under the leadership of Rev. C. A. Foreman Flagstaff church is taking on new activity. The Sunday school has been increased, the congregations are growing and all departments of the church are showing improvement. Mr. and Mrs. Foreman are finding a hearty welcome in Flagstaff.

Rev. J. H. Barkwell of Miami has now four Sunday schools and five preaching points to take care of. The Miami district is growing rapidly.

California

Ministers of Santa Monica are aroused over the recent repeal of a law forbidding gambling by dice. The church federation is said to be making plans to have the former ordinance reestablished.

Since Rev. W. H. Darden went to Pleasanton the 1st of September the congregations have multiplied several times over. The Christian Endeavor has grown in attendance as well as in interest. The Sunday school has more than doubled in numbers.

Idaho

J. H. Barton, D. D., superintendent of home missions, assisted by Mrs. Barton and Rev. Henry Quickenden of Boise Second church and Rev. W. M. Case of Caldwell, held an efficiency conference in Franklin church Dec. 11 and 12. This church is in the country, five miles east of Caldwell, and is supplied by Rev. D. A. Clemens. The conference was well attended.

Colorado

Colorado Springs is the headquarters for the Middle West of the Lord's Day Alliance, Rev. J. P. Hutchison having recently been chosen general secretary of the work in this district. It is proposed to obtain by law a one-day-in-seven rest for all workers.

Wyoming

Rev. Hugh W. Rankin has spent nine years in Idaho and Utah as synodical Sabbath school missionary; he has been on the firing line as the pioneer in the Rocky mountain region and

The Commuter's Comfort

Nearly all Americans are in a hurry. The hurry habit is contagious. Even school children acquire it, especially as they approach the higher grades where the studies increase and the punctuality and attendance become more important.

Worry is also an American habit. It has been called by many travelers, in fact, "the great American disease." Now if we put hurry and worry together we have a combination which makes the human machinery run down before it has attained the highest point of usefulness and efficiency. Hurry and worry are the advance agents of nerve exhaustion. The winter days are the days when a man or woman who gets in a full day's work must have a breakfast that gives the greatest bodily warmth and nourishment with the least expenditure of time and effort in preparation. These are also the days when the job of getting the children off to school promptly with a good nourishing breakfast presents one of the problems of the household.

The problem is easily solved by the housewife who knows shredded wheat and the many delicious combinations that can be made with it. Shredded wheat has been called "the commuter's comfort" for the reason that in the larger cities where so many business men have to go on schedule time they have found in this ready-cooked cereal a food that is easily and quickly prepared and contains the greatest amount of strength-giving nutriment.

Being ready-cooked and ready to serve, it is so easy to prepare with shredded wheat a delicious, nourishing meal for school children who are rushing off to school or for the business man or woman who has to get to the office or store at an appointed time every day in the year. Two shredded wheat biscuits, heated in the oven for a few moments to restore their crispness and eaten with hot milk or cream, will supply all the nourishment needed for a half day's work or play.

SMITH GRANITE MONUMENTS
Exclusive — Original — Distinctive.
The world's masterpieces in granite.
Write for booklet.
SMITH GRANITE CO.
Westerly, R. I.

has served in Colorado and Wyoming from the very beginning of the board's work. The last year he traveled over 15,000 miles, delivered 240 addresses, helped build two churches, organized seven Sabbath schools and revived several more, established five preaching stations. Twenty-five years ago he began the work under the oversight of Dr. George P. Hays, then pastor of Central church, Denver. Mr. Rankin will spend part of the winter in the East in the interest of the board.

Nebraska

Mrs. George P. Beard, widow of the late Rev. Mr. Beard, died Jan. 6 at Pittsburg, Pa., and was buried at Randolph, Vt. Mr. Beard was well known in educational work in Pennsylvania and held pastorates in Blair, Neb., and Whitewood, S. D.

The new church at Wakefield, of which Dr. J. M. Caldwell is pastor, was dedicated Dec. 15. Dr. Caldwell is the "young fellow of 73" recently mentioned in The Continent. The cost of the new building was $9,000, practically all of which was raised before the dedication.

A conference along mission, social service and evangelistic lines under the auspices of the Ministerial Union and Federation of Churches was held in Hastings Jan. 7-10. In addition to the large representation on the program of Christian workers and pastors of all denominations from the city and county, President R. B. Crone, Rev. W. W. Smith and Dean Remp of Hastings College; Rev. Walter I. Fowle of Grand Island, Rev. H. O. Pritchard, Dr. T. M. Shipherd and Dean Fordyce of Lincoln; Dr. B. W. Marsh of University Place, Rev. Bruce Kinney of Kansas City and Dr. C. E. Bradt of Chicago of the Foreign Mission Board took part.

North Dakota

Extensive preparations are being made in Fargo for a two weeks' campaign of missionary evangelism to be commenced Feb. 9 under the auspices of First church. An effort is being made to enlist representatives from every church in the state. Dr. C. E. Bradt of the Foreign Board will have charge of the campaign. Daily meetings will be held with study classes, and special attention will be given to China.

Rev. R. M. MacDonald, pastor of Crosby church, assisted by Rev. T. U. Richmond, pastor-evangelist of Minot Presbytery, brought a successful ten days' mission to a close on the last Sunday of the year. Up to this time Crosby church has only been a mission station, without a session, but under Mr. MacDonald it is now raised to the status of an organized church. Within the year he has been in charge he has also organized an active Christian Endeavor society and reorganized the Sunday school.

Oklahoma

Special services have just been concluded at Tahlequah, led by Rev. W. E. Spoonts of Jacksonville, Ill.

An addition has just been built to Stillwater church, the congregation having outgrown the seating space. It was used for the first time Dec. 22, when chairs were placed in the aisles to accommodate the crowd. A large portion of the congregation is from the faculty and students of the agricultural college. Rev. LeRoy C. Ilsley is pastor.

Michigan

Six memorial windows were dedicated in First church, Midland, Jan. 5. Dr. Alexander Magill of Bay City assisted Rev. John N. Zydeman in the services.

The brotherhood of Benton Harbor church has been reorganized and good interest is manifested. During the last year all congregational expenses and benevolences were met by direct contribution, with no suppers or fairs. The week of prayer was observed, with favorable results.

Minnesota

A new bell and piano have been purchased at McCallsburg, and a new lighting system will soon be put in. Rev. E. G. Byer is pastor.

An effort is being made by the Sabbath school work committee of St. Cloud Presbytery to obtain a 25 per cent increase in membership and offering from each school.

After a ministry of over three years Rev. Arthur A. Palmer left Howard Lake at the close of the year to begin work at Newberg, Ore. The Sabbath school is showing signs of outgrowing its present quarters.

Winterset church has just been rededicated, an addition for choir and organ loft having been completed at a cost of $2,500. A Sabbath school addition costing $7,500 was recently finished and the whole church was repaired and redecorated. On Christmas eve the congregation presented the pastor with a purse of gold. At the congregational meeting the trustees were instructed to increase the pastor's salary $200. Dr. J. S. Corkey has served this church for six years.

After some months of agitation the Presbyterian church of Crookston under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. E. W. Akers, has voted against uniting with the Congregational church of that city. Current expenses and benevolences are provided for the coming year and this church, the largest in Adams Presbytery, will continue to work along Presbyterian lines. The church recently purchased a fine piano. The Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E. are increasing in interest and attendance.

Indiana

The Knights of the Holy Grail recently organized in Meridian Heights church, Indianapolis, now numbers fifty.

The church at Liberty has recently acquired a modern parsonage. Under the new pastor, Rev. O. R. Newcomb, a brotherhood has just been organized and put to work.

The session of Michigan City church is endeavoring to meet the full apportionment of all the boards before March 1. The Christian Endeavor Society is pursuing a special course of study in the Scriptures and missions.

During the closing week of the year members of Greensburg church, Dr. W. H. Reynolds pastor, planned to give him a New Year's gift of $50, but the project speedily got beyond their control and $76 was the result. A mission chapel is maintained by this church, which last year gave $10, mostly in pennies, to the work at Gary.

Ohio

Rev. William A. Perrins, pastor of West Broad Street church, Columbus, has been chosen chaplain of the Ohio senate. This position will not interfere with the work in his church.

Every pastor and elder in Wooster Presbytery has received a suggestion from a committee of presbytery that each church this year adopt a plan which will enlist every member as a contributor.

Second church, Newark, has just closed very helpful and interesting week of prayer services conducted by Rev. F. E. Holloway, who has been connected with the Dr. Milford H. Lyon evangelistic party.

Iowa

Boys of Shenandoah church are agitating plans for a Y. M. C. A. in that town.

Knoxville church is preparing to install a $2,000 pipe organ. Rev. John F. Lackey is pastor.

Baptist and Methodist churches united with the Presbyterian church at Mediapolis in week of prayer services.

Knoxville church, led by the pastor, Rev. J. F. Lackey, has raised $1,300 to pay old debts and $450 for improvements. The church hopes to install a pipe organ in the spring.

James S. Corkey, D. D., of Winterset has returned to his remodeled church building after meeting several months in the courthouse. A fire destroyed much of the church last summer.

First church, Muscatine, is planning one of the most commodious Sunday school buildings in the Central West. This structure, together with the remodeling of the church, will cost about $35,000.

The Presbyterian student work at the Iowa Agricultural College at Ames, under the leadership of the student pastor, J. W. Innes, D. D., is prospering. Secretary Richard C. Hughes of the Board of Education is assisting Dr. Innes in a campaign for funds and the work is now undertaken on such a scale that when it is completed it will be established with as good buildings and endowment as is the work at the state university of Illinois.

A large mass meeting of women was held Dec. 29 in First church, Ottumwa, to protest against saloons being reopened in that city. Mrs. W. H. Hormel was one of the principal speakers.

Casey has just closed a union revival meeting, the Presbyterians and Methodists uniting. The meeting was conducted by Rev. P. M. Fitzgerald of Arlington, Texas. W. W. Alverson is supplying the church.

Stanley Union church is grouped with Hazelton in the support of a pastor. The gospel team from Lenox College under the leadership of E. Reed held meetings there during the Christmas holidays which were very successful. Rev. J. C. B. Peck is pastor.

Rev. Horace O. Bethel, Dexter, chairman of the home mission committee of Des Moines Presbytery, is planning a special campaign in the interest of home mission churches that are vacant. Anyone wishing to locate in this presbytery may write Mr. Bethel.

Dr. L. M. Coffman, First church, Davenport, in the last thirteen months has received 150 members, making the present enrollment 604. There has been corresponding growth in all departments of the church, as well as in Newcomb chapel, in charge of Rev. F. O. Woestemeyer, assistant pastor.

Joseph F. Clokey, D. D., pastor of Westminster church, Dubuque, conducted services during the week of prayer. The church is showing progress under Dr. Clokey's administration. Third church, Rev. Thomas McGregor pastor, and German church, under Rev. E. C. Wolters, are also developing.

A debate by students of Parsons College on the initiative and referendum was one of the features in connection with the recent dedication of the basement of Cross Lanes church, near Fairfield. Rev. J. F. Hinkhouse is in charge of this church, which is ideally located for rural work. The dedication exercises Sunday were continued Monday, when a number of addresses were made on subjects of interest to farmers, the meeting closing with an oyster supper.

Illinois

The new gymnasium in the basement of Upper Alton church was dedicated Dec. 31. The boys of one of the Sunday school classes served supper.

The duplex system of contributions has been introduced in First church, East St. Louis, Rev. Wilson Aull pastor. The building has recently been repaired and redecorated.

W. H. Penhallegon, D. D., for twenty-four years pastor at Decatur, has been elected associate superintendent of home missions for the synod. Dr. Penhallegon has not yet announced his decision.

Rev. John Welsh, pastor of Wilmington church, who announced some time ago that he would retire Jan. 1, has yielded to the session and board of trustees to reconsider his statement and to continue as the leader of that church.

El Paso church, Roger F. Cressey pastor, has received a blessing in a union evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Rev. John S. Hamilton and party of Cleveland, Ohio. Meetings were conducted in a tabernacle for four weeks ending Dec. 22.

A new building to cost between $50,000 and $60,000 is assured First church, Joliet. The purchase of a lot has been ordered by the board of trustees. The present building has been in use nearly fifty years, but will be sold before the new structure is finished. Dr. C. M. Brown has been pastor for the last five years.

New Jersey

The installation of Rev. William Melville Curry, the new pastor of Fourth church, Trenton, took place the evening of Jan. 16. The pastor's brother, Rev. J. E. Curry of Cranbury First church, preached the sermon. Mr. Curry comes to Trenton from Parnassus, Pa.

The Sunday school and congregation of Madison Avenue church, Elizabeth, are making new records; almost if not quite the majority of church attendants and new members are men. The newly organized brotherhood and the men's Bible class are doing well. Dr. Clarence G. Reynolds is pastor.

Boys' Day was observed in many Newark churches. Pastors preached special sermons to boys and societies of boys attended in a body.

The last service was held in the old church at Arlington Jan. 12. In a few days ground will be broken for the new church near by. Some of the stones of the old will form part of the foundation of the new church. Meanwhile the congregation will worship in the chapel adjoining the old church. Rev. William Coombe is pastor.

Pennsylvania

The churches of York are taking a large interest in the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Great Island church, Lock Haven, has recently purchased a manse for the pastor, Rev. C. H. Williamson.

A mortgage of $4,000 was recently burned by Fourth church, Washington. Rev. George B. Irwin is pastor.

Scranton has become much interested in the agitation looking toward a city college. Joseph H. Odell, D. D., pastor of Second church, is a strong factor in its favor. There is an extensive territory from which support may be expected.

Rev. Lorenzo R. Foster, for many years assistant pastor of Green Ridge church, Scranton, and stated supply of Suburban church, has accepted an invitation to become the English minister and coworker with Dr. W. A. Nordt of First German church of Scranton. This church has not only become the largest German Presbyterian church in America but has also acquired one of the most valuable church properties in eastern Pennsylvania. It now has an English Sunday school of over 600, besides the German school of over 400.

New York

Rev. T. F. Jessup, who recently celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as pastor at Boonville, received twenty members Jan. 5.

The second annual dinner of the men's class of Saranac Lake church Jan. 10 was attended by over eighty. The pastor, Rev. George Roberts, Jr.; officers of the class, Rev. Aaron W. Maddox of Tupper Lake and Rev. Edwin H. Dickinson of North church, Buffalo, spoke.

The pastor of Cohocton church, Rev. S. Horace Beshgatour, who went there Sept. 1 from Akron, observed Decision Day in the Sunday school the Sunday before Christmas. This was followed by personal work and the observance of the week of prayer Jan. 12. A large number joined the church.

Connecticut

In addition to over $6,000 subscribed toward improving the church property at Hartford, members contributed labor and material valued at $6,800. This, with the gift of $6,000 from Mrs. Kennedy, will enable the church to provide itself with an entirely adequate plant. Mrs. Manson of New Haven has agreed to furnish the interior of the church. Rev. John F. Johnstone is pastor of the congregation, which numbers 500.

Missouri

Arrangements are being made for a country life institute at Central Union, Walnut Grove and Antioch churches in the near future. The state university has promised assistance.

Utah

Dr. John L. Roemer of St. Louis recently supplied the pulpit of First church, Salt Lake City. He has declined to be a candidate for the pulpit made vacant by Dr. Paden.

Wisconsin

The Oshkosh Ministerial Association has planned for a cooperative "going to church" campaign over the whole city.

Canada

Dr. Murdoch Mackenzie, for many years a foreign missionary, is being mentioned as moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. Several presbyteries have already nominated him.

At a special service at Stanley Street church, Montreal, Bibles were distributed to all children who were baptized in 1902.

The new site of Knox church, Montreal, will be at Luke and Fort streets, but the building will not be put up at once.

"The Oklahoma House"

OKLAHOMA WHEAT

Do You Invest Trust Funds?

Trustees of Estates, as well as Churches, Colleges and Charitable Institutions everywhere, make a practice of investing a portion of their endowment funds in selected farm mortgages. The balance is usually put into low rate bonds. The individual investor can well follow the example of these experienced buyers. Farm mortgages net them 6% and give absolute security for the money invested.

In amounts of $500 and upwards, paying annual interest by coupons. Loans mature in 5, 7 or 10 years, according to contract.

The notes are the individual obligation of the farmer and his wife—and secured by a first mortgage on their farm.

If this interests you write for Mortgage List No. 710—Also our Booklet.

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co. (Inc.)

OLDEST AND LARGEST MORTGAGE HOUSE INCORPORATED UNDER LAWS OF OKLAHOMA

Oklahoma City, U. S. A.

Business Founded 1892 Capital and Surplus $145,000.00

College Men Preach the Gospel

Teams of Prominent Students Spend Vacation Holding Meetings — Show Masculine Christianity to Boys of Towns Visited.

Gospel teams from a large number of colleges visited towns near their institutions during the Christmas holidays and held evangelistic services. Among the Presbyterian colleges which sent out teams were Coe, Wooster, Lenox, Parsons and Dubuque.

Wooster University had one team of four members. It held meetings four days in an Ohio village of 200 people. The local pastor had prepared the way by advertising the meetings. A house-to-house canvass of the town was made and people invited.

Coe College sent teams to Anamosa and to Atalissa, Iowa. There were twelve men in the two teams, four of whom are captains of athletic teams at the college, and eleven of the twelve will be candidates for membership on athletic teams this spring. Eight of the boys are working their way through college and ten of them are preparing for the ministry. At Anamosa they formed a basket ball team and played with two local teams, winning from both. A special effort was made to reach the younger boys of the town, and as a result of the eight days' campaign a large number of young men and boys professed conversion. Meetings were also held in the state reformatory. At Atalissa, as well as at Anamosa, the meetings were union meetings of all the churches and the local pastors gave their hearty cooperation.

Two teams of five each from Parsons College held meetings and one team was sent out from Lenox. Dubuque College and Seminary contributed four groups of young men to this volunteer holiday evangelistic service.

Rev. W. W. Smith, field secretary of Hastings College, recently outlined the field of the college at a chapel talk, showing that it is the only college in a territory of nearly 60,000 square miles.

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

TIME TESTED, PANIC PROOF
The FARM MORTGAGE

When your money is invested in high grade First Farm Mortgages you need have no worry either as to your principal or your interest. The improved farm cannot be affected by business depressions, fire or other accidents. I sell my loans to insurance companies, trustees of estates and individuals. Write to-day for my interesting booklet C.

Best of References Given on Request

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, ARDMORE, OKLA.

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts who have spent their lives in this section. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature.

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St. Chicago.

Financial Situation

Cost of Living Declining a Little–Money Market Easier—Brief News for Business People –Question on Railway Bonds.

That the cost of living is declining will be welcome news to every reader of The Continent whether or not he is now a possible investor in farm mortgages or bonds. According to the carefully compiled figures by Bradstreet, the index number, made up of the prices of a large number of commodities, for the first time since last June was, on Jan. 1, lower than the preceding month. The decline was not great, but a tendency is a relief. The index number is, however, the highest ever recorded for January.

Timid investors lost a chance near the close of the year, according to The Financial World, a journal usually sane on financial matters. People who kept money in their banks waiting for lower prices for bonds find now that prices are higher than at the year's end. A list of bonds, most of them railway, rose ¼ to 5 points from Dec. 21 to Jan. 4, and have gone higher since.

The large number of investors in farm mortgages have rejoiced at the snowfall over the West recently. Farmers know that the soil during the coming season will be better for it, and anything that helps the farmer helps the man who loans the farmer money.

Money in the markets of this country is much easier than a month ago. New York lenders are having difficulty in placing call money at 4 per cent. The contemplated improvements by railways and industrial enterprises will, however, soon tighten the market a little, according to observers.

A Reader's Problem

Mrs. S. H. G. writes: "Your financial articles are of great interest to me; the information concise and valuable. I have a little money to invest (about $1,000) and would like to have your opinion of Virginia railway first mortgage 5 per cent fifty-year gold bonds, 1962. I wish to invest my money carefully. Would these bonds be a safe investment?"

So far as the final redemption is concerned, the Virginia railway bonds should be satisfactory; that is, the security is practically certain to carry them through to the time of payment. For a large investor, who can wait, the investment would probably be very desirable, but for the small investor ready marketability must be considered. According to our information, not all of the original issue has been sold to the public, and until the issue is disposed of and the security settles down to something like a fixed basis, there are likely to be fluctuations in quotations, and if you were called upon to sell quickly you might have to make some sacrifice. There are many reasons for believing that the line will eventually prove a profitable freight carrier, but there may be a long period of time before that consummation is reached. High-class railway equipment bonds of a company whose business is absolutely established would perhaps be better for your purpose. Courts have held that these equipment bonds will take precedence even of the first mortgage bonds, because the operation of the road is dependent upon the equipment, and if the road ceases to operate the value to the first mortgage bond holder would be lost. Such investments as the first mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds of the Western Electric Company and the refunding mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds of the People's Gas Light and Coke Company of Chicago might also be discussed with a banker in whom you have confidence. A farm mortgage placed through a reliable dealer is equally worth consideration.

It is the purpose of our financial department to secure and furnish information rather than to make recommendations, and we would urge upon you the necessity of securing all the facts possible before placing your money.

Brief Business Topics

—G. W. Hart of Bryant, S. D., who now has $2,500,000 loaned on farms, says he has never been forced to foreclose a first mortgage.

—In spite of the "arson trust," which confessions of convicted men show to have existed in New York and Chicago, the losses from fire last year were less than in 1911 or 1910, although the total was $225,000,000. This is

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

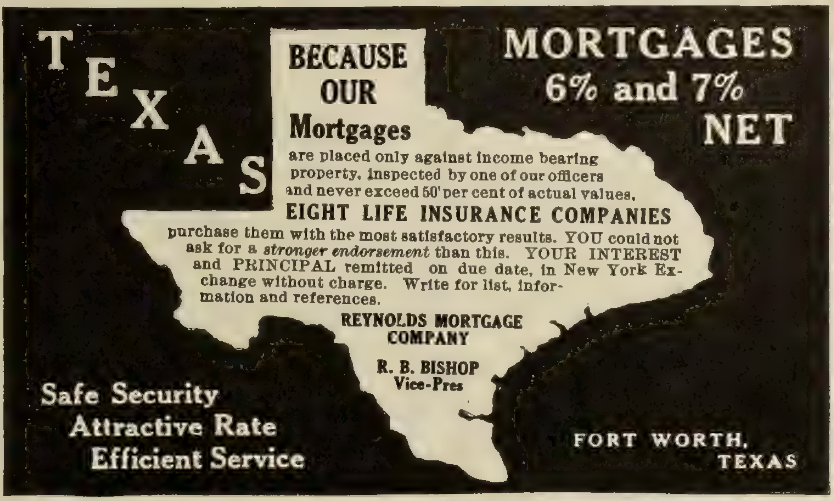
Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidations of Other Banks

CAPITAL, SURPLUS and UNDIVIDED PROFITS

$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. and JACKSON BLVD.



BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values. EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY

R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

7% 7½%

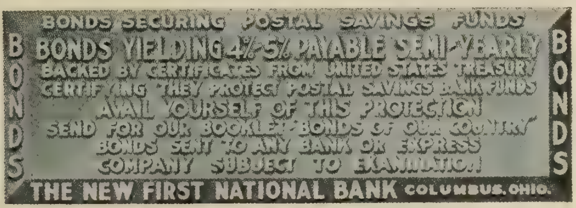
20 Years successful experience placing LOANS in the Southwest

Choice FARM LOANS in the RED RIVER Valley in S. E. Oklahoma, N. E. Texas and S. W. Arkansas, on improved farms at not to exceed 33⅓% actual value of security. The home of long staple cotton, corn, oats, alfalfa, fruits and vegetables. Average annual rainfall 45 inches and good soil, insuring certainty and fulfillment. Diversified farming; prosperous community. Write for information, booklet and map.

THE SECURITY MORTGAGE COMPANY

Individual responsibility over $1,000,000. Broad St., Texarkana, Ark.-Texas

4 Per Cent



BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY
CERTIFYING THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS BANK FUNDS
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR COUNTRY"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
BONDS BONDS
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO.

5 Per Cent

Place Your Funds in Safe Securities.

No matter if you have a large or small amount for investment, a well placed First Mortgage upon an improved or cultivated farm can always be depended upon to yield a liberal rate of interest with the assurance of prompt payment of interest and principal at maturity.

My offerings range in amounts from $500.00 to $5,000.00 bearing 5½% and 6% interest. All loans carefully inspected and closed with our own funds before being offered for sale. Interest and principal collected without charge. Correspondence invited and detailed information with references and list of offerings will be mailed upon request.

G. W. HART, President Merchants' Bank, Bryant, S. D.

6% 6½%

FIRST MORTGAGES ON IMPROVED FARMS

YIELDING 6% AND 6 1-2% PER ANNUM NET.

The first morgtgages we sell are secured by improved farms in the most prosperous sections of Oregon and Washington.

The investor in one of our mortgages has possession of all the papers comprising the loan, including the actual mortgage itself—together with the notes and abstract of title. We guarantee all titles and will collect and remit interest in New York exchange without charge.

We invite correspondence and will send lists of mortgages and booklet.

THE DEVEREAUX MORTGAGE COMPANY
1014 SPALDING BLDG., PORTLAND, ORE.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.

Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

WE CAN CONVINCE YOU of the desirability of our high grade farm and city loans. To each person who has seen our advertisement in THE CONTINENT this year and answered it we have sold mortgages. These readers were satisfied as to our record and reliability and as to the safety and good profit in our securities. We feel sure we can satisfy you. Let us know about how much you have to invest at this time or in the near future, and we will be greatly pleased to tell you about our offerings and give you references and complete information about our methods. Our many years' experience in this field gives us exceptional opportunities to secure the choicest securities. No investor has lost a dollar through his investment in these mortgages, which are carefully selected in one of the best investment fields in the Northwest.

Drop us a line today.

Idaho Title & Trust Co.
BOISE - - - IDAHO

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK
La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.
3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

6% 7% We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request

JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

8% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Income sure. Our mortgages never exceed 30 per cent actual value of security. Every farm is examined by our salaried inspector. We collect and remit interest free of charge, and net you Eight per cent. Our field is the rich agricultural valley of Eastern New Mexico. Diversified crops; prosperous farmers. Write for information and sample application of $500.00 loan on improved 160 acre farm.

THE UNION MORTGAGE CO.,
105 West Grand Ave., Clovis, New Mexico

Farm Mortgages 6%
Capital and Surplus, $350,000.00
Send for pamphlet "C." Interest and principal collected free. Highest references. Clients in 32 States. Established in 1883
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

GOOD 6% Farm Mortgages
The BEST and SAFEST Investment on Earth.
Write us for information regarding our Farm Mortgages on lands located in the fertile James River Valley, North Dakota. We guarantee to look after collection of interest so that the investment will net you 6%. Write us for lists.

H. J. JOHNSON LAND AND CATTLE CO.
OAKES. - - NORTH DAKOTA

A 6% January Investment

$2,500.00 First Mortgage secured by 160 acres tillable black loam, 3½ miles from Noble, Alberta, 110 acres under plow. Buildings worth $1,000.00. Mortgagor owns 42 horses, 30 cows, 500 sheep, 50 hogs, 1,280 acres other land, private grain elevator. Full particulars of this and other Alberta mortgages, $500.00 to $32,000 denominations on request.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer
1201 Granite Building :: Rochester, N. Y.

much larger than the total loss through commercial failures over the country.

—Promoters of wireless telephone stock were found guilty recently in New York on five counts charging conspiracy and use of mails to defraud.

—Directors of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific who held offices in both companies have resigned from one road following the recent supreme court order to "unscramble" the roads.

—It looks as though William Rockefeller would have to tell the Pujo committee something of his relation to high finance even though one vocal chord has disappeared and the other is diseased.

—Increased output of gold, which in 1912 totaled $465,000,000, probably has something to do with the depreciating value of the dollar. The geological survey says the output for the United States has probably reached its highest point.

—Losses at sea of insured ships and cargoes in 1912 were greater than for 250 years, according to Lloyd's of London. About $36,000,000 has been paid in claims, of which the Titanic was the largest. Over 227 vessels were lost.

Ministerial Obituary

Turner S. Bailey, D. D.

Turner S. Bailey, D. D., for sixteen years synodical superintendent of home missions in Iowa, died Jan. 14 at Cedar Rapids at the age of 72. He was born in Ohio and left an orphan at 8 years of age. In the civil war he lost his right arm. He completed his education at the University of Iowa and at Northwestern Theological Seminary, now McCormick, and at Union Seminary. His life work was in Iowa—perhaps there is no man to whom Iowa Presbyterians owe a greater debt. Lately he served Salem and Tranquility churches.

At the funeral services in First church chapel, Cedar Rapids, Dr. E. R. Burkhalter pastor, Dr. S. R. Ferguson, superintendent of Sabbath school missions; Rev. Scott W. Smith, assistant home missionary superintendent, and Dr. William Evans of Coe College took part. Dr. Bailey is survived by his widow and three children—Mrs. E. E. Hastings, wife of the pastor at Fort Dodge; Arthur Bailey, D. D., of Winnebago City, Minn., and Professor Bert H. Bailey, M. D., Coe College.

Rev. James P. Fulton

Rev. James Power Fulton died at his home in Harper, Kan., Jan. 4, in the 89th year of his age and in the sixty-third year of his ministry. He was graduated from Washington College in 1846 and from Western Seminary in 1849. Twenty-eight years of his fruitful ministry were spent in western Pennsylvania as pastor of Burgettstown, Old Salem, Pulaski and Dunlap's Creek churches. During the remaining years, up to his honorable retirement, he served as a home missionary in southern central Kansas. Mr. Fulton was an excellent scholar and an able preacher. His wife died nine years ago, three years after they had celebrated their golden wedding. Eight sons and two daughters survive.

* * *

Revival Services Successful

Beginning Jan. 5 five churches in Knoxville, Iowa, united for meetings under Evangelists Hendrick and Carter.

Special services were commenced Jan. 12 in Clifton Heights church, Des Moines, Iowa, by the pastor, Rev. J. B. Howard, assisted by Harlan A. Riggs.

In three days at Jamestown, N. Y., 871 people signed decision cards in meetings being held under the direction of Dr. W. E. Biederwolf. Of this number 635 were signed at the three Sunday services. The large building used is packed to the doors. A campaign against dances in the city hall is being prosecuted.

First, Second and Central churches of Auburn, N. Y., recently united in evangelistic services at Second church. Addresses were made by pastors of the united congregations.

Highland Park, Detroit, Mich., held neighborhood prayer meetings for two weeks in preparation for special services conducted by J. B. Worrall, D. D., of Pennsylvania, which commenced Jan. 13.

Evangelistic meetings were held recently in Bethel, Poplar and Hazeldell, Minn., churches by Dr. S. F. Sharpless, pastor at large of Red River Presbytery. A deep interest was shown. Rev. J. S. Turnbull is supplying this field.

Rev. William Rice of Detroit, Mich., synodical evangelist, who has been conducting successful meetings at Cadillac Avenue church, Detroit, at Rudyard and Dafter in the upper peninsula, and at Erie and Quincy, commenced meetings at Allegan Jan. 5.

The rural church of Morrison, Iowa, has recently been very largely increased in membership as the result of special services under the direction of Messrs. Rayburn and Griggs. The church has been without a pastor for eight months up to last August, when Rev. F. A. Heizer became pastor.

Rev. R. S. Sidebotham, pastor-evangelist of Adams Presbytery, conducted three weeks' special meetings in country points connected with the Euclid field, Minn. Preaching services had been conducted there since July by C. L. Wilcox. During the meetings a petition for church organization was passed, and was signed by sixteen, seven of whom will unite on profession. The church will soon be organized.

One of the greatest revivals ever held in the university town of Baldwin, Kan., has just closed under the leadership of Messrs. Hart and Magann of Fairbury, Ill. These meetings were the union of the churches and Baker University. Almost all the students not Christians were converted. Great interest was shown on college night, when the student body marched to the building headed by their brass band. The high school came in delegation. The evangelists are now in a union revival with the churches of Holton, Kan.

5% FARM MORTGAGES
ON IOWA and MINNESOTA FARMS are the SAFEST FORM of INVESTMENT—Tested by our customers for 40 years. We collect and remit interest wherever investors desire. Write for booklet and list.
ELLSWORTH AND JONES.
IOWA FALLS, IOWA.

Good Things in This Issue

Tucked away in various pages of each issue of The Continent are scores of excellent ideas which by reason of their modesty of presentation may be overlooked An idea of large value to a reader may be expressed in few words. Follow the suggestions under this head each week and the paper will mean more to you.

For the Pastor

The column of Ways of Working on page 121 this week will be read with interest by every pastor and active church member. A similar helpful budget will appear frequently—but only when there are available the descriptions of plans that are known to be workable because they have been worked. Don't hesitate to tell us about that one thing you did that made your work count for more. If a postcard will carry the story, so much the better; elaborate plans take up space and are usually less adaptable to the needs of others than the simple one-thing-at-a-time sort.

Some interesting facts about Korea which pastors may be able to use at missionary meetings this month appear on page 117.

Recent Christian Endeavor Activities

The Christian Endeavor society of Osakis Minn., church has recently supplied the class room of the church with chairs.

Rev. H. H. Rottmann, field secretary, was on of the principal speakers at the North Dakot Christian Endeavor convention in Jamestow recently.

Like Father's

Barber—"Well, my little man, how woul you like your hair cut?"

Freddy (aged 6, seated in a barber's chair)—"Like father's, with a round hole at the top."

Conferences on Magyar Work and the Superintendent's Task

Two conferences to be held in Cleveland the last week of January emphasize the progressive spirit informing Presbyterian home mission work, especially in its relation to the recent immigrant, industrial and city populations. Under the auspices of the department of immigration of the Home Board a conference on Magyar work will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, the 28th and 29th; the two days following will be devoted to a conference of presbyterial and synodical superintendents. The sessions will be held in the beautiful new Euclid Avenue church. The Magyar conference will enlist the attendance of all pastors of Magyar Presbyterian churches and representatives of the boards, training schools and seminaries, and presbyteries working among the Magyars.

The Magyars, the dominating race of Hungary today, are a large factor in recent immigration, and have a larger Protestant constituency than any other group of recent immigrants, estimated as high as 30 to 40 per cent. The Presbyterian work now includes thirty-five congregations, reporting a membership of over 2,500. The work is distributed among twenty-four presbyteries in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, New Jersey and Missouri. As a church, however, we have no unified nor well developed program of advance, and the need of some such better understanding is insistently felt. The program has been arranged by Rev. George W. King of St. Louis, Rev. Julius Hanko and Rev. Ladislaus Harsanyi, editor of the Presbyterian and Reformed weekly, Lapja. Further information may be had from Rev. William P. Shriver, superintendent department of immigration, 156 5th avenue, New York.

The superintendents' conference to be held Jan. 30 and 31 will enlist the attendance of men of national reputation. The program will include the discussion of such subjects as "Financing Presbyterial Work," "Effective Organization," "Comity," "Church Extension and Social Service," "The City Task and Presbytery's Resources." Joseph Ernest McAfee of the Home Board will address the conference on "The City Task and the Home Board." Information concerning this conference may be had from Charles L. Zorbaugh, D. D., 1225 Schofield building, Cleveland, Ohio.

W. P. Shriver.

Move Church Across a River

The edifice of Southern church in Ford, Ky., may soon be moved across the Kentucky river on flatboats to Boonesboro, where there is a congregation without a structure. The congregation at Ford has nearly disappeared. The moving is said to be less expensive than the erection of a new building.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Chicago—Chicago, Assembly Hall, Feb. 3, 10.

Resignations

Illinois—Coal City: W. E. Youtsler.
Nebraska—Madison: H. McClenaghan.
Minnesota—Crookston: E. W. Akers.
New York—Hamptonburg: William Brown Johnson.
Pennsylvania—Wilkes-Barre Welsh: R. T. Roberts.

Calls

Delaware—Glasgow: George S. Smith, accepts.
Illinois—Toledo First: W. E. Youtsler, accepts.
Indiana—Franklin Hopewell: J. B. Ferguson, accepts.
Kansas—Rolfe: A. Z. McGogney, accepts.
Michigan—Vassar First: Paul Heiligman, accepts.
Minnesota—Wheaton: W. H. Clatworthy, accepts; Roseau: J. S. Goehring.
New Jersey—Phillipsburg First: William Brown Johnson, accepts.
Ohio—Newark Second: D. D. Tullis.

Installations

Michigan—Deckerville and Bridgehampton: H. N. Simpson, Jan. 16.
Minnesota—Warroad: J. T. L. Coates, Jan. 28.
Pennsylvania—Cold Spring and Lebanon: S. V. Bedickian, Jan. 23.

Vacant Pulpits

Illinois—Warren.
Iowa—Albia; write W. E. Giltner.
New York—Monroe, C. H. Seaman clerk; Palisades, W. S. Gilman clerk; Hamptonburg, J. K. Egbertson clerk; Campbell Hall and Greenbush.

Supplies Arranged

Michigan—Port Hope and Bloomfield: Herbert Hall.

Accessions

Colorado—Boulder First, 23, Jan. 12, H. B. Hummel pastor.

Illinois—Kewanee, 13, Jan. 5, W. F. Jones pastor; Chicago Normal Park, 15, Jan. 5, O. M. Caward pastor; Chicago Belden Avenue, 7, Jan. 12, W. H. Phelps pastor.

Indiana—Michigan City, 15, Jan. 12, H. D. Borley pastor; Newcastle, 15, Jan. 12, T. W. Maguire pastor; Indianapolis Meridian Heights, 5, Jan. 12, Alfred Martin pastor; Portland, 18, Jan. 5, S. W. Huffer pastor; Plymouth, 5, Jan. 5, W. C. Logan pastor.

Iowa—Cedar Rapids Westminster, 13, Jan. 12, Pressly Thompson pastor; Mediapolis, 13, Jan. 12, Philip Palmer pastor; Des Moines Clifton Heights, 16, Dec. 1-29, J. B. Howard pastor; Jefferson, 8, Jan. 12, Charles W. Caldwell pastor; Davenport, 37, Jan. 12, L. M. Coffman pastor; Morrison, 53, Jan. 5, F. A. Heizer pastor; LaGrange, 10, Jan. 5, J. B. Chase pastor; Des Moines Cottage Grove Avenue, 9, Jan. 5, J. W. Countermine, pastor; Council Bluffs, 47, Jan. 5, G. A. Ray pastor.

Michigan—Benton Harbor, 6, Jan. 5, C. F. Bronson pastor.

Minnesota—Winnebago, 18, Jan. 12, Arthur G. Bailey pastor.

New York—Boonville First, 25, Jan. 5, T. F. Jessup pastor; Cohocton, 25, Jan. 12, S. H. Beshgatour pastor; Auburn Calvary, 16, Dec. 29, V. N. Yergin pastor; Potsdam First, 28, Jan. 12, Frank B. Cowan pastor; Onondaga Valley, 20, Jan. 5, A. W. Taylor stated supply.

Nebraska—Emerson, 1, Jan. 12, H. A. Brown pastor.

Ohio—Cincinnati Covenant, 22, Jan. 12, Robert Watson pastor.

Oklahoma—Tahlequah First, 29, Jan. 5, G. S. Sutton pastor.

Oregon—Portland First, 33, Jan. 5, John H. Boyd pastor; Portland Fourth, 13, Jan. 5; Portland Hawthorne, 36, Jan. 5, A. Nelson Allen pastor; Portland Mizpah, 10, Dec. 29, Harry Leeds pastor; Portland Hope, 21, Dec. 29, S. W. Seeman pastor; Portland Piedmont, 28, Dec. 29, J. E. Snyder pastor; Portland Vernon, 4, Dec. 29, H. N. Mount pastor; Portland Third, 17, Dec. 29, A. L. Hutchison pastor; Pilot Rock, 16, Dec. 29, E. Warrington pastor; Portland Kenilworth, 10, Dec. 29, Leslie K. Richardson pastor.

Pennsylvania—Philadelphia Oxford, 10, Jan. 12, J. W. Francis pastor; Philadelphia North, 11, Jan. 12, G. S. Burnfield pastor; Philadelphia Hope, 10, Jan. 12, J. G. Bolton pastor; Philadelphia Logan, 15, Jan. 12, M. S. Bush pastor; Philadelphia Olivet Covenant, 8, Jan. 5, M. S. Hyndman pastor; Jenkintown, 12, Jan. 12, W. K. Foster pastor; Wyncote, 9, Jan. 12, W. B. Lower pastor; Indiana, 28, Jan. 12, F. S. Crawford pastor.

South Dakota—White Lake, 7, Jan. 5, Edward Van Ruschen pastor.

Texas—Austin First, 18, November-December, A. F. Bishop pastor.

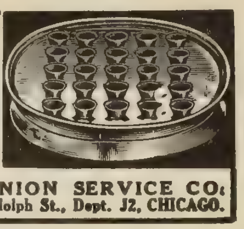
Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

Anderson—James Kenelm Anderson, Jr., aged 34 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Anderson of Milwaukee, entered into rest at Oshkosh, Wis., on Christmas Day. His boyhood home was at Waukesha, Wis., he was educated at Carroll College and Lake Forest University, and entered Princeton Theological Seminary in the fall of 1899. At the seminary he was a member of the "Benham Club." Overstudy brought on an illness which prevented the completion of his course, and from which he never fully recovered. A rare Christian devotion characterized him from his earliest years, and through his long ailment his faith was his great support and joy. He was a member of the Immanuel church of Milwaukee at the time of his death.

This is to certify that Rev. William J. Herbison, a member of Denver Presbytery, was, on Jan. 14, 1913, suspended from the office of the gospel ministry, and that by order of presbytery the sentence of suspension is published.

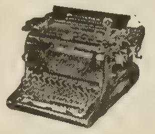
George R. Edmundson, Stated Clerk.



INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO. 20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.



TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED

Samples at Wholesale

Get in Business for Yourself

Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.

Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.

MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

THE GIST OF THE LESSON R.A. TORREY
POST PAID 25¢ NET

"FITS THE VEST POCKET"

The Gist of the Lesson

By R. A. TORREY

A Vest-pocket "Multum in Parvo." Each lesson fully explained (three whole pages); special emphasis of the text; prayer meeting topics, etc.

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY
N. Y., 158 5th Ave. Chicago, 125 N. Wabash

Attractive Sunday Evenings

With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to The Continent and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

REAL ESTATE

ARKANSAS BARGAIN—160 ACRE FARM LOCATED about 1½ miles south of Oliver, Ark., on R. R. 20 acres cleared. Most of tract can be farmed. Good ranch, fruit and pasture land. Oak, hickory, gum and other timber. Near church and school. Three-room house, barn, well, spring, etc. No trades. Price for quick sale $5.25 per acre, cash. Ringland, McAlester, Okla.

HOMESEEKERS OF LIMITED MEANS AND LITTLE experience are making $50 to $300 an acre from poultry, fruit, and general farming in the South. $10 to $30 an acre buys excellent farms. The Southern Railway Lines will find a suitable location. The "Southern Field" magazine free. M. V. Richards, Land & Industrial Agent, Room 22, Washington, D. C.

PRESBYTERIANS WANTED — IRRIGATED FRUIT lands, good, water rights, reservoir, fine schools, church, climate. Rev. Morley, Penrose, Colo.

MISCELLANEOUS

MEMPHIS, TENN., COURT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN church, Charles M. Collins, minister.

WANTED—AN ASSISTANT MINISTER FOR CITY church. Little pulpit work. Chiefly pastoral visitation and organization. Unmarried man in middle age or past preferred. Salary $1,500 and housing. E. B., The Continent.

WANTED—BIBLE COLPORTEURS ON SALARY and correspondents on commission, to work for the American Bible Society in North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana and Illinois. Write S. H. Kirkbride, American Bible Society, Chicago.

SOCIAL WORKER AND CHURCH SECRETARY. POSITION desired by young woman. Address The Continent, Box 15, New York City.

WANTED—CLERGYMEN. THE PUBLISHERS OF DR. Eliot's five foot shelf of books desire to be represented by a few clergymen who will call and explain this work to persons who have expressed their interest in it. The remuneration is liberal. If you believe the promotion of good literature to be a dignified service and can give all or part of your time to very profitable work, write us. Publishers, 418 W. 13th St., New York City.

TOURS

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WILL CONDUCT A select company to London for a month. For particulars inquire of Rev. J. E. Day, Butte Falls, Oregon.

SPEND YOUR VACATION IN EUROPE. SELECT, party sails July 2 for two months tour, visiting all the points of interest in Continental and Island Europe. Booklet free. Rev. B. Willoughby, Wadena, Minn.

EUROPEAN TOUR JUNE 24. CONDUCTED BY REV. Andrew J. Graham. Send for Itinerary. Studying art? Going abroad? 50 cents buys our catalogue of 400 "Representative Paintings"; giving artist, subject and place. New York Travel Club, Pierce Bldg., Boston, Mass

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857). Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

This World-Renowned Work, published in smaller and more volumes

WAS $49

Bound Complete in Six Big Volumes with Complete Index

NOW $10

The grandest library of Bible Knowledge and Teaching in existence, at the most sweeping reduction ever made on a work of similar value. Originally published and sold in a bulky and unwieldy set of 25 small volumes at $49.00, we now offer THE CONTINENT readers the identical complete work compactly bound in seven volumes at a fraction of the original cost FOR A LIMITED TIME.

WE NOT ONLY SAVE YOU $39.00
BUT GUARANTEE SATISFACTION.

BUT YOU MUST ACT QUICKLY!

AN EXPOSITION of the BIBLE

"By far the best commentary on Genesis."—The Churchman, New York.

"Full of spiritual truth and instruction."—Christian Work.

"Young ministers will find it a mine of treasure."—New York Evangelist.

"Unusually fresh and bright."—Presbyterian and Reformed Review.

"Delightful and instructive reading."—The Continent.

"Rich imagery and elegant diction."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"It easily takes its place in the front rank of works which have for their object the understanding of the Bible, and the application of its teachings to practical life."—The Outlook.

"The preacher who cannot derive very material assistance from these volumes must be a difficult person to help."—The Living Church.

INDEX
AN EXPOSITION OF THE BIBLE VOL I
AN EXPOSITION OF THE BIBLE VOL II
AN EXPOSITION OF THE BIBLE VOL III
AN EXPOSITION OF THE BIBLE VOL IV
AN EXPOSITION OF THE BIBLE VOL V
AN EXPOSITION OF THE BIBLE VOL VI

"The plan is most admirable, being in the nature of expository lectures rather than consecutive and verbal comments, and its carrying out by foremost preachers and theologians secures scientific and scholarly thoroughness, along with popular and practical interest."—The Christian Intelligencer.

"This series is proving that the exposition of the Scriptures need be neither dry or wearisome, and preachers will do well to study these volumes, as examples of expository style and method."—The Watchman

For the Preacher

it affords endless material to enrich his sermons, both in history, criticism, and exposition.

For the Teacher

it provides overwhelming resources of attaining or communicating Scriptural knowledge or answering questions.

For the Layman

it spreads a matchless feast of instruction and comfort.

This great work consists of six large volumes and index volume solidly packed with thousands of the most practical and valuable helps for the preacher, teacher and Bible student. Unlike the ordinary commentary with its details and technicality this vast library of Bible helps actually expounds the Word of God. The contents are made up of scholarly, suggestive and intensely interesting expository lectures on all the books of the Bible, contributed by the foremost preachers and theologians of the day—men whose very names are the highest assurance of the far-reaching value of their contributions. The work has won universal praise from the entire religious press and pulpit.

SIX MASSIVE VOLUMES averaging 876 pages each, 10⅜ x 7¼ inches, strong handsome buckram binding. IN ADDITION TO INDISPENSABLE NEW INDEX VOLUME CONTAINING nearly 1,400 chapters, 5,261 pages, exhaustiv[illegible]minating every topic and every phase of each chapter and book of the Old and New Testament by

Twenty-seve[illegible]'s Most Eminent Biblical Scholars

Sparks Marion E ‡ jan13
1205 Springfield av

Distinguished Authors and Their Contributions:—Genesis, St. John, First Corinthians, MARCUS DODS, D. D. Exodus, St. Mark, G. A. CHADWICK, D. D. Leviticus, S. H. KELLOGG, D. D. Numbers, Judges, Ruth, Job, R. A WATSON, D. D. Deuteronomy, ANDREW HARPER, D. D, Joshua, First and Second Samuel, W. G. BLAIKIE, D. D., LL. D. First and Second Kings, Daniel, DEAN F. W. FARRAR, D. D. First and Second Chronicles, W. H. BENNETT, M.A. Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Song of Solomon, Lamentations, W. F. ADENEY, M.A. Psalms, Colossians, Philemon, ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. Proverbs, R. F. HORTON, D.D. Ecclesiastes, SAMUEL COX, D.D. Isaiah, Twelve Minor Prophets, GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., LL.D. Jeremiah, C. J. BALL, M.A Ezekiel, JOHN SKINNER, M. A. St. Matthew, J. MUNRO GIBSON, D.D. St. Luke, HENRY BURTON, M.A. Acts of the Apostles, G. T. STOKES, D.D. Romans, H. C. G. MOULE, D.D. Second Corinthians, Thessalonians, JAMES DENNEY, D.D. Galatians, Ephesians, E. G. FINDLAY, D.D. Philippians, ROBERT RAINEY, D.D. First and Second Timothy, Titus, James, Jude, A. PLUMMER, D.D. Hebrews, C. T. EDWARDS, D.D. First and Second Peter, J. R. LUMBY, D.D. First, Second and Third John, W. ALEXANDER, D.D. Revelation, W. MILLIGAN, DD.

FEATURES OF INDISPENSABLE VALUE TO EVERY PREACHER, TEACHER, STUDENT

"All of the volumes are replete with instruction, and embody the best and latest results of Biblical criticism and study. As a whole, indeed, they are the best practical exposition of the Scriptures in the English language."—Reformed Church Review.

Thousands of preachers, teachers, and Bible students will realize the importance and far-reaching practical value of this library.

The Bible's Richest Treasures

The richest, most suggestive, and most inspiring portions of the Bible are selected, illustrated, and analyzed in the most helpful and interesting way.

A Library of Right-Hand Helps

Preachers, students and teachers cannot afford to be without this massive library of helps to the more thorough, scholarly and satisfying interpretation of the Scriptures.

New Beauties of Scripture

New beauties of Scripture are disclosed to the preacher and student, and a treasure seed thought is provided which is almost inexhaustible.

You Take No Risk

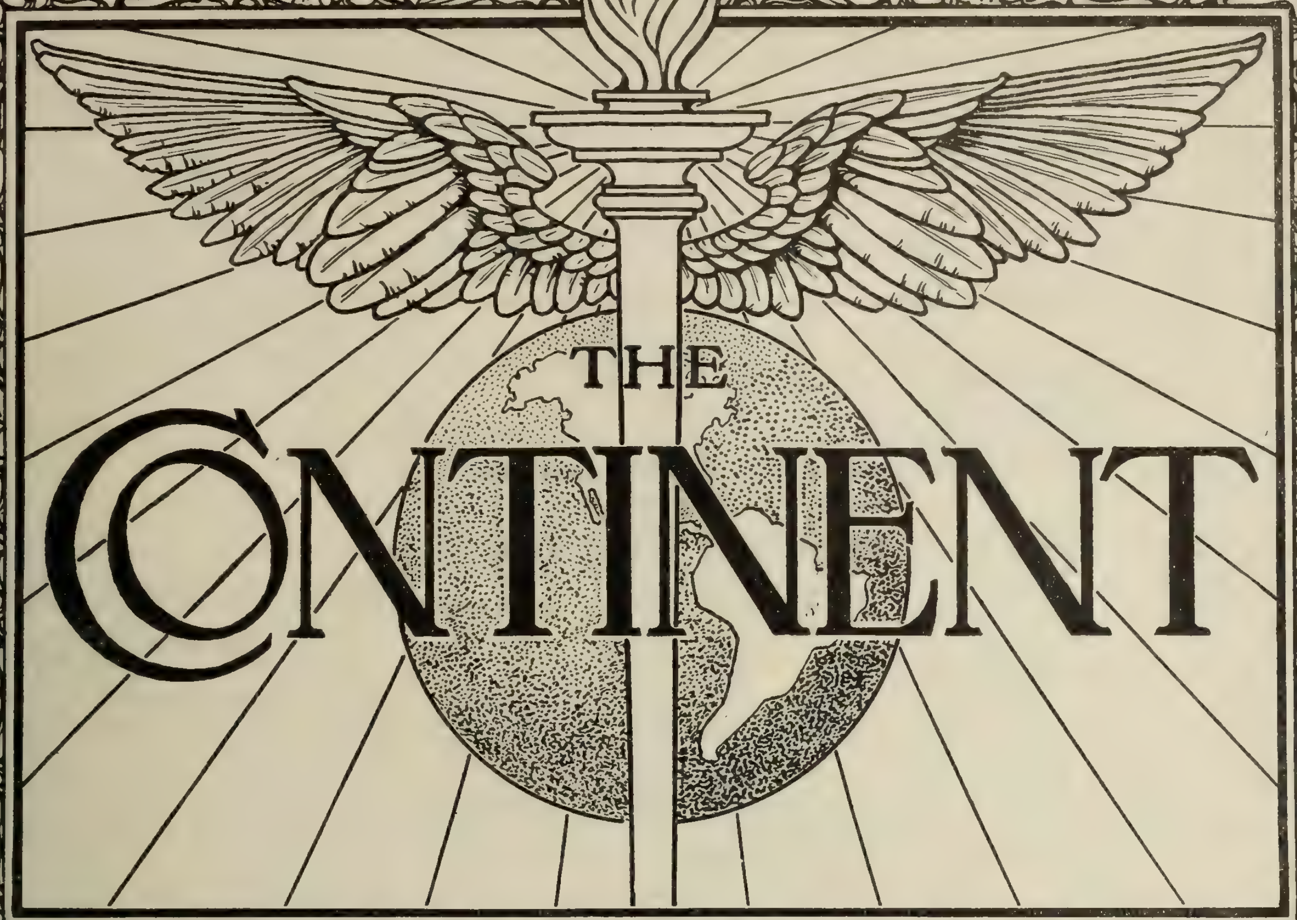
"The series is planned so as to give the reader all the good of a scientific commentary without the padding, technicality, and detail . . . In every book of the Bible the rich, fertile and perpetually significant portions are selected, and continuously analyzed, illustrated and explained by interpreters who are scholarly yet interesting."—British Weekly.

If Not Satisfactory You May Return

HOW TO ORDER

On the Monthly Payment Plan we require an advance of $1.00 with order, and promise to pay $1.00 monthly for eleven months. Books forwarded at once on receipt of cash price or first installment of $1.00. Customers pay freight or express charges. Customers at remote points or in foreign countries desiring us to prepay will send 20c. per volume to cover cost of postage or express. Safe delivery guaranteed to any station in the country or to any mail point in the world. We will take back books that are not satisfactory in ten days after examination and return money, deducting only the return transportation charges. As to our reliability, we refer you to the publisher of this paper, or to any commercial agency. Established 1866.

S. S. SCRANTON CO., Publishers, 84 Trumbull St., Hartford, Conn.



THE CONTINENT

JANUARY 30, 1913

Southern Laymen's Quiet Leader

WILLIAM T. ELLIS

Pensions for Preachers

EDITORIAL

Problems of Pastor and People

SYMPOSIUM

The Godfather of the "World" Idea—H. H. Smith
"Young America" Prize Stories on the Rabbit Picture

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. The Continent's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of The Continent. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

THE CONTINENT EDUCATIONAL BUREAU
509 Wabash Avenue - - - CHICAGO

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Glendale College

Glendale, Ohio
Suburban to Cinctnnat

Young women may enter the second semester February 3d, to their advantage. Liberal arrangements and superior teachers in every department.

MISS R. J. DEVORE, President.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Illinois

NURSES PASSAVANT

are given a thorough and practical three years training at Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

A BOY'S WHOLE TIME

Must be profitably occupied if he is to receive the best kind of education: the kind that stands for moral strength, intellectual alertness, physical fitness. LAKE FOREST ACADEMY merits the serious consideration of those who understand the manifold needs of a boy.

Address WILLIAM MATHER LEWIS,
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD

A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.

M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Tennessee

Greeneville and Tusculum College

Strong Faculty. Healthful climate. Broad and liberal courses. Positive Christian influences. Expenses reasonable. Pres., Rev. C. O. GRAY, D.D., Greeneville, Tenn.

Ward Seminary

For Girls and Young Women

42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres., Nashville, Tenn.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.

W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place' Catalogue mailed free. Address

H. B. BROWN, President.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Where The Continent may be obtained in various cities

NEW YORK

Brentano's 5th avenue and 27th street.
Wanamaker's, Broadway and 10th street

BROOKLYN

T. B. Ventres, 286 Livingston street.

PHILADELPHIA

Wanamaker's, 1210 Walnut street.
Board of Publication, Witherspoon Bldg.

WASHINGTON

Ballantyne & Sons, 428 7th street, N. W.
Woodward and Lothrop.

PITTSBURGH

Presbyterian Depository, Fulton Bldg.

CINCINNATI

The Western Tract Society, 420 Elm street.

NASHVILLE

Presbyterian Depository, 415 Church st.

CHICAGO

A. C. McClurg & Co., 222 So. Wabash ave.
C. A. McDonald, 6 W. Washington street.

ST. LOUIS

Presbyterian Depository, 505 N. 7th street.

DENVER

Fisher Book and Stationery Company.

SAN FRANCISCO

Presbyterian Depository, 400 Sutter street.

LOS ANGELES

Fowler Brothers, 543 So. Broadway.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only

C105 Church F'rnit're	School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture	Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture	Office Desks D105

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

Advertising is news

You read the editorials, the news items and the stories of the day to store your mind and give you food for thought and conversation. Is it not of equal importance that you should read the advertising which shows the way to more comfortable living and more economical buying of the things you must have, and teaches you of new contrivances and inventions which add to the joy of living? Who can deny the real news value of advertising which tells of things that inventive minds have actually produced for your benefit and betterment? See advertising in its right light and you will realize that our advertisers should command your interest as much as our editors.

THE ADVERTISING MANAGER

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

REAL ESTATE

PRESBYTERIANS WANTED—IRRIGATED FRUIT lands, good; water rights, reservoir, fine schools, church, climate. Rev. Morley, Penrose, Colo.

ESCAPE THE COLD WINTERS. LOCATE ON A southeastern farm. Profitable lands $10 to $30 an acre—easy terms. Poultry, truck and fruit pay $50 to $300 an acre. Unexcelled living conditions. Land lists and the "Southern Field" magazine free. M. V. Richards, Land and Industrial Agent, Southern Railway, Room 22, Washington, D. C.

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED—CORPORATION PARTNER HAVING twenty-five hundred dollars; layman or clergy. Address H, The Continent, Chicago.

MUSICIAN, DESIRING PERMANENT LOCATION, would accept post of organist, at small salary, in community where good piano class is obtainable. References. G, care The Continent, Chicago.

ORGANIST, 16 YEARS IN PROMINENT CHURCH, DEsires position. Superior choir trainer. Children's voices. Address S, The Continent, New York.

WANTED—BOYS, GIRLS, HOUSEWIVES TO CANvass among their friends with tooth powder and toilet preparations. We trust you. Pay when sold. Double your money. Henry Harmon, Amsterdam, N. Y.

A WELL KNOWN AMERICAN BARITONE SEEKS situation as director of chorus choir in a community where vocal studio can be opened. References. Address I, care The Continent, Chicago.

LANTERN SLIDE RENTAL. CUSTOMERS SAY WE "make good." "The pictures solve Sunday evening problem." "No better slides can be made." "Perfect satisfaction." "Crowded houses." Send for booklet by Dr. John Clark Hill. Church Supply Co., E. Madison, Springfield, Ohio.

MEMPHIS, TENN., COURT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN church, Charles M. Collins, minister.

WANTED—BIBLE COLPORTEURS ON SALARY and correspondents on commission, to work for the American Bible Society in North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana and Illinois. Write S. H. Kirkbride, American Bible Society, Chicago.

TOURS

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WILL CONDUCT A select company to London for a month. For particulars inquire of Rev. J. E. Day, Butte Falls, Oregon.

EUROPEAN TOUR JUNE 24. CONDUCTED BY REV. Andrew J. Graham. Send for Itinerary. Studying art? Going abroad? 50 cents buys our catalogue of 400 "Representative Paintings"; giving artist, subject and place. New York Travel Club, Pierce Bldg., Boston, Mass

EUROPE and ORIENT. 32nd Year. Limited Parties. Comfort and Leisure. Thorough Sight-seeing. Expert Guidance. Strictly first-class. Special Tours for Private Parties. PAINE TOURS, Glens Falls, N. Y.

PIPE AND REED ORGANS

AND PIANOS

Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., PEKIN, ILL.

Attractive Sunday Evenings

With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

"A FAIR FACE MAY PROVE A FOUL BARGAIN." MARRY A PLAIN GIRL IF SHE USES SAPOLIO

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
Everett Sisson, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1913

Spiritual Meaning of Ministerial Pensions 137

Editorial—

Our Needless Battles 140
Just Unity—That Is a Big Field 140

The World—

Revolt in Turkey Upsets Peace Plans 138
Seven Bills for New Jersey Trusts 138

Religious World—

First of Evangelistic Institutes 139

Problems of Pastor and People—

How People Can Make Preacher .... W. Beatty Jennings 142
The Pastor Hunt—The Ethics of It .... A. S. Fiske 142
The Vacant Church and Why .... J. E. McAfee 143
The Man Who Leads Southern Laymen (with Portrait) .... William T. Ellis 144
The Godfather of an Idea (with Portrait) .... Herbert H. Smith 146
Went to China to Be Converted .. P. B. J. 146
Bradford Horton, Man. Chapter XIII.—Continued .... Richard S. Holmes 147
The Home Council—Brightening Hospital Hours .... Elizabeth L. Gebhard 148
Young America—The Story the Picture Told Me. Prize Contest 149
The Sunday School .... J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 150
Devotional Service .... E. A. Wicher 151
Young People's Service .... W. T. Ellis 151

Missionay Work—

The Turkish War and After .... F. E. Hoskins 152
New Books 153
The Open Hearth 154
Ways of Working 155
News from Religious Field—Beginning 157

Around the Shop

"The safe braggart is the one who has no mirror." We are not sure who said that, or that anybody had said the sentence before it overflowed the first line of this weekly chat with The Continent family. The Around-the-Shop Man does not seek to analyze or apply the assertion, except to the extent of saying that he doesn't believe in mirrors, anyway.

His safety lies in bragging about other folk, and particularly about the folk who make and those who read The Continent. This happens to be the turn of those who make.

As everybody knows, The Chicago Daily News is one of the greatest newspapers in the land, a pioneer and an originator. It has issued for 1913, as usual, a desk calendar for its advertisers, each daily double leaf displaying three sentiments. The quotations are singularly unhackneyed and diversified, and the great preponderance of them are very modern.

The really remarkable quality of the selections is readily explainable by the Around-the-Shop Man. Three of the editors of The Continent are quoted by name and they are represented in this collection by more than a dozen selections.

The point is plain. Here is a great secular journal, which sees all the leading religious publications of the world, quoting from The Continent alone, and quoting repeatedly. If the foregoing means anything in particular it means that:

The Continent has point.

Its utterances are worth repeating.

They are modern and practical, and deemed fit for an "efficiency" calendar.

If these selections are valued by the progressive folks to whom these calendars are sent—and The Daily News list is most carefully selected—what must the whole paper be worth to any normal American—that neighbor of yours, for example, who needs only a hearty word from you to persuade him to share the benefit?

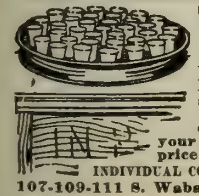
CHURCH FURNISHINGS

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

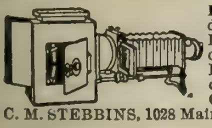
Memorial Windows
Beautiful in design, highest quality in materials, best workmanship in execution. We number many Presbyterian churches among our patrons. Let us tell you what we can do for you. Write today for particulars.
FLANAGAN & BIEDENWEG CO., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.



The Best Way
The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago



Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat, or Acetylene Generator, $29.00. Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus. Get our latest catalog and terms.
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

WEDDING
INVITATIONS
ANNOUNCEMENTS
CALLING CARDS
FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work? The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S·S·SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog FD"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog FA
School Desks, Catalog FC
American Seating Company
218 S WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

Representative Wanted
Employment can be given another man of suitable age and experience to act as subscription field representative of The Continent in specially good territory. The work will be found pleasant and profitable. Give age, references and qualifications in your reply, addressing "B,"
The Continent
156 Fifth Avenue :: New York City

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

Livingstone Centenary Program

As the 100th anniversary of the birth of David Livingstone, March 19, falls four days previous to Easter and the attention of churches throughout the land will be directed at the Easter season to the Livingstone centenary, the Foreign Board in its Easter program for Sunday schools, entitled "The Message of Light," has combined the idea of Easter with that of the Livingstone centenary. The supplement provides recitations, songs, an exercise for unveiling Livingstone's portrait and general directions for use.

For the lithographed portrait of Livingstone, 12 by 17 inches in size, a charge of 15 cents is made. All the other supplies are free, if the Easter offering of the Sunday school is contributed to foreign missions through the Presbyterian Foreign Board. Order at once from Rev. George H. Trull, Sunday School Secretary Board of Foreign Missions, Room 908, 156 5th avenue, New York.

Registered Trade Mark Established Half a Century

Dress Linens and Cottons

For 1913

Dress Linens—The assortment this season fully equals that of previous years, embracing all the newest weaves and colorings which are being used by the leading Paris modistes.

Among the Dress Linens will be found many novel weaves, such as "Linen Eponge," "Basket Weave Crash," "Cossack Crash," "Crepe Linen" and Linen "Tweeds," as well as all the more staple weaves in French, Irish and Austrian makes. Most of the above are shown in white and a complete range of new shades.

Cotton Fabrics—Decided novelties in the Cotton Fabrics will be shown, comprising Bordered Crepes. Ratines, Voiles and Linens in white and colors, French Tuscan Crepes, Velours, Ratines in solid colors, two-toned Diagonal and Black and White effects, French Crepes and Voiles printed and embroidered in pompadour style on white and tinted grounds, Voile Messidor in neat floral and bordered designs, Silk Stripe Voiles, printed Handkerchief Linens, English Ottoman Cords, Embroidered St. Gall Swisses, Poplins, Repps, Dimities and an exclusive range of the celebrated D. & J. Anderson's Ginghams.

Shirtings—Scotch and English Madras, Russian Cords, Satin Broche. Crepes, Printed French Percales, Silk Mixed and All Silk Materials. "Peau de Crepe," the best silk fabric for Ladies' Waists and Men's Shirts.

Samples of any of the above lines (except the bordered materials) will be mailed free upon request.

James McCutcheon & Co.,

5th Avenue & 34th Street, N. Y.

Did You Ever See Abraham Lincoln?

I stood near him at Gettysburg
He spoke in front of our house
I saw him in debate with Douglas

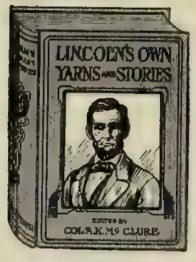
Readers of The Continent have contributed a really remarkable collection of personal reminiscences of the great war president in the special Lincoln Anniversary Number February 6. None of these stories of the great story teller has previously been printed

Read them in next week's Continent

The American people never grow tired of reading about Abraham Lincoln, and the personal touches in this series of short articles by readers of this paper have an appeal to the old and young

The sight of a great man is one long to be remembered and many of those who write for this special number were boys when they caught a glimpse of the long form of Lincoln. Others were in the army, one sick in a hospital. Some were fortunate enough to have been in the towns through which he passed on his journeys. Each article is different, each adds to the memory of a great man. Tell your friends that these stories of a great leader can be read in no other publication

Lincoln's Own Yarns and Stories



With an introduction by

Col. A. J. McClure

Free to Continent readers

Lincoln could tell more in a story than most men can bring out in an hour. The stories in this book are the best that have been gathered and are just as Lincoln told them. The volume makes a splendid souvenir of him at this fiftieth anniversary of the Civil War.

You will enjoy this book

Authentic stories, yarns and ancedotes that Lincoln told are here collected in convenient form for reading or reference. There is wit, pathos and humor blended as only he could do it. The reading of these stories will cheer many a dull day. He is acknowledged as one of the best story tellers the country ever had. Here are the best of his stories covering every phase of his life from the backwoods days to his rule in the White House.

How to get the book—By special arrangement with the Philadelphia publishers The Continent offers this volume of 416 pages, illustrated, bound in cloth, free to subscribers. Send us one new subscriber to The Continent who will pay in advance for six months, $1.25, and we will send you the book without charge. Get your neighbor to give you $2.50 for a year's subscription and we will give you two copies of the book and send them to different addresses. If all your neighbors take the paper and you have no friend for whom you care to subscribe, you may have the book for 75c. This offer is open only for a short time. Send the money to The Continent, 509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, or 156 Fifth Ave., New York City

The National Presbyterian Weekly for all the Family

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 5 JANUARY 30, 1913 WHOLE No. 2227

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

Spiritual Meaning of Ministerial Pensions

PENSIONS FOR PREACHERS—IS THE IDEA GOOD?

In current church progress there is hardly any development more interesting than the invasion of a new thought into the field of what has been heretofore called "ministerial relief."

That term "relief" betrays a good deal of history. This "cause" was set afoot out of pity. Nobody could help taking notice of the great number of ministers who came to want in their old age, or dying in middle life, left widows and children in want. Such cases were very painful. It was a pathetic humiliation for people of so much culture and social prominence to "come on the town" or county for support out of the pauper fund.

Therefore, to take off the edge of that humiliation, a church fund was started for ministerial families in need. This seemed more dignified than leaving them to the mercy of the public poormaster.

The impulse behind this act was real Christian charity—not to be disparaged by any means. Yet, after all, pity governed it.

Probably that was a necessary first stage. The church deserves vast credit for doing generously in that stage. But it is still more to the credit of the church that it has not stopped with that stage. A step beyond and higher has already been taken.

The thought of relief for aged and disabled ministers and their dependents has been succeeded by the thought of pensions.

* * *

Persons of a practical turn of mind may think it rather vaporous to make so much of the difference between these two ideas. One comes to the same thing as the other, they may say, if only the needy are warmed and fed.

But they are not the same. Consideration sensitive enough to realize how much easier it is for these beneficiaries to take aid from a church donation than from a public tax levy, ought also to appreciate that it is easier to receive a pension than a dole.

Yet it is not with the beneficiaries that the distinction between pensioning aged ministers and merely relieving their poverty signifies most. The importance of getting the old idea out of the way and the new into its place, has mainly to do with the effect of the change on the church. The new theory of this benevolence, when it prevails, will better the spirit and efficiency of the church on every side of its duty. Here briefly is the ground for saying so:

The church cannot work out the biggest possibilities of its power until it genuinely realizes itself as one solid, indivisible, organic commonwealth of God. And pensioning ministers in their old age is one of the most direct means of cultivating that realization.

* * *

What is the logic of this assertion? To make it plainer, ask why pensions seem so appropriate in the civil government.

Nobody thinks it a far-fetched idea for the United States to give pensions to old soldiers. Why not?

Because everybody feels that the veterans of the army are men who once cast aside all their own personal advantage and gave their service regardless of self for the advantage of the nation. Therefore, it is self-apparent justice for the nation to take thought of them when their strength is broken.

But such a sentiment cannot be felt except where there is a strong, fixed sense that the nation is one; that every citizen in it is bound up with every other citizen in the common good; that whoever serves his country serves all his fellow patriots and is entitled in turn to be served by all.

But suppose that just such a sentiment takes an equal hold in the church—that the sense of solidarity among its individual units becomes as strong in the church as the nation feels it in the noblest moments of patriotism. What then?

Why, the church will then certainly look on its ministers as servants of the common purpose of the church, exactly as soldiers enlisted for the war are servants of the common purpose of the nation.

And just as soldiers who come back disabled from the war are taken care of by the nation—or if they fall in battle, their families are looked after—so the ministers of the church, when disablement overtakes them, will be provided for by the church, and their families sustained when they are gone.

And all this will be done not by way of pity for individuals who have fallen into misfortune but by way of fair recompense to good soldiers who have given all of themselves in the church's behalf.

* * *

Every minister thus honorably pensioned by the church when his working days are over, exerts thereafter by the object lesson of his personality two influences of the highest value:

In the first place, he stands as proof to the world and the church itself that the church is not a harum-scarum crowd chancing to hustle along together in the same road, but an army with purpose and discipline marching to a known conflict under leadership which it trusts in action and honors when age compels retirement.

The impression which the church makes on the world when it acts in a way showing that it feels itself an army, must be incalculably vaster than when it acts like a crowd. And an orderly retirement and pensioning of its veteran leaders is not merely imitation of an army; it is how the church must act when it gets the army sense.

In the second place, the man who receives in his old age loving and honorable care rendered as a debt owed him for his usefulness in the church's universal task will not lack for successors.

The recruiting of the ministry with strong men cannot be stimulated in any human way more powerfully than by fixed proof of the fact that the ministry is service to the church as a whole—appreciated as such, and not ultimately dependent on temporary and local favors from separate congregations.

Moreover, this system makes for finer ministerial devotion. The conscientious minister who foresees himself a pensioner on his church simply cannot longer think of himself as a man making his own career for his own sake.

Pensions for the church's ministry are the manifest token that the church will not tolerate a less ministry than utter consecration. The very establishment of such a church program shames every thought of looking to the ministerial office as a personal career.

* * *

These are tangible results to be expected from substituting a fixed retirement allowance for all aged or disabled ministers in place of distributing grants to those who are discovered to be in penury.

Of course, it will cost more. But if the gains herein enumerated and analyzed are given the weight due to them, The Continent has no doubt that the business judgment of the laity will esteem the change amply worth the increased cost—and more besides.

The World

Revolt in Turkey Upsets Peace Plans

All that has been written since the first of last month about the early and easy conclusion of the Turko-Balkan war must now be recalled and rewritten because of the startling series of events in Constantinople last week. The commanding general of the army was killed—apparently without premeditation—the prime minister and his cabinet were forced out of office, the regime of the older Turkish leaders was overthrown and the Young Turks regained the power they lost last August. On top of these kaleidoscopic changes came wild rumors of an attempt to establish a republic and other more probable stories of internal revolt.

Just what the Young Turks would do with the power they rudely seized was not clearly apparent, but as for purchasing peace at the price of the cherished Adrianople, to say nothing of the other hard conditions—no, thundered the new government.

The downfall of the old ministry came with dramatic and even pathetic suddenness. Headed by the octogenarian Kiamil Pasha, the government had been forced back, inch by inch and day by day, gradually yielding to the inevitable. All the great powers of Europe urged concessions and ever more concessions. Disorganization, domestic discord and bankruptcy combined to make further resistance useless; this the ministers could see but the populace could not. For hundreds of years the Turk has believed in his own superiority to the Christian, and this delusion was fostered by his ignorance. The wealth and intellect of the Ottoman empire, as represented by the grand council, pronounced in favor of peace at almost any price, coinciding with the cabinet, but this was contrary to public opinion—public opinion as voiced by the mob which surrounded the grand vizier's palace. The Young Turks and the committee of union and progress promptly took advantage of the situation and two of their leaders, Enver Bey and Nadje Bey, acting for the mob, informed the cabinet that it must retire. Enver Bey bore the premier's resignation to the sultan, who appointed Mahmoud Shefket Pasha as grand vizier, as demanded. Shefket was formerly minister of war and commanded the constitutional army which enthroned the present sultan in place of Abdul Hamid. The new cabinet at once set to work to frame a reply to the joint note of the powers which advised Turkey to accede to the Balkan allies' terms.

In London the Balkan delegates publicly stated that they had decided to break off the peace negotiations and give the stipulated four days' notice for the renewal of the war. They appointed a committee to draft a note to the Ottoman delegates and to Earl Grey, the honorary president of the peace conference, reciting the facts and their decision. The exact date for presenting this final notice was last Monday still uncertain, but "war talk" was stronger than "peace talk."

* *

Volcano and Rebels Trouble Mexico

Mexico, besides being harassed by rebels and brigands, is now troubled by an active volcano. Repeated eruptions occurred last week from Colima, a twin peaked mountain of great height in the state of Jalisco, seventy-five miles from the ocean. Ashes fell at Saltillo, over fifty miles distant. Other towns in the danger zone are Tuxpan, Tonita, Autlan and Zapotitlic. Little lava was seen, but thousands of people fled from the flying sand and ashes, the dense smoke and the suffocating gases. The railroad to Guadalajara was blocked by volcanic sand.

Colima is an old offender, eruptions being reported before the Spanish conquest. Ten years ago there was an outbreak of considerable violence.

Coincidentally with the volcanic explosions, the American naval department, upon the request of the state department, sent a gunboat to Vera Cruz to protect the lives and property of Americans and foreigners in that district. Ambassador Henry L. Wilson and consuls in southern Mexican cities have lately told of a condition of lawlessness, guerrilla warfare and crime amounting to virtual anarchy.

* *

Great Warship for Brazil; the "A. B. C. Union"

The largest and most powerful battleship afloat was launched last week at Newcastle-on-Tyne for the republic of Brazil. It is to be known as the Rio de Janeiro, and will carry fourteen twelve-inch guns and other armament. The displacement is 27,500 tons and the speed expected is twenty-two knots an hour. South American countries do not propose to lag behind in naval equipment.

Argentina, Brazil and Chile, the leading nations of South America, are endeavoring to form a league, popularly known as "the A. B. C. union," for mutual protection against aggression or interference by foreign powers. It may surprise many intelligent Americans that the chief outside influence which A, B and C are supposed to dread is the United States. The Monroe doctrine, which the United States has maintained as a defensive measure for both American continents, is apparently beginning to be regarded as a relic of "Yankee" tutelage by these ambitious southern republics, now that they have a pair of dreadnaughts apiece and other components of a respectable navy.

If the new triple alliance will exert itself to advance civilization in South America and not to find occasions for offended dignity such as have been not uncommon—if it will, for example, keep in order blustering nuisances like Castro, once of Venezuela, and force Peru to put an end forever to atrocities in the rubber forests and relieve Uncle Sam of some of his other outside police duties—then welcome to the A. B. C. union, and may it grow to include more letters of the alphabet.

* *

Official Reply to Britain on Panama Tolls

Secretary Knox's reply to Great Britain's protest against the exemption of American coastwise shipping from payment of Panama canal tolls was made public last Friday and has since been the subject of general comment. The secretary of state asserts that most of the British objections are based on conjectures of the future and are therefore speculative and premature. The note gives assurance that domestic commerce will not be allowed to extend into foreign competitive fields and that increased tolls will not be laid upon foreign ships to balance the remission to American bottoms. But if the British government still clings to its objections then the matter should be examined and reported upon by a joint commission.

Mr. Knox calls attention to the unratified arbitration treaty negotiated by himself and Ambassador Bryce, dated August 3, 1911. President Taft declined to proceed with the ratification of this treaty because the senate seriously lessened the scope of the compact, but a clause still remains under which a joint high commission of inquiry could be created, and the secretary suggests the ratification of this neglected treaty.

Although Mr. Knox says it is too soon for arbitration, yet his note is construed as a first step in that direction, agreeing in substance and spirit with arbitration as a principle, and this is certainly one point gained for the honor of the United States. On the other hand, the state department head is blamed for saying that Congress and the President have an undisputed right to violate any treaty where it touches municipal (national) law. Most students of international law believe that treaties should be given precedence over acts of Congress or parliament.

There is strong agitation in many quarters to induce Congress to repeal the exemption provision of the canal act. Wide divergence of opinion has developed on this side of the water as to the justness or correctness of the American position, which could doubtless best be settled if Congress were to retrace its steps. If not, then arbitration is the logical and honorable course.

* *

Seven Bills Aimed at New Jersey Trusts

Governor Woodrow Wilson has turned over to the New Jersey legislature seven bills designed to put an end to trusts and monopolies, restore free competition and guard the consumer against extortionate prices. The bills provide for an extensive revision of the corporation laws of New Jersey, which has long been the legal headquarters of most of the great combines of the country. Governor Wilson also laid down a program of reform in his annual message, in which he advocated the calling of a constitutional convention to revise and recast the present constitution.

One of the governor's bills would forbid a corporation or individual from selling a commodity cheaper in one section of the state than in another, thus preventing the crushing of competition by temporary price-cutting at certain points while prices are elsewhere maintained or, later, raised when a monopoly has been established. Another measure would make it a misdemeanor for any person to organize a corporation in the state with intent to cause restraint of trade, and another provides that prior to the merger of two or more concerns the written consent of the state board of public utilities must be obtained. Holding companies "become illegal." Corporations now in existence as well as those formed in future must not conspire to fix prices nor to restrain trade. The proposed legislation was drafted for Governor Wilson by the chancellor of New Jersey's highest court, assisted by a lawyer of note, and makes for greater definiteness in cataloguing commercial offenses.

Francis Lynde Stetson, a New York corporation attorney of long experience, is said to have remarked, sarcastically, that "Wilson's bills beat the decalogue," but Democratic and Progressive newspapers have greeted them cordially.

In an encounter with a large delegation of labor representatives last week the governor, who seems determined to keep busy at Trenton until he goes to Washington, declared that efficiency and merit and not partisanship will be the basis of his appointments to office. He positively refused to turn out a Republican state commissioner of labor to make room for the Democrat whose appointment was urged by the delegation.

* * *

Bill for Vast Individual Philanthropy Pending

After once meeting with Congressional disfavor, the bill for the incorporation in the District of Columbia of the $100,000,000 Rockefeller Foundation last week passed the house of representatives by a substantial majority. Its passage by the senate is regarded as certain. The bill was introduced by Representative Peters of Massachusetts and had the approval of the entire judiciary committee.

As announced, the objects of the foundation are to promote the well being and advance the civilization of the people of the United States as well as foreign lands "in the dissemination of knowledge, in the prevention and relief of suffering, and in the promotion by eleemosynary and philanthropic means of any and all of the elements of human progress." The entire income of the fund is to be expended for these purposes and is not to be allowed to accumulate. Indeed, there is a provision against increasing the principal endowment beyond the original sum.

Congressman Sherley of Kentucky and others objected that it was unwise for the government to permit so large a fortune to be perpetuated intact, but several safeguards were inserted into the measure. It may wind up its affairs in fifty years, and must do so at the end of 100 years if so directed by Congress.

The incorporators are John D. Rockefeller, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Frederick T. Gates, Starr J. Murphy, Harry Pratt Judson, Simon Flexner, Edwin A. Alderman, Wickliffe Rose and Charles O. Heydt. The members are never to be less than nine nor more than twenty-five in number. If the number falls below nine at any time no gifts are to be made until the vacancies are filled.

The successors to the incorporators and the additional members of the corporation are to be elected by the members of the corporation for the time being, but before such election becomes effective it must be approved by a majority of a body consisting of the President of the United States, the chief justice of the supreme court, the president of the senate, the speaker of the house and the presidents of Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Johns Hopkins and Chicago Universities.

While it is conceivable that possibilities for evil may be wrapped up in this undertaking, yet, on the other hand, it can readily be seen that its potentialities for good are nothing short of tremendous.

* * *

Organized Incendiarism Is Exposed

The idea of making of arson a systematic business seems too weird and impossible for belief, but that the thing has actually been done on a large scale in New York, Chicago and other parts of the country was shown by some recent arrests and confessions. A wealthy fire insurance broker and several other men were indicted by a New York grand jury as figures in the "fire-bug trust." Some convictions have already been had. One "Izzy the painter" confessed that he was a sort of business manager of a wholesale arson trade, and he worked in conjunction with dishonest insurance agents and adjusters. The fact that he and his kind might destroy human life as well as property in the fires they set with devilish cunning seems not to have disturbed them so long as they got their percentage of the insurance money.

In Chicago two public adjusters, a go-between and an alleged incendiary were named in grand jury "true bills" last week and there was promise of further revelations of an extended conspiracy. Insurance companies are coming in for blame for imprudent or reckless insuring, in itself an invitation to crime potent enough to help make the annual fire losses in the United States eight times as large as they are in Europe.

* * *

—Financial obligations may well keep Japan from going to war, even if the new Katsura ministry had not already announced a policy of economy and nonmilitary conduct of affairs. A statement lately published places the public debt of the nation on January 1 at $1,250,000,000, of which nearly $750,000,000 was in foreign loans.

Religious World

First of Evangelistic Institutes Held

The evangelistic institute at Buffalo last week drew its attendance from the four synods of New York, Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio. But interest in what was done and said and felt there should go very much wider in the church, because this was simply a preliminary example and sample of later institutes designed to influence similarly other sections, particularly the territories tributary to St. Paul, St. Louis and Kansas City, where Secretary Mahy is going next.

It was expected that Chairman Charles L. Huston, the head of the Assembly's committee on evangelism, would be present at Buffalo, but the severe illness of his little son detained him at home when just on the point of leaving. The conference sent the father and mother a message of warm sympathy and offered fervent prayer for the lad's recovery. Mr. Mahy directed the whole institute with unostentatious skill and quiet "demonstration of the Spirit and of power." Flamboyance is delightfully foreign to Mr. Mahy's efficiency. It was characteristic of him that he refused summarily the request of Buffalo newspaper men for his photograph for publication.

The inspirational and devotional element needed for balance and background of the practical features of the institute was supplied in stimulating yet sobering addresses by Dr. John R. Davies, Dr. William H. Foulkes and Dr. William P. Fulton, all of Philadelphia. The influence of these messages kept spiritual power in recognition, while methods were later discussed.

In the realm of methods Secretary Mahy had compiled an important pamphlet which underscored the importance of a strong, separate evangelistic committee in each presbytery (giving telling reasons for it), presbyterial retreats for spiritual communion, presbyterial conferences on evangelism, district conferences combining groups of churches, deputation work, the employment of presbyterial evangelists and special evangelistic meetings. From the two presbyteries putting those respective ideas to most effective use the employment of a presbyterial evangelist is called the Chester plan and the arrangement for a deputation to visit local congregations the North River plan.

Laymen Urged to Organize

J. H. Jefferis, treasurer of the Laymen's Evangelistic Association, which employs Dr. Falconer in Chester Presbytery, urged the laymen of other presbyteries to organize for the same purpose. The budget of the association is $3,500 and it is divided into 350 shares Effort is made continually to reduce the gifts of the largest givers and increase the number taking single shares or two to five shares, so as to get three or four shareholders in each congregation. The method develops remarkably the evangelistic interest of the laymen.

Dr. Alexander Alison reported on the North River deputation plan. The evangelistic committee of that presbytery goes into every congregation for meetings of one afternoon and evening, aiming to arouse Christians to a desire for salvation of their friends and neighbors. In turn the committee meets the women of the church, the Sunday school teachers and the young people's leaders. Then it confers with the church officers and pastor at the supper table. At a popular meeting in the evening "a strong effort is made to plow the ground for a real revival."

Doctors C. G. Reynolds of Elizabeth, New Jersey, and D. H. Craver of Geneva, New York, told from experience of the use of presbyterial institutes. Rev. L. L. Strock of Trenton kindled a faint smile when he related as the principal effect of an evangelistic conference in New Brunswick presbytery that it had aroused a professor in Princeton Theological Seminary to volunteer to go out and preach the gospel.

Attracting Recruits by Ordinary Methods

The question was put to the conference whether its members believed in special evangelistic meetings. Nobody was willing to pronounce against them, yet it was manifest that all regarded them as a method to be used but sparingly—with perhaps an added note of caution when it is proposed to call in a professional evangelist. On the other hand, it was as clear as it was significant that the keenest zest of the pastors present was for a program that would make the ordinary run of church work effective for the attraction of new recruits to the church. Every instance mentioned of success in this particular put men on tiptoe to hear more of it.

Some examples of this interest centered in Calvary church, Baltimore, where Rev. Francis S. Downs, preaching that a man can't have Christ without wishing to give Christ to others, finds his church so thronged that when he dismisses one congregation, another is at the doors wishing to come in, and Harper Memorial church in Philadelphia, where Pastor H. C. Ferguson attributes a constant incoming of converts to the faithfulness of a prayer band pledged to petition God continually for revival.

Dr. Davies along the same line elicited the keenest attention as he told of his pastoral methods in Bethlehem church, Philadelphia. Next after careful, prayerful preparation of his pulpit messages, Dr. Davies counts most on his prayer meeting, his Sunday school and his very systematic pastoral visitation. In his prayer meetings, except for his own address of perhaps twenty minutes, he allows no other exercise than prayer. It is a prayer meeting in reality. In his Sunday school he teaches the catechism regularly. In his pastoral calling, he never makes a call without praying in the home.

Inspiration from Cleveland Church

But without comparison Dr. R. R. Bigger of Westminster church, Cleveland, got the mind of the conference beyond all others. His explanation of his system of "keeping everybody everlastingly at it" in his church was an exhibit of daring, aggressive organization that can scarcely have a parallel in the Christian life of the whole country—unless in the church of Dr. Mark A. Matthews in Seattle. Westminster church is in a thickly populated section east of Willson avenue in Cleveland, occupied by people of only moderate means. It has been rated a hard church to do anything with, but an onlooker would judge that Dr. Bigger's relentless system of putting everybody to work could not be resisted by any body of people who are Christian at all. At least Westminster has not resisted it, but is responding with enthusiasm.

The parish is divided into ten sections and each section is in charge of one elder. Two weeks before each communion the elder is given cards for every communicant member in his district. He is expected to deliver them not by mail or messenger but in person. On communion Sunday at the door of the church he receives the cards from the arriving members, marked for those attending and for those detained. If any family is not represented at all the elder must visit the family and get the card for return to the church record.

The core of the aggressive work of the church, however, is the service of the committee of fifty chosen by the pastor—half men, half women. Two weeks before communion these people are called before the pulpit and consecrated there by prayer to go two and two with the message of gospel salvation. Lists are given to them of six families each—supposed to be available for the church—which they are asked to call on that same afternoon. If the people called on cannot be persuaded to come to church, an effort is made—usually with success—to get the wife or some other member of the household to join the home department of the Sunday school. On Monday night nine days later the districts report at a private meeting of the committee of fifty, and there is urgent rivalry to see which district can present the best report of members secured.

The cradle roll is emphasized also in the Sunday school and church. Over a hundred framed pictures of babies belonging to this roll are hanging on the chancel rail of the church where the Sunday audiences can look at them. Thus Westminster "sets a little child in the midst." The brotherhood of the church is another agency closely organized. The arrangement is such that the president has four subofficers to depend on; each of them looks after four committee chairmen, and so on outward to the outer edge of the membership—every man being appointed to look after four others definitely named to him. Dr. Bigger's lists of his members, his Sunday school scholars, prospective and possible members, brotherhood men, cradle roll babies, and so on—all kept in one big loose-leaf book—are a miracle of detail.

Evangelistic Failure in Sunday School

Dr. W. H. Roberts could not be present, but sent a paper on the evangelistic failure of the Sunday school—a dismal compilation. It showed that 1,997 Presbyterian congregations maintaining Sabbath schools won last year not even a single child to confess Jesus Christ. This defect appears to have been worst in some of the larger synods. There were no conversions reported in 1912 from 113 Sunday schools in Illinois having a total of nearly 9,000 scholars and teachers. In New York there was like deficiency, with 161 schools having 8,000 members; in Pennsylvania, with 159 schools totaling 12,000 membership, and in Ohio, with 116 schools nearly 9,000 strong. In fact in all these churches there was no addition on confession from any source for the period covered.

The institute closed with the courtesy of a delightful lunch given its members by the Presbyterian men of Buffalo, where Dr. John D. Campbell presided.

Editorial

Our Needless Battles

GENERAL J. V. MESEROLE once said that half the battles that had been fought in all the great wars might as well have been avoided and the results would have been the same, while the losses of life would have been much less. The avoidance of battle might be a general's cowardice or it might be his surpassing wisdom. It was charged against one of the generals in the civil war that he was always getting ready to fight, but never fought. Against others it was charged that they were always eager to fight, but were never ready for it. Somewhere between those two lies the wise course.

It may be fairly charged against the church that it has spent a great deal of energy in getting machinery ready to do things that, after all, it never did. It has called its forces out and then has had no battle for them. On the other hand, it may charged that the church has gone into some of its conflicts with no real preparation. It attacked evils and was not equipped itself to deal with them. It had not received its power either from above or from within itself. Increasingly those charges are now being answered. The church is learning its field and its task. It is learning its foes, their habits and their location. Also it is equipping itself for its task.

It is in the personal sphere that there is so much of this needless fighting. There is no numbering the needless battles we fight because we keep in the way of the enemy. A man is a coward who will not turn away from a thing he knows is hurting him when he can turn away from it. It is difficult to draw a line between bravado and bravery. Sometimes it is cowardly to run from temptation because it lies in the line of one's daily duty. Sometimes it would be cowardly not to run from it, since it provokes a needless battle and there is no end to be gained in imperiling one's life. Study it in your own heart.

Have you never found yourself brooding over a wrong that has been done you, thinking it over and over, trying to imagine why someone did this or someone else did that, conjuring up the reasons that could have led to the wrong done you? And has not that kept your heart bitter and sore long after it might as well have been cured? A worried woman went to her pastor a little while ago with a long story of slights put upon her. She asked his counsel and he put it in two words: "Forget it!" The answer was not the current slang; it was the profoundest word which could be said on the subject for her. Her greatest peril was that she would continue to brood over it and prolong the fight.

The rule will apply in other directions. A mother made appeal only the other day for help with her 16-year-old boy. He left one good position to go to another, because in the second he would be allowed to smoke, while in the first it was forbidden. His mother finds now that he is receiving a larger salary than he has told her and is therefore able to spend money in ways against which she supposed she had guarded him. He is running with the wrong associates and is manifestly being damaged.

Yet a little while ago he made what everybody felt to be a sincere confession of faith in Christ. He joined the church and was faithful to it. The whole secret of his defeat in his moral battle is that he persistently refused to get away from the place where his peril was greatest. He mistook bravado for bravery. He was not enough ashamed of his weakness to protect himself. So there is a heart-broken mother and a greatly imperiled son. It often takes a strong man to leave the place of danger, but staying in it is simply needless battle. What the general said of history is true in life—half the moral battles we fight are needless. They could as well be avoided and the results would be the same.

Just Unity—That Is a Big Field

The difficulty and delicacy of defining for the Federal Council of Churches a tangible and appropriate function becomes more apparent as experience in the organization increases. As The Continent observed when the quadrennial meetings were in session in Chicago, the federation must find something to do of obvious use, or the practical American mind will soon mark it not worth while. But to find something to do is not so easy for the Federal Council as to appreciate the importance thereof.

The search encounters an early limitation. The council self-evidently must not duplicate the functions of the churches which created it. This warning is enforced not simply by possible jealousy of the churches but more especially by the stout American prejudice against duplications. The American indeed will not tolerate organizations that do nothing, but still less does he tolerate new organizations which crowd in to do what is already being well done.

And here is where the policy of creating Federal Council commissions—perhaps with paid expert secretaries—gets into hard going. It seemed at first just the idea to fit the case—creating federal commissions on social service, evangelism, missions, education and so on forth. Then they could do the necessary something for the council's credit. But the denominations all have their own agencies doing such work—boards, committees and expert secretaries—and in most cases these denominational forces are already working together beautifully. Thus the foreign boards of the churches, and the home boards, too, enjoy annual conferences together and carry on besides a mass of work in conjunction all the year round. Shall the Federal Council, on top of all this, appoint missionary commissions and employ mission secretaries? Unthinkable! To do so would contradict the council's constitutional pledge not to seek supervisory power, and it would also be creating a machine to do what is already being done. And the same argument—though some do not yet see it so—is exactly as cogent in regard to social service, evangelism or any other department of modern church life.

Analyzing this perplexity here must not be understood as criticising the Federal Council. Quite on the contrary, the exhibit of the problem to the sympathetic understanding of the Christian public is the only means of inducing among the churches the patience necessary to give the council room and time to work out to its right place. Without doubt a satisfactory solution will be reached in due order, and The Continent is confident that the solution will be arrived at by returning to the council's original and single note of aspiration. That unqualified aim was simply to unify the churches.

Remembering that, let the council altogether devote itself to unifying. Where the churches are already cooperating in full brotherhood the council need not concern itself at all. Where there still remains more or less working at cross purposes, let the council send its secretaries in, with all Christian tact, to exhort and entice the denominations to cease conflicting methods and take up conjoint policies. But let those secretaries be known and titled not as secretaries of one or another line of Christian service but simply as secretaries of Christian unity. That is what the council itself is for, and all its official agents ought to be likewise for that one thing.

—President-Elect Wilson has shown an admirable bit of courage in suppressing the inaugural ball at Washington, which has heretofore been a tawdry evening adjunct to the dignified day ceremony of initiating a President into office. Of course it is a small matter comparatively, but the biblical rule about faithfulness applies also to courage: He that is courageous in small things will be courageous also in great things. The way Governor Wilson expressed his wish in the matter shows, too, a gift for being firm without being harsh, which ought to stand him in most excellent stead in the great tasks of his coming administration. And perhaps more to be rejoiced over than all else, there lies behind the whole action a sensitiveness to propriety that ought to comfort any who believe the times degenerate; for while Dr. Wilson in his letter most emphasized the uselessness of the ball, there is reason to believe that he was mainly influenced by the hint which had got abroad that the inaugural ball this year would be a revelry of recent disgusting inventions in the line of "turkey trots" and "bunny hugs."

—It seems marvelously difficult for people to grasp the moral issue in the Panama tolls matter. Folks continually get off into discussing whether the United States has not a right to regulate the charges on the canal which it built. That is a mere aside. The real quesion is simply whether or not the United States is mean enough to break its promises. By treaty this nation promised to deal alike with all vessels sailing through the canal. Possibly the law which the United States has adopted does not break that promise. Grant that. Yet Great Britain thinks the law a promise-breaker, and the United States has also promised, whenever a dispute arises over such a matter, to leave it to arbitration. Here there is no question. Dispute exists; we have promised to arbitrate. Not to arbitrate would be total dishonor. That is a definite issue between right and wrong, and no ingenuity on earth can straddle it.

—Poor Coatesville is not yet permitted to forget its shame as the town whose unrestrained thugs were allowed to burn a negro to death. Governor Tener's recommendation that the charter of the borough be taken away and a bitter condemnation in The American Magazine are fresh reminders to the unhappy Pennsylvania town. But Coatesville will be still more unhappy if it permits these things to deepen the resentment which it has shown against outside criticism. However much or little Coatesville as a town was to blame for this horrible lynching in the first place, there can be no doubt of its grievous mistake in drawing back, into a sullen self-righteousness, from the preaching launched against its sin. Much better would it have been if consequent upon this condemnation it had been possible to write about the Coatesvillians as Paul wrote of the Corinthians: "What earnest care it wrought in you, yea what clearing of yourselves, yea what indignation, yea what fear, yea what longing, yea what zeal, yea what avenging." Thus Coatesville people might have "approved themselves to be pure in the matter"! And this we trust they will yet do by a "repentance which bringeth no regret." There are indeed many signs of this. Chester county is today moved with a determined revolt against the saloons, out of which the Coatesville lynching undoubtedly sprang; and there is hope that by March the whole county may be cleaned of liquor. The Continent is proud to note that Coatesville's foremost Christian citizen, the chairman of the General Assembly's evangelistic committee, Charles L. Huston, is the chairman of this movement. And we learn, too, with gratification that Mr. Huston, when interviewed by the press, refused, though thus apparently standing alone among Coatesville citizens, to criticise Governor Tener for suggesting the disincorporation of the borough.

—Julius Rosenwald of Chicago is acquiring a most honorable fame as a philanthropist, but his fame is all the more honorable because he has made it plain that he is not one of that disappearing clan who suppose that giving away money is a full atonement for any method of earning money. Mr. Rosenwald manifestly would rather have nothing to give than to give out of a tainted wealth. Of this he has shown striking proof in cutting off absolutely the very profitable trade of his company, the Sears-Roebuck mail order concern, in patent medicines. Perhaps not all consciences would have held this action a moral necessity, but it is a moral matter with the Sears-Roebuck chief proprietor, and no difference of opinion about his judgment can qualify admiration for a man who so straightforwardly does the right thing as he sees it, regardless of financial loss. As much is to be said for Louis K. Liggett of Boston, who announces that his chain of drug stores in twenty-two American cities will refuse henceforth to sell liquors, even for medicinal purposes. Mr. Liggett long ago ceased to deal in habit-forming drugs, and declares that his policy henceforth will be to handle over his counters nothing that can be used for questionable purposes. And he proposes to decide these questions for himself on his own conscience, without waiting for law to guide him. The world has marched many a long league since the traditional New England deacon loaded ships for Africa with rum. We don't know whether any deacon actually ever did that, but in these day it is too late even to tell the story on anybody.

—If spontaneous and unaffected good wishes are rated to be wedding gifts of worth, Miss Helen Miller Gould was richer on her wedding day in the affectionate interest of the American people than any other bride of contemporary times has been. Other brides in late years have become objects of an impolite curiosity which made more stir on the streets and in the press, but in no other instance have the people at large felt so generously and so sincerely that affectionate interest awakened by "a wedding in the family." Miss Gould is just "one of us" to the whole American people. And this wealth of the people's affection is her scriptural reward of "good measure pressed down and running over" for her own fashion of spending and being spent—not merely for her philanthropy but for her sisterly philanthropy, so simply free from condescension and so instinct with uncalculating human impulses. She won the people's friendship because she never planned to win it, and it has now made her a bride's wreath. The people are especially happy to believe that in Finley J. Shepard their friend has found a husband worthy of her—a man of reality, not a gilded imitation from either the home market or the foreign. To Presbyterians it is gratifying that religious sanction on the auspicious union was pronounced by one of their own ministers, Dr. Russell. With him the church joins to say, "God bless Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard."

—The interstate liquor bill in Congress to protect dry territory from mail order importation seems now to have a clearer road open to enactment than has ever loomed ahead of it before. For Collier's Weekly to come out editorially in favor of it has strengthened the situation decidedly. The senate is to vote on the bill February 10, and between now and then every senator ought to hear from all his temperance constituents. If the measure goes through the senate, then the house must be promptly attacked. The point there will be to force the bill out of the judiciary committee, and voters communicating with their representatives should urge them to press the committee hard.

PROBLEMS OF PASTOR AND PEOPLE

How People Can Make Preacher

BY W. BEATTY JENNINGS

THREE FACTORS enter into the making of a great preacher—the man, the sermon and the congregation. The part of the people in making the preacher may be illustrated, as Cutten has done, by the process of bronze molding. "The hour for casting has arrived; the glowing, molten mass is carried in large vessels by clanging and creaking cranes to the huge molds which seem to cover the floor; or strong-armed men bear hand ladles filled to the brim with liquid metal from the same furnace, and pour it into lesser molds which stand ready to receive it. Presently the bands are loosened, the boxes are removed, and behold the product! The same molder, the same charge, but how dissimilar the results! It is the mold which is responsible for the difference." So of the preacher. The man is the same, the message is the same; his ministry of the word is influenced, determined both in its grace and greatness, chiefly by the people to whom he ministers. Some churches make great preachers, make all their preachers great. In Carr's Lane church Arthur, Dale, Jowett, unknown men when called to its pulpit, grew to greatness under the beneficent influence of the people whom they served.

The people must give their minister the time necessary to the making of a great preacher. The day was, and not long ago, when the besetting sin of the ministry was laziness. Today it is overbusyness. And the responsibility lies largely with the people. They expect the minister to attend meetings of all sorts and sizes, forgetting that each consumes time. They look for speeches on all occasions, not remembering that the quality of utterance is in inverse ratio to the quantity. They require him to be much in society, overlooking the fact that sermons are born in solitude. Paradoxical as it may seem, a preacher "must limit his work if he would extend his influence." The chief work of the minister continues to be preaching. The world can be most surely and quickly rid of ignorance, pauperism, disease, crime, by the proclamation of the word and will of Jesus Christ. Men and women are to get their inspiration to the social application of Christianity through the communication to them by preaching of the light and fire of God's Spirit. A sermon requires time, as someone suggests, for waiting upon God, for seeing visions and dreaming dreams, for brooding over formless truth, for bringing cosmos out of chaos, for studying the teachings of the great masters, for writing, for reshaping and rewriting, for dreaming yet again, for last revision and for final communion with God. Sermons do not spring up over night. They grow to maturity of thought and power through days, weeks, sometimes years. And after exhausting labor in the preparation of a sermon, there must be time for physical, mental, spiritual renewal. Men forget how much blood a sermon costs. Time is needed to make a mighty ministry of the word.

Auditors Must Come with Open Minds

The people must give their minister the hearing that makes a great preacher. They must come to the sermon not with inattention but with eager expectancy expressed in the size of the congregation and written large on every face. They must let the minister know that they expect something worth while, something great. This will rally him, "as expectancy does a surgeon," to his best effort. He should never suspect that "it is not to seek corn that they have come into Egypt but to spy out the barrenness of the land." It takes a strong soul "to convert the presence of indifferent hearers from an embarrassment into an inspiration." The people must come not with minds preoccupied, full and tired from the morning's reading, much of it worldly and consequently unfitting, but with minds empty and receptive, into which the word of God may enter freely and find ample room to grow. They must come not with the critical spirit, nor with more or less suspicion of the preacher's theology, but with confidence in the candor of his message. It is possible to watch so closely the orthodoxy of a sermon as to miss its religion. "A congregation of critics would be killing," said Phillips Brooks. The people must demand great themes, not some mere topic of the day; reason, not mawkish sentimentality; religion, not philanthropy. They bring to their own level, be it high or low, the sermon standard of their preacher. They may "listen him" into a mighty ministry of the word.

The people must give their minister the prayer that makes a great preacher. Intercession is a vast power house seldom entered. It puts at command the power of prayer that moves the hand that moves the world to the accomplishment of great things. A people can pray their preacher into almost any degree of pulpit efficiency. They must count themselves no real lovers of their minister unless they pray for him; and the measure of their love will be the frequency and fervor of their intercessions. The lines of the dead laureate, some of them very familiar, some generally overlooked, need to be borne in mind:

"More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. [So far oft quoted.] Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day:
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within their brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friends.
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

The part which the people's prayer plays in the preacher's power is well told in Miss Proctor's "A Legend." The influence of the monk's sermon was felt mightily by all who heard, and they praised God for such words of gold. The preacher thanked God for his blessing upon the message of his servant, yet all the while found some sweet satisfaction in the fact that it was his message, his sermon.

> "So prayed the monk: when suddenly he heard
> An angel speaking thus: 'Know, O my son,
> Thy words had all been vain, but hearts were stirred,
> And saints were edified, and sinners won,
> By his, the poor lay brother's, humble aid,
> Who sat upon the pulpit stair and prayed!'"

Those who hear may pray their preacher into a mighty ministry of the word.

The people must give their minister lives that so illumine, adorn, enforce and confirm the truth which he proclaims that the community and the whole church will know him a great preacher. Men have well nigh stopped asking about the gospel, "Will it work? Can it do great things?" They know its force real, resistless. But they are questioning the efficiency of present-day preachers. They count him a great preacher who so presents the gospel message that it grips men, redeems them, re-creates their ideals, consecrates their energies and sends them out workers into the world. If a minister's preaching result not in this, he is to be counted a juggler of words, an entertainer, one who has a pleasant voice and can play well on the instrument of human language, but no preacher. The proof that the world demands of the preacher's pulpit power is the daily lives of his people. The "gospel according to" the people must correspond to, reenforce, commend the gospel which is proclaimed from the pulpit, and in bringing this about the people do their part in making their preacher great.

The Pastor Hunt—The Ethics of It

BY A. S. FISKE

GIVE IT UP! There is nothing ethical about it, as at present pursued! See how it is done. The pulpit of a strong church falls vacant, probably through the seductions of one yet stronger. It wants a pastor. It selects a pastor-hunting committee. These committeemen proceed to look up in the Minutes of their denomination the records of all the supposedly eligible pastors of all the churches not quite so able as theirs and learn the progress of each church whose pastor may be under consideration. If all is going prosperously under his administration, if everybody is satisfied and he is popular in the community at large, they set him down as a likely candidate for a hearing or a visitation. If they find any restlessness or dissatisfaction on the part of either minister or people, they strike that name off the list at once. Their church does not want a discontented pastor of a discontented people. That goes without saying. But the committee will get a list of from fifty to a hundred names discovered or recommended for trial. Instead of the tedious and often divisive way of giving each a hearing by the congregation, it seems better to get a hearing of the selected ones in their own pulpits—on the sly, of course, lest they be mobbed by the loyal congregation invaded. So off go two in this direction, two in that. They "creep in" as "unawares" as possible, not as the Pharisees do, "sounding trumpets before them," even modestly failing to register in the hotels their place of residence, and get themselves seated on Sunday morning in different parts of the church. To all appearance they are strangers even to each other. They watch the congregation, listen intently to the service, make discreet and ostentatiously disinterested inquiries about the welfare of the church and of religion in the community, and about the minister himself, remarking, perhaps, that they have been much interested, and so on. They are on hand again in the evening, and depart discussing all they have seen and heard. Soon after, if the report of the first pair of hunters is sufficiently favorable, another pair appears, and another. As many such excursions, and in as many directions as seem advisable, are made, till at last the members of the committee are satisfied and unite in a report advising a unanimous call to Pastor So-and-So of such a sister church. The congregation agrees, the call issues, the salary is fixed on—of course larger than the victimized church provides—and the whole matter is up to the pastor and his church.

The Stronger Churches Despoil the Weaker

Now this is the rough outline of the way the thing is done. As to the ethics or the Christian brotherliness of it all, the less said the better. It is the plain case of a stronger church falling, almost surreptitiously, upon a weaker but prosperous, happy and united one, which loves, honors and follows its spiritual leader, to despoil it of its chief earthly asset, leaving the lesser flock shepherdless in a wilderness of perplexity and sore difficulty, their faith even shaken in the man whom they had trusted. But what of all that? "We are richer and stronger. You can't help yourselves. Go to presbytery! They won't help you." Nor is there more of advantage to the kingdom of God than of ethical righteousness and brotherly consideration in it. That weaker church has more need of a strong, fit man at its head than has its bigger neighbor and will suffer greater loss than the other would from failure to capture its prey. The weaker need to be the more strongly manned. Verily the strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak in Christ.

Another thing worth thinking on. This newly called minister is offered a larger salary, often twice as large as he is receiving. "That's mightily desirable," he thinks. He accepted the pastorate of his present church feeling that it was at the call of God. God has followed his work with rich blessings among that people. He has been happy therein. But something has happened. He is offered a double salary and a more prominent field. Perhaps that old "call of God" has expired. Maybe this good man has got a little vain of his success and of receiving so fine a new call. Perhaps he begins to say to himself, "Really now, ought I to waste my fine powers on this little field? That bigger place is more worthy of me. Is it not my duty to go?" It is not impossible for even a good man to suffer a warpage of conscience in face of seeming great advantage and so put an alloy into his sense of a call from God. The fine purity of unselfish service, the absoluteness of consecration in many a good man, may have been diluted by the subtle illusion of the bigger field, ampler resources and more conspicuous position. Ministers are but human, else they would be good for nothing among humans!

Little Churches the Source of Progress

But this whole process, grievously wrong in principle, is worse in practice and effect. The little churches come to be used by graduates of the seminaries as stepping stones to larger fields. They will try their mettle on them, prove themselves and look out for the louder "call," regardless of the fate of the early charge. But these smaller and commonly rural fields are today the crucial points for the triumph of the gospel. From them come the men who in the towns and cities are the bone and sinew and the spirit for the great movements of the kingdom of God on earth. These rustic regions give to the churches and missions the great body of the ministry. Let the little churches fade out? Then the very source of Christian progress for the city and nation is dried up. The little churches must be kept vigorously alive or the big ones will die, too.

The young man in the ministry needs be a hero, willing to endure hardness. Taking charge of a small church, he should take it with intent to build it into strength and to stay with it so long as it is making progress toward a reasonable goal. If that is not the result it is likely to be because his charge is one of two or more like organizations, overstocking the community and which it is not wise to keep afoot by itself at all. Then let him bend his energies to the consolidation with the others on the same territory. Doing all he can to that end personally on the local ground, let him call the attention of the general agencies of the various denominations concerned to the desirability of such consolidation and, if need be, urge on the Home Mission Boards the wisdom of cutting off grants in aid from each of the competing churches till they are ready to agree to work and worship together as one body in Christ. Having done this, either with success or failure, he can quietly and with a good conscience leave his charge, sure that he who has called him to the ministry has work for him somewhere to do.

Presbyteries Should Take the Initiative

Of course there are cases where there is obvious waste of peculiar powers on unfit fields such as to command change. Increase of family and expenses may make support entirely inadequate. Then, if the work be going on well for the kingdom, presbytery, through the Board of Home Missions or otherwise, should have the responsibility for seeing to it that adequate income be provided that the good work be not cut short. Changes of pastorates ought to be made not with the consent of presbytery but on its substantial initiative. Our presbyteries ought to have all the powers of the presiding elder and bishop of the Methodists.

Let it ever be felt that the small church, holding its field alone for Christ and man, needs a better man for its pastor than does the abler church of the larger field. The country church, helped by its pastor to become the center and soul of the community life, is the grandest force for the leadership of a devoted, able and consecrated ministry, really called of God. Such men, so placed, are saviours of individuals and communities far beyond their brethren amidst the hurry and hubbub of the big towns and cities, and will have the most replendent crowns up yonder. I believe that the average preaching in the pulpits of the self-respecting and self-supporting country church is of a higher spiritual and intellectual order than that of the pretentious towns and cities. I know that the pastoral work—an essential part of every real ministry—is far more effectively done in the country parishes than it is or can be in the city. To be the happy pastor of a growing country church —to have made it the center of the living interests of a rural, farming population, to have grouped a number of little churches into a united body of happy servants of our great Master—is the finest conceivable achievement for the ablest of us all. That for the holy ambition of him who would best serve God and his fellow!

The Vacant Church and Why

BY J. ERNEST McAFEE

ALL THE TESTIMONY from the field indicates that the problem of the vacant church is growing ever more serious. From every quarter appeals come for more and better men, and larger salaries to support them. One home mission presbytery of thirteen churches has nine vacancies. The pastor-evangelist and the home mission committee cannot find the men.

In a near-by state the Presbyterian forces of a growing city are well nigh hopeless over their task. Several charges need men, but the pastor-evangelist is at his wits' end to find anyone who will come in. The conscientious pastor of one of the charges who is compelled to leave has zealously sought for his successor, realizing the jeopardy in which his charge will be put by a period of pulpit vacancy. He appealed to a seminary classmate. It developed that he was already receiving in a country charge a larger salary than the western city charge offers, where even higher living expenses prevail.

A young man just out of the seminary was intercepted, but he proved to be on his way to a small town charge, impelled by a desire which theological preceptors are known often to encourage if they do not initially implant—he felt "he should get out where he could study for the first year or two."

This conscientious pastor proceeds with an appeal which cannot fail to move anyone who will read: "The rush of strangers incident to the opening of the Panama canal will soon be upon us. My own field here, like many others, is almost a foreign field already, and in two years will certainly be more so. The responsibility will come upon us and find us poorly prepared to meet the responsibility that God has put upon us. These conditions will call for the pick of our seminary graduates, but we are getting the poorest, often because there are few who feel the call of the city strongly enough to make them sacrifice their income. Men come in and stay two years and leave the work six months neglected; another man is found to fill the gap, and he rebuilds in two years what has been torn down in six months. Then he, too, leaves, literally starved out. I know what I am talking about, for I have been eighteen months rebuilding just such a work, and I find the shattered fragments of what was a fine group of young men once in the church today not in it and too far gone to be reclaimed so far as human eye can see.

"I am leaving this city in a few weeks and my work will be left pastorless along with these others. I leave a class of sixteen boys just ready to become men in the church in two or three years. Six months' neglect will lose all but two, who have Christian homes. A Sunday school of 150 will dwindle to half that in six months if unshepherded—a community of 5,000 of all nations and only one other weak church to share the great work. I have begged that a man be found at once to fill my place. For a month the search has gone on and still no sign of a capable man. Yet in another month the field will be vacant and angels will weep over the devastation the devil will make here if the church is left to itself."

Can't Get Men at the Present Salaries

He has appealed to the pastor-evangelist for help. He gets this reply: "I simply can't get men to come into the city at the salary we can pay. It is growing harder every day. I am filling six pulpits every week as best I can from men whom I can pick up, and all the while the work is going to pieces on these fields."

The writer makes the burden of his appeal the need of raising salary rates. One thousand dollars a year for suburban and city charges is now impossible. Economists are declaring that under present living conditions the support of a family upon an income of less than $1,200 is below the scale of decency; it certainly is of health and efficiency. In suburban and city charges the perquisites of the pastoral office, over and above the stipulated salary, are meager if there are any at all.

Almost every city presbytery in the land is feeling the need of a more lavish church extension program, and statesmanship requires that liberality should show itself first in more adequately supported men—which means a more competent church leadership.

The Man Who Leads Southern Laymen

An Everyday Business Man, Charles A. Rowland, and His Part in the Missionary Revolution of the Southern Presbyterian Church

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS, Editor Afield of the Continent

HIS INTIMATES call him "governor," for anybody down South who does as much as Charles A. Rowland just naturally has to have a title. And there is no state in the union whose governor is really the leader of so many men as this quiet, ordinary-looking man, Charles A. Rowland, a voter in Athens, Georgia, but a citizen of the world. Other men embody in themselves more distinguished traits of the ideal layman; Rowland's unique distinction is that he, above all other men, revealed to a denomination what are the possibilities of organized Christian work by the laity. He cannot strut or pose, he cannot wear gold lace or scholastic gown, he cannot even make a particularly good speech, and I never heard anybody call him a genius; but there are few persons in the Southern Presbyterian Church who would not say, when the growth of the denomination's missionary receipts from $162,000 a year to $505,000 a year is pointed out, "That's largely Mr. Rowland's doing."

Of course it really is not—the Lord's business is no such one-man affair as that. The point to be noted is that folk instinctively think of Charles A. Rowland in connection with the remarkable growth of foreign mission interest in the Southern Church. Beyond doubt he has been the real leader in the Southern Presbyterian Laymen's Missionary Movement, which is the most symmetrically successful embodiment of the modern uprising of men that the country has seen. We must go South to find the laymen's movement at its best; and the Southern Presbyterian Church is far in the lead of all other denominations in the results effected by the men within a decade. Indeed, it is within the truth to say that the awakening and organization of the laity has created a real revolution within the denomination, calling forth its latent powers, bringing new leaders to the fore, enlarging the horizon of the congregations and solidifying the church's consciousness and stimulating her loyalty to a high point of efficiency.

Business to Serve the Lord; in Trade for Expenses

Rather a large order that, for a small man, isn't it? Again I caution the reader that Charles A. Rowland is a real leader, in that the results brought to pass are produced by the combined activities of many men and forces working harmoniously together. But when any particular phase of the denomination's lay activity is investigated, his unassuming personality is generally to be found. That is perhaps his most conspicuous qualification—the ability to be "on the job," as the current phrase has it. The learned and the eminent men of the Southern Presbyterian Church all are glad to acclaim as leader the modest man whose business, like that of William Carey, is serving the Lord; and who is in trade to pay expenses. Day and night—and he is a veritable night owl—Rowland is about the business of missions.

As to the biographical details of Charles A. Rowland's life, there is only that to be said which may be written concerning most of us Americans. He has a strain of Jonathan Edwards and of John Alden in his blood, but he is far more interested in his own four children than in these far-off forebears. His home is in the university town of Athens, where he is in the wholesale bagging and twine business. For the education of his boys in the things which as a wise father he counts essential, he has bought a farm where the family live part of the time. He is not a college graduate himself, and he received part of his education in a printing shop, to the very great typographical benefit of the stream of missionary leaflets which has for years poured from his office.

Many "discoveries" in the way of leaders are to be credited to the modern men's movement in the churches, but Rowland is not one of them. For back in 1899 we find him organizing and conducting a summer missionary campaign by student volunteers from the theological seminaries. For three summers young men, under his direction, visited the churches and talked missions. The churchliness of this, as of all subsequent activities of this man, is apparent. He is too well grounded in the teachings and spirit of the Southern Presbyterian Church to disregard the sanctioned agencies of the denomination. He did not send to Northfield or Lake Geneva for recruits for this student missionary campaign—the workers came right out of the denominational seminaries. With this Presbyterian layman things have to be done decently and in order. The great laymen's movement which has developed out of those student campaigns has never for an instant departed from close and affectionate loyalty to the General Assembly. The church's highest court is as constantly in the thought of these Southern Presbyterian laymen as the commander's headquarters is in the mind of officers in a battle. That is why the laymen's movement down South has been a whole church movement; the first step in any advance has been to secure the sanction and counsel of the Assembly, and then to move the congregations forward to that standard.

No Dearth of Missionary Candidates

Considering that twelve months of one man is worth more in missionary campaigning than one month of twelve men, Rowland secured the entire time of one of the seminary students. The success of this led to the enlargement of the plans, the addition of two more students for full time work, and thus was born the "forward movement" in the spring of 1902. The three campaigners were J. F. Stuart, L. I. Moffett and J. F. Preston, all of whom are now on the foreign mission field. Before they went they had the satisfaction of seeing pledged the support of every available missionary on the church's roll. In passing, it is to be noted that the Southern Presbyterian Church has never suffered a dearth of candidates for the foreign field. Lavish of life as of money for the kingdom's foreign service this church has ever been.

The family feeling among Southern Presbyterians has always been strong; they care for their own folk, and the interest in one another has been peculiarly definite. A stranger may see this in the church publications, especially of a missionary nature. The communications from the field are like letters home to "the folks." The births and deaths and marriages and illnesses are all of interest to the home constituency, to whom the representatives afield are not so many impersonal missionaries, but kinsfolk in the household of faith. Naturally, it has followed that individual support has been the vogue in mission work. I believe that every missionary on the rolls of the church is supported by an individual, a family, a church or a group of churches.

That is not all. The spirit which I have indicated expresses itself in remarkable ways. There is—if I am not presuming in quoting a story so personal—the case of the Sprunt Missionary Association. The Sprunts are a well-known family in the Carolinas, and it has become so much of a family usage to have representatives on the mission field that they maintain this association, the stay-at-homes agreeing to support any members of the family who go abroad. I believe the same is true of the Worth family of North Carolina. A more beautiful expression of the storied family loyalty of southern folk it would be hard to find.

Can Support Missionaries but Not an "Auto"

Instances of individual relationship to the field are numerous I know one rather wealthy man who has become interested in the laymen's movement who cannot afford an automobile, but who supports ten missionaries on the foreign field! Another friend, a young man, required to return from the foreign field to take his place as head of a famous Kentucky family, is represented abroad by three missionaries. First church of Wilmington, North Carolina, entirely maintains the mission station at Kiangyin, China. supplying most, if not all, of the missionaries, as well as the money needed. One man at a Southern Presbyterian laymen's convention agreed to be responsible for all the missionaries, buildings and enlargement that a certain mission station may need. In like fashion, to cite one case of many, the Presbyterians of Charleston, West Virginia, have agreed to take over the entire mission station at Suchien, up in the heart of the Chinese famine region.

The reader unfamiliar with the Southland will thus see that the qualities of loyalty and real human interest in personalities are to be counted upon in church work as well as in social life. Conditions were peculiarly ripe for the birth of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Mr. Rowland was, naturally, one of the laymen invited to that historic Haystack centennial celebration in Fifth Avenue church in New York City in November of 1906, when the Laymen's Missionary Movement was born. The vision that had first stirred in the heart of his friend, John B. Sleman, fired the imagination of this practical business man. Others dreamed of it as sweeping the country—he thought first of his own folk. How to denominationalize this new idea and organization became his immediate concern—although Rowland has never faltered for an instant in steadfast loyalty and support of the interdenominational Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Charles A. Rowland

Chairman executive committee Laymen's Missionary Movement, Southern Presbyterian Church

All that an interdenominational organization could do, and then still more, was possible to a body of men within church lines. With them a definiteness of appeal and objective was available which would be impossible in the more general relationships. So, after conference and correspondence, Rowland called a group of the leading Southern Presbyterian laymen together in Birmingham in 1907 and there was born the laymen's movement of the Southern Presbyterian Church. It is a matter of history that this particular division of the general movement has been the most conspicuous success of all. The greatest achievements of the whole enterprise have been within the Southern Church. Other denominations have wisely followed this example, until today many churches have their own laymen's movements. None, however, have won to the notable successes that are recorded in the recent history of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

Has Knack of Finding Fellow Laborers

Of course the laymen made Charles A. Rowland the chairman of their executive committee, and they have kept on reelecting him to this post. It has never occurred to anybody that there might be any other leader for this great work. His qualities are not those of a dashing cavalry commander—although he would not shrink from the "bloody angle" of any battlefield. His virtues are those of the business man. Tireless and dogged, he plods at the task, gathering up the multitude of details, and keeping other men at work. He is a study in the value of industry versus inspiration. His hard work has counted for more in the laymen's movement than any one man's speeches. How he does it is a marvel. He has traveled all over the South and repeatedly to the North on missionary matters. He seems to delight in the committee conferences, where plans are worked out to the last decimal of detail. Somehow, he has the knack of finding the right fellow laborer at the needed point.

Everywhere the Southern Church has risen to the new conception of missions and of a man's part therein. The enterprise as a whole has appeared as a vision to the churches of the South. A new and modern interest has been injected into congregational activity. The warrior spirit which craves hard fighting and difficult tasks has found in the objectives of the laymen's movement that which satisfies its ambition. The way these southern men have rallied to their own conventions of the laymen's movement has been fairly unparalleled. In addition to the summer conferences at Montreat, two great conventions of men have been held in the interest of foreign missions. One met in Birmingham, Alabama, in February, 1909, with 1,200 registered delegates, and a year ago a second assembled at Chattanooga, with more than 1,500 men enrolled. Both of these meetings were marked by great spiritual power, as well as by missionary fervor in behalf of worldwide evangelism.

Taking Time for Individuals

A certain public man once said, "I have no time for individuals." Diametrically opposite is the spirit of Mr. Rowland. The last time I met him was when he accompanied a group of missionary volunteers to Philadelphia, whence they were to embark for Africa. The roster of missionary guests in his hospitable home would probably represent every mission land many times over. He knows by name the men and women on the field, and he knows the field in a fashion that reveals how this missionary movement has educated business men in unexpected ways. There is more than one missionary family in Asia and Africa where the toys and books bear witness to the interest of the Rowland family in the workers abroad. What an ovation Rowland would have in mission circles if he could journey around the world! But he has been too busy in serving the world work at the home base. The General Assembly has urged him to become an officer of the executive committee of foreign missions, of which he is a member; and he himself is so much of the same spirit as the men in the field that he would sacrifice his profitable business to do so, did it seem necessary. Wiser counsel has prevailed, and he remains the unsalaried lay leader in the church's mission work.

A man cannot be interested in the whole world without learning that his own nation is on the map. It was inevitable, although not apparent at first, that this great foreign missionary propaganda should be linked up to a laymen's work for the home field. America's problems are no less pressing than those of Asia, and the Christian manhood which has rallied so chivalrously to the need of foreign peoples demands expression in behalf of America's needs. So the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church has asked the laymen to plan for another convention in February of this year, and the meetings are scheduled for February 18, 19, 20 in Memphis. With the same scope and elevation and definiteness that characterized the treatment of foreign themes at the preceding conventions, the claims of America upon the church will be considered at Memphis. There is evidence that there will be a new vision of the relation of American patriotism to world citizenship. It is expected that the Memphis convention, to which the men of the Northern Church also are invited, will be one more step up in the ascending scale of the Southern laymen's great gatherings.

So thoroughly infused has the General Assembly become with the spirit of the laymen's movement that at its meeting last year it directed the four executive committees (the Southern Church calls her boards "executive committees") to undertake an every-member canvass of every church in the Assembly for the benevolent causes of the Assembly during the month of March, 1913. The goal of this effort should be the raising of a million and a half dollars for the benevolent work of the Assembly during the year 1913-14. A third of this sum will be used as a special equipment fund, payable within three years, and distributed among the four executive committees for their especial equipment needs. The organization of the synods and of the presbyteries and of the congregations has gone on apace, culminating, of course, in the Memphis convention. The official statement observes: "Never before

(Continued on page 156)

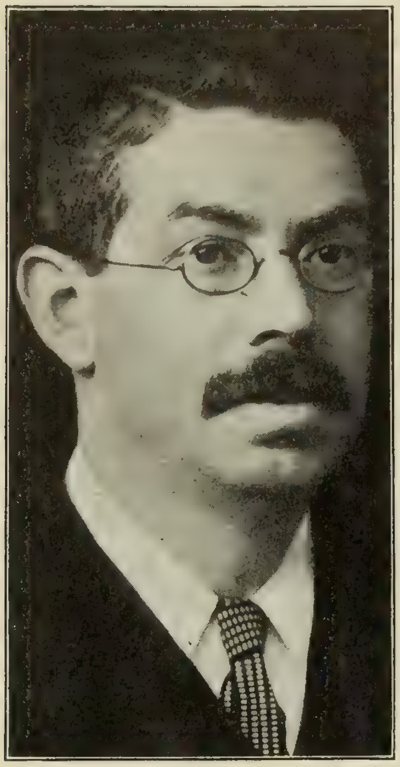
The Godfather of an Idea

BY HERBERT H. SMITH

SOMEONE ELSE might have thought of it, but no one else did, so it is rather safe to say that if it had not been for Dr. A. M. Gardner, there would have been no "World in Boston," no "World in Chicago." This means that thousands of people who have been awakened to a new vision of missions would have continued in their state of placid contentment.

Dr. Gardner is an Englishman, a Congregationalist and a doctor of divinity, but he doesn't permit his title to interfere with his usefulness. He moved from Baltimore to Chicago some weeks ago and will be in touch with the big exposition in the latter city until after it closes next spring. It is his job to be generalissimo for all the multitudinous activities which precede and accompany a "world."



A. M. Gardner, D. D.

"No one man was the inventor of the idea," he says in talking of the origin of this spectacular presentation of missions. "The movement was a growth. A man here added an idea, another developed in connection with the material offered at places where the exposition was held, and it gradually grew. It was a professor in a London theological seminary who presented the pageant idea to show what has been done in the past in missions. In Sheffield the 'Hall of Religions' was first used. In Chicago the unoccupied fields, rural churches and industrial missions will have a place for the first time in any of the expositions."

It was in 1904 that the original mission exposition was held. Dr. Gardner was then secretary of the London Missionary Society. He had observed how interested people were in curios from foreign lands and the idea was started of using these curios to create interest in missions. Plans were laid after talking the matter over with others in London. Maidenhead, a small town on the Thames, was selected as the place where the idea would be tried. The "show" cost $700 and lasted five days. For the most part it was a collection of curios, with men and women to explain them. The people liked it; the idea was a success. In this first little exposition was included a representation of the interior of a Hindu dwelling, and from this one exhibit have developed through successive expositions the thirty or more scenes from mission fields which are now used.

"The World in Chicago," like all the other "worlds," is meant to convey a vivid idea of the life of the natives and the work of the missionaries. Men are now traveling in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine islands hunting additional furniture and household utensils to add to the exhibits from those countries. In troubled Turkey collectors are also at work gathering material to help people visualize the home life of the people.

Dr. Gardner has the sturdy frame typical of the true sons of Britain, and over this novel missionary enterprise he has the enthusiasm of an American promoter of mining stocks. Of the missionary expositions in England he can talk energetically, and with none of the weariness in his voice which might be excused in one who has seen so much of this phase of mission work. Dr. Gardner started the summer schools for missions in England. They have proved a success with a number of denominations. From fostering mission spirit by study it was natural that the idea of holding expositions for the purpose of stimulating interest in further study should develop.

He had charge of over two score such gatherings in England before the large "Orient in London" in 1908. He was loaned to Boston for the "world" there and later severed his connection with England and became secretary of the Missionary Education Movement of New York, an organization which gathers missionary curios and lends them to cities.

"Few people at first thought that the idea would spread," said Dr. Gardner as he turned from his desk and seemed to look back through the years to the small exhibit held in Maidenhead. "It was the night after the closing meeting at that first exhibition that the suggestion was made that we had hit upon a big thing. A friend and I were sitting in the deserted hall, long after the crowds had left. This friend said to me that if the idea took elsewhere as it had in that village, it would spread all over the world. And it has. After "The Orient in London" I got letters from Los Angeles and Chicago, South Africa and Australia, inquiring about details of the exhibition."

The idea spread to America directly through travelers. "There was a committee from Boston sent over to London in 1908," continued Dr. Gardner. "They were very enthusiastic over the exposition. The bishops of the Episcopal Church then meeting in London saw it, and the delegates to the Congregational meeting in Edinburgh saw it. They scattered broadcast news of the success of that affair. We have had four expositions in this country, and Chicago will have the largest of them all. It will be the biggest thing religiously ever held on this continent, and the biggest thing Chicago has had since the World's fair. More ground will be covered there than has been attempted elsewhere. Chicago will have the best exhibit of Palestine ever shown at an exposition. Siam will be represented for the first time, and city missions have been shown but once before—in Baltimore."

A MAN WHO WENT TO CHINA TO BE CONVERTED

APROPOS OF WHAT Lord Charles Beresford calls "the break-up of China" today, the following true story may be very much to the point indeed. A certain eminent son of Wisconsin, who has been in more than one spot on the globe's surface where but two or three hardy white men have ever ventured, and whose books are accordingly known and quoted the world over, had an experience some little time ago which, as he himself frankly says, converted him.

Formerly a professor of the not uncommon creed that whatever religion any people have is "good enough for them" and that there is no reason why the tenets of Christianity should be substituted therefor, he found himself in China recently, and was granted an audience with one of the two or three men who are known to world statesmen as "the brains of China of today and tomorrow."

The proper intercourse of honorific greetings was followed by eager questions as to the state of China, and finally the traveler asked what, in the mind of the distinguished Chinese, was the principal need of China today.

Instantly came the simple answer, "Christianity, of course."

"You astonish me," said the American. "I had supposed you would have named new business methods, a new and progressive administration, education, or such things. May I ask why you say, 'Christianity, of course'?"

"Because it is the only thing that goes deep enough," said the eminent Oriental. "China needs all those things you mention, and many more, but it needs Christianity first, because that underlies all the rest. Take a single instance. We have gold mines in inner China of which I know well, and which would make your Klondike look, as you say, 'like 30 cents.' It is gold which is easy to work. But we cannot work it. Why not? Because if we were to fill our canal boats full of it and start them toward the coast, every village mandarin through whose boundaries our boats passed would extort his bribe to let them pass, and every other official, little and big, would, as you say, 'get his,' too, and when we reached the coast we would have no gold at all—and would be lucky if we still had the boats! No, China can never be reformed until it has a new business and governmental honesty, and it can never have these until it has a new moral sense, and it can never have that until it has become Christian. I myself am a rich man, as wealth goes in China, but I have not one copper cash invested in China. They are all invested in American securities—because America is a Christian country, and that is the only kind of country where an investment is ever safe!"

In telling the story the traveler added: "I don't quite know whether I was a Christian when I went to China—but I know I was one after that talk!"

P. B. J.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters—Bradford Horton is working his way through Prestonbury Theological Seminary. A fellow student, Austin Sleighton, becomes his loyal friend; but Oren-Toole, a jealous fellow bank employee, attempts to involve him in a money theft, using as his tool an old beggar, Andrew Drum, who proves to be Horton's own father. Miss Elmore, daughter of the bank's president, to whom Horton is greatly attracted, believes in his innocence, which is finally proved. Oren-Toole and Drum, however, are incriminated. Drum dies before his trial, and Horton begs that the case against Oren-Toole be dropped. This angers Mr. Elmore, and he writes Horton a note which causes him to resign from the bank and to give up his position as tutor to Mr. Elmore's grandson. Mr. Elmore still believes Horton an impostor. Sleighton tries to persuade him to clear himself. This Horton refuses to do because of a last promise to Drum that he would not reveal the latter's identity as the man of whom, in his youth, Prestonbury had prophesied ill, and whose marriage was opposed by his bride's family. Horton, because of the president's hostility, declines the cashier's invitation to return to the bank.

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued

THAT NIGHT MAXWELL called on Mr. Elmore. "Sam, you look tired," was his host's first remark after the exchange of salutations. "You're working too hard." "I know I am. You see, it's heavier with no bookkeeper. I know a good one, but I can't get him."

"I guess you can. Have you made an offer?"

"Offered him a hundred a month."

"And he wouldn't take it? He must be a good one."

"You know yourself he is. Now, don't get angry, Mr. Elmore, but it's Bradford Horton."

To Maxwell's relief, Mr. Elmore showed no sign of getting angry. "That's strange," he said. "I've been thinking about him today myself. Telepathy, eh? So he won't work for us?"

"He would but for you."

"Me? What have I done?"

"Written him a letter in which you called him William Drum"

"Well, what's the matter with that? Why should a man refuse to work for me because I called him by his name?"

"That's not his name, Mr. Elmore. Recall that letter."

"I can't, Sam. His name is not Horton. There's not a drop of Horton blood in his veins, and I can prove it."

"Possibly. But it's better policy for you as president of the bank to recall that letter and put him at the books than to let your knowledge of what there is or is not in his veins keep him away from us."

But in spite of argument and plea, however sound and strong, Mr. Elmore remained obstinate, and the cashier gave up the effort. Circumstances, however, were even then shaping to relieve Maxwell's disappointment and secure his desires. For within a week after the unsatisfactory interview between the two bank officers Mr. Elmore received a letter from his daughter which disturbed him more than Maxwell's call.

"My Dear Father: I had a letter from Charlie weeks ago concerning which I should have written you ere now. Charlie wrote that his change of tutors had not been a success. A more recent letter from Caroline is more outspoken than Charlie's. She says there is no hope for Charlie's making Yale next fall. Now, daddy, I know what the trouble is. The influence of that mean Glencoe woman made you write Mr. Horton a meaner letter. It wasn't like you, daddy, and I want you to recall it. Go apologize like the gentleman you are. It's absurd to think Mr. Horton's name is Drum. Don't be obstinate any longer, daddy; Charlie's worth more than a name. Ever your own Lennie."

He showed the letter to his wife. "What do you think of that, Emily?" he asked.

"I think she's right, as she is almost always. She's too much like you to be wrong often. I've never known you before to be wrong so long."

"What has set you all against me, all at once?" asked the husband almost bitterly.

On the next day Joseph Jickers did a thing unusual for him. He hired a horse and buggy and took Bradford for a drive. The road took them out of the city to the shores of Prestonbury's pride, the beautiful Lake Orsina. They followed the road along its banks three or four miles. Joe did not cease talking from the moment the drive began.

"See that house yonder across the lake in the bend? That's Nick Moon's. Great place for chicken and waffles. Nick's a bachelor. Queer chap. Fine scholar. Could talk Greek with you. You ought to know him.

"See that long point up the lake? That's Jake Branscombe's. Finest point on the lake. Jake's a Dutchman. I expect a fellow could board there for the summer and have a splendid time. What you going to do this summer?"

"I don't know yet."

"Say, your honor, I'll tell you what to do. Open chambers at Branscombe's. Have your town office in Preston National bank. Row down morning, back afternoons. Couldn't spend the summer better."

"I don't want any town office, J. J. What are you dreaming about?"

"Counsel's not dreaming, your honor. He's listening, and objects to your honor's opinion. Your honor may not want town office, but town office wants him. Bank, you know. Maxwell, you know."

Horton laughed in spite of himself. "Does counsel mean me to understand that Samuel Maxwell wants me to keep books for the Preston National bank this summer?"

"That is a fair statement of the case, your honor. Four hundred dollars for the summer. Cost you $200 to live on the lake. Two hundred left. Your honor will be able to buy another carbonate——"

Horton's roar of laughter cut short the little man's sentence. "J. J.," he said as his laugh ceased, "you play a good game. Maxwell's not in it with you. I'd like to go to the bank to please you, but between me and the bank Mr. Elmore has placed an impassable barrier. When he removes it you may take me to drive again."

"Your honor declines the proposition of counsel?"

"Absolutely."

"G'lang." Joe hit the horse a savage clip with the whip and turned homeward.

* * * * *

The day after Mr. Elmore had received his daughter's letter Joseph Jickers called at the bank, and went directly to the office of the president.

"Well, your honor, what's the business this morning?" asked Mr. Elmore.

"His honor is not here today. This is a business call, Mr. Elmore."

"Well, what can we do for you, Joe?"

"Nothing for me any more than for yourself and all of us."

Joe was so seldom serious that Mr. Elmore was somewhat at a loss how to take him. "What is it that concerns us all?" he asked again, with more interest.

"Sam Maxwell," was the reply. "We've lost our teller; we've thereby lost our bookkeeper, and if things go on as they are we'll lose our cashier."

"I've thought of that myself," replied the president. "We've been trying to get a bookkeeper."

"We? You mean Sam. He told me about it."

"Is Sam complaining?"

"No! You know he never complains. He's been bookkeeper hunting, and failed. Then he came for me to go on the hunt and started me after the same fellow, and I failed. So now it's time for you to try, Mr. President, and I recommend that you try the same man. You know who he is. There's only one competent man in this city who is at all available."

"I understand. You want me to go and ask William Drum to keep our books?"

"No, Mr. Elmore, I don't. I want you to call on Bradford Horton. I want you to tell him you recall the letter you wrote him. I want you to tell him you are prepared to call him by his name."

"I can't do that, Joe. There's not a drop of Horton blood in his veins." It was the same old plea.

"Very well, Mr. President. When Samuel Maxwell dies have this inscription put on his tombstone: 'Killed by a whim of the president of the Preston National bank.' Good morning."

The indignant Joseph walked out of the office with the dignity of an emperor.

"I wonder who'll be the next," said the president, smiling even in his annoyance.

(Continued on page 155)

THE HOME COUNCIL

Brightening Hospital Hours

BY ELIZABETH L. GEBHARD

HAVE YOU A FRIEND in some hospital, living through days of pain and dreariness, and possibly homesickness? Perhaps this friend is at a distance from her family, thus making a daily call upon her impossible. If so, why not prepare for her that very good substitute for a personal call, a friendship book, which holds a letter for each day?

Your first step is to discover the number of days that your friend is likely to be hospital-bound, then look over your treasures of memory and print—prose and verse, comfort and humor—and see how many days you can cover. Single subjects of interest may be utilized as individual letters. Personal letters are usually fragmentary, covering a large amount of time in a few pages. In a friendship book this order of things is reversed. A story regarding one event makes a letter—and lightens a day.

A book of this kind covering two weeks contained, in part, the story of a family reception and the bright sayings of the members of the family, the description of a rare old colonial home, two original poems, a description of a Colonial Dame meeting, a charming spring picture postal of a baby among the flowers, a humorous kitten card, a piece of an old-time wedding gown and its story, two or three rare bits of poetry, with their writers' autographs attached; one or two specially apt quotations and two or three personal letters of sympathy, full of news and good cheer.

Each person in a family generally contributes to such a book, though it can be easily compiled by one person. The letters and other matter are written on sheets of writing paper of the same size, always leaving the two outside pages blank. When finished, the sheet often contains extra paper for souvenirs or clippings. The day of the week is written on the first blank page of each letter, with the date; then day by day the latter are sealed, top and bottom and front edge, with a gummed star or flower. When all the sealed days, with their glints of sunshine within, are complete, they are piled together and pierced at the back with two eyelet holes and tied together with a gold cord.

An attractive cover may be embroidered or painted, but a simple, pretty and easily constructed one can be made of heavy white paper. Cut a piece large enough to cover the book and extend a little beyond. Pad the outside and cover it with some soft shade of watered silk or wide ribbon, lining the cover with white silk. This lining is neatly hemmed down around the inside of the cover. A sheet of paper in the middle of the book, bearing some attractive picture, is left unsealed. A gold cord or narrow ribbon is fastened in the middle of the top of the cover, run down through the unsealed sheet and fastened at the bottom, and the book is complete.

Compiling a friendship book is a pleasure to the sender, and as for the receiver, listen to one who speaks for herself:

"I look forward each day to the next day's letter in my book. Sometimes I read it before I have my breakfast. Always it is one bright spot in the day before me."

Verses Old and New

PRAYER AND PAINS

No answer comes to those who pray,
And idly stand
And wait for stones to roll away
At God's command.
He will not break the binding cords
Upon us laid
If we depend on pleading words
And do not aid.

When hands are idle, words are vain
To move the stone;
An aiding angel would disdain
To work alone;
But he who prayeth and is strong
In faith and deed,
And toileth earnestly, ere long
He will succeed.

Beans Balanced by Apples

A pound of beans that costs perhaps 3 or 4 cents yields one and one-half times as much proteid and twice as many calories, or heat units, as a pound of beef, that costs anywhere from 16 to 30 cents. Yet beans unfortunately do not agree with some people.

There are three objections to beans as an article of diet, says The Youth's Companion: First, the hulls are composed of a tough and indigestible cellulose that not only resists the solvent action of the digestive juices, but actually hinders the assimilation of the proteid by protecting it from the action of those ferments. One way to meet this objection is to purchase "hull-less" beans. Another is to mash the common beans through a colander after they are cooked. Many find vinegar as a condiment an aid to digestion.

The second objection is the presence in beans of a large amount of easily dissociated sulphur that forms a gas in the stomach or intestines and causes flatulency. The addition of about one-eighth as many lentils as beans to the baking pot, the puree or the soup will obviate this condition.

The third and most serious objection is common to the whole class of leguminous plants—peas, beans, lentils and peanuts. This is the property, possessed by the peculiar proteid, legumin, of uniting with lime salts to form an insoluble substance that gives rise to indigestion. Unfortunately, lime salts are always with us, in the body, in even moderately hard water, in the beans themselves. But a powerful solvent for lime salts is found in the malic acid so abundant in apples. Hence, if you invariably serve apples with your dish of beans, you can triumph over the perversity of legumin and compel it to help instead of hurt you, since, apart from its bad habits when associated with lime, it is really a valuable proteid. Serve baked beans with an apple salad, bean soup to begin, and a baked apple dessert to end the meal, apple sauce, apple snow, sweet cider, raw apples—apples in whatever form you like best, so long as apples in some form accompany or follow your dish of beans.

He Could Prove It

This English family had all been to church, and the young minister had come home to dine with them. While at dinner they fell to discussing the new stained-glass window a member had given the church.

"It is a most beautiful piece of workmanship," said one, "and must have cost a great deal of money. Have you any idea how much?"

"I really have not," replied the minister; "but far into the hundreds, I should imagine."

"No, it didn't either," spoke up Harold. "I know how much it was. It cost fourteen shillings and ten pence."

"Why, Harold, how do you know anything about it?"

"Because, mamma, it said at the bottom of the window, 'Job 14:10.'"

BITS BY THE WAY

WARMING THE THERMOMETER

One of our Home Councilors is having her first winter of ranching. She and Mr. Home Councilor have bought a cattle ranch in Montana, and are making what shift they can for warmth and cheer in their one-room "shack."

"It's a good deal below zero here today," she writes, "and the nails are snapping at a great rate. But I can't tell you just what the mercury registers; for when it gets awfully cold, Henry and I put the thermometer in the oven a minute before we look at it. If we didn't I'm sure we should freeze to death!"

A nice, helpful little bit of self-delusion—which suggests infinite possibilities in the way of moderating one's difficulties and raising the temperature of one's spirits. It's a good practice to try to fool one's self into believing things are less black than they sometimes seem. The habit of looking on the bright side is easily formed if given half a chance.

A LITTLE FOLKS' CHURCH

Echoes of Christmas are still heard now and then. Rev. George C. Frost, pastor of Waterbury Memorial church, Oriskany, N. Y., has a new telephone—a Christmas telephone, and a surprise at that, as all Christmas presents should be. But what makes this gift quite unique and precious beyond its money cost, or even the convenience it is to the pastor, is the fact that it was the thought and the gift of the children of the church, who raised enough money to pay for it for two years. This money was brought to Mr. Frost in a box, in true Christmas style, by three of the children. Back of the gift, however, stands a thought of Mr. Frost's own, which found expression in the Little Folks' church, organized within the grown-ups' church and having as its members about forty children, from 5 to 17 years old. This Little Folks' church has a service of its own, adapted to its needs, every Sunday afternoon. Mr. Frost preaches the sermon, a choir of children leads the singing and children gather the offering. A little boy is treasurer. And it was in this youthful congregation that the scheme for the Christmas telephone was hatched.

The Little Folks' church offers one solution of the problem that puzzles many parents: "How can Sunday afternoon be made pleasant and profitable for the children?"

THE BISHOP'S WAY

Bishop John H. Vincent had something to say in a recent address about the bringing up of children. The value of his suggested methods may be judged by the fact that they helped to develop a college president—George E. Vincent, the bishop's son, now head of Minnesota University.

"I used to bring home as many as 400 blocks to my son," the bishop said. "While he played with them his mother read aloud from Dickens, Thackeray and other standard authors. My boy would look up from his play and would ask, 'What is that, mother, you are reading?' She would explain and in that way be learned very early an appreciation of good literature while in the midst of his play.

"I brought home a blackboard and put it beside our best furniture, and it didn't hurt the furniture a bit. There is such a thing as the conservation of furniture and the destruction of life.

"The table affords one of the best opportunities for education. The table is not a trough for pigs or for people to eat from. Conversation is more important than the menu. Funny story telling and general good fellowship are conducive to digestion and to family discipline."

SINGER MISSES OWN LULLABY

A touching confidence penned to a friend by the great cantatrice, Mme. Emma Calve, proves that gifts, fame, fortune, the plaudits of an admiring world may leave a woman still unsatisfied; that she is just a woman, "for a' that." Mme. Calve speaks of her voice, her career, her successes. The she wistfully adds:

"But, after all, that is not happiness. I would have preferred to be the mother of five or six children. They would have been my lullaby."

S. C. R.

YOUNG AMERICA

The Story the Picture Told Me

Alice and Her Bunnies

First Prize

THE SUNBEAMS stole through the pretty white curtains and danced to the little bed where Alice lay sleeping. They must have whispered that it was Easter morning, for the blue eyes opened wide and Alice gave a little cry of joy that brought her mamma running from the next room.

All through the dressing time Alice plied her mamma with questions. "Isn't the sun bright, mamma? See how happy the roses look! Do you think the bunnies came last night? Where had I better look for the eggs? And, oh, mamma, may I run and hunt before breakfast?"

When the last button was buttoned, and the last bow was tied, mamma gave her little daughter a kiss and bade her speed away on the quest after the Easter bunnies. Alice flew to the big red rose, her favorite in all the garden. Every crimson bud seemed almost bursting with happiness. But no secret was hidden beneath the dark, glossy leaves.

The little seeker went next to the lilac bush, whose blossoms filled the garden with rare fragrance, then to the big snowball bush by the front gate, and afterwards she made a careful search among the hyacinths that bordered the walk. But nowhere could little Alice find even a track of a bunny's tiny foot.

Mamma from the open window watched the little seeker. Her sweet face with a puzzled look of disappointment was lifted questioningly to her mother. But ere the question left her lips, Alice sped like a dart to a shady nook where lilies of the valley swung their dainty bells in sweet profusion.

Down on her knees went Alice, her two dimpled hands went up as an "Oh!" of ecstasy was heard by mamma at the window.

Down midst the dark green stems of the lilies two cunning bunnies were guarding a nest of eggs that surely must have been dipped in the rainbow itself.

This was the coming of the bunnies. Dot and Pinky they were named. They came to be the dearest of all playtime treasures.

Alice took them for walks in the garden, for nice sleepy swings in the hammock, and quite often took them for rides in the big auto.

One day when Alice had been quiet so long that mamma grew anxious and went to look for her, so pretty a picture met her gaze as she stepped out on the front porch that she hurriedly brought her kodak for a snapshot.

Little Alice was seated on a rug with her brightest picture book spread out on her lap and with much patience she was giving Dot and Pinky their first lesson in reading.

Griffith Harsh (age 14).
Douglas, Ariz.

Virginia's Thanksgiving Fright

Second Prize

ONE BEAUTIFUL DAY in late October Virginia and her two bunnies went out on the porch to talk. Virginia began to tell them the story of Peter Rabbit, and how the McGregors put his father into a pie.

"Now," she said, when she was finished, "you don't want to be put in a pie like Peter's father, do you? And I don't want you to be, either. Mother said that they do put rabbits in pies and that it would make a fine dish for Thanksgiving dinner. But they aren't going to have you."

She paused for a moment, and drawing a book out from behind her, she opened it.

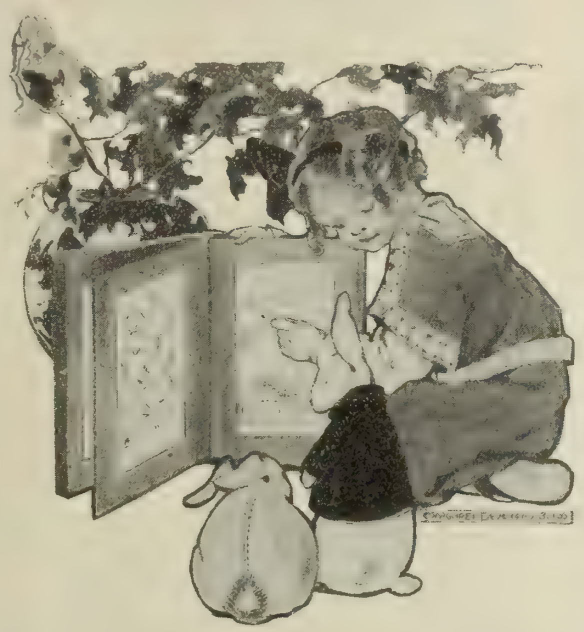
"There," she said, pointing to a picture, "they can eat that turkey." Then she went on to tell about the Pilgrims and their first Thanksgiving Day with the Indians.

A few weeks later Virginia overheard her father saying, "It will be better to kill it early, and since I have spare time now it will be a good time to do it."

"My bunnies!" was Virginia's first thought. She ran to the place where she had left them, and taking one under each arm started off. Down the street she ran, till she came to a big oak known as the hollow oak. She placed her bunnies inside and put a rock against the entrance.

The next day was Thanksgiving. When Virginia came to dinner she was overjoyed by the big turkey that stood in place of a rabbit pie, and she laughed at the joke she had played on them.

After dinner she became lonesome for her bunnies, and knowing all danger was over she thought she would go and get them. She ran so fast and was thinking so much about her bunnies that she did not notice the flakes that were slowly descending. Faster and faster they came, till at last she was nearly blinded by them. By this time she had reached the tree.



Virginia took away the rock and pulled out her bunnies. "If I could only get inside I would be sheltered from the storm," she thought. But it was too small. Then she started homeward.

The snow was so blinding that she was obliged to crawl on her hands and knees. Finally to her great joy she caught sight of a house. She ran toward it, only to find it was not hers. Then she began to cry very hard.

A big policeman was coming toward her. Probably he had come to take the bunnies. But he had not, however, and when he came nearer he asked her what was the matter. She told him, and then he took Virginia right up in his arms and carried her straight home.

When her father and mother had thanked the policeman they brought her into the library where a big cozy fire was burning. "Now tell us the whole story," said her father when they were all seated.

"Well," began Virginia, "you told mother it was about time to kill it for Thanksgiving dinner, and I didn't want my bunnies eaten all up, so I hid them."

Then papa began to laugh. When he finally got his breath he said, "We don't eat stuffed bunnies, do we, mother? When we said that we meant the turkey."

Margaret Rees Christian (age 11).
Ishpeming, Mich.

Bunny and Bunnette

Third Prize

IT WAS ON JAN. 1, 1912, that Margaret's parents explained to her what "good resolutions" meant. Now Margaret was one of the wildest and most thoughtless children of the village. On hearing what her parents said, she determined to be good, if possible, throughout the year. Her parents were delighted and did all in their power to encourage her.

True to her resolution, Margaret became very good; so good, indeed, that at the close of the year Santa Claus, the friend of good children, heard of it, and marveled at the wonderful change.

When Christmas came he picked out a number of nice presents for her, so that she might know how glad he was to learn that she had been trying to do right.

Among the presents were two rabbits and a picture book, which are shown in the picture. She named the rabbits Bunny and Bunnette and loved to show them her picture book.

They were not with her very long before she found that poor little Bunnette, the girl rabbit, with a tail like a Japanese mustache, was suffering from stomach trouble, and that this made Bunny very dejected.

"Appendicitis!" she exclaimed; and determined at once upon an operation. Not being a surgeon, she did not know how such operations should be performed, but getting a pair of scissors, she cut Bunnette open down the back.

After taking out the sawdust which she found in Bunnette's interior and removing some pebbles that were mixed with it, she returned the sawdust and sewed up the hole, saying, "Thank goodness, Bunnette, you can't have appendicitis again!"

Although still weak, Bunnette has recovered from the effects of the dreadful operation, but the mark of the wound will always remain.

The older folks laugh whenever Bunnette's sickness is mentioned, but Margaret still believes that but for her timely aid Bunny would now be mourning over a lost companion and friend.

Carroll Patterson Ford (age 13).
Norwood, Pa.

The Little Teacher

Third Prize

LITTLE MARY was left in charge of the house for an hour. She lived in a large house, with a large nursery in which she kept her toys. Among these toys were her two stuffed rabbits. Getting her rabbits and a book out, she planned to play school.

Setting the big rabbit by the little rabbit, she began to teach school. Being only in the first grade herself, she only knew how to teach reading. So taking the alphabet book, she began to teach:

A is for apples that grow on a tree,
And when they fall off
They are picked up by me.

B is for baby, 18 months old,
She sits by the fire-grate
And never gets cold.

C is for carriage, with horses and whip,
And when it is cold
The horses may slip.

D is for Donald, a small boy that cries
When mamma won't tie
His little neckties.

E is for Ethel, who plays with a funnel,
And E is for engine,
That goes through a tunnel.

Thus she went through the alphabet book. Getting out another book, she began to read a story called "The Mule and the Horse": One day a mule came into a stable in which was a horse.

"Where did you come from?" said the horse, looking very proud.

"Oh, some nice man put me in here," said the mule.

Now the horse knew the master thought the world of him, and to have him buy a mule was very annoying.

"I have always heard that mules were very slow," said the horse, getting jealous.

"I am slow, but I do my work as good as any

(Continued on page 156)

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

February 9, 1913—God's Covenant with Noah

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 8:1-9:17. Golden Text, Genesis 9:13: I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a covenant between me and the earth.

Noah is a revised edition of Adam. Their lives were alike and unlike. Each stood at the gate of things. But Adam had no past—with him time was all future. Not so with Noah. His 600 years were replete with memories. Adam was an experiment. Noah, on the contrary, was a realization. He had gone through the flood and came out strong. But strength must be measured by temptation. Noah in Eden might have been a very different man, and so might Adam on Ararat. Adam fell and so did Noah, only one acted for the race and the other for himself. Times and places add new conditions to life. Adam was a possibility, Noah a confirmation. One confronted the race before it fell, the other after.

Noah, Though a Man of Wide Resources, Moved at God's Bidding

The one dominant feature of Noah's character was faith. He never attempted to reason with God. And yet he was a man of the widest resources. He entered the ark when God bade him. There was no other possible way by which he could have known the imminence of the flood. He went out, directed of God and also in accord with his own reason. First he sent out a raven, but it failed to return. There was no reason that it should. Ravens subsist on death, and the dead were all about. Then followed the dove, pure, gentle and peaceful, but it found no rest for its tired wing. Purity seeks its own, and as yet the ark was the dove's home. The patriarch put forth his hand and drew it to himself. How many little dovelike spirits, flying from the windows of heaven, find no rest upon earth, and return to the Father's house. But the second mission bore a testimony that must have rejoiced the patriarch. The olive leaf assured him that the waters had abated and the earth again smiled with life.

This incident is one of the most beautiful in literature. As a symbol of peace and good will, it will remain while language lives. It also suggests the characteristic for which the patriach was chiefly noted—faith. And he had also patience. The two are closely related. Men like Noah are seldom in a hurry. He could work at the one task for a hundred years. His sermons were on the one theme and never quite finished. These were possible only because he himself believed in what he said and did. When one loses faith in his work impatience is its surest indication.

Another seven days must pass before the final test was made. Again the dove went forth and, as the record says, "returned not again unto him any more." So many work all day and then spoil it at the end. They grow impatient at the sunset.

The Altar Is the Corner Stone of National Permanency

And the Lord spake unto Noah, "Go forth from the ark," as one year before he had bidden him enter. The patriarch obeyed and a new world stood ready to receive him. The first thing that he did was to build an altar. If society was to be reorganized it must be on the basis of the church. That essential has lost none of its force. The altar and what it stands for is the corner stone of national permanency. The history of our own country bears welcome testimony to that fact. The Mayflower was the ark of American liberty. There is no substitute for the altar of God. It was the loss of it that invited the deluge not only in Babylonia but in modern France. In one instance it rained water, in the other blood.

By this it must not be understood that God is an arbitrary ruler, ready to smite his poor earthly children, but he must, of necessity, be at the very heart of things. As well attempt to build an ark without beams or boards as a government without the principles of God and truth. Faith must find an expression in service, and Noah's offering ascended as a sweet savor to heaven. The effect was that God in his heart determined never again to smite the earth as before. The language is human, but who knows how many blessings come through public worship? God determined in his heart, and the subsequent covenant only expressed what was there.

A covenant is simply an agreement between two parties. There are two kinds mentioned in the Old Testament—those between man and man and those between God and man. This covenant belongs to the latter. Usually there is a condition involved. That is, man is to receive a certain blessing on condition that he perform his part of the compact. In this instance no such condition is imposed; the race needed just such an assurance as this. There had been one deluge—might there not be another? That possibility would paralyze effort. Fields were to be cultivated and cities built, neither of which would be possible under the shadow of impending destruction. The sower must have faith in the harvest, else he will refuse to sow. Faith in the future is the salvation of the present.

God's Justice Quenched in the Atoning Blood of Christ

God met the circumstance by the assurance of his word. Rain was necessary, but when he brought a cloud upon the earth his bow would be seen in the cloud. This was to be the token of his promise. Signs or tokens were customary at the making of covenants. Jacob and Laban set up a stone as a witness to their compact. It stood as Mizpah when they were absent one from the other. God needed no such reminder, but man did. The rainbow was nothing new in nature. Ever since the sun had shone and rain had fallen the bow had had its place. But a new meaning was given to its purpose. The poet speaks of adding another hue to the rainbow, and that is what God's promise does. To those simple-minded people living on the rim of the deluge it meant the constancy of nature; but faith is always expansive. There are storms that beat about the ark of life, through which the bow shines as a constant emblem. whether seen, as the patriarch saw it, from the brow of the mountain or from the valley below, it means the one thing. The justice of God has been quenched in another sea—the atonement of the Christ.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—God suspends judgment that mercy may triumph. Our immunity from swift punishment is not due to any natural law but to the divine self-restraint. God not only gives his promise but seals it. There is a bow in every cloud if we have faith to discover it.

The lesson of a divine mercy follows close upon the story of a divine retribution. Not since Noah's day has anyone seen a universal flood, but all of us have seen, and seen many times, a rainbow—the sign and seal of divine promise. There have been periods in the history of the race when extinction might have seemed the fit end of man, but God's mercy has remained true to his word. We are reminded now and then by a volcanic eruption, an earthquake or some vast tidal wave, how easy it would be for the Almighty to wipe out all human life. It remains not because of its moral worth but because of God's heavenly promise.

The promise was given to Noah just when he needed it most. He had seen the judgments of the Almighty and he was to discover in himself and in his son that sin was not destroyed by the flood, although sinners were. As persons who have escaped some great pestilence are for long years afterwards on the watch for symptoms of the plague and deeply disturbed by anything reminding them of its virulence and fatal effects, so Noah would be always expecting a return of the deluge except for God's strong averment that it should not be repeated.

Thus a beautiful object in nature becomes to every soul conscious of guilt a reminder of mercy. It is a picture lesson of benevolence. Even though we be hardly saved, we shall not be wholly lost. We are not continually reminded of the flood, but we are by every fresh rainbow reminded of its close.

Naturalist Trusts Law of Nature, but Christian Trusts Word of God

Chapter 9:8—Happily our faith does not rest upon an inference, a deduction or our own interpretation of nature. We have a "God spake" upon which to rest our confident hope. The more deeply we study nature the more we are impressed by the insecurity of the "solid earth." Under the ice cap which covers Greenland to an unknown depth lie the remains of a lost tropical world with its fossils well preserved, to remind us how natural conditions may be changed—perhaps in a moment. High up among our mountain ranges are marine deposits which tell us how the beds of seas have been lifted up to the region of the clouds. If we had not revelation upon which to rest, nature would afford us little comfort.

Verse 9—God's word rests upon God's will. Our confidence that the general order of nature will not be changed rests not upon any "law" of the immaterial world about us but upon the word of the living God. Nature may tremble. Man may sin. But the "covenant" is of God, imperishable.

Verse 10—God's mercy to the saved reaches in manifold blessing those little conscious of the source to which their immunity is due. In Abraham's time God would have saved Sodom for a mere handful of the righteous, as a whole city is sometimes spared a bombardment because this or that flag floats over one house in it. God's mercy to Noah spreads its protection over the race of man and over the beasts of the field and the wild creatures of the forests.

Word of God Confirmed by Visible Token and Seal

Verse 12—Whether it be a weakness in man or not, it certainly is a part of his make-up that he wants a visible token to confirm his faith. The man who climbs some high mountain peak may spend an hour in seeking a souvenir of his achievement to take back with him. Lovers in their separations do not doubt the fidelity which, nevertheless, they pledge by the giving and receiving of a ring.

Verse 13—The rainbow, of all natural objects the most beautiful, and one seen in all lands and yet seen only on occasion, is set apart as a visible token, an adopted seal set to the written word as we "sign and seal" today the agreements we make with others, or the last will and testament in which we remember our family and friends. The light of sunshine on a departing storm is indeed a fit and charming token which bears its comforting power in itself.

The Eye of Faith Sees the Bow in Every Cloud

Verse 14—"And it shall come to pass, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud." As it is the night which enables us to see the stars—invisible by day—so we should never see a rainbow in a cloudless heaven. The cloud is as needful for the production of the rainbow as is the sun. "The whole story of the gospel," said Henry Ward Beecher in one of his greatest sermons, "is written upon a background of judgment." But he never forgot that while judgment is a background to God's throne, there is a rainbow over that throne, in beauty like an emerald (Rev. 4:3).

This was the thought of Paul when he told us that much as sin might abound, grace—grace to forgiveness, grace in redemption—should much more abound (Rom. 5:20). It was not in John that Christ showed the riches of his grace; but in Saul of Tarsus, whose hands were red with the blood of the saints. The writer attended, some years ago, a great conference of Christian Indians, and while there asked the white missionary in residence upon whom he most relied for counsel and assistance. He thought a moment and then, pointing to the Indian elder who was presiding, said, "That man is one of the sweetest and sanest men I ever knew. But he was one of the murderers at the New Ulm massacre." Grace can transmute sorrow into joy, or glorify the hitherto sinful nature. Well may the apostle represent the angels of heaven as studying the power of God's love not among the sinless but among the redeemed.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning Feb. 2, 1913

Foreign Mission Topic—Korea.

The mainland portion of Korea consists of a peninsula extending southward from Manchuria, 600 miles in length, 135 miles in breadth. Its total coastline is about 1,740 miles. Nearly the whole surface of the country is mountainous. The southern and western coasts are fringed by islands, some 200 of which are of considerable size, and some 125 of which are inhabited.

—

The population numbers about 17,000,000, of whom the majority are women. As little more than half the arable land is at present under cultivation, it is estimated that the country could support 7,000,000 more.

—

The Koreans belong to the Mongol family, but differ from both Japanese and Chinese in physiognomy. The recently retired dynasty ascended the throne in 1392, and received its investiture from the first Ming emperor of China. In 1592 occurred the great disaster of Korean history, when Hideyoshi, the Asiatic Napoleon, having conceived the idea of a world empire under his rule, crossed from Japan and invaded the mainland, the only ultimate result being that Korea was so completely devastated that she has not recovered to this day. He carried away not only the goods and art treasures of the Koreans, but also the artists themselves; so that several of the beautiful arts of the present Japan, its satsuma porcelain, its brass work and damascene work, were derived from Korea. There is thus among the Koreans an undying hatred of the Japanese.

—

Korea remained a hermit nation until 1884, when Seoul was opened to foreign residence and the interior to foreign travel. In 1905, under the terms of the treaty of peace with Russia, Japan was formally recognized as the administrative adviser of Korea, though there had been a Korean demurrer to this action. In August, 1910, the emperor of Korea, by formal treaty, surrendered his crown to the emperor of Japan and Korea was incorporated in the Japanese empire.

—

Since Japanese occupation there have been many rumors of the injustice practiced on Koreans by the dominant nation. This was inevitable. Such a reconstruction of the status of the two peoples could not be effected without some real, and some imagined, injustice. But Japan knows well that European and American governments will not tolerate for a moment any improper treatment of the missionaries, or other foreign residents, in the country. And she also knows, or soon will know, that if she desires foreign sympathy and support, she must not discriminate against Korean Christians on account of their religion. The probability is that the conditions prevailing in the Japanese courts in Korea were largely unknown by the Japanese at home.

But whatever the outcome of the cases before the Japanese judges, the church of Christ in Korea has been under terrific strain for the past year. It has been tested by torture and trial and the dread of unknown violence to follow. One hundred and fifty-seven men have been summarily arrested; nine were exiled without trial, three died from the consequences of torture and confinement. One hundred and twenty-five are now on trial, and among them are five pastors, six elders and one elder-elect. In this time of persecution the Korean church is entitled to the sympathy of all Christians everywhere. The ultimate issue can only be to purify the faith of the church and strengthen it with fortitude.

—

During this time of strife the work of the church goes directly on.

It was a noteworthy event in the history of Christianity in Korea when the first General Assembly of the Presbtyerian Church convened Sunday, Sept. 1, 1912; 118 pastors, including fifty foreign missionaries, and 123 elders were present. Dr. H. B. Underwood, the first missionary to Korea, was elected the first moderator and Rev. Kil Moksa of Pyeng Yang vice-moderator.

One of the striking features of the first Sunday session was an open air meeting, attended by the missionaries, the members of the Presbyterian Church at Pyeng Yang and visitors. Three or four thousand persons were present at this service and a most profound impression was produced upon the community. The General Assembly of Korea consists of seven presbyteries, and these presbyteries contain some of the largest Presbyterian churches in the world.

The Assembly decided to undertake missionary work among the Chinese, thus launching out on a distinct foreign mission enterprise. A field has been found for them in Shantung Presbytery.

The policy of this mission from its inception has been one of self-help, self-support and self-direction; and now it is ready to help others.

—

During the past year there have been employed in our own mission in Korea the following missionaries: Forty-two ordained, 12 medical, 2 lay, 49 married women and 20 other single women, a total of 125. In addition to these there were 23 ordained native ministers and 999 native teachers and assistants. There were added during the year 9,948 communicants, making a total of 36,074 communicant members of our church in Korea. The natives have contributed, out of their poverty, for the support of the gospel ordinances $92,026.

—

The Korean church, perhaps more than any other since the days of the apostles, has been self-propagating. Every Christian has been a missionary; and those Christians who were too poor to subscribe much money to the Lord's work subscribed, of their time, so many days of preaching. It has been this enthusiasm of faith, this personal devotion to the service of the living Saviour, that has given to the Korean church its splendid vitality, and caused its unprecedented extension. And in the times of persecution, like those of old, they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word.

—

The gospel in Korea has not been a philosophy; it has been a force. It has been the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. It has centered continually, as in the apostolic teaching, in Jesus Christ, and him crucified. It has been very simple, but very effective. It has gone to men distressed, and sick, and lonely, with the message of healing for the body and cleansing for the soul. And they have looked up with joy at the touch of Jesus.

It has produced the apostolic fruits; for the well-to-do have gladly shared their possessions with the needy ones; and, in threatening times, those that were exempt from danger have taken their place by the side of their brethren in distress.

And they have rejoiced to meet together for prayer. In simple faith and steadfast confidence, they gather to the number of 700 and 800 to wait upon God. Where the prayer meeting in large and alive, the power of the church is irresistible.

If everyone did an act of daily kindness to his neighbor and refused to do any unkindness, half the sorrow of this world would be lifted and disappear.—Ian Maclaren.

Every day is a new opportunity to serve God and the world.—Anthony D. Evans.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

February 9, 1913

LIVES THAT ARE BEACONS

Topic—The ideal Christian. II. His zeal. II. Corinthians 6:1-10.

Burning lives are beacon lives. They light the way home for storm-stressed wanderers. They illuminate the problem of living for all who surround them. They are signal fires of the higher life. What matter if sometimes the fire consumes as it burns, so long as the beacon shines? The exhortation of the apostle, "Stir into flame [Greek] the gift of God, which is in thee," is a summons to zeal in service.

—

Zeal that is not real is like a painted flame, giving neither heat nor light.

—

"Now let me burn out for God!" cried Henry Martyn, the great missionary. There sounds the echo of the Pauline passion, the Christ passion. Great souls are willing to be consumed in great service. They prize nothing so much as an opportunity to cry, with the psalmist, "The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up."

—

Only locomotives with fire under their boilers ever pull trains. Only men and women of earnest purpose ever accomplish results in the world. Zeal is the motive power that prompts service. Given a choice between knowledge without zeal and zeal without knowledge, the latter is to be chosen; for while it sometimes blunders, it always makes things move. Inaction is a deadly blight for an organization or a life.

—

God save us from dilettantism. The idle, conceited, know-it-all looker on at life, who is too blase to be deeply interested in anything, is a nuisance even at an afternoon tea or in a club library. It is the person who is deeply interested in something who interests other persons. The enthusiast is the one who gets results out of life. Whoso goes deepest into whatever is worth entering at all, gets the richest treasures out of it.

—

"Wherever you are, be all there," is a modern preacher's wise advice. That is a free rendering of "Is it good to be zealously sought in a good matter at all times." Halfway living and halfway working, like halfway measures in everything else, usually spell whole failure.

—

For myriads of young people Christian Endeavor has put zeal into Christian service. It has imparted the enthusiasm of the athletic field to the loftier sphere of Christian activity. The fresh, buoyant vigor of youth has gone at the Master's work with ardor. That very spirit of eagerness has been one secret of the success of the modern young people's movement. Momentum has been imparted to religion. The zest and activity of the societies have drawn other young people into the same field of service. The ardent devotion of youth has proved itself as valuable a quality in the work of the kingdom as the deliberative wisdom of the elders.

—

Enthusiasm is the genius of sincerity, and truth accomplishes no victories without it.—Bulwer Lytton.

—

Let the engineer pull out the throttle and play cards, let the pilot of a steamer in a hurricane immerse himself in a novel, but let not the watchman of the Lord be anything but awake and in dead earnest when all around immortal souls are in death-grapple with their great enemy.—Cyrus D. Foss.

—

If you are a cold Christian you are in a wrong attitude toward Jesus Christ, away from duty, away from prayer, away in worldliness, away in unbelief, indulging in some besetting sin.—Cuyler.

—

The Leader is the Example. Jesus Christ was so engrossed in the work the Father had sent him to do that he could go without food or sleep. The mission alone mattered with the Master. He went to his task, undeterred by difficulties, with a steadfast enthusiasm which not even the olive grove of Gethsemane could chill, and not even the hill called Calvary could deter. The zeal of Christ effected the salvation of the world.

—

I would rather be a convert from the gutter, uttering a stumbling, ungrammatical testimony in a mission prayer meeting, than an accomplished and affluent Christian afraid to venture into active, self-forgetting service for fear that I might make some mistake. Better far to burn out with zeal, or to be wrecked while going forward, than to rust out in idleness.

MISSIONARY WORK

Koreans Find Field in China

One of the first acts of the new General Assembly of Korea was to establish a national Thanksgiving Day. Of course this had to be done by ecclesiastical action in Korea, since the government cannot be looked to for such a recognition of religion. The day decided on was the fourth day of the tenth moon, which corresponds with Nov. 12, according to the calendar in use in Christian lands. The choice was influenced, of course, as in America, by the wish to make Thanksgiving a sort of harvest home festival, which must in the nature of things come in the fall; but the specific date was determined by the understanding that Nov. 12 is the anniversary of the first decree which authorized the preaching of Christianity in the old Korean empire. It seems that there is some uncertainty about this as a historic fact, but it is believed by the best informed persons to be an authentic celebration.

It is interesting to note that in the organization of the Korean Assembly the balance of power has been given to the Korean ministers. Quite naturally, the moderatorship went to Dr. H. G. Underwood of Seoul, who has served longest in Korea of any American missionary there, and although not yet past middle age, is fairly entitled to be called in the human sense the father of the Korean Church. But the vice-moderator, both clerks and one of the treasurers were chosen from among the Koreans. Rev. Kil Sun Choo of Pyeng Yang is vice-moderator, Rev. Han Suk Jin of Seoul is clerk and Rev. Kim Pil Soo of Kusan is assistant clerk. Rev. Kim Suk Chang of Syen Chun is assistant treasurer, and the only other American getting official place is Dr. A. M. Sharrocks, who is serving as treasurer.

It is interesting to note that the movement for a mission in China, which was regarded by all concerned as the most significant distinction of the first Korean General Assembly, was prompted by the dissatisfaction of the Koreans themselves with the work they were already accomplishing. Their missionaries are now preaching outside the boundaries of Korea at Cheju island, Vladivostok, Kando, Manchuria and Tokyo, but in all of these places the Korean preachers are preaching to Koreans. But the native members of General Assembly insisted that this could not be called real foreign missions, and since they wanted to undertake foreign missions distinctively, the project for a Korean work in China was launched. Already the committee which the Assembly instructed to go to China and hunt for a field where the Koreans could be responsible for all the work of evangelization has visited the province of Shantung and arranged for a preaching center. Shantung Presbytery assigned to the Koreans an entire unoccupied county, with a population of 1,500,000. Two Christians now living in Tsingtau were born in this county, and they have promised to buy buildings for the Korean evangelists to preach in and live in there.

By a typographical blunder it was unfortunately stated on this page some time ago that the proposed Korean budget for foreign missions was to be $100,000 a year. The statement should have been $1,000, which is a big sum in Korea, and it will be sufficient to do a good deal of work, especially as the Koreans now will be free from the necessity of making any preliminary investment in land or buildings. And undoubtedly the budget will be increased, year after year, by the vigorous Korean Church.

Church Built Without a Missionary

Rev. Alexander A. Pieters of Chang Hung, Korea, reports a case which is typical of conditions in Korea, but scarcely typical in any other missionary land. On a recent itinerating tour Mr. Pieters entered a village forty li from the nearest preaching station known to him, and found on his entry that he was the first missionary ever seen in the place. But he discovered that the village people were already at work building a church, and had been meeting together as a Christian group in the house of their leader for over a year. The leader's house consisted of but two rooms, one eight feet square and the other about half the size. In the larger of these rooms the services of the local church were regularly held. When Mr. Pieters entered and began to preach, he found himself unable to stand up, the ceiling being too low for his height, and he was compelled to preach sitting in a chair.

He baptized four Christians, one the mother of the leader, and enrolled eleven catechumens. The leader is a fisherman who employs four hired men, but latterly his living has been very poor because he has been having his men work on the new church instead of going out to fish. His old mother, however, declared that she was content even if her son did not provide her with as good clothes or as good food as he formerly did. She said she used to complain and scold when her son failed to make her comfortable, but now she had learned not to care for such things.

For Interdenominational Conferences

Extension conferences on the home and foreign study books were held last year in scores of communities. The conference course covers about a week's time and is identical with that presented at Winona Lake, Chautauqua and Northfield, and consists of daily lecture studies, with a mass meeting on Sunday. The interdenominational committee of the Central West for missions is prepared to send an acceptable leader and to furnish outline plans for arranging and financing such a conference. Three or four churches in any community, uniting for missionary interest, can easily undertake the course. For information address Mrs. Johnston Myers, secretary, 5531 Washington avenue, Chicago.

Advance in South China Mission

A workers' Bible conference of unusual importance is reported from Kochau, South China, It was attended by representatives of twenty chapels from six districts. A new church building and hospital extension were dedicated and a successful evangelistic campaign was part of the two weeks' program. Open air services were held all over the city and a special meeting in front of the Confucian temple, which has lately been used for lectures on republican government themes. A new presbytery called the Koyeung Presbytery was organized. A feature of the conference was the number of young men who presented themselves as students for the ministry. Sixty names were handed in, which were thoroughly sifted, leaving a class of twenty-eight—more than the mission can well care for.

Board Notes and Announcements

—Mrs. Thomas E. D. Bradley was the leader of the Friday morning meeting in Room 48, Chicago. Mrs. C. E. Bradt, one of the party which recently returned from a missionary tour of the world, spoke most interestingly of the life of the missionaries, and told particularly of her visit with Mr. and Mrs. Bandy of India, who were also in the audience.

—The woman's meeting in the interest of the new China movement was held in Second church Monday afternoon of last week. Owing to the storm the audience was small, but those who were present enjoyed a rare treat. Mrs. Coulter led the devotional hour. Dr. Bible of Hangchow presented an array of facts which showed that now is indeed the decisive hour in China, and also the decisive hour for the church. Dr. Brown told of the work now being done by the church, which, though great, is only a small part of what must be done and reminded the audience that the Presbyterian Church is responsible for the evangelization of 40,000,000 of China's people and that out of our entire mission force only about 100 men and women can give their entire time to strictly evangelistic work.

—Send to Room 48 for the new literature and the pledge card for the China campaign.

The Turkish War and After in Syria

FRIENDS OF THE Syria mission will be interested to know what was the real basis of the rumors which went through English and American newspapers concerning a plot to murder all the prominent foreigners in the city of Beirut. There was a moment in the intense excitement following the humiliating defeats in Macedonia and the onward march of the Bulgarian army toward Constantinople when the evil passions of men suggested retaliatory measures. A large number of Moslems met in secret and discussed plans for an outbreak. The motives underlying this movement were complex, but as far as we can understand it was not born of sympathy with the administration in Constantinople, nor was it wholly out of hatred for the foreigners here, but a dread of what seemed to be the impending collapse of the whole empire. The Arabic-speaking Moslems, which means all the inhabitants of Syria, together with the Bedouin Arabs, fearing that Syria might soon fall into the hands of the French, were most eager to force the intervention of the British, whom they much prefer as rulers of this country. The idea has been extensively circulated that the simplest and best plan of dealing with Syria would be to have Great Britain extend the boundaries of Egypt.

In this meeting or series of meetings referred to, there were prominent men who raised their voices successfully against any such wholesale outrage on Europeans and it finally dwindled down to the committing of minor outrages on some one of the various foreign colonies represented. It is, however, said that they even went the length of casting lots in order to decide on which of the foreign consulates or colonies they should commit the outrage, and when the lot was cast it fell upon the present British consul general, Mr. Cumberbatch. This seemed to perplex them much more than if it had fallen on one of the other communities, and the result was that in the face of the increasing danger to the city of Constantinople, it led to the abandoning of the whole matter. Since these gatherings occurred and these matters leaked out, our good friend the brave British consul general has been going about like a roaring lion and giving expression to feelings of intense contempt and indignation. I saw the fire flash from his eye when he said that no doubt when once the British had pulled the Syrian chestnuts out of the Turkish fire they would be very glad to kick the British out of Syria even as they had attempted to kick them out of Egypt.

There was an hour in the recent turmoil when the dictatorship of Mahmoud Shevket Pasha was the most ominous feature of the complex internal situation of the empire. This dictatorship was actually announced in the various Turkish and Arabic newspapers and was no doubt actually planned by the reactionary forces at that moment in power in Constantinople; but the swift action of the foreign powers and the rapid assembling of ships of war of all nations in the harbor at Constantinople effectually prevented the consummation of this plan and all that it might have involved throughout the empire. There can be no doubt that their timely action prevented an outbreak of pillage and outrage and murder. While we continue to receive letters telling of great unrest and uncertainty from the interior of the empire, it does seem as though the greatest danger has now passed, except from the Kurds.

There are many phases of this strange conflict concerning which it would be unwise for any of us within the empire to tell all we know, much less say all we think; but it looks at this writing as though we had reached almost the end of this cinematographic roll of striking events in this long drama of Turkish history. It will bring home to certain of the more cynical Christian powers of Europe their awful responsibility in allowing this horrible accumulation of barbarism and false claims of false religious systems. The original strife of six centuries ago was deeply religious, and the settlement of these results six centuries later must also be religious, but must differ by the whole period of 600 years. The sword has perhaps done its necessary work; there remains to be done the still more difficult conquest of mind and heart through the Spirit and the word of God, and this is the challenge laid at the door of the Christian church, and most especially of Christian missions.

Beirut. FRANKLIN E. HOSKINS.

NEW BOOKS

The Psychology of Crime

Penal Philosophy, by Gabriel Tarde. This latest addition to the "Modern Criminal Science" series differs from a great many books on criminology in that it is written by a man who is not only a criminologist of the first rank but who has learned his science from the magistrate's bench as well as from the psychological clinic. As against the Italian school which regards criminology from a purely biological point of view and reasons a priori from the supposed determination of all man's acts—from the denial of free will, in fact—Tarde takes an empirical standpoint from which he recognizes that the question is not the old rationalistic one of freedom as opposed to necessity but the more practical one of the reality of the individual. If the individual is nothing but a function of society, then society—that is to say, heredity and environment—is to be blamed for his crimes. But if the individual be a reality, then he must be accountable for his own actions.

Tarde's theory of moral responsibility is based on the question of personal identity. "Psychologists have attached far too great an importance to the feeling which we have of our liberty and not enough to the feeling, firm in every other respect, which we have of our identity." To this he adds the factor of social similarity. The individual must see eye to eye with his fellow men if he is to be judged in relation to their standards and for actions committed in reaction to their presences. But there are degrees of self-possession or identity, and there are degrees of social similarity; and on the empirical observation of these Tarde would establish a punitive procedure based on psychological observation instead of on any a priori prejudice, such as determinism, in its nature incapable of proof.

One of the most interesting sections of the book to the layman will be that dealing with the death penalty, perhaps the point in criminal procedure on which the layman, and especially the sentimental layman, has had most to say. Tarde shows how much of this sentiment has been due to the means of inflicting death rather than to the fact of the penalty being death in itself. To such horrors as the guillotine M. Tarde is strongly opposed, but if death can be inflicted in a manner free from horror, he thinks there is a place for it in ridding society of "social monsters." [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $5 net.

Books of Verse

Poems and Ballads, by Hermann Hagedorn. The poems and ballads in this little collection are all melodious; many of them show an appreciation of the beautiful in nature and human nature, while some of them (notably the ballads) exhibit that rarer poetic merit—an ability to seize and give temperate but poignant expression to the tragedies and darker mysteries of life. "The Three False Women of Llanlar" is a short dramatic poem dealing with the fear and punishment—in this case the turning to stone—of three women who had betrayed to the gallows an innocent man. "The Cobbler of Glamorgan" is a grim but not unhumorous ballad of the bargaining of a miser with death. Ethical and poetical value mingle in a sonnet "On the Senate's Repudiation of an Honorable Contract," with its conclusion:

Yea, we are great, but not by juggled phrases!
Yea, we are strong, but not by troth denied!
The age is full of change and insecure;
Hot in the fevered blood of nations blazes
The strife of souls. Only by clear-descried,
Intrepid equity can we endure.

[Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

Poems of Country Life: A Modern Anthology, by George S. Bryan. It takes the half-romantic tone of the modern country life movement to suggest the idea of compiling a whole book of selected verse about farming and nothing else. Such, however, is Mr. Bryan's anthology; and it is still more significant of the trend of the country life revival that the publishers have included the book in the "Farmer's Practical Library." The picture on the cover is the picture of a countryman plowing with one horse and a small cultivator; and there is no denying the appropriateness of it, for the one-horse plowman is not going to get much of "practical" satisfaction out of life unless he has in his heart somewhere the spirit to enjoy poetry with the smell of good earth on it. And the more prosperous farmer needs the book just as much, for where the songs save his poorer neighbor from discouragement, they will save him from the worse fatality of a deadening materialism. [Sturgis and Walton, New York. $1 net.

New Religious Studies

The Psychological Study of Religion, by James H. Leuba. By the term "psychological" the author means all that pertains to and grows out of the "inner" life. He makes no radical distinction, however, between life below the level of man and life in man. Although he is not interested in the psychology of the lower animals, he nevertheless so associates the soul life of man with the analogous phenomena in the brute creation as to make of religion something that might possibly be shared by the lower animals. Whether there be any objective ground for the emergence in the soul of those "inner experiences" which constitute the phenomena of religion is a matter of entire indifference to his system and his method of investigation. "Since the gods of religion are empirical gods, they belong to science." Consequently "religious experience belongs entirely to psychology." These are perhaps the most interesting and most surprising of Professor Leuba's conclusions. In elaborating his arguments, however, he incorporates a vast mass of interesting data with reference to the origin and functions of religion. Perhaps one word more ought to be added lest the foregoing description of his book and of his theory should prove misleading. It is to the effect that Professor Leuba is not a materialist, and distinctly disclaims materialistic tendencies. He would rather call himself an "empirical idealist." The volume will interest students specializing in psychology and in the philosophy of religion, a field in which each individual fondly clings to his own views and occupies toward others a more or less critical attitude. [Macmillan Company, New York. $2 net.

Life's Chance, by G. H. S. Walpole. This is a treatise by the bishop of Edinburgh on the important question of the highest good for man upon earth. Assuming the position that the love of God is the supreme thing for a being constituted as man is, the author sees the way clear to the reduction of life's chaos into perfect order. The book is accordingly a connected exposition of the main thesis just outlined. It is the old theme which Henry Drummond put into his immortal essay on "The Greatest Thing in the World"; but it is approached and elaborated by Bishop Walpole from an entirely different point of view, and in much greater detail. The preacher of the gospel will find the volume full of suggestion in the practical exposition of Christian truth from the pulpit, and at the same time a powerful apologetic demonstrating the necessity of the Christian faith to personal happiness. [E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. $1.50 net.

The Word and the World, by John Wakeford. This book of pastoral studies, by a canon of Lincoln cathedral, is of special value in America, by reason of its revelation of a mood in England of which we know little. It tells unconsciously why the way of dissent is hard under an established church. Canon Wakeford knows no churches; The Church is the limit of his knowledge. Dissent has lost its reason for existing, if it ever had any. "Sir Walter Scott, Matthew Arnold, Ruskin and Carlyle have undermined the foundations upon which dissent stood. It never had any hold upon the working class masses in our great cities, and the fundamental and political changes through which we are now passing are threatening its creed and existence." With a real concern for spiritual realities, Canon Wakeford is strongly impressed with the value of forms. This devotion to ceremony disregarded, the chapters on the "Life of Conversion" and on "Christian Duty" are excellent, while the symposium which closes the book in an appendix is most suggestive, especially that part which answers the question, "In any case of conversion that has come to your notice, what has been the cause or apparent occasion?" [Longmans, Green and Company, New York. $1.20 net.

The Modern Student's Life of Christ, by Philip Vollmer, is intended as a textbook for use in theological seminaries, colleges and advanced Bible classes. The author occupies the chair of New Testament in the Central Theological Seminary, Dayton, Ohio. The work is planned with a definite view to summarizing the facts given in the gospel narratives in such a way that the student can conveniently examine and memorize them. Naturally a plan of this kind reduces to the minimum that quality which is commonly called readableness. At the same time the necessity of condensation has led to a corresponding neglect of elegance of diction. To make a book readable some amplitude of language is required; but this very feature interferes in the case of close study. The author has not shrunk from deliberately and consistently preparing this work along these distinctively scholastic lines. The theological point of view is "uncompromisingly evangelical." The author adheres to the exact words of the gospels, and in addition to informing the mind aims to produce and develop Christian character. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1 net.

Books Received

The Tudor Shakespeare. New volumes: The Taming of the Shrew; All's Well That Ends Well; Timon of Athens; Venus and Adonis, and The Rape of Lucrece. Macmillan Company, New York. Each 35 cents net.

Bugle Notes of Courage and Love, by Althea A. Golden. Unity Publishing Company, Chicago.

Jack: One of Us, by Gilbert Frankau. George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.20 net.

Altar-Side Messages, by Evelyn H. Walker Unity Publishing Company, Chicago.

Poetry and Dreams, by F. C. Prescott. Richard G. Badger, Boston. $1 net.

The February Century contains the opinions of several college presidents and deans on the subject of "Fraternities in Women's Colleges." James M. Taylor of Vassar, Marion Talbot of the University of Chicago, Virginia Gildersleeve of Barnard, Ellen F. Pendleton of Wellesley, Mary E. Woolley of Mount Holyoke and M. Carey Thomas of Bryn Mawr are among those who explain the merits or evils of girls' fraternities. These opinions are supplementary to two recent articles by Edith Rickert, setting forth the results of her investigation into the effect of fraternities on college women.

The Open Hearth

[Writers of letters to The Open Hearth are reminded that excessive length of their contributions operates to shut out other participants in current discussions. Three hundred words is an acceptable maximum. Communications of greater length will be cut down, or will be returned if marked "in full or not at all."]

In Error as to Montana

In the prayer calendar issued by the Board of Home Missions for the year 1913 the following is given for the Great Falls Presbytery as a subject of prayer, Monday, Oct. 20: "Churches 15, aided 12. Extended drought has decreased the rapid growth of churches and population. Much mission work must be done, for which there is little prospect of immediate returns." The source of information from which these remarkable deductions have been made is unknown to the writer of this protest. They were perhaps appropriate for the drought in the summer of 1910. But when applied to 1913 the absurd inaccuracies and utter disregard of facts in each of the statements must be apparent to anyone at all familiar with the conditions and the prayer based upon them must necessarily go as far from the mark as the East is from the West.

First, the number of churches is seventeen, and of these five are self-supporting; second, the population is increasing as rapidly as at any previous time. The prosperity of the country is indicated by the fact that some of the first prizes at the land shows in New York and St. Paul for the years 1911 and 1912 were taken by farmers living in northern Montana. That the commercial world does not think that the immediate prospects are bad is in evidence from the fact that a $4,000,000 railroad contract, all entirely within the bounds of presbytery, was reported 40 per cent completed Jan. 1.

The statement that mission work must be done with no immediate prospects for returns must be made in the face of the following facts: Three churches were organized by the pastor-evangelist in 1912. Four enthusiastic, enterprising students came out from the seminaries in the summer of 1912. Two of them, from funds raised on their fields, paid their own salaries and all expenses from the seminaries to the fields and return, without any help from the Home Board. The work of one of the others was followed up by the pastor-evangelist in the organization of the church at Joplin and the collection of sufficient funds to insure the erection of a new church building this spring.

Prayer for grace and strength to meet our needs is necessary, but prayer without the note of praise and gratitude for the returns in the past and the assurance of success in the future would be incomplete. E. P. Giboney,

Chairman of Home Mission Committee, Great Falls Presbytery.

Vacancy Committee Personnel

I am more convinced than ever of the propriety of having all paragraphs in The Open Hearth department signed with true name. Then I am sure that A. E. D. would not have said the ill-natured and unjust things he said about the new committee of vacancy and supply. There is no more sincere and spiritually-minded and kind-hearted man in all my acquaintance that Rev. Walter H. Houston, the new secretary, and as for the personnel of the committee itself, the men are beyond question, and I am sure will put their very best thinking and earnest praying into this big and vexatious problem and strive to be led by the Spirit.

E. P. Elcock.

President McKinley and the Sabbath

Fierce is the light that beats upon the throne, and this light seems to shine with a certain luminousness upon the President, even before he is seated in the chair. The unfortunate act of the President-elect and Vice-President-elect in traveling upon a Sunday train, contrary to accepted standards of Presbyterianism, they being presumably exemplars of its highest ideals, recalls an incident during the presidency of William McKinley.

I was at that time pastor of the church on Lookout mountain, which may be considered a suburb of Chattanooga, Tenn., and the incident occurred during the time of the state centennial at Nashville. President McKinley, having performed some function at the opening, rather than hurry on to Washington after arriving in Chattanooga Saturday evening, spent Sunday in that city. A committee besought him to have the service at which he should worship held in the auditorium. He declined, saying that he wished to worship God as an ordinary citizen and would attend the Stone church, being a Methodist. Lookout mountain, with its famous attractions, was near by; the incline car and waiting rooms above and below were made gay with flags and bunting and the President invited to visit the mountain. His reply was, "No, I do not go sight seeing on Sunday."

It is lamentable that a Methodist should outshine a Presbyterian in the latter's valued characteristic and it is to be hoped the report of the action of Wilson and Marshall is incorrect, or that each can give reasons exculpating him of the charge of desecration of the Sabbath. N. R. A.

Courtesy Before Unity

Many earnest Christians are ready to welcome any proposals from their denominations which look toward a greater union of the various bodies which make up the Christian church. But the following instance will illustrate the honest perplexity in which communities are cast.

Members are now received by most Protestant churches from their sister denominations; where the letter cannot be fully recognized because of differences in the mode of baptism, a certificate is received and acknowledged. In a small town of the Middle West several young people, members of a Presbyterian church, desired to unite with the Episcopal church. There was no bad feeling between the minister and rector of these two churches. But these young people were confirmed without so much as even speaking with their former minister; there was not even the courtesy of a note on the part of the rector, who could not have been ignorant of the custom of most of the Protestant churches, since he was brought up in one of those who give and receive letters.

The minister on hearing of the proposed change requested two of his members to take a letter which bore the customary request that he be informed of their reception elsewhere so that their membership might cease in their former connection. Whether or not this letter could be officially recognized, the rector in his personal capacity could have replied, but no notice whatsoever was taken of it. The session of the Presbyterian church finds itself in the strange situation of having several names upon its roll which should not be there; and yet has no official way of dropping them.

Such cases are unfortunately not at all peculiar to one town, but are they peculiar to the Protestant Episcopal Church? When the announcements of the Protestant Episcopal commission on church unity appeared there was at once a desire to know what was the attitude of the commission toward cases of this kind. Upon receipt of an inquiry, Bishop Anderson, the president of the commission, replied that this was but another evidence of the need of union. The letter in full is as follows:

"Your letter reveals a painful situation which many of us are trying to improve. It is one of a hundred instances which show the necessity of working toward Christian unity. All I can say now is that both you and Mr. B. seem to be acting consistently and in accordance with rules and customs of your respective churches. The Episcopal Church requires confirmation as a requisite to being a communicant. A letter from you concerning someone in your congregation who desires to become a communicant of the Episcopal Church would be accepted as a testimonial of Christian character, but it would not operate to transfer from your body to ours. Confirmation being our preliminary requisite, and this being accomplished, nothing further was required, so far as Mr. B. was concerned. Please regard this incident as one illustration among thousands of the necessity of working after Christian unity."

Is not this practically a refusal to recognize membership in another communion? And if so where is there any possible ground of union at all? It is well that we do not live by our logic! It would seem almost ironical to consider questions of union when that question in which there is union and fraternity among so many of the Protestant churches has not been decided by all. This is for the Episcopal Church to decide for herself. Is there therefore much use to spend time and money upon a "candid but loving comparison of positive beliefs" when the simplest acts of courtesy which are already established among most of the churches is denied by this one which proposes the union? F. B. J.

Christianity and Socialism

The issue of Dec. 19 contains an advertisement for funds for the Presbyterian college at Albany, Ore., in which it is stated that J. J. Hill of St. Paul offers $50,000 to the college provided that $200,000 more be raised. Further on in the appeal are the following statements among others: "The entire Pacific coast is committed to woman's suffrage. The Socialist party has doubled its vote in the last four years. The Industrial Workers of the World have been increasing in numbers and in menace, etc. How can these tendencies and movements be met? Mr. Hill declares that the church college is a foe to socialism. Is not Christian citizenship demanded for the Pacific coast?" It appears from the statements quoted that Mr. Hill is willing to help the church college because he thinks it would make said college a stronger foe to socialism.

Being a believer in the principles taught by Christ and also a believer in the principles of socialism, and believing that "the ethics of Christianity and of socialism are identical" as stated in the definition of socialism given in the Encyclopedia Britannica, I fail to see why a church college should be a foe to socialism. I wish to point out some of the features in regard to which the two movements coincide. For instance, in The American Year Book, Cyclopedia and Atlas, I find the following definition of socialism: "Socialism means public ownership of the means of production and working class control of the government, a chance to work for all who will, and to all workers the full value of their product."

The Bible contains a prophecy of a time to come when laborers will cease to build houses for others (idlers) to inhabit. The socialist plan would make it impossible to amass great fortunes of unearned wealth, of whose possessors Christ said: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." The socialist plan would end the collection of interest and rent by men of whom it is said in the Bible "they devour widows' houses," etc. It would end all the sins, crimes and misery due to extreme wealth on one side and extreme poverty on the other.

Are not these the conditions which Christianity is organized to establish? And since the establishment of socialism will also help to foster such desirable conditions why should Christian colleges or any other Christian movement become the foe of socialism?

Joseph Muhr.

Lodges and Churches

I have read article after article on the question, "Why don't men attend church?" and the thought comes to me to write and give one reason that has been given to me by many good men. These men say they don't need the church because they are Masons. Some have told me they would have to drop their lodge if they wanted to do church work; it was too expensive. Others say they do not need to be converted because they are Masons, and believe all Masons go to heaven.

Perhaps you won't think this is a serious thing, but I do. I have had young men tell me they had never drunk liquor until they became Masons, and are now drinking men.

The Masons are so strong and exclusive that the church is afraid to attack them. They are also so proud to think their teaching is so nearly like the church's that they don't miss the fundamental thing in real religion—the conversion to Christ—which is the strong thing to make men attend church.

I have been a faithful Sunday school teacher all my life and I dread to see my boys as well as other boys grow up and begin to sneer at the church when they join this great octopus.

Rosalie B. McAdam

Ways of Working

To Improve Sunday Schools

The Sunday school is an object of careful study by most Christian workers. It has been developed to be one of the most progressive branches of church work. Here are some workable plans to improve the school. There will be a description of the peculiar grading of a successful western school in an early issue.

Train Adequate Teachers

Under the leadership of Dr. Robert Wells Veach, pastor, and Dr. Irving T. Clark, superintendent, an up-to-date teachers' training class has been formed in connection with the Sunday school of North church, Rochester, N. Y. A few years ago the Sunday school was reorganized and graded. The new international graded lesson system is used and it is now proposed to build what will some day be a model Bible school. With this aim in view a thorough system of teacher training has been inaugurated.

The following plan has been adopted. It is proposed to hold five general councils during each winter. These meetings are attended by all teachers, officers and teachers in training. There is a luncheon and social gathering from 6:45 to 7:45 p. m. The luncheon is served by some class in the Sunday school at a cost of 15 cents a person.

From 7:45 to 8:30 all business pertaining to the school as a whole is transacted, following a carefully prepared docket. From 8:30 to 9:15 there is a lecture and discussion on general method, with occasional observation teaching and criticism. At this time such general themes as the following are discussed: "The Qualifications of a Good Teacher," "The Place of the Will in Moral Training," "The Psychology of Attention," "The Principle of Apperception as Seen in the Teaching of Jesus," "The Different Methods of Presenting a Lesson," "How to Tell a Story, with Illustrations."

At 9:15 the general council breaks up into department conferences, at which all matters of business and methods pertaining to each department are discussed. It is further planned that each department shall hold at least one additional conference during the interim between the general conferences for the purpose of further study of special method and those problems peculiar to each department. The officers also come together for the discussion of problems of organization. An extra monthly conference has been planned for all teachers of adolescent boys and another for teachers of adolescent girls in order that the problems peculiar to this age may have special treatment.

Apart from attendance upon the general councils, each prospective teacher is expected to select some one of the departmental conferences and then specialize in that phase of the work. Thus it is hoped to solve the perplexing problem of a normal training class. These departmental conferences are held for one hour at the close of the Wednesday evening prayer service.

Systematic constructive study of the Bible is considered an indispensable part of all thorough teacher training. Hence in connection with the Wednesday evening service a thorough study of some book of the Bible is made.

The book of Acts was considered one month. An outline was printed and distributed throughout the congregation and will be gladly sent to any who may wish to examine it upon receipt of a 2 cent stamp to cover postage.

For the past four years Dr. Veach has been professor of religious education and teacher training in the Bible Teachers' Training School in New York City. He therefore brings to this work a large technical training as well as practical experience.

Want 1900 More Pupils

Sunday schools of the Presbytery of Washington City are working on a plan suggested by the Superintendents' Union for a 25 per cent increase in attendance to be completed by March. A meeting is to be held the latter part of February at Northminster church to hear the experience of the Sunday schools under this plan.

The scheme suggested by the superintendents to be adapted as seems best to local conditions includes the red and blue contest plan, district canvass for new members, adult class organization and a home department. It is also suggested that a captain and lieutenant or a leader and assistant be appointed for each Sunday school class to work for new members and confer with officers of the school. Graded rewards are offered to the pupil who brings in a new scholar.

Addressed return postal cards with blanks for names of boys and girls who do not attend Sunday school are issued to members of the school and of the church. A special committee of church officials to oversee the campaign of the Sunday schools is also provided. It is hoped that an increase of 1,900 members will be shown in the presbytery.

Attendance Contest for Boys and Girls

One of the simplest contests for Sunday school pupils is that arranged between the boys and girls in the whole school, the aim being perfect attendance. In Calvary Sunday school, Peoria, Ill., each side has a pennant which is exhibited by the victors each Sunday. First church, Evanston, Ill., has a blackboard upon which the relative attendance of boys and girls is plotted. Each side is urged to prevent the line representing their attendance from going down.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 147)

CHAPTER XIV.

GRUDGING APOLOGIES

THE ANNUAL examinations at the seminary came on apace. The attendance of trustees was large, and Mr. Elmore, among them, became greatly interested in a sharp contest over some doctrinal points in which Professor Dragham and Bradford Horton were the participants. The professor was critical, rasping, pugnacious, evidently intent on discrediting the young student if he possibly could. Horton, on the contrary, was steady, gentle, urbane, though firm as a rock for his contention. Mr. Elmore was struck at once by the difference in temper and spirit of the two men, and in spite of himself was fascinated by the younger.

The discussion caused a marked difference of opinion between the various examiners, some siding with one man, some with the other. Some suggested that the student be dismissed from the institution. Singularly enough, Mr. Elmore became his defender, and saved him from the disgrace that threatened. He had taken no part in the discussion, until extreme measures were proposed, when suddenly he declared his understanding of the young man's position.

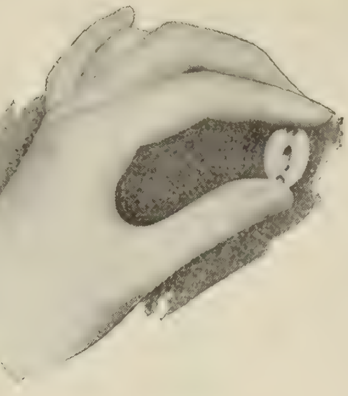
"I'm a business man," he said, "and I can see some things you ministers can't. This young man is as anxious for the truth as you are. What troubles you is his new way of putting it. You expected the usual performance, and you're so astonished to find a man who thinks for himself that you're rattled, that's all. The student is not. He is a very unusual man. I move that the young man be invited to meet the committee tomorrow morning, and that he be allowed to state his views in full without interruption. After that you will be better able to decide in his case."

Only Professor Dragham voted against the motion, the result of which was satisfactory, as Mr. Elmore has prophesied. Horton was passed to his second year, and in addition, at the request of the Greek professor, was offered the position of tutor of the Greek Testament for the incoming junior class at a salary of $400 for the year.

In his comfortable home on Sunset hill the banker thought over the events of the day. Before him in its silver frame on his desk stood the picture of the daughter in whom his whole soul was centered. "Lennie," he said to her mentally, "Lennie, I wish that man didn't attract you so. You have never said so, but I know. I have not forgotten the carnation at the concert, nor what Tappan told me about your being with him in the train. He's brilliant, fascinating—I know it. I haven't been fair to him—I know that, too. But I can't have you falling in love with him, Lennie—and if I were a girl, I should. I see what's in him plainly enough. If you were only out of the question, what should I care what he calls himself? His name is Drum, but if he wants to be called Horton, where's the harm?"

Then, with a swerving of thought away from his daughter, he showed plainly that he was trying to argue himself into a sense of justification in what he intended next to do. "That was a great performance today. I've got to have that man for the bank and for Charlie. There's only one way, but I'll take it. He is an impostor, but I don't care. I'll get him."

The butler at that moment admitted Max-



Think What's Inside

Here's a grain of wheat, puffed to eight times normal size.

A grain that's steam-exploded, filled with countless cells.

All of the granules are blasted to pieces. Digestion can instantly act.

Prof. Anderson's invention. Experts regard it as the best-prepared food in the world.

Like Nut Meats

The taste is like toasted nut meats. Serve with cream and sugar. Mix with fruit.

At night, serve floating in a bowl of milk — whole grain, airy wafers.

Use in candy making. Scatter on ice cream.

Few foods in the world are half so delightful as these crisp, porous grains.

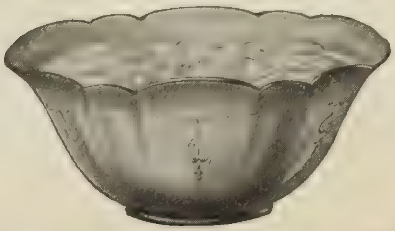
Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c

Except in Extreme West

Last year folks ate 250 million dishes, morning, noon and night. It is surely your turn to enjoy them.

Please don't wait longer. Telephone your grocer for a package of each, then see what you've been missing.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers – Chicago



(383)

well. "Hello, Sam. You're in the nick of time." He passed the evening paper to his caller. "I suppose you've read that?"

Maxwell assented.

"Young Drum manages to keep himself in the public eye," said Mr. Elmore.

"I think you seem to want him there."

"Yes, he would have been dropped but for me. He astonished me. Somehow every time anything threatens him he manages to make it help him to a higher place in public opinion."

"I think this time it was you that managed, not he. I am surprised at you."

"I don't wonder. I am myself. But he has genius, in spite of the old father."

"Are you quite sure that was his father?"

"Sure? Yes." Then, abruptly, "Say, Sam, this bookkeeper business must be settled. Hobbs leaves July 1, and I sail soon after. I'm going to put Bradford Horton in as teller—permanently, I mean. He's too brilliant for burial in that seminary."

"Who?" Maxwell gasped in his astonishment.

"Bradford Horton."

The cashier made no response. The two men smoked awhile in silence, each busy thinking. At last Mr. Elmore broke the silence. "Will you go with me to see him tomorrow morning?" he inquired.

"Yes, but it will be wasted time."

"I don't think so. However, if it is, it won't be the first time we've wasted. I'll call for you at 10."

"All right." Maxwell rose. "I didn't tell you my wife was in the other room."

"No, is she? We'll go out."

All seated once more in the library, Mrs. Maxwell opened a new topic of conversation. "Did you see what The Tribune said about our tenor?"

"No. What?"

"You knew he sang at St. Bartholomew's some time ago?"

"Well, what of it?"

"The Tribune says they've offered him $1,200 a year."

"They have sense in New York; they know a good thing when they hear it. That young man certainly can sing."

"Well, I'm sorry we must lose him. Our church has never had such a tenor before, and never will again."

"Lose him?" Mr. Elmore spoke with animation. "We won't lose him. I shall keep him in Prestonbury."

"You?" Mrs. Maxwell was astonished. "How will you keep him in Prestonbury? I thought there was zero weather between you two."

"Zero? There's no zero in business. I'll keep him."

"Richard Elmore, I don't want you to keep him here." Mrs. Elmore spoke with decision. "He's too handsome, and Eleanor's too young and susceptible. I don't want her falling in love with any student for the ministry."

They all laughed at her vehemence.

"Trust Lennie, my dear," said her husband. "She's in no danger. She'll be out of his sight for two years and a half. We'll be on the other side of the world. He'll marry Lucy Jickers before that. Don't you be afraid."

As the Maxwells were taking their leave the president said, "Ten o'clock in the morning, Sam." (To be continued) in the history of our church has the General Assembly directed all her executive agencies to get together in a united effort to meet the great opportunities which she faces both at home and abroad. Never before has the financial program of the executive committees been tied up so closely with the evangelistic effort."

The Man Who Leads Southern Laymen

(Continued from page 145)

If anybody thinks that the spirituality of a church is impaired by this new laymen's movement, he should read the literature which proceeds from Mr. Rowland's office. Even before a tentative program for the Memphis convention had gone out there was issued a call to prayer. As says the literature, which defines the spirit of the campaign: "This whole campaign was born in a spirit of prayer and of humble reliance upon the great Head of the church. Every step has been marked by prayer and trust in him. The campaign began as a spiritual movement; without prayer it must end in dead formality. It was launched for the glory of God; without prayer it must end in carnal pride. It was conceived in an atmosphere of unity; without prayer it must end in shameful criticism and strife. Let this be our purpose in all our planning and working, 'With prayer, or not at all.'"

All this is portentous and full of significance for other churches. It means that one great denomination has solved the problem of utilizing its laity, and that laymen and ministers together have faced the church's task in its entirety. The shortcomings and the opportunities of the allotted work at home and abroad are met with sanity and resolution. The executive agencies take the whole church into their confidence. They rely largely upon volunteer lay service for their propaganda at home. The foreign work has been definitely and officially related to the problem of the home church. The essentially spiritual character of the church and her needs and her service are being stressed not only from the pulpit but by the laymen themselves. To be a lay leader in such an enterprise and at such a time, which is the privilege of Charles A. Rowland, strikes one as being an adequate life work for any man.

The Little Teacher

(Continued from page 149)

horse," said the mule, feeling very much out of place.

"I suppose you will have to carry a whole pack of wood, while I ride the children," said the horse.

"I heard your master say that I would be a great pleasure to the children," said the mule, looking smart.

Now his master letting a stupid old mule take his place was too much for the horse.

"The children won't ride you long," said the horse. So saying, she gave the mule a kick and walked off.

When her mother came home she found Mary reading to her rabbits. "Mary has been such a good little girl," said her mother, "that I can always leave her in charge of the house."

DOROTHY ELLIOTT (age 11).

Denver, Colo.

Winifred's Christmas Rabbits

THIRD PRIZE

WINIFRED LIVED in New York in a big city home. It was just a week before Christmas when she received a letter inviting her to go out in the country and spend Christmas with her grandma. The day after she got the letter Winifred and her mamma started to the country.

When they had been on the train a long while, and Winifred was getting tired and sleepy, they came to the station where they were to get off. The first thing Winifred saw was her grandpa and grandma. They all got in a nice, big, shiny carriage and started for her grandma's home.

It was almost a week before Christmas, but it seemed like a month until Christmas to Winifred. At last it was just the day before Christmas and Winifred was very glad. At night Winifred hung up her stocking and went to bed. The next morning she was up bright and early, because she was anxious to see the tree and get her stocking.

Among the things that Winifred got were two cloth rabbits and a picture book. One little rabbit had a pretty little blue jacket on, with brass buttons on it. The one with a jacket on stood on two legs and the one that didn't have any jacket on stood on four legs.

In the evening, after supper, Winifred took her two rabbits, Fluffy Tail and Frisky (for that was what she had named them), and her picture book and went over by the fireplace, where she was going to tell them a story. Winifred set Frisky and Fluffy Tail down beside her and took her picture book and told them a story of a Sunshine fairy, who lived in Sunshine castle; and a story of a Bad fairy, who lived in Bad castle.

Suddenly one of the rabbits spoke to her,

THE HONOR ROLL

There are 225 men on the honor roll of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation. They have served the church an average of forty-nine years and are nearly 79 years of average age.

There are twenty-two churches on the honor roll of the board. That is, twenty-two churches gave last year more than $500 each to the current work of relief. Prominent among these is Crescent Avenue church, Plainfield, N. J. This church under the active support of its leading laymen and inspired by its pastor, Dr. John S. Zelie, has given an annual contribution to the Board of Relief approximating $1,500. This year the benevolent budget of the church included $1,500 for the current work of relief. In addition to the budget, an annual offering was provided by the session in order that those who had not subscribed through the budget, or who desired to increase their gifts, might have the opportunity. The general secretary and Rev. W. J. Johnson, field representative of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, were welcomed on Sunday, Jan. 12, the day set apart. Though it rained hard at the hour of morning service, and the congregation was necessarily smaller than usual, the people of this splendid church subscribed in addition to the budget of $1,500 the sum of $4,700 for the endowment campaign, making a total of $6,200 for this church; $2,500 of the total goes to the relief department and $3,700 to the sustentation department.

Such generous zeal ought to stimulate many other churches. Is your church planning to help? Are you ready to do your part? If you are interested consult your pastor or write which surprised her greatly. Just then in came the Sunshine fairy and told her to get on Fluffy Tail's back, for they were going to Sunshine castle. She put a little saddle on Fluffy Tail's back and they rode away to Sunshine castle.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF AND SUSTENTATION

WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

When they got there the Sunshine fairy said, "Let us have a party." So they invited all the little fairies that lived in Sunshine castle.

While they were eating and having fun, in came the Bad fairy. She picked up Winifred and set her on Fluffy Tail's back. When she got outside of Sunshine castle she scolded Winifred for going to the party, instead of coming to see her. Now she would be punished for it.

When they got to Bad castle the Bad fairy took Winifred and put her in prison and began to beat her. Just as the Bad fairy began to beat her Winifred woke up. Her mother was standing beside her and was telling her to go to bed. MARGARET HARRISON (age 10).
Medford, Ore.

Honorable Mention

Raymond M. Rice, Donald Dozer, Grace Calder, Mary J. Swan, Florence D. Fuller, Octavia Johnston, Mattie Johnson, Jean E. Jamieson, Gomer Jones, Lucile McHard, Lawrence McHard, Ida Wozencraft, Ida Mangun, Victoria Spooner, May Fox, Frances Hughes, Dorothy Pierce, Andrew W. Barr, Louise Baptist, Grace N. Watson, Ethel Forline, Richard L. Purdy, Helen B. McMurtrie, Edgar Evans, Helen Wert, Elizabeth Hayward, Mildred White, C. E. Balfour, Martha Bennett, Ruth N. Watson, Abbott H. Fraser, Nancy Weaver, Florence Gamble, Donald Walker, Isabel McCool, Nan Wood, Hiland B. Noyes, Margaret Cope, Dorothy E. Noyes, Helen Baker, Virginia Pope, Helen G. More, Branner P. Purdue, Rayen Tyler, Helen B. Martin, Fred C. Smith, Margaret Holmes, Cornelia M. Hartshorne.

DEAR YOUNG AMERICA: Your bunny stories are quite the nicest you have ever written for The Continent. Your eyes were not all bright enough, however, to see that the bunnies were not alive. Stories about live bunnies were therefore not eligible for a prize. A few stories were written in pencil, and a few on both sides of the paper, while some contestants forgot to give age. Remember these things next time. They all count, you know, in the prize winning.

Watch for another contest soon.

Pastor Arrested with Strikers

Dr. Jonathan C. Day, pastor of Labor temple, New York City, spent four hours under arrest last Thursday night. When the white goods workers in New York sweatshops, who are almost all young girls, struck week before last, one section of them requested the use of Labor temple as headquarters where they could rally the strikers. This was granted, and Dr. Day has improved the opportunity to get acquainted with the strikers, and has also addressed them frequently, urging them to observe the law in all respects.

Hearing on Thursday evening that there was likely to be trouble around a shop which had not yet struck, at 28th street and 4th avenue, Dr. Day went thither with two friends to observe what happened. When the nonstriking workers came out of the building their police guards were jostled somewhat by the crowds, and one policeman arrested a boy of 18 who attends the Labor temple and whom Dr. Day knew well. The boy broke away from the policeman, and when recaptured was struggling to get loose again. Dr. Day approached and advised him not to resist the officer. Moreover, he said he would walk along to the police station and arrange bail, so that the young fellow would not have to spend the night in a cell. Half way to the station the officer in charge of the boy met two other police, and told them to arrest Dr. Day on a charge of interfering with an officer. At the station Dr. Day was booked on this charge and was roundly cursed by the police lieutenant in command. The lieutenant offered to allow Dr. Day to telephone for bail, but when Dr. Day said he would go to the night court without asking bail the officer refused permission to telephone Mrs. Day to explain his failure to return home. Dr. Day was put in a cell and spent two hours there, and then was shoved into the patrol wagon with a "bunch of drunks" and carried off to night court, where he was confined two more hours in a cage with a miscellaneous lot of men under arrest.

It was 11 o'clock when Dr. Day's case was called, but when Magistrate O'Conner heard his statement, he interrupted the pastor half way in the story and dismissed him. The magistrate expressed astonishment that any arrest had been made, but said to Dr. Day, "You will be all the better preacher for this experience." The policeman who made the arrest offered a personal apology to the minister.

Chinese Honor an Old Friend

Dr. Ira M. Condit Given Receptions on Eightieth Birthday—Death of Dr. Dobbins—Koreans Establish Church.

SAN FRANCISCO—The Presbyterian Chinese mission was founded in 1852 by William Speer, D. D., and has always been prosperous. The membership of the Chinese church is now 146, the largest in California, and, doubtless, in the United States. For eight and a half years Rev. J. H. Laughlin has been in charge.

Dr. Ira M. Condit of Berkeley has been engaged in Chinese mission work over fifty years, more than forty of these being in California, most of the time with the missions in San Francisco and Oakland. Jan. 14 he was 80 years old, and the Chinese gave him a reception Jan. 11 in the Chinese church. There were seventy Chinese present, and addresses were made by four of their number and responded to by Dr. Condit. The Chinese presented him with a framed scroll recording in Chinese their appreciation of his services and also with a gold medal, with a cross and torch symbolizing Christ and the word of God. Another reception was given him by the Chinese in Oakland.

On adjournment of the ministers' meeting Jan. 13 many of the ministers went to lunch and conference with other ministers of the city at the Bible College on invitation of Dr. Hugh W. Gilchrist, superintendent. The number of students in this institution is thirty-three, among whom are seven young men who have the ministry in view and several young women who expect to become missionaries.

H. H. Dobbins, D. D., died at his home in Berkeley Jan. 17 in the 80th year of his age. He was one of the pioneer ministers of California, having come to the state by way of the isthmus in 1864. He preached in many places during his almost fifty years of service here, and under his ministry several churches were organized and a number of houses of worship built. In later years he generally labored as a home missionary and gave liberally to the support of weak churches and other good causes. His wife died four months ago. One of his six children is Rev. Hugh F. Dobbins, pastor of Colusa Presbyterian church, and another is Professor John L. Dobbins of Peiyang University.

Rev. H. W. Harbaugh has recently taken charge of Golden Gate church, Oakland. The people have paid off some old debts, installed electric lights and made other improvements of about $500.

The Christian Koreans of Dinuba have for some time been worshiping in one of their homes. On Dec. 22 a church was organized with ten members and their house of worship dedicated free of debt. JAMES CURRY.

Attendance Gains 500 Per Cent

Year Old Sunday School Makes Rapid Strides—Country Work Reestablished—More Boys than Girls Enrolled.

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS—The Sunday school of Aldrich Avenue church, Minneapolis, shows an increase of 500 per cent in attendance during its first year. It was organized in January, 1912, with thirty-four members by R. F. Sulzer. The church has two teacher training classes and a Christian Endeavor society with thirty-two active members. It is also carrying on a mission seven miles out in a suburban place and furnishing preaching every two weeks.

The church was organized nine months ago and now has a membership of 109. The present church edifice will soon be too small. Rev. Alexander G. Patterson, pastor, entered upon his duties here last September.

Rehabilitation of a country community was the special effort of the united work of Dr. D. S. McCaslin and Rev. T. F. M. Clarke, pastor at St. Croix Falls. The abandoned Lamar Lutheran church was obtained for services, a Sabbath school organized and placed under the care of St. Croix Falls church. The prospects are that the people will purchase the church building and continue services.

Rev. Edward Loew, who relinquishes the work at Shakopee, has done a splendid service in a limited field. He will minister to the church of Salem, S. D.

Superintendent E. D. Allen of Merriam Park Sunday school recently called attention to the fact that the enrollment shows the boys outnumber the girls by 43 per cent.

Rev. George W. Camp will be installed pastor of Zion (colored) church Feb. 2.

Rev. T. W. Graham before the Minneapolis Ministers' Club recently showed the relations of the church to Presbyterian students of the State University. He is pastor of Andrew church.

Rosedale church is made happy by the acceptance of their call to T. H. Cleland, D. D., of Evansville, Ind. He will soon be on the field.

Dr. D. S. McCaslin, home mission representative in the two presbyteries, is assisting in special services at Rushmore.

During a series of services commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of Stewart Memorial church, Minneapolis, the new pipe organ was dedicated free of debt. At a recital $400 was raised for music. A large number of members were received at a communion service by the pastor, Dr. Charles D. Darling. The report of activities during the twenty-five years shows that the church has been alive to its opportunities.

Pears'

Soap, like books, should be chosen with discretion. Both are capable of infinite harm.

The selection of Pears' is a perfect choice and a safeguard against soap evils.

Matchless for the complexion.

SMITH GRANITE
MONUMENTS
Perfection in Monumental Art
Design, originality, workmanship, materials used.
Write for booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO.
Westerly, R. I.

One Mission Collection Is $14,000

Fifth Avenue Church Breaks Recent Records — Bible Society Distributes 91,000 Copies of Scripture—Dr. Work Honored.

NEW YORK—A trifle over $13,000 was put upon the collection plates of Fifth Avenue church Jan. 19. During the following week checks came in, bringing the sum to $14,000. This was the annual offering for foreign missions and was the largest collection for that cause in this church in recent years. It is likely that no church ever gave more for foreign missions at once. The church supports eight missionaries in Shuntefu, China, and the ladies' auxiliary cares for seven more in other fields. Last year the collection was about $12,000.

The will of John J. Clancy shows that he left $25,000 to the Presbyterian hospital and other large sums to philanthropic institutions.

At the quarterly meeting of the managers of the New York Bible Society last week announcement was made that more than 91,000 volumes of Scripture had been distributed during the last three months. This distribution was in thirty-six languages and is the largest distribution of Scripture ever made in the same length of time in the city and harbor of New York. More than 25,000 volumes were furnished immigrants landing at Ellis island. Over 4,000 volumes were given to seamen on vessels in the harbor. During the quarter Bibles were placed in every room of the dormitories of Columbia, Barnard, Teachers' College and New York University. When the Christmas baskets were sent out to the poor the Bible society furnished over 7,000 volumes that were placed in as many baskets. Mrs. John S. Kennedy has offered $22,000 to help complete an endowment fund of $200,000 which the society is seeking. Two years ago the society secured $112,000 toward this fund. Mrs. Kennedy now offers to give one-fourth of the remaining $88,000. The general secretary, Rev. George William Carter, Ph. D., has his office at 66 Bible House.

Dr. Work to Stay with Church

Dr. Edgar W. Work of Fourth church, who had been elected successor to Dr. J. R. Miller on the Board of Education and had also been offered a chair in Lane Seminary, has decided to remain with his church. This was announced to his congregation last Sunday, much to the pleasure of members of the church.

Fifth Avenue church is mourning Elder Ewen McIntyre, a member for forty-eight years and an officer for thirty-five years. He was 87 years of age and in point of service was one of the oldest members. He died Jan. 9.

Tertius van Dyke, son of Dr. Henry van Dyke, a student at Union Theological Seminary, is serving as an assistant at Christ church, a branch of Brick church.

Dr. H. G. Mendenhall of West Twenty-Third Street church had a peace service in his church Sunday evening, Jan. 19. The speakers were Henry Clews of Wall street and Dr. John Wesley Hill and Dr. William Carter, president and secretary respectively of the International Peace Forum.

Seth C. Craig was ordained an evangelist in Broome Street tabernacle Jan. 27.

Rev. Paul D. Elsesser, until recently of Boston, was installed pastor of French Evangelical Presbyterian church Jan. 29.

Dr. Jesse F. Forbes and Dr. Wilton Merle-Smith of the church extension committee will organize a church at Van Nest Jan. 30. A chapel is already built and Rev. F. M. Lindsay is in charge.

Moderator and Mrs. Mark A. Matthews of Seattle, Wash., will leave for the East Feb. 13. Mrs. Matthews will be the guest of Mrs. James Yereance, wife of the vice-moderator of the Assembly, while Dr. Matthews is keeping engagements. Then they will go to Washington to the inauguration.

Give a Bible to Helen Gould

Among the many wedding presents Miss Helen Miller Gould received from organizations that have long benefited by her generosity was a beautiful Bible which came from the students in Bible Teachers' Training School.

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon of Topeka, Kan., author of "In His Steps," will preach the first sermon of the neighborhood weeknight series Feb. 3 in Bedford church, Brooklyn.

New Books on Christianity and Religion by Thoughtful Writers

Christianizing the Social Order

By WALTER RAUSCHENBUSCH, Professor of Church History in Rochester Theological Seminary, Author of "Christianity and the Social Crisis."

Supplements the powerful message of "Christianity and the Social Crisis" as a study of present-day problems written with even greater insight and appeal. $1.50 net; postpaid, $1.65

The Heart of the Christian Message

By GEORGE AARON BARTON, A.M., Ph.D., Professor of Biblical Literature and Semitic Languages, Bryn Mawr College.

A compact, effective and discriminating account of the relation of Christianity to successive epochs and to modern problems. $1.25 net; postpaid, $1.35

Jesus

By GEORGE HOLLEY GILBERT, Ph. D., D. D., Formerly Professor of New Testament Literature and Interpretation (Chicago Theological Seminary.)

"One of the very ablest and manliest discussions of the historical Jesus and the legendary Jesus. A sane and lovable appreciation." $1.50 net; postpaid, $1.62

Social Religion

By SCOTT NEARING, Ph.D., Professor of Economics, University of Pennsylvania, Author of "Social Adjustment," "Women and Social Progress," etc.

The most deplorable elements in the modern social and industrial world analyzed in the light of a practical Christianity. $1.00 net; postpaid, $1.12

A Psychological Study of Religion

Its Origin, Function and Future.

By JAMES H. LEUBA, Ph.D., Professor of Psychology, Bryn Mawr College.

"A work of unquestionable originality and great philosophical import, presenting the religion of humanity through sympathetic appreciation and understanding of ancient ideals. $2.00 net; postpaid, $2.16

Published at 64-66 Fifth Ave., N.Y.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

On Sale at All Booksellers.

Decide for Institutional Work

Hollond Memorial to Erect New Building—Beacon Street Church Burns Mortgage — Erect Tablet to Dr. J. R. Miller.

PHILADELPHIA — Hollond Memorial church has decided to sell its chapel at Clarion and Federal streets and erect in the rear of its church edifice at Broad and Federal streets a modern institutional building. The pastor, Dr. Janvier, has become convinced that the changed population of southern Philadelphia and the changed conditions of home life call for institutional methods on the part of the church. On Jan. 30 W. T. Ellis, editor afield of The Continent, will address the men's club on "The Balkan War and What It Means to the Christian Church."

Ninth church, Dr. J. A. Higgons pastor, is preparing an elaborate program for a week's service beginning Feb. 6 in connection with the dedication of the new building.

Rev. H. Alford Boggs, who succeeded Dr. J. Addison Henry as pastor of Princeton church, celebrated his sixth anniversary Jan. 19.

Interesting Threefold Service

An interesting threefold service was held Jan. 21 in Beacon church, Rev. George W. Horst pastor. There was the burning of the second mortgage ($2,100), celebrating the liquidating of the entire debt on the church edifice; the presentation to the church of a solid silver collection service in memory of John and Margaret Strain, and the unveiling of two bronze tablets, one to the memory of Rev. James H. Marr, for twelve years pastor of Beacon church, the other to the memory of the first three elders of the church—Samuel Wunder, Jr.; Philip Peterson and John Urwiler.

Dr. J. W. Cochran, secretary of the Board of Education, recently addressed students of the University of Pennsylvania and strongly urged the establishment of a department of religion in the university.

Gaston church has given the pastor, Rev. W. B. Greenway, a month's leave of absence in consideration of the state of his health. On Sunday evening, Feb. 2, the Christian Endeavor societies will have charge of the service and W. T. Ellis will be the speaker. Mr. Ellis was formerly an elder in this church.

Following the communion services at St. Paul's church Jan. 19 the tablet, placed on the walls of the church as a memorial to the founder and late pastor, Dr. J. R. Miller, was dedicated in the presence of a congregation of 800 persons. It is of white marble, inscribed in bronze. The presentation was made in an appropriate address, on behalf of the session, by Elder Clevenger.

The Presbyterian Sunday School Superintendents' Association meeting in McDowell Memorial church, Dr. J. L. Scott pastor, was largely attended. An address was made by Rev. J. D. C. Hanna, Methodist, whose church recently secured the prize for the largest Bible class attendance, 2,485 being present on one occasion. E. Y. Wooley, superintendent of the Moody Sunday school of Chicago, which increased from 2,600 to 5,300 in one year, spoke on "How to Get Men to Come to Sunday School."

Among Presbyterians attending the Sunday school council of evangelical denominations at Dayton, Ohio, from Philadelphia were Dr. Alexander Henry, Rev. E. M. Ferguson, Rev. J. T. Faris and F. M. Braselman.

Rev. James McConaughy has become managing editor of The Sunday School Union, instead of The Sunday School Times, as published in the last issue of The Continent.

W. P. White.

At the January communion service held in Hebron Memorial church, Rev. William MacFarland pastor, eighteen were received into the church, fifteen on profession, including several heads of families. Rev. S. S. Aikman conducted special services during the week of prayer.

Dr. W. H. Hubbard, long pastor of First church, Auburn, N. Y., and now honorary secretary of General Assembly's evangelistic commission, and Mrs. Hubbard are spending several weeks in New York City. Dr. Hubbard is receiving from a prominent specialist treatment for the severe nervous prostration which incapacitated him through the autumn, and is enjoying steady improvement.

Centralize Work of Evangelists

Chicago Churches Decide to Unite with New Organization—Cooperation with Charities Asked—Fourth Church Assistant Here.

CHICAGO—The federated churches of Chicago Monday morning ordered the evangelistic committee of that body to cooperate with the interdenominational organization for evangelism now being formed in the city. It is the aim of the new body to provide evangelists for the more needy portions of the country, not confining its work to Chicago alone. The delegates present also adopted resolutions asking the house of representatives to pass the Kenyon "red light" injunction bill, and arranged for the appointment of ward committees, where it is advisable, to prevent the spread of disorderly houses. E. T. Lies, secretary of the United Charities, asked the churches to report charitable cases and to provide volunteer visitors.

LENTEN LECTURES IN PRIVATE HOMES

A series of paid lectures on various aspects of the character of Jesus will be given by Dr. John Balcom Shaw, pastor of Second church, beginning next Wednesday, Feb. 3, in the parlors of the homes of various prominent women of the South side. The first will be at the residence of Mrs. W. W. Kimball; others will be held at the homes of Mrs. George M. Pullman, Mrs. T. B. Blackstone, Mrs. Edson Keith, and others. The hour is 11 o'clock and the charge for the course is $5, or $1 for single admissions. A similar series of Lenten addresses in private houses was given by Dr. Shaw last year with signal success.

At a preliminary meeting of representative church men Monday noon steps were taken to prepare for the international Sunday school convention, which will bring 10,000 delegates to the city in June, 1914. L. T. Woodcock is chairman of the temporary committee.

Three rallies for Christian Endeavorers of the city are planned—Jan. 30 at North Shore Congregational church, Feb. 6 New First Congregational church, Feb. 7 Hyde Park Baptist church. There will be special speakers at each rally. Rev. E. P. Gates, field secretary, will also speak.

The winter quarterly meeting of the Woman's Presbyterian Missionary Society at the Church of the Covenant Jan. 16 attracted a large attendance. Mrs. Edgar P. Hill presided at the morning business session. Mrs. Anna Mathews conducted the noon prayer service, followed by luncheon served by women of the church. Mrs. Howard McAfee and Dr. C. E. Bradt were the principal afternoon speakers.

NEW HELPERS AT FOURTH CHURCH

Rev. Claude Porter Terry, the newly appointed assistant to Dr. John Timothy Stone of Fourth church, took part in the services here for the first time last Sunday. He comes from Syracuse, N. Y. H. A. Dalzell, who is to have charge of the work of Fourth church among men and boys, arrives this week from Portland, Ore., where he has been student secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for Oregon, Washington, Idaho and British Columbia. The last meeting of the men's club Jan. 23 attracted 900. James B. Forgan, president of the First National bank, presided and the program commemorated the birth of Robert Burns. Elmer E. Wagner delivered an address. Professor J. L. Erb of Wooster University is to be added to the force of Fourth church workers after June 1 as musical director and organist. He is known over the country as a composer and musical authority. Miss Kingman, who for thirty-eight years has been organist, will be made organist emeritus upon the coming of Professor Erb.

Dr. J. G. K. McClure is visiting in the East. He preached last Sunday at Princeton and will speak next Sunday at Tome School for Boys, Port Deposit, Md. He will return Feb. 4.

The Chinese Sunday school which has been meeting in the old First church building is now quartered in Second church.

Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal and Catholic churches united in Wilmette last Sunday in a church census. About 1,500 families were visited by 140 workers.

Bodies Divide Over Meetings

Denominations Not Agreed on Invitation to Dr. Sunday–Afternoon Meetings in Theater Attract Crowds.

PITTSBURG—The question of inviting Dr. W. A. Sunday to hold a series of meetings in Pittsburg in February of 1914 has been approved by the Baptist, M. E., Methodist Protestant, U. P., Christian and Presbyterian bodies. The Lutherans are almost unanimously opposed and will take no part in the movement if Dr. Sunday comes. The evangelistic committee, composed of representatives of fifteen denominations, agreed to withhold the invitation until it had been approved by two-thirds of the ministerial bodies.

The meetings in Alvin theater on Sunday afternoons under the auspices of First church are attracting unusual interest. Jan. 19 standing room was at a premium. Dr. Maitland Alexander, the pastor, makes the address each week.

The program for the meetings of Pittsburg Ministerial Union for the next six months include some of the leading ministers and scholars of western Pennsylvania as speakers.

Huntingdon church, Dr. R. P. Daubenspeck pastor, has adopted the single budget system and the entire congregation is being canvassed.

Homewood Avenue church during the present pastorate, which began five years ago, has received 871 into the church. Plans for a new church building are about completed and the building committee will issue a prospectus in a few days, showing floor plans.

P. W. SNYDER.

Merge Two Southern Schools

Ward Seminary for Young Ladies and Belmont College for Young Women, Nashville, Tenn., after June 1 will be merged as Ward-Belmont on Belmont campus, with Dr. Ira Landrith as president.

Out of the Melting Pot

No one who is guided by pictures he may have seen of soldiers in the Bulgarian army will be able to say which of these young men were born near the edge of the Sultan's domain.

The three to the right are Bulgarians; the other is a Servian. All are students at Dubuque German College and Seminary preparing to be preachers to the people of their race in America. All of them are earning their way through school. At least one has borne arms against the Turks. The interesting work being done at Dubuque will be gladly told in detail on request to President C. M. Steffens, D.D., DUBUQUE, IOWA.

The American Epic: "Manson's Vision"

A poem by Rev. Thomas Nield. Pp. 280; price $1.50.

"It is unquestionably the best epic yet produced in America, and there have been many attempts at epic poetry in this country. Indeed, I consider this a real contribution to the literature of America."—Paul E. Doran, Cumberland University.

"A work of high literary excellence and profound and original thought—an unusually good piece of work of its class."—J. E. Clarke, Editor The Presbyterian Advance.

The Advance Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

15,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.

Thomas Communion Service Co., Box I, Lima, Ohio.

HARRY W. JONES

Church Architect

Minneapolis, :: Minn.

Will be glad to send church booklet to churches intending to build, upon receipt of 6c postage stamps.

HASTINGS COLLEGE

Field Hastings has five railroads radiating in eleven directions. A north and south line through Hastings will cut off a segment of western Nebraska, containing nearly 60,000 square miles, with 350,000 population, and in which there is no other college. An adjoining state, with no greater area than the above section, is said to have forty-two colleges.

Endowment It is making its thirty-first year an endowment year, and has pledged $47,527 of its second hundred thousand. The time limit expired Jan. 1, 1913, and a six months' extension was necessary owing to light crops in western Nebraska and an epidemic that swept away 12,000 horses in this state, and other local conditions.

The college appeals to its friends everywhere to aid in this effort. :: Address HASTINGS COLLEGE, Hastings, Neb.

Let Us Tell You WHY

Other Continent Readers are purchasing liberally our High Grade Farm and City Loans. If you have any funds to invest, or desire a larger rate of interest, still considering perfect safety for your principal, we shall be pleased to refer you to some of your fellow subscribers. They can tell you what they know of our reliability and about the manner in which we are handling their own money. Our many years' experience in this field gives us exceptional opportunities to secure the choicest securities. No investor has lost a dollar through his investment in these mortgages, which are carefully selected in one of the best investment fields in the Northwest.

Drop us a line today.

Idaho Title & Trust Co.
BOISE - - - - IDAHO

COLONIAL TRVST AND SAVINGS BANK
La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.
3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

6% 7% We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request
JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

REAL ESTATE LOANS
6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%
During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doingthe same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St Chicago.

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

Good Things in This Issue

For the Layman

Did you ever hear of a man in these days too poor to own an automobile who finds it possible to support several foreign missionaries? Such men are to be found in the South, as William T. Ellis records on page 144. Mr. Ellis gives much credit to Charles A. Rowland, chairman of the executive committee, for the great work of the Laymen's Missionary Movement in the South. This article is decidedly well worth reading.

This issue could well be called a laymen's number. There are excellent plans for Sunday school work on page 155. If your church ever sought a new pastor you will be interested in reading a discussion of the ethics of the present practice of "hunting" ministers, page 142. Don't miss the editorial comments on page 141 concerning the inaugural ball, Panama tolls and patent medicines. And your children will enjoy the prize stories by boys and girls who wrote in the Bunny contest, page 149.

Financial Situation

Financial Vultures Usually Are Short Lived—Impetus to $100 Bonds—Is Value of Farm Products Padded?

Another promoter, B. F. Moffat, who induced people to buy largely of Buick Oil stock, was indicted the past week at St. Louis. At the same time that the government was taking another step in making investments more safe for the average man or woman the brokers of the country projected an organization in New York, the first meeting of which has been called for February. The men who buy and sell securities on commission will form the International Association of Brokers, patterned after the Investment Bankers' Association formed last fall.

Honest men who sell securities are combining in self-defense against the crooks who infest the country. One almost unfailing safeguard against the unscrupulous, however, is the fact that they are short lived. The advertisements may appear for a time, but don't continue long. Firms whose announcements persist year after year are usually reliable. So, too, are those firms whose announcements appear in reputable papers.

The action of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company in providing for $100 and $500 bonds in its recent issue of $67,000,000 may help remove the objection that some bankers urge against bonds of small denomination—lack of a good market. The chief value claimed by bond men for a bond over a farm mortgage is its convertibility at any time. Bankers accustomed to dealing with bonds of $1,000 are not eager to advise customers to invest in smaller bonds because opportunities to sell them again quickly are not always numerous.

Brief Business Topics

—As an indication of the extent to which the railways are spending money, it is said that some of the car builders now have enough orders to keep them busy until 1914.

—Although our foreign trade increased last year about $600,000,000, the imports and exports maintained the same ratio. We still export more than we require from other nations, and we are still a considerable factor in providing the world with food.

—According to published statements, many of the Chicago banks earned over 25 per cent on their stock during the past year and a number of them made 20 per cent or more on the capital employed. The Harris Trust is said to have earned 36 per cent on its stock, the Corn Exchange 25 and the Illinois Trust 21.

—Labor in the East is showing symptoms of general unrest. In addition to the extensive strike of the garment workers, the firemen on one of the larger lines are restless and the waiters of New York are not on a peaceful basis. The increase in wages to 1,000,000 employees of the steel corporation, which takes effect Feb. 1, may make for industrial quiet.

—No answer has yet been published to the charges of Professor L. C. Corbett of the department of agriculture that the value of

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency
Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the
Illinois Trust & Savings Bank
Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. & JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT
¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

8% FARM MORTGAGES 8%
Income sure. Our mortgages never exceed 30 per cent actual value of security. Every farm is examined by our salaried inspector. We collect and remit interest free of charge, and net you Eight per cent. Our field is the rich agricultural valley of Eastern New Mexico. Diversified crops; prosperous farmers. Write for information and sample application of $500.00 loan on improved 160 acre farm.
THE UNION MORTGAGE CO.,
105 West Grand Ave., Clovis, New Mexico

Farm Mortgages 6%
Capital and Surplus, $350,000.00
Send for pamphlet "C." Interest and principal collected free. Highest references. Clients in 32 States. Established in 1883
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

GOOD 6% Farm Mortgages
The BEST and SAFEST Investment on Earth.
Write us for information regarding our Farm Mortgages on lands located in the fertile James River Valley, North Dakota. We guarantee to look after collection of interest so that the investment will net you 6%. Write us for lists.
H. J. JOHNSON LAND AND CATTLE CO.
OAKES. - - NORTH DAKOTA

A 6% January Investment
$2,500.00 First Mortgage secured by 160 acres tillable black loam, 3½ miles from Noble, Alberta, 110 acres under plow. Buildings worth $1,000.00. Mortgagor owns 42 horses, 30 cows, 500 sheep, 50 hogs, 1,280 acres other land, private grain elevator. Full particulars of this and other Alberta mortgages, $500.00 to $32,000 denominations on request.
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer
1201 Granite Building :: Rochester, N. Y.

farm products of the country is overestimated two or three times. He points out that no accounting is made of the amount of feed eaten by live stock on the farms. The corn is valued, for instance, both before and after it is turned into pork.

—Bradstreet's in commenting on the joy of snipping off $30 with the shears shows that ownership of mortgages or bonds generally depends simply on a little self-denial by the man who lives within his income.

Sunday School Week—Conference of Missionaries

Preparations are in progress for the observance of Sunday school week throughout the United States, beginning Sunday, Feb. 2. A particular interest is being taken because of the Sunday school conference which will be held during the week immediately following, Feb. 9-15, in Second church, Chicago, of which Dr. John Balcom Shaw is pastor. This year marks the completion of twenty-five years of Sunday school missionary work.

Sixty-five pioneer missionaries will be present at this annual conference, coming from various parts of the country. From the extreme Southwest among the mining camps to the newly settled valleys and plains of the Northwest these men will gather for instruction and discussion of methods. The secretary of the board, Alexander Henry, D. D., will conduct the conference.

The plans for Sunday school week in the churches call for special sermons at one of the preaching services Feb. 2 and Decision Day exercises in the Sunday schools on the same day. Young People's Day exercises will be held in many churches at the evening service. At midweek prayer meetings the various phases of Sunday school work as well as Sunday school missions, with special reference to frontier regions, will be the subject of prayer and praise.

Immediately following the celebration in Chicago the workers will leave for St. Louis, where special exercises will be held under the direction of the presbyterial Sunday school committee.

These meetings will attract widespread attention, as it is the first time in the history of Sunday school missions that so many field workers have been brought together in a single conference. A review of the labors of these Sunday school workers during twenty-five years shows more than 20,000 Sunday schools organized, into which more than 1,000,000 pupils have been gathered. From these schools about 2,100 churches have developed, acquiring chapel and manse property to the value of about $2,000,000.

Dr. Matthews to Leave Seattle?

Dr. Mark A. Matthews, moderator of General Assembly, has recently made two visits to Los Angeles and it is reported that the committee of officials and members of Immanuel church there have invited him to their pulpit. Dr. Matthews is quoted as saying that he would announce his decision concerning the call on his return to Seattle. He was entertained at a luncheon and addressed the ministers and others, speaking at an evening meeting in Immanuel church.

Dr. John F. Carson, ex-moderator of Assembly and pastor of Central church, Brooklyn, is still kept from his pulpit by the serious breakdown which befell him before Christmas and is now in the South. He has suffered severely from appendicitis, but has so far escaped an operation.

Dr. John Dixon, associate secretary of the Home Board, is absent from headquarters inspecting churches under care of the board in Cuba.

5% FARM MORTGAGES
ON IOWA and MINNESOTA FARMS are the SAFEST FORM of INVESTMENT—Tested by our customers for 40 years. We collect and remit interest wherever investors desire. Write for booklet and list.
ELLSWORTH AND JONES.
IOWA FALLS, IOWA.

"The Oklahoma House"

OKLAHOMA 6% NET MORTGAGES

Let your money make 6 per cent—NET

¶ The three or four per cent the savings bank pays does not fairly represent your money's earning ability. It is simply the small end of the profits. The bank keeps the big share as its fee for reinvestment—reinvesting your money in mortgages—something you refuse to do for yourself. By investing direct you can at least double the profits of your savings as they now accrue to you. Oklahoma first mortgages—amply secured by two to four times the amount of the loan—make this possible—the same kind the banks and insurance companies buy.

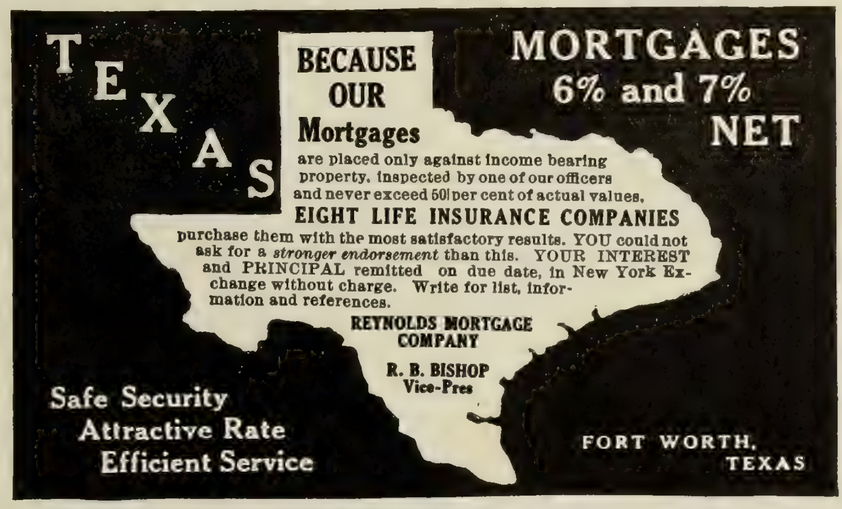
Why Insurance Companies Buy Oklahoma Mortgages

Experience showed them that in order to meet competition they must secure as high a rate per dollar as sound business judgment allowed. Investigation proved that Oklahoma offered the best field for investments of this kind. Approximately $415,000,000.00 is now invested by the insurance companies in farm mortgages—and a good share of this in Oklahoma mortgages.

Surely you can't do better than follow the example of these trained buyers of conservative investments. So decide now to give your money a chance to make good for you.

Write now for interesting booklets describing our comprehensive investment service and mortgage list No. 711.

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co. (Inc.)
OLDEST AND LARGEST MORTGAGE HOUSE INCORPORATED UNDER LAWS OF OKLAHOMA
Oklahoma City, U. S. A.
Business Founded 1892 Capital and Surplus $145,000.00



TEXAS MORTGAGES 6% and 7% NET

BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values. EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY
R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres

Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

7% 20 Years successful experience placing LOANS in the Southwest 7½%

Choice FARM LOANS in the RED RIVER Valley in S. E. Oklahoma, N. E. Texas and S. W. Arkansas, on improved farms at not to exceed 33⅓% actual value of security. The home of long staple cotton, corn, oats, alfalfa, fruits and vegetables. Average annual rainfall 45 inches and good soil, insuring certainty and fulfillment. Diversified farming; prosperous community. Write for information, booklet and map.

THE SECURITY MORTGAGE COMPANY
Individual responsibility over $1,000,000. Broad St., Texarkana, Ark.-Texas

Place Your Funds in Safe Securities.

No matter if you have a large or small amount for investment, a well placed First Mortgage upon an improved or cultivated farm can always be depended upon to yield a liberal rate of interest with the assurance of prompt payment of interest and principal at maturity.

My offerings range in amounts from $500.00 to $5,000.00 bearing 5½% and 6% interest. All loans carefully inspected and closed with our own funds before being offered for sale. Interest and principal collected without charge. Correspondence invited and detailed information with references and list of offerings will be mailed upon request.

G. W. HART, President Merchants' Bank, Bryant, S. D.

6% FIRST MORTGAGES ON IMPROVED FARMS 6½%
YIELDING 6% AND 6 1-2% PER ANNUM NET.

The first morgtgages we sell are secured by improved farms in the most prosperous sections of Oregon and Washington.

The investor in one of our mortgages has possession of all the papers comprising the loan, including the actual mortgage itself—together with the notes and abstract of title. We guarantee all titles and will collect and remit interest in New York exchange without charge.

We invite correspondence and will send lists of mortgages and booklet.

THE DEVEREAUX MORTGAGE COMPANY
1014 SPALDING BLDG., PORTLAND, ORE.

6½% Net First Mortgages
on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts who have spent their lives in this section. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature.

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

Story of China's Needs Impressed on Central West

GETTING INSPIRATION perhaps from the flying squadrons of the Men and Religion Movement a year ago, a team of Foreign Board secretaries and missionaries has been impressing the need of China upon the people of the Central West the past ten days, and the campaign for St. Louis begins today. The "sortie" began in Chicago Jan. 19 and before meetings there were concluded the members had scattered to Milwaukee, Minneapolis and St. Paul. Then they moved down to Sioux City, Omaha, Lincoln and Council Bluffs. Friday to Sunday was spent in and around Kansas City, and then followed meetings in Topeka and Wichita.

William H. Edwards, Milwaukee

Works for the church and sells groceries to pay the expenses.

Of the results it is too early to speak. The board has set a certain mark in men and money to be attained in three years. Men half through the seminary course have decided to spend their lives in China, and business men who have heard the earnest plea of the missionaries have decided to do more than tithe their income. Of this the board does not yet know, perhaps. This campaign in the Central West under Dr. C. E. Bradt is but one of a number which the board will make. Already large pledges have been made and men and women are volunteering. Dr. John Timothy Stone announced at the dinner to Robert E. Speer in Chicago that a young electrician had offered to go and support himself. Similar encouraging instances are reported from other cities. The demand is for men and women to occupy many sorts of positions as civilizing influences.

In This Campaign Presbyterians Are Learning:

That not long ago in a seaport town a temple was taken for a police station and heathen gods were dumped into the river.

That Chinese missionaries look about the same as the dentist or doctor who may sit next to you in church.

That natives in China hear with scant patience of the distinctions between denominations.

That one-third of the senior class of forty-two in Princeton Seminary has volunteered for China.

That Chinese carry their idols in automobiles and see no irony.

That the chief of police of Canton recently gathered 500 slave girls into a school and obtained a Christian teacher for them.

That Dr. Sun, former provisional president, on a recent Sunday preached in a Presbyterian church in Tsingtau.

That Dr. H. V. Noyes, who has been in China forty-seven years, says 65 per cent of all the officials of Kwangtung province are attendants or members of churches.

In Milwaukee the visitors found an eddy of energetic enthusiasm for the work of Rev. and Mrs. Roy H. Brown in Albay, the Philippines. This is under the care of Milwaukee Presbytery, and an effort is being made now to erect a dormitory for the school boys of Albay. Nearly $500 has been raised by the boys of Milwaukee, who have been formed into Brown Dormitory clubs by William V. Smeaton. This Milwaukee missionary project has the backing of a number of energetic laymen who are setting a pace for men of the Central West. One of them is chairman of presbytery's foreign mission committee, and another is secretary and treasurer of the committee. Both are executives of the largest wholesale grocery house in Wisconsin—F. C. Comstock of Immanuel church and William H. Edwards of Westminster.

These two men are credited with being directly responsible for the origin, maintenance and progress of the Milwaukee field in the Philippines. Before 550 Presbyterians of Milwaukee who gathered for dinner in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium they were forced to acknowledge lusty cheers. Dr. A. W. Halsey and Doctors Bradt, King and Reherd spoke on missions with reference to China and the Philippines, and aroused still greater enthusiasm for all mission work.

At least one church in St. Paul has determined to support a China missionary and two people have decided to volunteer for service. There and in Minneapolis the meetings were well attended. Dr. Speer and Dr. Halsey spoke at noon luncheons to men in both cities.

Afternoon conferences with women were enthusiastic. Many pledges were signed and others will be sent in later.

F. C. Comstock, Milwaukee

Booster for foreign missions, a typical new type layman.

In Omaha and in Council Bluffs members of the Commercial Club provided the audience at noon meetings when the China campaigners reached there Jan. 23. Owing to delayed trains there were quick switches in the program. Nearly 200 men listened to Dr. Speer and Mr. Bible in Omaha. One pledge was returned for $500 in the total of several thousand dollars raised in the Nebraska city. Meetings were held at Sioux City the same day.

After meetings at Lincoln the party left for Kansas City, where conferences were held Friday afternoon. That evening there were seven district conferences, including meetings at Independence and Kansas City, Kan. Sunday there was presentation of the appeal from the church pulpits as in Chicago the week previous.

Topeka was visited by several members of the party last Friday and Wichita in the same way Jan. 29, with noon luncheons for men and afternoon gatherings for women.

Ministerial Obituary

Henry Martyn Parsons, D. D.

Henry Martyn Parsons, D. D., who died recently in Toronto, pastor emeritus of Knox church of that city, was born in 1828 in East Haddam, Conn., where his father, Rev. Isaac Parsons (Yale 1811), was pastor forty years; graduated from Yale in 1848 and in 1854 from the Connecticut Theological School at Windsor Hill, now Hartford Theological Seminary; conversant with the profound theological controversies of his early years and inheriting the best traditions of the religious, intellectual and social life of New England, Dr. Parsons was well fitted to become, as his whole life attested, the stalwart defender of the faith once delivered to the saints. His ministry proved his thorough knowledge and deep experience of the great doctrines of the gospel of God.

In his pastorates in Springfield, Mass., Boston, Buffalo and Toronto nothing stands out so prominent in the memory of his hearers as his love and knowledge of the sacred Scriptures. Some of the earliest Bible conferences in New England had in him their most zealous promoter; and later in the annual Bible conference which met for many years at Niagara on the Lake he was one of the most helpful teachers. His genial spirit, frank, hearty manner and ready sympathy endeared him to all. His striking bodily presence and enthusiastic advocacy of what he believed never failed to attract the attention of his hearers. He gave one the impression of a "Great Heart" in the battle. His preaching was remarkable for the unusual help and consolation it brought to the weary and perplexed. His prayers in public and in private were characterized by their pertinence, variety and fullness, and by an undoubting sense of nearness to God. About ten years ago, after a pastorate of twenty years, he was led to resign because of a serious illness. He was made pastor emeritus, but on gradual recovery he for ten years freely assisted his brethren and the churches, and was active in the operation of various boards and societies.

He is survived by his widow, two sons and three daughters—children of a previous marriage. His youngest daughter is the wife of Dr. John Timothy Stone of Chicago.

It is due to his memory and as a brief testimony to a noble consecrated life, but above all, as he himself would confess, to the grace and glory of his Lord and Master Jesus Christ, that these words of one who dearly loved and greatly esteemed him are written. One of his last messages was given through his successor in the pastorate, Dr. Winchester, to a meeting of the China Inland mission: "Preach the word; proclaim the blessed Hope till he come."

W. J. E.

Pressly Thompson, D. D.

Dr. Pressly Thompson, who was installed pastor of Westminster church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Sept. 26, died in Colorado Springs Jan. 21, having been confined to his bed with tuberculosis since the latter part of October. He filled his pulpit but six Sabbaths, coming from an eight year pastorate in the U. P. church, Washington, Pa. He leaves a widow and six children. He was 43 years old and graduated from Monmouth College in 1891 and from Allegheny Seminary in 1894. A brother is president of Tarkio College. The funeral was held in Westminster church Jan. 24, Dr. E. R. Burkhalter conducting the service.

School and College

Dr. J. M. Hubbert, assistant stated clerk of General Assembly, last week delivered eight lectures at Lane Seminary.

Newark Theological Seminary (formery Bloomfield) is making a final effort to raise $12,000 in order to redeem time limited pledges and complete the fund for Knox hall.

A significant series of revival meetings under Dr. E. A. Elmore has just concluded in Tusculum College, Tennessee. Thirty-five conversions among the students resulted. Out of the 192 students all but fifteen have stood forth as avowed Christians.

Clergy and Laity

Dr. Aquilla Webb was recently elected president of the Louisville, Ky., Ministerial Association.

Dr. E. Y. Hill of First church, Philadelphia, on account of illness, has given up church duties for the present and Rev. W. W. Faris has been engaged to supply the pulpit.

From Various Fields

California

More than 300 members of First church, San Jose, attended a banquet Jan. 7 in honor of the 40th birthday and the seventh anniversary of the beginning of the pastorate of the pastor, Rev. Harmon H. McQuilkin. Rev. Vincent Napoli, the Italian minister who has been called by this church to take charge of a mission among the 10,000 Italians in San Jose, the support for which has already been raised by the church, was present and was introduced.

Presbyterian ministers of Los Angeles have decided on a campaign to raise $35,000 during the year for local church extension and home mission work. At the meeting of presbytery recently a plan of consolidating the committees on home mission, church extension, evangelism and benevolence work was proposed. Among the visiting pastors in the city recently was Dr. Mark A. Matthews, moderator, who lunched with the ministers Jan. 15 and that evening addressed a large mass meeting in Immanuel church.

Idaho

A church of thirteen members was organized Dec. 29 at Arcadia, a country community on the North Side Twin Falls project. It has been grouped as a preaching point with the Auger Falls and Orchard Valley churches under the pastoral care of Rev. W. S. Morrow. Mr. Morrow was assisted in the organization by Rev. J. K. MacGillivray, pastor-evangelist for Twin Falls Presbytery.

An efficiency conference was held in Bethany church, Boise, Jan. 7, by the superintendent of home missions, which resulted in the organization of a missionary society, the resuscitation of a home department and a cradle roll and other forward steps in the work of the church. A series of these conferences is being held which, it is expected, will include practically all the churches in synod.

New York

A campaign has been commenced to increase the attendance and membership of Second church, Amsterdam.

Fire destroyed a portion of the new building of East Side church, Rochester, Jan. 12. Rev. Arthur Clements is pastor.

Otsego Presbytery at a recent meeting expressed its deep grief over the death of its moderator, Rev. Randall Pease of Hamden.

Rev. Frank E. Higgins recently spoke to the men of First church, Niagara Falls, at the twelfth dinner of the Laymen's Missionary Association.

North Dakota

Rev. P. W. Erickson, pastor of Carrington church, was recently elected secretary of an organization of the ministers of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Congregational churches in the Minot district. They will work together to prevent duplication of effort.

Montana

First church, Libby, was dedicated Jan. 5. Rev. Alexander Pringle of Kalispell assisted the pastor, Rev. W. A. Reed. The building cost $5,600 and is practically free of debt. This church is the outgrowth of a Sunday school started in 1893.

South Dakota

The seventh annual meeting of the Federated Council of the Churches of Christ in South Dakota Dec. 31 revealed marked growth in the spirit of cooperation and greatly increased interest in the movement.

Washington

Westminster church, Seattle, Rev. F. M. Silsley pastor, has undertaken the support of Dr. Clementine Bash, who leaves in February for Peking, China.

Pennsylvania

The Italian mission which has been meeting in a room downtown will hereafter be given space in the new First church, Johnstown.

Marietta church recently completed celebration of its ninetieth anniversary. Rev. Edward F. Reimer is pastor. The duplex system of giving has lately been adopted and the Sunday school thoroughly graded. The boys' club has been furnished gymnasium equipment.

New Jersey

The new auditorium erected for Upper Montclair church by the generosity of its elder, the late Timothy G. Sellew, was dedicated Jan. 19. The music was particularly impressive, and the dedicatory sermon by Dr. William Force Whitaker, pastor of First church, Elizabeth, was a moving expression of the evangelical gospel to be preached in the church. Dr. Orville Reed, a former pastor of Mr. Sellew, offered the dedicatory prayer. Mr. Sellew gave the site and erected upon it six years ago the manse and the chapel, which until now has been used for all services. A little over a year ago he gave $50,000 for an auditorium; but although he participated in laying the corner stone, he was not permitted to live to see the edifice completed. It was his widowed companion who presented the keys to the trustees of the congregation. Since the foundations were laid the congregation has lost also its pastor, the late Dr. George A. Paull. A few weeks ago Dr. Putnam Cady was installed as the successor to Dr. Paull. The church building is an admirable piece of Gothic architecture.

Upper Montclair, N. J., Church, the Gift of an Elder

Calendar and Record

Moderators Elected

Otsego—A. J. Sadler.

Calls

Illinois—Oakland: C. M. Byerley, accepts.
Iowa—Clarinda: W. H. Wilson, accepts.
Kansas—Hiawatha: T. B. Haynie, accepts; Arkansas City: William M. Gardner, accepts; Caldwell: Jesse W. Hudiberg, accepts.
Kentucky—Columbus: J. N. Crawford, accepts.
Missouri—Kansas City Mellin Place: Joseph H. Curry; Raymore: Marvin Custer, accepts.
Ohio—Nottingham and Stillwater: Wilson Stitt.
Pennsylvania—Pittsburg Providence: A. B. Allison, accepts; Williamsport Bethany: J. L. Winnemore, accepts.
Wisconsin—Madison German: H. J. Noeding, accepts.

Installations

California—Santa Cruz: H. B. Mayo, Jan. 23.
Iowa—Deep River: H. S. Condit.
Missouri—Parkville: J. C. Miller, Feb. 15.
New York—Delhi Second: W. M. N. Kittredge, Feb. 4.
Ohio—Bellaire First: J. H. Lawther, Jan. 17.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

SELWYN—Henry Tawanapinwakan Selwyn, thirty-four years pastor of Yankton Agency Indian Church, died Jan. 11, 1913.

Marriages

A charge of one cent per word is made for marriage notices. Payment must accompany copy.

ELLIOTT-BRADFORD—On Tuesday, January 21, 1913, at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, by Dr. John Henry Jowett, Marian Gustine, daughter of the late Dr. Theodore Dwight and Matilda R. L. Bradford, to Robert W. B. Elliott.

The Modern
Individual Communion Service
Made by Reed & Barton, has many advantages over the old style. Ask us for illustrations.

REED & BARTON, Silversmiths
Established 1824 Represented at TAUNTON, MASS.
Fifth Avenue and 32nd Street 4 Maiden Lane
New York

HELP PAY YOUR CHURCH DEBT

Have your congregation save up old magazines, periodicals and newspapers. Solicit old office records from manufacturers, scrap papers from printers and general stores. We pay the highest market prices. Write us for quotations.

PIONEER PAPER STOCK COMPANY
1-11 East Ohio Street - CHICAGO, ILL.

CHURCH MONEY
Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their
OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER
This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.
Write us at once for information and prices.
THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., .: CHICAGO

THE AMERICAN HYMNAL
Just off the press
A MODERN BOOK FOR THE MODERN CHURCH
Contains the important familiar hymns with their associated tunes, and is rich in hymns that emphasize the present thought and action of the day.
726 Hymns, Chants, and Responses, with modern aids to worship. Responsive Readings from the American Revised or the King James Version of the Bible.
Send for sample copies
THE CENTURY CO.
UNION SQUARE, NORTH NEW YORK

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED
Samples at Wholesale
Get in Business for Yourself
Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.
Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.
MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
For the Voice
Among public speakers and singers the most popular throat remedy. Convenient and promptly effective.
25c, 50c, $1.00. Sample Free.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON Boston, Mass.

Big Presbyterianism

It is the strength of the great Presbyterian denomination that it attracts to its fold many elements of our nation. Millionaires, and folk who need to count their pennies; lawyers, doctors, merchants, farmers, editors, printers, mechanics, educators, clerks, manufacturers, the women of the home—every honorable occupation is represented somewhere. The church is for all, and for everywhere. It is for the unsuccessful as well as for the successful in life. It is for the uneducated as well as for the educated; for the mistaken and for the wise; for the city and for the country; for the immigrant and the Mayflower descendant—for the least in knowledge, in capability, in command of environment, as well as for the great and powerful. No set-apart, self-centered individual, no set-apart, self-centered church, can truly represent Presbyterianism, for if it did Presbyterianism would cease to represent the gospel. And in this day no physical limitations can justly be pleaded for holding aloof from the concerns of the church at large. A Little Presbyterianism has no place in America. Informing agencies leave no excuse for ignorance; responsibilities for the greater tasks of the church are unescapable. The spirit of Big Presbyterianism is abroad in the land. Fewer churches content themselves with "taking care of No. 1" and contemplating in exultant pride the record of what they have done. More churches and church folk are concerned in knowing and encouraging what other churches and brethren are doing. They read their church paper not to be flattered but to give honor to others. The Presbyterian in Harrisburg is interested in the Presbyterian in Waco, Texas, and men in Los Angeles find help in the worth-while thing done by some one in Shawano, Wisconsin. In the development of Big Presbyterianism The Continent has a most important part. For the first time America has a Presbyterian newspaper of really national character, reaching every state of the Union with a circulation larger than ever before gained by a Presbyterian weekly in this field. To have all parts of the church brought into relation thus effectively is tremendously significant; and it shows how ministers and laymen are emphasizing the growing consciousness that they are made stronger for their separate tasks by accepting a broader vision of the work of the church as a whole.

SparksMarionE †jan13
1205 Springfield av

The Continent must feel the thrill of this movement. If you, and each of the thousands of splendid folk who are embraced in this great Presbyterian household, will help just one more person into the fellowship it will mean added power to the church. Why not do it tomorrow—today? Just get the name and address and send it at once so that the paper may begin coming; the $2.50 may be sent any time within the month.

Address

THE CONTINENT

509 South Wabash Avenue
Chicago, Illinois

156 Fifth Avenue
New York, N. Y.

T

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. $2.50 A YEAR FEBRUARY 6, 1913

The CONTINENT

The Two Sentinels of San Fernando

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. The Continent's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of The Continent. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

THE CONTINENT EDUCATIONAL BUREAU
509 Wabash Avenue - : - CHICAGO

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

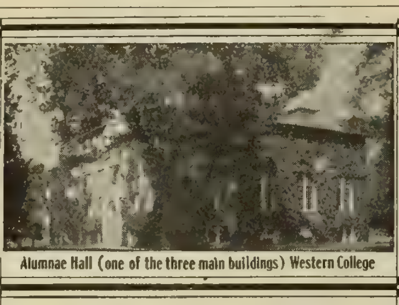
Ohio



Alumnae Hall (one of the three main buildings) Western College

"The Best in Best Things"

OXFORD, OHIO. THE WESTERN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges.

The broad culture, the beauty, the stimulating atmosphere of The Western College are attractive to ambitious women. A capable fuculty; strong curriculum; fine religious influence. Three hundred fifty acres, —a beautiful campus and garden; a farm that supplies the freshest of dairy, fruit and vegetable products to the tables. Western graduates are immediately eligible to best positions. High standards in every department,—Academic, Art and Music. Domestic Science a special feature. Golf links, tennis; outdoor gymnastics, and gymnasium.

Illustrated literature sent on request

Mary A. Sawyer, A.M., Litt. D., Dean

BOX 45 OXFORD, OHIO

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.

W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place' Catalogue mailed free. Address

H. B. BROWN. President.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Tennessee

Greeneville and Tusculum College

Strong Faculty. Healthful climate. Broad and liberal courses. Positive Christian influences. Expenses reasonable. Pres., Rev. C. O. GRAY, D.D., Greeneville, Tenn.

Ward Seminary

For Girls and Young Women

42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres.. Nashville, Tenn.

Illinois

NURSES PASSAVANT

are given a thorough and practical three years training at Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

LAKE FOREST COLLEGE

offers a liberal training under experienced professors and excellent provision for the physical and social welfare of its students, in a beautiful environment. For information address

JOHN S. NOLLEN, President, Lake Forest, Illinois

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD

A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.

M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

"Mushing" to Presbytery

Traveling 720 miles to a meeting of presbytery under any conditions would be very inconvenient. To take such a journey in winter, making 520 miles with dogs over Alaskan snows, would be perilous to most men. Dr. S. Hall Young is to tell Continent readers in our next issue that he not only made such a trip but thoroughly enjoyed it. He also explains what it is to "mush" in Alaska. Dr. Young is now relating some of his experiences in the far north in various pulpits of the country. Every Presbyterian will be thrilled by the heroism shown in this simple tale of a pioneer missionary.

The Continent Next Week

Representative Wanted

Employment can be given another man of suitable age and experience to act as subscription field representative of THE CONTINENT in specially good territory. The work will be found pleasant and profitable. Give age, references and qualifications in your reply, addressing "B,"

The Continent
156 Fifth Avenue :: New York City

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS

Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., PEKIN, ILL.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

REAL ESTATE

FLORIDA FARM, TWO HOUSES, TWO BARNS, COTton house, sugar mill, few farming tools, enough fruit for family; all kinds of vegetables and berries. Near railroad town, church, school and lake. Reason for selling, owner has paralysis. $15 per acre. L. S. Chadwick, Jacksonville, Fla.

DON'T YOU WANT A FARM HOME IN THE MILD healthful Southern States? Fine grazing, truck and general farming lands $10 to $30 an acre, easy terms. Poultry, fruit, truck pay $50 to $300 an acre. Land lists and "Southern Field" magazine free. M. V. Richards, Land and Industrial Agent, Southern Railway, Room A-22, Washington, D. C.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED—CORPORATION PARTNER HAVING twenty-five hundred dollars; layman or clergy. Address H, The Continent, Chicago.

LANTERN SLIDE RENTAL. CUSTOMERS SAY WE "make good." "The pictures solve Sunday evening problem." "No better slides can be made." "Perfect satisfaction." "Crowded houses." Send for booklet by Dr. John Clark Hill. Church Supply Co., E. Madison, Springfield, Ohio.

MEMPHIS, TENN., COURT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN church, Charles M. Collins, minister.

PASTOR, 15 years experience, would like to correspond with church needing pastor. Address Box 486, Tama, Ia.

WANTED—AN ENERGETIC MAN OR WOMAN IN every city of the United States, to take subscriptions for The Inter-Church, a national, interdenominational weekly, that is being warmly received by the people of all churches, and the only religious paper of its kind in the world. A most liberal and profitable proposition to person furnishing satisfactory references and who will make good. Write at once to The Inter-Church, Clinton, S. C.

TOWN WITH GOOD SCHOOLS, IN RICH FARMING country, good Presbyterian church, is looking for Presbyterian banker as cashier; experienced man. J, care The Continent.

OUR CHURCH (LA ROSE PRESBYTERIAN) IS WITHout a pastor, We pay a salary of $900 per year, and manse. We solicit applications for the vacancy. F. N. Rood, clerk, La Rose, Ill.

FOR SALE—ABOUT SIX HUNDRED VOLUMES OF A minister's library. List sent on application. Edyth Gwynne, 208 S. Crystal street, Butte, Mont.

TOURS

SEVEN MONTHS IN MISSION LANDS

A tour of the mission fields of Japan, China, Philippines, Burma, Assam, India.
Personally conducted by missionary expert. Many unique features. Visits to out-of-the-way places. Everything first class.
Sails from San Francisco August 23. Price $1,450
Also four months' trip to Burma.
Sails October 25. Price $550

Send for Announcement.

THE JUDSON CENTENNIAL TOURS
Ford Building :: :: Boston

EUROPE

POPULAR TOURS AT POPULAR PRICES $380 and Up

February Season. Announcements.
The Shelton Tours, Waverley-Belmont, Mass.

"A FAIR FACE MAY PROVE A FOUL BARGAIN." MARRY A PLAIN GIRL IF SHE USES

SAPOLIO

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
Everett Sisson, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1913

The Gospel of the Long Run......... 169
Editorial—
  The Difficulty of the Grind........... 173
  Our Error in Detail; His in Principle 173
  Worth of a Church College........... 173
  A Leader of Safe Progress............ 174
The World—
  Imperiled Christians of Turkey ....William T. Ellis 171
Religious World....................... 172
A New Sense of Values....J. H. Jowett 175
Where the Sea Calls to the Mountain (Illustrated)..........H. H. McQuilkin 176
They Saw Abraham Lincoln in Life—Symposium by William T. Carson, Alex H. McKelvy, Agnes W. Morris, Alexander Shaw, John Cassell, M. B. Chambers, Augustus Denniston, W. P. White, William Hoyt Coleman, J. Meulendyke, Hiles C. Pardoe, Homer Anderson and Cora Banks Pierce.... 178
Bradford Horton, Man. Chapter XIV.—Continued..........Richard S. Holmes 180
Heroes of the Poles......The Wayfarer 182
The Home Council—The Tests of Temptation....................Ethel Colson 183
Young America—The Way Bobbie Kept a Diary................Pauline F. Camp 184
The Sunday School ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 185
Devotional Service.........E. A. Wicher 186
Young People's Service......W. T. Ellis 186
Missionary Work (with Illustration).... 187
New Books—
  England's Newest Poet............... 188
The Open Hearth..................... 189
Ways of Working..................... 190
News from Religious World—Beginning 193
Financial Situation.................. 200

Around the Shop

Long experience in association with the publication of newspapers and periodicals has perceptibly lessened the awe with which the Around-the-Shop Man once approached the editorial lair. (Compositor: Be sure to make it l-a-i-r.) He long ago discovered that editors are human—the most human the most successful. But he is quite sure that some folks conceive editors to be either ogres influenced only by the most scathing phraseology, or cowed creatures who may be scolded like a schoolboy.

The A.-t.-S. Man has known editors who were pretty scoldy themselves—in print—and whose most brilliant efforts were directed toward scolding brother editors who in their mental harness are disposed to stretch the tug strap rather than the hold-back. But these scolds are few and negligible. They and the few others who scold editors are the best of people in their personal relations, and we're glad they're alive.

There are some others who haven't discovered that editors are human. According to the statistics evolved by a recently convened group of editors, for every thousand persons who ask editorial favors, .000001 write expressing their thanks after the favor is rendered.

This leads up to a never-to-be-forgotten experience. One day a few years ago an individual of pleasing manner introduced himself at the office of The Continent. He had no special business, he said, except that having an hour before his train left he had walked down (a half mile out of his way) to express his thanks for a kindly worded news item in reference to his church that had appeared a month or so before. "It was too generous regarding me," he said, "but I am glad you could say it about my church."

That is why Edward Baech of Delphi, Ind., has been and will be remembered by the Around-the-Shop Man.

Lincoln's familiar statement that "you can't fool all the people all the time" is a truth which the advertiser fully realizes.

The advertiser knows that unless his goods are right, no amount of advertising can sell them to any one person but once. His permanent success depends on repeat orders.

Hence, you may be sure that anything which you see continually advertised is a good thing.

You'll make no mistake to pin your faith to the constant advertiser. You'll find him well represented in these pages, and we confidently commend him to your patronage.

The Advertising
Manager

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

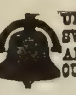
Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat, or Acetylene Generator, $29,00. Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus. Get our latest catalog and terms.
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

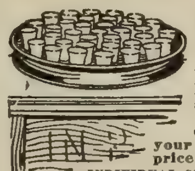


BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING

Write Today for Our "Catalog FD"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog FA
School Desks, Catalog FC
American Seating Company
218 S WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA



The Best Way
The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

SELL'S NEW METHOD STUDIES
FOR BIBLE CLASSES. Eight Distinct Series--popular throughout English-speaking world. Send for Full Descriptive Circulars.
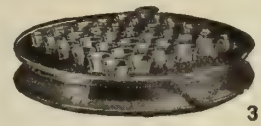
F. H REVELL CO. 158 5th Av., N.Y. 125 N. Wabash. Chicago

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO



The International
The most practical Communion Service made.
Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

THE AMERICAN HYMNAL
Just off the press
A MODERN BOOK FOR THE MODERN CHURCH
Contains the important familiar hymns with their associated tunes, and is rich in hymns that emphasize the present thought and action of the day.
726 Hymns, Chants, and Responses, with modern aids to worship. Responsive Readings from the American Revised or the King James Version of the Bible.
Send for sample copies
THE CENTURY CO.
UNION SQUARE, NORTH NEW YORK

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

ALEXANDER'S GOSPEL SONGS
OVER A MILLION SOLD
$25.00 per 100.
Sample 30 cents postpaid.
No. 2. An Enlarged Book—Many New Hymns—Now Ready
FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY. New York or Chicago

$60 to any

Minister

Pay a Little Down
After Trial
and the Balance

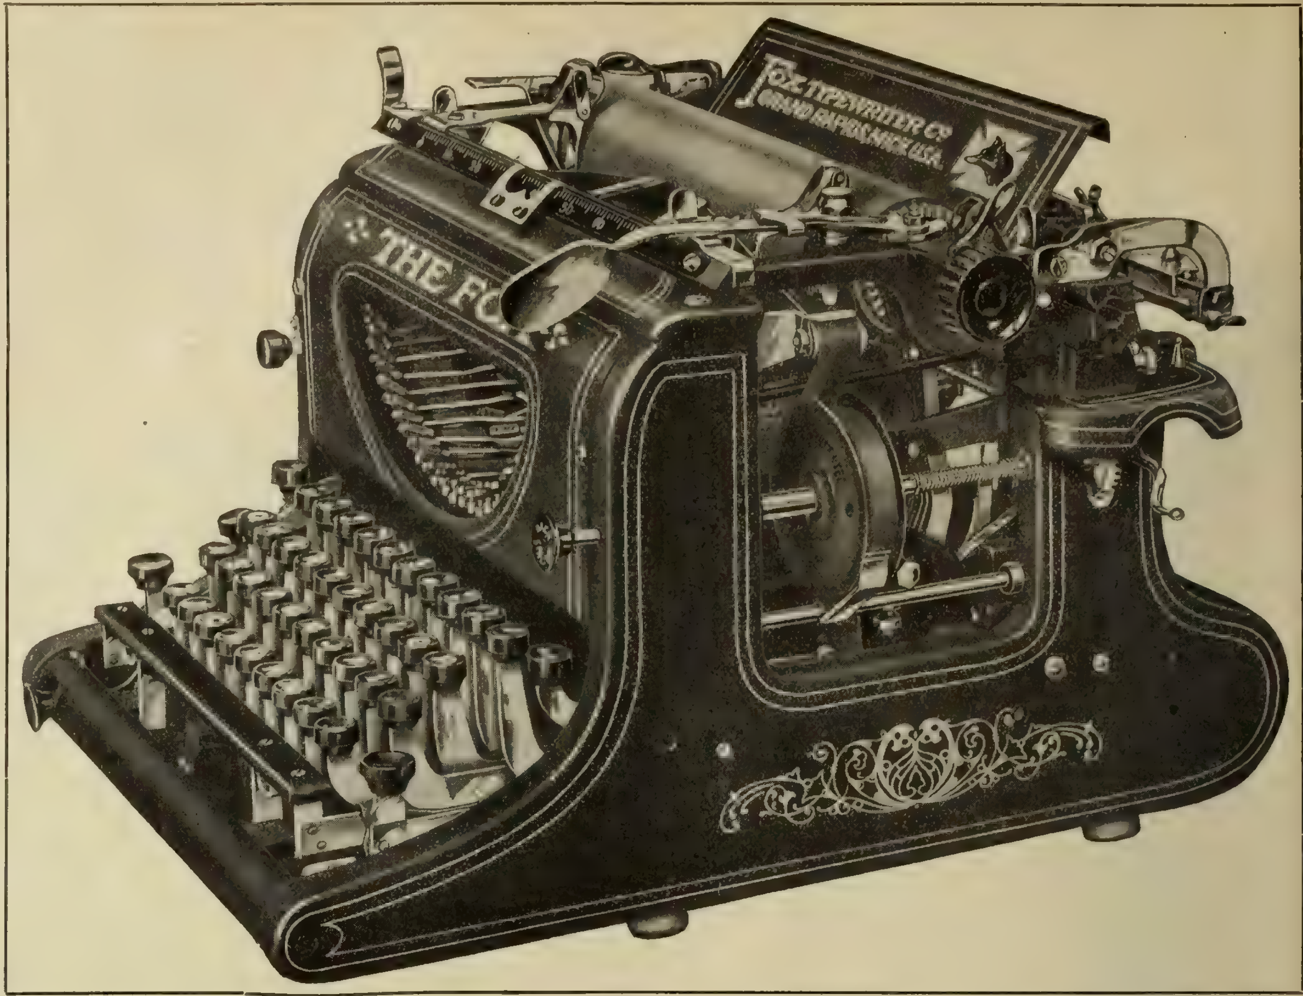
$5

Monthly



RIGHT HERE IS YOUR CHANCE TO BUY THAT TYPEWRITER!

This is a Straight-from-the-Shoulder Typewriter Talk by a Typewriter Man to the Readers of The Continent

OUR PRICE $60. PAYABLE $5 MONTHLY—AGENTS WANTED

If you are content to pay the full price for a typewriter we have nothing to say, but if you are one of the many thousands who believe that $100.00 is too much to pay for any typewriter and that it is only necessary to do so because of the expensive methods of selling, then this offer is your opportunity.

We handle all makes of typewriters—we are just as familiar with them as you are with the furnishings of your home—we know the good typewriters, and there are many of them—and we know the poor ones, and there are lot of them, too. When we tell you that the Fox Visible Typewriter is the highest grade of typewriter ever built, and stands among experienced typewriter men as the very highest type of typewriter building, we mean just what we say and we can, and will, prove it to anyone. When we tell you a Fox Typewriter is Visible, IT IS VISIBLE, and you will not have to look beneath a lot of moving type bars to see what you have written. When we tell you that the Fox Typewriter has a light touch and is almost noiseless we can easily substantiate the claim if you will let us send the typewriter on our Free Trial proposition. When we tell you that it has more automatic features than any other typewriter built, and is greater value for the money, we can prove that also in the same way.

HERE IS OUR PROPOSITION: We want no money in advance—simply your permission to ship the typewriter for trial. Take it to your office or home and use it for ten days, exactly the same as though it was your own property—compare it with any, or all other typewriters with which you are familiar—ask your friends their opinion of it. After ten days if the typewriter is not entirely satisfactory—and we will ask you no questions why—you can send it back at our expense and the deal will be closed. No representatives will be sent to bother you or to urge the sale. If purchased you can send us $10.00 at the end of the ten days' trial and then $5.00 monthly until $60.00 has been paid in full If you wish to pay all cash you can deduct 5 per cent.

Did you ever have a fairer proposition made to you—can you even ask for a fairer one?

The illustration shown above is of the Fox Model No. 23 having thirty-nine keys writing seventy-eight characters.

We have a few typewriters of the Model No. 24 type which are fitted with the Special Ministers' Keyboard having forty-four keys writing eighty-eight characters. If your order is received immediately we can fill it with one of these Special Ministers' Typewriters.

In addition to being fully visible, and having forty-four keys in the keyboard, the Fox Model No. 24 has a two-color ribbon attachment—back spacer—tabulator—stencil cutter—card holder—line lock—variable line spacer—interchangeable carriages with removable platens, and a ribbon movement that automatically reverses and which travels in a zig-zag line in front of the type, using the entire wearing surface of the ribbon.

Here is without a question of doubt the best typewriter proposition ever offered a Minister and "HERE IS YOUR CHANCE TO BUY THAT TYPEWRITER!"

Michigan Typewriter Exchange

4902-4912 River Front :: GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

THE CONTINENT COUPON

MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE
4902-4912 River Front, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Sirs:—You may send at once by express—I to pay the express charges—one Fox Visible Typewriter, Ministers' Sample Model, No. 24, complete with metal cover, and oak base, as described and illustrated in your advertising. I agree either to return this typewriter within ten days or to pay $60 for it—payable $10 down after trial and $5 monthly until paid in full, for which deferred payments I will make settlement by notes. Title to the Fox Typewriter, Model 24, to remain in your name until fully paid for.

Name...

Address...

Denomination...

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 6 FEBRUARY 6, 1913 WHOLE No. 2228

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

The Gospel of the Long Run

"YES, BUT THE SHORT RUN IS ENOUGH TO KILL A FELLOW!"

Such was the sharp rejoinder of a discouraged man, in conflict with misfortune, when a well intentioned comforter undertook to console him with the traditional assurance, "It will all come out right in the long run."

His impatience is not surprising. Nor is it strange that vast numbers of people make a similar complaint about the consolations that Christianity offers in a world of disappointments, failures, losses, illnesses, accidents and bereavements.

"You are always talking of the future," men retort to the preachers in the churches. "You are promising good in another existence than this. You are saying that there is compensation coming by and by. Away with your postponements. We are living now. Give us comfort that will take effect today."

✢

A measure of justice in such protests sane Christian leaders have recognized. There has been a proper and useful effort to bring religion closer where it is needed just now to lighten today's burdens and solace today's pain.

Yet when all is said and done, it still remains a fact, inwrought in the nature of what Jesus was and did and said, that his message of consolation is a message more of tomorrow than of today.

The word of Jesus is a word of today when he talks about duty. But when he talks about sorrows and griefs and trials his word is a word of many long tomorrows.

There is not the slightest suggestion, in anything the Master ever said to burdened hearts, of that fictitious cheer which has become so popular in these latter days—the persistent declaration that there is really nothing painful in the world, and disordered imagination makes all mankind's woes. Jesus never could have cheated tortured souls with that lying opiate.

Instead he admitted unfalteringly that the uppermost aspect of life is an aspect of suffering and ill fortune and limitation. But the triumphing faith which he lived and which he taught, was that all this is a transient aspect.

As the final and persistent fact of things underlying all, he saw an eternal harmony, wherein all who do the will of God must at length find rest and ultimate satisfaction.

Hope of discovering that underlying fact, that harmony and that rest, Jesus refers to the future, yet not by any means altogether to another and different existence. Conscious of God nowhere else more than in the earth where he dwelt in human incarnation, Jesus trusted the Father to make his righteous ways known, for the comfort of those who believe in him, here in this present world.

But this victory and serenity are to be achieved not by any sudden shaking off of ill and mischance, nor indeed in any escape whatever, but only in the day-after-day struggle against discouragement, whereby the lights of peace are glimpsed at length through the palls that courage and trust rend asunder. And that comes "in the long run."

✢

So, after all, the gospel of Christ is the gospel of the long run. Nothing else essentially can any interpreter make of it.

Is that gospel, then, a futile aid to the hard-beset man struggling with troubles just now, wondering whether his strength can possibly outlast one moment more of stress? Is there genuine help in it for the man who actually expects the "short run" to finish him?

Yes, there is help in it; it is not futile. Let the discouraged man only curb his impatience and actually accept the fair trial of this "long run" gospel, and he will soon understand its magic power to sustain. Millions who are trying it do understand.

For when men give way under strain of ill fortune, it is not their endurance really that collapses; it is their hope.

Men can stand anything as long as their hope grips hard on a sincere expectation of good. No matter how distant the good thing to come may be—if only one is sure that it is coming—one can last till it arrives.

As a matter of fact, the "short run" never does end a man who sights anything in the "long run" that he may reasonably hope for.

And the meaning of the gospel of the long run, as embodied in the message of Jesus of Nazareth, is this unlimited and eternal optimism—that in the long run there is everything for everybody to hope for.

Not by demonstration of philosophy nor by scientific survey of human experience did or does Jesus support this franchise of eventual good for all mankind. He builds instead direct on his own consciousness of the infinite love of the Father.

The infinite God—infinitely understanding, infinitely resourceful—loves with an infinite Fatherhood all human souls. Therefore it is impossible that any soul in all the universe, not willfully rebellious against God's love, shall ever come to final wreck.

Thus believing, Jesus went on, trusting and enduring all things. So may any man go on, trusting and enduring all things, if there has been transplanted to his heart but a mustard seed of the faith of Jesus in the Father.

✢

But even those who know the sustenance of this faith may yet at times wonder why the Father of love can in love postpone so long the solution of life's puzzles—so long delay succor when trouble so greatly abounds.

Yet if the one who waits and suffers and still has faith can calmly look within his own soul to the processes there at work under the discipline of disappointment or pain or privation, the mystery of postponed blessing is not a mystery wholly.

What is God working in the man who suffers and waits in faith?

A great thing it is that God is making strength in him. He is developing a man—no longer an infant to be cuddled with comfortable things, but one stalwart man, able to bear, fitted to "suffer and be strong."

It is a great thing, too, that God is making faith in the man. If pampered and fed at every cry, the man would never learn to trust—to hold confidence steady without a sign to stimulate it by, to keep fidelity until revealment is at hand.

But it is the greatest thing that thus God makes character in the man—substance of righteousness, founded not on rewards of goodness but on love of goodness—a character that could never be if God paid all accrued recompenses every night.

And these results in those whose spiritual development is his noblest care, are surely tokens sufficient that neither his wisdom nor his love has failed when the Father is "longsuffering over them."

The World

Suffragists Angered at Being Sidetracked

Woman's suffrage seemed last month on the verge of triumphing in the British house of commons after forty-five years of fighting, but there came a shift in the favoring winds. Both the cabinet and the parties are divided on the question. Premier Asquith is opposed to votes for women, as is Colonial Minister Harcourt; Lloyd George and Earl Grey are favorable. The last named minister, without cabinet sanction, introduced an amendment to omit the word "male" from the pending franchise reform bill which the government had supported. The Liberals could not be united in support of the proposal, and though most of the Tories are hostile their party would not as a whole oppose it. The Irish members of parliament were besieged on all sides, but their friendship for the premier because of his championship of home rule naturally inclined them to side with him.

At this juncture Speaker Lowther of the house of commons announced that he might rule the amendment out of order, because if female suffrage were inserted into the bill it would make it essentially a new measure, therefore the bill would have to be dropped and reintroduced in different form. This was a figurative bomb for the men and women supporters of equal rights at the polls. Cabinet councils were held and discussion everywhere was furious. The Tories and even some Liberals asserted that the government had no right to force through so radical a measure without first appealing to the country at a general election. The premier from the floor of the house asked the speaker to make the ruling, and this done he withdrew the bill.

The militant suffragists cried out that they had been tricked, and an outburst of violence followed. Property in London and suburbs was damaged, and acids were again poured into letter boxes Twenty-one women were arrested in the vicinity of the parliament buildings, and more than thirty were committed to jail for two weeks. Feminine hysteria has aroused masculine stubbornness, without benefit to either side

* *

American Suffragists Busy but Peaceable

Meantime the active suffragists in this country are preparing for a spectacular but nonmilitant campaign in connection with the Presidential inauguration. A march from New York City to Washington and a great parade and pageant are planned for March 3. A feminine Paul Revere and a modern Joan of Arc, chariots and women charioteers, are among the features promised. Permanent headquarters are to be established in Washington.

Among the latest states to report progress in the votes for women crusade are New York and Nevada. The New York legislature adopted a resolution for a constitutional amendment, which must be again adopted in 1915. One house of the Nevada legislature has lately acted on the matter

* *

Notice Given to End Balkan Truce

After considerable unsuccessful diplomatic maneuvering on the part of Balkan and Turkish peace delegates and the ambassadors of the powers, the order went forth last week for a resumption of hostilities, and the interest is to be transferred from London back to the Tchatalja battle lines. The reply of the new ministry of the Young Turkish party to the joint note of the powers contained an offer to give up half of Adrianople, the Moslems to retain the part of the city where their principal shrines are located, and to leave the disposal of the Ægean islands open for settlement. This was not satisfactory to the Balkan allies, and they finally served the four days' notice required to end the armistice. Outside intervention, however, is still regarded as possible.

* *

Germany to Shield Turkey in Asia

Turkey had been looking to Germany for succor, but the German ambassador at Constantinople plainly stated last week that this assistance would not extend beyond Asia Minor (Anatolia). Speaking at a dinner in honor of the kaiser's birthday, he declared that "to all Turkish possessions in Asia Germany will attach the label 'Touch me not.'" German money has built railroads and irrigation works in Anatolia, and the German press asserts that no international scramble for this portion of the sultan's domain will be permitted

The Russian emperor has presented 2,000,000 kilograms of corn to the Montenegrin people, which will go far to relieve the distress the war has caused that little nation. The French government has sent 10,000 francs to Salonica for use of the refugees there.

* *

Home Ruler Wins in Ulster Election

It is often difficult correctly to interpret political events even at home, and the same holds true of Great Britain, but it is easy to read an indorsement of home rule right at the heart of the opposition in the result of the election in Londonderry last Thursday. An Irish Nationalist, D. C. Hogg, was chosen to fill the seat in parliament long occupied by the marquis of Hamilton, a Unionist, and this victory gives the home rulers a majority of the members of parliament from Ulster province. The election was exceedingly close and brought out every possible voter who could get to the polls. Both the candidates are Protestants.

* *

Single Six-Year Term for President Proposed

The senate voted on Saturday, 47 to 23, in favor of the resolution introduced by Senator Works of California for a constitutional amendment making the Presidential term six years, with ineligibility to reelection. It is expected that it will be adopted by the house, and to become effective must be ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states. Whether that result will be accomplished within the near future is doubtful, but in any event the action of Congress, even if approved by only a few states, will serve as an expression of public opinion against the "third term" idea which was so frequently discussed during last year's Presidential campaign The resolution, it is generally understood, was primarily aimed at Colonel Roosevelt and the possibility of his candidacy in 1916. All the Democratic senators except one voted for the resolution, the Republicans were equally divided, and the three Progressive senators voted in the negative. Just one vote over the necessary two-thirds majority was secured.

If the resolution as it is now worded should obtain the necessary ratifications before March 4, 1917, lawyers say President Wilson might, if he wished, claim a six year tenure of office, even though someone else were elected in 1916, which suggests speculative difficulties. Regardless of the Presidential timber lately available, it is conceivable that the people of the United States might find themselves in a situation where they would not want to be forbidden to reelect a President—they might not care to be compelled to "swap horses in midstream," as Abraham Lincoln once picturesquely phrased it.

* *

A National Organization of Business Men

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, "an organization of organizations," held its first annual meeting—a gathering of representative business men—in Washington last month and considered numerous matters of importance to the nation and to commercial interests. Recommendations were adopted for a permanent tariff commission, for civil service examinations for the consular and diplomatic services, for the early recognition of the permanent Chinese government, for banking and currency reform, and for the establishment of vocational schools of manufacture, commerce, agriculture and home economics. A reception was tendered the delegates by President Taft, who also addressed the organization at length. H. A. Wheeler, formerly president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, is the head of this new and ambitious organization.

An interesting suggestion as to the need of another profession was made by President Taft in his address. He said that just as the formation of Young Men's Christian Associations had created a demand for trained secretaries, so the multiplication of boards of trade and chambers of commerce requires schools for the education and development of secretaries and managers for these organizations, which are now centralized in the national body.

* *

Great National Memorial to Lincoln Planned

A national memorial to Abraham Lincoln was authorized by action of Congress last week in accordance with the joint resolution fathered by Senator Cullom of Illinois. It will take the form of a majestic Greek temple to be built beside the Potomac at a cost of $2,000,000. The veteran Illinois senator, who was one of Lincoln's friends and cotemporaries, regards the action of Congress as the triumph of his career. The passage of the resolution in the house called forth a series of patriotic tributes to Lincoln from both northern and southern representatives, indicating the disappearance of sectional feeling. A slight difference of opinion developed from the suggestion that a national highway between the city of Washington and Gettysburg or a memorial arch or sundry other projects would be more appropriate to commemorate the life and character of a man like Lincoln than would the Greek temple. The Illinois chapter of the American Institute of Architects lately pointed out that there is something incongruous between the Greek temple, emblematic of ancient art and paganism, and the rugged figure of the President of half a century ago.

At Urbana, the home of the University of Illinois, a Lincoln memorial hall, just completed at a cost of a quarter of a million of dollars, will be dedicated on Lincoln's birthday, February 12. The building is to be devoted to economics, politics and "the study of humanities." President Edmund J. James of the university regards Lincoln as in a sense one of the founders of the university, because Lincoln advocated and signed the bill devoting portions of the public lands to the establishment of state universities.

* * *

A New Attack on an Ancient Evil

The bureau of social hygiene is the unpretentious name of what may prove to be a work of far-reaching importance—a systematic effort to deal with the so-called white slave traffic and its associated evils. A careful and comprehensive study of the causes and remedies for vice is being made by the bureau in a quiet, unsensational way, which gives assurance of lasting results. Provision has been made to have the organization permanent and thus avoid the merely temporary activity which is one of the commonest weaknesses of reform work.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is the founder of the bureau. He is associated with Miss Katherine B. Davis, superintendent of the New York State Reformatory for Women; Paul M. Warburg, a private banker, and Starr J. Murphy, a lawyer. George J. Kneeland, who made investigations for the Chicago vice commission, and Dr. Abraham Flexner have gathered data for the bureau in New York and in Europe. About two years ago Mr. Rockefeller was, against his wish, made foreman of a special grand jury which investigated the social evil, and he thereby learned of the great need for intelligent and fearless efforts to cope with this ulcer which nowadays is neither concealed nor ignored. He believes it constitutes the greatest single menace to the perpetuation of the human race—a view which has been expressed by medical and scientific men. The bureau is not intended to conflict with existing legal agencies.

* * *

To Commemorate Gettysburg Semicentennial

Congress has appropriated $150,000, Pennsylvania will give $250,000 and other states smaller sums to help commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg next July. The war department has approved plans for providing tents and accommodations for 60,000 or more veterans on the battlefield. Soldiers from the North and South alike will be there, and blue and gray uniforms will be worn. The civil war period will be revived, minus its terrible animosities, by this great historic occasion, of which the second and third generations will be interested spectators.

* * *

—Stefansson, the explorer who discovered the "blond Eskimos" of Alaska, has received a promise of financial aid from the National Geographical Society and the American Museum of Natural History and from friends, which will enable him to make a trip this spring to locate an undiscovered continent in the North. This announcement was made recently by Stefansson at the University of North Dakota—from which institution, by the way, he was expelled eleven years ago.

—One of the leading newspapers of Kentucky and the South, The Louisville Courier-Journal, quotes approvingly recent statements of horticultural and agricultural experts that Kentucky is cursed with too much tobacco growing and that the farmer's salvation lies in the raising of fruit and the discontinuance of the growing of tobacco. Coming from one of the strongholds of a useless industry, this is regarded as an encouraging sign of a better day.

—As has already been somewhat widely published, the Kenyon-Sheppard bill to prohibit the shipment of liquor into states which have forbidden its sale is set down for a vote in the senate on February 10. The crisis will come then unless Senator Smoot or some other member devises a new scheme for parliamentary dodging and delay.

The Imperiled Christians of Turkey

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS, Editor Afield of The Continent

THE "BIG NEWS" of diplomatic negotiations concerning the Turkish war has so occupied the cables of late that there has not been room for the stories of the murder of Armenians in the villages of Asia Minor. It is known to many persons who keep in touch with conditions in the near East that these crimes, which have been common for centuries, have greatly increased during the war. The primitive Moslem expresses his mind upon the Balkan situation by killing the nearest Christian, who is usually an Armenian.

These murders are but the mutterings before the massacres. While, on the whole, the Moslem population of Turkey has displayed unexpected self-restraint thus far, it is to be feared that the general dissemination of the news of the humiliation of the caliph by the Christians will provoke an outburst of fanaticism that will eclipse any of the wholesale slaughters of unoffending Christians which are red pages in Turkey's calendar. Most of the Christian population are far from consuls and warships. They are at the mercy of their Moslem neighbors. Even after a massacre has taken place, it may take days for the news to reach the outside world; and even then the truth may not be known, for the telegraph is in the control of the Turks. The stories of the slaying of Albanians by Servians, circulated from Turkish sources, and at this writing wholly unsupported, have a sinister significance as possible attempts to nullify in advance news of Asia Minor massacres.

Clearly, in these conditions, a duty confronts the Christian leadership of our day. The consciousness of Christendom should become vocal in demanding the safeguarding of the people of the cross in the remoter parts of Turkey. It is not enough to exact punishment after the deed is done—that will not restore any lives or homes. There is yet time for the common mind of civilization, speaking through the Christian governments, to warn Turkish officials that swift and heavy retribution will follow harm to the Christians.

The presumption that these people are in danger is fair. Turkish history soundly supports it. Action of the powers has heretofore been necessary after massacres; why is it not equally proper in order to prevent massacres? Let the word run to every governor and local magistrate that if there is killing to be done, he surely must die for the slain, and there will be no massacres to report. Every man with a practical knowledge of Turkey will agree that this is the one and only quick, sure way to prevent massacres. It has been effectively used before. At the time of the Adana massacre a similar outburst was planned for Damascus; it was prevented by a courageous and enlightened commander in the army who definitely told the vali that "if there is to be any killing here, you will be one of the first to die." The vali chose to live and the Christians were spared. The autocratic power of the Turkish officials is what makes this course of prevention possible.

An appeal was made to the recent meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America to express itself in behalf of the imperiled Christians of Turkey. According to the report—I write of this from second-hand information—one argument urged against any such action was that the Christians of Turkey are not Protestants, and we cannot stand sponsor for their type of Christianity! It is to weep. When the curved dagger of the Kurd or Turk is raised against all wearers of the cross emblem, it is no time to talk of differences between the Greek Church, the Armenian Church, the Chaldean Church, the Roman Church, the Jacobite Church, the Maronite Church or the Protestant churches. The one clear, elemental, outstanding obligation is for all who profess the name of Christ to rally to the succor of the men, women and little children who are threatened with death because they will not repudiate the cross. The simplest claims of a common faith and of a common humanity demand this.

Whatever other Christian nations may do, it should be clearly within the province of the United States to make representations to the Turkish government on this subject. All the imperiled peoples have ties of blood, and even stronger ties of sentiment, with this country. Our stake in Turkey is wholly altruistic and philanthropic. This government is in a unique position of advantage for expressing to the Ottoman government an admonition to safeguard the Christians under its flag from any possible outbreak of violence. The subject is one which may with propriety come up in Congress. The highest possible function of any government is to be the friend and savior of the persecuted and oppressed anywhere on earth. While red blood is flowing is no time for red tape.

Religious World

Church Gains Fell Off Last Year

The Christian Advocate of New York, as customary at this season of the year, presents the annual statistical estimates of Dr. H. K. Carroll on the number of members of churches and religious societies within the United States. Dr. Carroll finds the total of such membership to amount now to 36,675,437. These are not all Christians, since ethical culturists, spiritualists, theosophists and Buddhists are included, but the number to be deducted on that score does not much exceed 200,000, of whom the spiritualists form the overwhelming majority.

The church membership gains of the past year were not as large as for 1911, rating only 580,000 for 1912 against 860,000 for the year previous. The Roman Catholics are credited with 125,000 of this increase, and their total is now set down at 12,888,000. All bodies of Methodists taken together aggregate 6,900,000; and all Baptists 5,900,000; all Lutherans 2,350,000, and all Presbyterians 1,980,000. But if the Reformed churches were added to the Presbyterian family, as they should be by right, the Presbyterian total would run to 2,440,000, exceeding the Lutherans. Dr. Carroll continues to insist that the Christian Scientists are decreasing.

✣ ✣

Two Pending Christian Association Questions

Preliminary announcements are out for the thirty-eighth international convention (now a triennial gathering) of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and Canada. This meeting was originally fixed for Los Angeles, but conditions have arisen which make it inadvisable to go there and a cordial invitation from Cincinnati has been accepted by the international committee. The meetings are to take place in May, running from Thursday, the 15th, through Sunday, the 18th. This triennial is of peculiar importance on account of the crucial questions of legislation which are to be dealt with on that occasion. Two of these stand out particularly prominent as affecting the religious status and spirit of the association movement.

First of all there will be a report from a commission of fifteen, appointed six years ago at Washington, to consider whether there should be any change in the basis of active membership in the association, which now depends upon individual membership in some evangelical church. If the commission sustains the wisdom of holding on to this evangelical test, as is generally expected, it will be its duty to report further on whether the word "evangelical" requires, in the present day, new definition less rigid than that adopted by the Portland convention of 1869.

There will, furthermore, be another report from a commission of five, appointed by the last convention at Toronto, to consider whether the association would institute any theological test of orthodoxy for the professors who teach in the schools where secretaries and other employed association officers are trained. This committee was appointed because there was complaint that some of the teachers in the Christian association training school at Springfield, Massachusetts, are not orthodox on the matter of biblical inspiration. The chairman of the commission of five is Judge Selden P. Spencer of St. Louis, and the chairman of the commission of fifteen is President W. Douglas Mackenzie of Hartford.

✣ ✣

Moving for Uniform Marriage and Divorce Laws

Rev. Francis M. Moody, a Methodist minister of California, has in the last few weeks been visiting New York and Chicago as representative of the California state commission on marriage and divorce. His mission is to secure in Illinois and New York, and later, if possible, in other states, the formation of similar committees to promote the work that the California commission has undertaken—a serious inquiry into the evils of divorce and a militant crusade to improve the marriage laws. It is hoped thus to link up a strong body of citizenship in all the states bent on rescuing American domestic life from the perils consequent upon the rapidly increasing divorce ratios. Mr. Moody has found great encouragement so far, and strong local committees are already in process of organization in both New York and Chicago.

The California commission is largely the outgrowth of Mr. Moody's sense of outrage at seeing Christian ministers recklessly remarry divorcees without regard to their innocence or guilt in the proceedings liberating them from former marriage ties. It so chances that California has a law requiring marriage licenses to state plainly on their face whether either or both of the parties have a previous husband or wife living. It is therefore impossible for a California minister to be deceived on this point. Mr. Moody, by an astonishingly exhaustive investigation of county marriage records for six and one half years, discovered that 22,540 divorced persons were joined in matrimony in that state within this period. More than half (12,120) of these weddings were blessed by ministers of the gospel, and Mr. Moody relentlessly classified the list among the different churches. He found 4,065 wedding ceremonies in such cases pronounced by Methodist ministers and 1,800 by Presbyterian ministers.

This condition, fearlessly exposed, prompted the forming of the California commission two years ago. Members of it have been designated officially by the authorities of each denomination in the state, including even the Roman Catholics. As a direct influence of this movement, the California legislature has instructed the state's representatives in Washington to work for an amendment to the federal constitution which would make marriage and divorce a subject for federal legislation. This would end, if adopted, the present almost inconceivable mixture and contradiction of the laws of various states on this subject.

Until now the best defined effort for amending the constitution in this line has sought merely to make polygamy an offense against the federal government, but the logic of the situation undoubtedly calls for the broader action which these California crusaders propose. Only the fear of attempting too much and arousing too many antagonistic interests stands against the broader undertaking. But a policy which would make the statute against polygamy only an incident to a great new federal code for all marital relations would be a bolder and far more adequate method.

✣ ✣

Apostle of Systematic Christian Giving

A tragic disappointment to the whole church was the death of Dr. William H. Hubbard last Friday night in New York City, where he was a guest at the time at the home of a kinsman. Dr. Hubbard had been seriously ailing for several months at his own home in Auburn, New York, but coming to the city to consult a metropolitan specialist, he received the encouraging assurance that his illness did not promise a fatal issue. But the prophecy was disappointed by his sudden death within ten days.

Dr. Hubbard had made the whole Presbyterian Church debtor to his prolonged and persistent lifework in behalf of systematic benevolence. When the comfortable and leisurely method of collections once a year for each benevolent board was the universal practice of the church, he revolted against it completely, and started a campaign in behalf of gifts larger, more regular and more intelligent. The General Assembly soon recognized his zeal by making him chairman of a committee on systematic beneficence, and to promote the work of that committee he established The Assembly Herald, which was later consolidated with The Church at Home and Abroad to become the official organ of the boards. When the executive commission of the Assembly was appointed, Dr. Hubbard was elected one of its first members, and shaped the commission's activities very largely in direction of the specialty to which he was devoted. After his term as a member expired, he volunteered his service as secretary of the commission, and continued his zealous labor unabated.

At length Dr. Hubbard gave up his pastorate at Auburn and devoted his time entirely to this one purpose until his last illness overtook him. Himself the possessor of private wealth, Dr. Hubbard fully exemplified the doctrines of Christian stewardship which he continually impressed upon others. He especially poured money into his long campaign in sums which no one else knew. His death leaves to the denomination a complete printing plant in operation at Auburn, which he purchased and financed wholly out of his own pocket in order that it might freely distribute benevolence literature. As secretary of the executive commission, he not only served without salary but paid all the commission's office expenses. The church will no doubt wait long to see again his like for generous devotion, but the imprint of his intense crusade will always be found upon Presbyterianism. The vast multiplication of the church's benevolences in recent years can in no small part be traced to his agency.

Dr. Hubbard was born in the blue grass region of Kentucky in 1851. His education, classical and theological, was received at Amherst, Andover and Princeton. He occupied several important pastorates in both the Presbyterian and Congregational fellowship, up to 1886, when he went to be pastor of First church at Auburn and continued there twenty-five years in one of the most notable pastoral successes that Presbyterianism has seen in this country. He is survived by his wife and three sons.

Editorial

The Difficulty of the Grind

IN THE LIFE of General William Booth recently published there is a story to which many church leaders will make instant response. It tells of his inaugurating what he called the Darkest England scheme. He asked for £100,000 to start it, and £30,000 a year to run it. The first sum came very easily. Indeed, it was more than subscribed. Many people were ready to help start the scheme and to furnish the initial sum. But he never did receive the £30,000 a year for maintenance, nor any very large part of it. He remarks with some sadness that many people are ready to help start a plan, but very few seem to be ready to stay by it and see it carried out.

Every benevolent agency knows that difficulty. A new plant or a new building, hard as it may be to secure, is easy compared with the running expenses. Plenty of people are ready to help with an emergency, or with a new enterprise, but it is always hard to find people who can be enthusiastic about the commonplace business of paying daily bills for the same enterprise. College presidents have sometimes found themselves saddled with an immense load when a building is given with no provision for its care. While such gifts are certainly helpful, they often complicate the situation of a college. That applies to virtually all benevolent institutions. The initial thing or the emergency thing can be cared for. The grind is always difficult.

The Continent is impressed with the present China campaign because of its blending of provision for the initial step and for the years that follow. Mission boards are often criticised because they do not seem enthusiastic over an offer for a new mission hospital, or a new school, for whose running no provision is made. A board is forced at once to inquire whether it can readjust its present outlay so as to take this new work in, or whether it can secure added gifts for the purpose. Here is this great new force and equipment to be sent out to China. The plan calls for at least 160 new missionaries to be added to the present force, together with hospitals and schools in similar proportion. Provision is to be made in the fund raised for the support of the missionaries for a short term of years.

Let the church frankly recognize, however, that this is a long advance step, which is to be followed by increased responsibility. When we have passed out of the stage of enthusiasm in getting a big new thing started, let us remember that there will come the time of the grind when all this work will have to be supported. Provision must be made in an increased interest in the church for a large increase in the regular budget of Chinese missions. Every school means added expense for someone, and until the Chinese are ready to carry the load, American believers must carry it. That is true of hospitals and all other equipment. The salaries of the missionaries must, of course, be paid. We speak of it here to call attention to the larger significance of the movement. A church which is able to do an emergency work and to initiate an enterprise is abundantly able also to broaden its plan enough to take care of that enterprise and to support it when the initial period is over.

There is here also an expression of a common mistaken thought about the work of Christ. So many people think of it in terms of events, of crises, of things to accomplish and finish, whereas it is a long process always going on, a steady pull which needs few jerks. The striking events, the attractive episodes, in good works are related to the whole movement as punctuation points are related to a sentence. The sentence could get along without the punctuation points, if necessary, but the points would look very foolish without the sentence.

Pastors know very well what it means to have people who can be counted on only for special things, whose interest soon lags, and who must always be kept going by a new enterprise devised today because they are tired of the one that was on yesterday. Pastors also know how much more joy there is in the man who can be enthusiastic about the new enterprise without losing his sense of the value of the ordinary, unexplosive, unattractive methods which are necessary to keep the real work going. Churches cannot be run at their best on emergency methods, at white heat, or with a campaign of some kind going on all the while. These all have their place and strengthen a church within limits. But the real power of the church lies in unemotional, unsensational, steady work, which gathers up the exceptional episodes into it and uses them simply to strengthen its orderly progress.

Our Error in Detail; His in Principle

One charge of error which Dr. Joseph L. Weaver brings against The Continent in his letter printed on another page of this issue must be candidly acknowledged. The Continent did say that Dr. Weaver in calculating the administrative expenses of the New York Board of Home Missions included the whole cost of the immigration department, and that was a stupidly careless blunder now humbly apologized for.

Yet The Continent must still maintain its objection to Dr. Weaver's argument. In his summary of the Home Board's administrative cost he does put down the whole expense of two departments—social service and country life—and we are bound yet to contend that this is unfair by any fair definition of what "administration" means in benevolent work. Administrative expense is the expense of bringing to bear the money of givers on the work for which they give money. And the salaries of Mr. Stelzle and Dr. Wilson do not justly come under such a head. These men are not paid for arranging that work shall be done but for doing the work. They are not running organizations but dealing hand to hand with people. Mr. Stelzle is busy at essentially the same sort of thing which he did when a home mission pastor—attracting workingmen to Jesus Christ—something that Presbyterians want done and are willing to pay for on a small scale or on a large scale, according to the capacity of the worker.

So, too, with the pastor-evangelists. Unless it is administrative expense to pay a man to promote the kingdom in one community, it is not administrative expense to pay him to promote the kingdom in a whole presbytery. The inherent character of pastoral oversight is not changed when the faithful servant who has done well in one parish is set over ten parishes, more or less. Dr. Weaver, we are glad to note, admits that the outlay for pastor-evangelists is legitimate and wise, which credits his good sense. But it ruins his argument, for one-third of his accusation of extravagance thus crumbles at a breath. And when he learns what the item of "specials" really signifies, Dr. Weaver will take that also out of the count. "Specials" are donations which come to the board designated for particular institutions or fields. The board simply passes them on as instructed. No extravagance surely in that, nor any cost of administration.

But, after all, it is beside the mark to argue bookkeeping classifications with Dr. Weaver and those who support his views. The trouble with them is not dissatisfaction about administrative expense but a complete dissent from any spending of money for solution of the problems on which the board's modern departments are at work. They would like to confine home mission outlay still to the original idea of supplementing salaries of pastors over churches unable for self-support—mainly in western frontier towns. They do not seem to see as yet what has become perfectly visible to a clearer-sighted majority—that the opportunities for such work are passing away. Frontier towns are growing up into settled communities able to pay pastors without external aid. Western synods are becoming strong enough to care for their own weak churches. Christian sentiment has developed which forbids subsidizing congregations whose puny life results only in keeping neighboring congregations puny. So the old task of home missions is disappearing. Home missions must find a new task or there will soon be no home missions.

Happily Presbyterian home missions have found new tasks—big national tasks. The day of local and sectional labor is passing into a day of nationwide inspiration. The Home Board at New York is today leading not a fraction of the church but all the church. It is swinging Presbyterians into line to meet today's duties, not yesterday's. And all Presbyterians but a very few see how much better it is to have it so.

Worth of a Church College—Paying for It

It is a very significant effort which is just being set afoot by a committee of Pennsylvania Synod to get an additional half million or more of new endowment for Lafayette College at Easton. The outcome of the undertaking, one way or the other, success or failure, will mean important things to Presbyterians. In either direction it will measure even more accurately than most college endowment campaigns how much Presbyterians really value Christian education.

Lafayette has a great history behind it. There is no doubt of what it can do for the church—what it will do if the church still keeps its veins full of Christian blood. In eighty years Lafayette has furnished to Presbyterian forces 627 ministers of the gospel. Forty-four of the sons of the college have gone into foreign mission service—four of them to win there the knightly decoration of martyrdom. When it comes to computing the strong lay leaders which it has given to Presbyterian and other congregations, there seems to be no way of figuring the total sum; they are found scattered thick through eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey particularly. The question of the hour is therefore on whether Presbyterianism wants or doesn't want more of the same kind of thing. And after the manner that Pennsylvania and its adjacent states answer this concrete test, the world will be entitled to judge the actual store which Presbyterians at large set by the Christian college. Lafayette and its neighboring constituency furnish a typical cross-section of the whole problem.

The crisis of the issue is told in the many tempting voices which Lafayette, like other church colleges, is hearing today. These voices tell the old college at Easton that if it will only renounce its Presbyterian connections it can get plenty of money for development from sources outside the church. The synod's committee therefore goes into this effort realizing that if the church should now prove to the college an indifferent and penurious mother, it would likely be impossible to hold Lafayette in the family. The lure of brighter possibilities as a nonchurch institution would doubtless be more than ancient sentiment could resist, when that sentiment had been found void of palpable values. And there would be a certain measure of justice unmistakable in the college's casting off ties which the church no longer responded to.

If, however, only formal ecclesiastical relations were thus to fall, it would be little to worry about. The thing that earnest men look for in a Christian college is not a church name but a Christian life. And The Continent by no means intends to suggest that Christian life can prevail only in institutions tied fast to a denomination. But in the case of Lafayette the stamp of Presbyterianism has been the historic sign of its Christian purpose. Its church connection has pledged it before the world to stand true to Christian education. Dropping that pledge would be a break with all its great past, wherein the pride of producing Christian men has ranked above the pride of producing men of professional or business success. The rebounds and revulsions of such a change would swing the school out of the old orbit. Resentment against a church which failed in time of need would make the reaction all the more violent. The risk of changing good to worse and worse to bad would be too serious to venture.

There is in fact only one right thing to do in the premises. Presbyterians should give Lafayette what it needs. The school deserves it for what it has been and ought to have it also for what it will be if held to its history.

A Leader of Safe Progress

A shrine of very reverent memory should be preserved in the Presbyterian Church for the name of Dr. Daniel W. Fisher, who died last week in the city of Washington. In a simplicity as free from pride as his heart was free from selfishness, he had lived a great life. He would have been a notable pastor, as his early ministry in New Orleans and Wheeling showed, but he was destined to a more specialized and yet a larger service in the place where he did his chief life work—the presidency of Hanover College, set high on the hills overlooking the Ohio river in southern Indiana. There he labored from 1879 to 1907 and trained a whole generation of men who have carried the gospel as preachers or lived it as laymen literally to the ends of the earth. Hanover alumni are a large and disciplined host in both religious and civic life, and with very few exceptions, they stand for idealism wed to everyday duty. And that was the hallmark of their president; that was what his influence peculiarly counted for.

Moreover, as the years went by, Dr. Fisher was making a useful impress on the church at large. No man more wisely than he has helped to guide the church safely in that liberalization of thought which is inevitable in these times. Dr. Fisher knew singularly well how to miss the bypaths and keep to the main road. He showed that in his discreet counsel on the committee that revised the Confession of Faith, and also in his long service as director in McCormick Seminary, where for years he held an honored seat as vice-chairman of the board. After his retirement from Hanover Dr. Fisher and his wife enjoyed a leisurely journey around the world, and since their return, a year ago last summer, they have been living at the national capital with their son, the distinguished secretary of the interior in President Taft's cabinet.

—Baltimore is one of the cities where the churches are getting together to advertise their services in common, and to spread before readers of the daily newspapers arguments for churchgoing. Somebody has been writing these "ads" who knows how to make English hit hard blows. One of the big-type sentences, reproduced elsewhere in this issue of The Continent, is: "If no one went to church, there would be no church, and then—— Do you care to think what Baltimore would be like?"

—Pastor Russell fell down completely on his libel suit against The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. The Eagle "exposed" the pastor in all sorts of particulars, including his far-from-creditable domestic relations But he ventured to try retaliation on one point only. Passing by other matters of more moment, he brought suit alleging that he had been injured by The Eagle's representations that he was responsible for "miracle wheat" being sold on his church property for a dollar a pound. This is a new variety of grain whose yield is claimed to be about three times that of ordinary varieties. As seed it was presumably worth a fancy price, but The Eagle was able to show that it was being sold elsewhere at the same time for $5 a bushel. After The Eagle printed this, the sale at Russell's headquarters seems to have fallen off very promptly, but the jury, hearing the whole story, did not think that the pastor was injured any more than he deserved, and after fifteen minutes of consultation returned a verdict acquitting The Eagle.

—The Congregationalist states that confusion over differing dates for the annual day of prayer for colleges has been eliminated through all hands agreeing to observe February 23. But at the moment this comforting announcement appears the Presbyterian Board of Education from Philadelphia is sending out notices that colleges and churches should choose between February 6 and February 9 for a prayer day in behalf of students. So it appears that the elimination of the confusion is not quite as perfect yet as The Congregationalist thinks. Happily, prayer is one thing that can't be overdone, and so there is no harm to come if three or four or a dozen days of prayer are offered for colleges this year. But since the original idea was an idea of "concert" in praying, we may hope that the attempt to concert the different churches and the Young Men's Christian Association in this matter will not be allowed to drop because of the failure in 1913.

—Arthur Giovannitti, who has come into great prominence of late as a radical leader of labor strikes under the Industrial Workers of the World, formerly preached in Presbyterian missions for Italians in Montreal, Brooklyn and Pittsburg. He attended theological school both in Montreal and New York City. He was, however, never ordained, and when he became interested in socialism in Pittsburg he began to drift away from religious faith, arriving finally at a position where he seems fully to sympathize with the "No God, No Master" banners carried in the Industrial Workers of the World parade at Lawrence. His declension from a gospel preacher into such atheism is a tragedy whose causes the church should trace with especial care to know whether blame for it lies anywhere in current-day religion.

—According to common repute, the churches of Pittsburg are about the most conservative in the country, but that doesn't mean by a very great deal that they are incapable of progress. Dr. Maitland Alexander, who is certainly no wild radical, is yet daring enough to go out of his stately church and preach evangelistic sermons Sunday afternoons in a near-by theater. This puts him in the three-sermons-a-day class, for he is meanwhile not shutting the doors of his church. Moreover, as another sign that Pittsburg conservatism is not invincible, we note that Billy Sunday has been invited to hold meetings in Pittsburg next year. When Sunday first visited Pittsburg his slang caused an epidemic of ministerial fits in the town. But now he is wanted there to give the sinners fits.

—President Shanklin of Wesleyan University in Connecticut was prompt in demanding the resignation of his professor who said in the state legislature that he thought the churches ought to be closed on Sunday and the day given up for everybody to "have an uproariously good time." It is to the credit of the professor that he recognized he did not belong in a Christian school and retired without protest. The church certainly does not object to people "having a good time" on Sunday, but a man who defines "good time" with the adverb "uproariously" before it is a man far too shallow to be a teacher of the young or an adviser of the people.

—The Chicago American announces that it will never publish another whisky advertisement, which is certainly a mighty good resolution for it to make. But if it "would be perfect," The American will certainly have to undertake at least one more good resolution, which is the not unimportant pledge to tell the truth.

Jots and Tittles

—Satan gives long credit, but no discount. There are no bargain counters in the markets of sin.

—The less one knows the more positive he is about knowing it.

—Bigotry is a cross stripped of everything but the nails.

—An oath is a prayer offered to Satan.

DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE

A New Sense of Values

IT IS A VERY significant and vital moment in a man's life when he begins to revise his values. A new epoch is born when life's price list is altered throughout its entire range, and things that were marked high begin to be marked low, and things that were marked low begin to be marked high. For a man's price list is always a final statement of his moral and spiritual condition. If we could only read one another's private lists of values we should know one another perfectly. And therefore do I say that the revision of a price list marks the transformation of a life. "What things were gain to me these have I counted loss for Christ." To revise life's values is to refashion life just as surely as we should alter the face of a country if we were to transpose its mountains into plains, its plains into mountains, its mole hills into hills, and its hills into mole hills. Change the emphases in a landscape and we have a new world. Alter the values in a man's life and we have a new creature.

Revised Estimate of Vital Worths

The apostle Paul revised his price list. Things that he had counted valuable were transferred to the bottom of the list, or banished altogether from the inventory of his treasures, and things that had scarcely found a place upon the page were now among the first entries of his supreme possessions. What has made all the differences and turned the price list topsy-turvy? He has met the Lord Jesus; he has been taken into his holy fellowship; he sits with him at his table; he shares the provisions of his grace; he dwells in his peace; he tastes of his joy; he looks through the windows of the Saviour's life and purpose, and he beholds a new world.

When a man has drunk the blood of the Lord Jesus, what cares he for the blood of caste? When he has become akin to "the lion of the tribe of Judah," what cares he for "the tribe of Benjamin"? When he has "received access into grace," and "sits in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," what cares he for the status of lofty social class and distinction? When he is endowed with "the unsearchable riches of Christ," what cares he for the station granted to wealth? What cares he for coveted places and powers when he has received "the power of the Holy Ghost"? "What things were gain to me these have I counted loss for Christ."

Now when a man has made the great find, "the pearl of great price," all his old price lists will be torn into shreds. He accepts the Master's valuation of things, and he will put the price upon them as appointed by the Lord. And we may be perfectly sure that mighty changes will take place in the contour of his life. "Every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be made low."

Life Valued Above Its Clothing

The world emphasizes clothes; the Lord Jesus emphasizes life. Now, everything has clothes—everything wraps itself up in some external habit and manifests itself in some outer mode of expression. Adoration has its raiment and its fashions; it clothes itself in certain postures and expressions. Prayer has its clothes, its external modes and habits. Mirth has its raiment of speech and light and laughter. Courtesy has its outer expressions in bow and handshake, in gentle reticence and reserve.

Now, the world values these clothes, and values the clothes supremely. The world loves the "shows" of things, the flashy appearance, the stage effect, the glaring spectacle. The world is intent upon the clothes, and so are worldly people, whether in the church or out of it. "They love to pray standing at the corners of the streets." They were parading their religious clothes. "They fast to be seen of men." They were showing off their clothes. "When they do alms, they sound a trumpet before them to be seen of men." It is a stage effect in clothes. And you may go through the length and breadth of life and everywhere you will find this weighty value put upon the clothes of things, upon the outer expression and appearance. It is "how things look," their mere shows and trappings, that are so vastly valued by the world and placed high upon the price list of its gains.

But the Lord emphasized life, and was always looking beneath the skins of things. He gazed upon people who were conventionally pure, wearing the recognized garments of conventionality, and described them as "whited sepulchers." A poor widow came up to the treasury and meekly dropped her mite. There was nothing to show, the outer clothing of the act was scarcely worth a farthing. "This poor widow hath cast in more than all!" What a revolutionary revision of values, upsetting all the familiar standards of the treasurer of the temple! The Lord looked away from the clothes to the life, from the appearance to the heart, and he has given the widow's offering immortal fame.

Fidelity Greater Wealth than Success

The world emphasizes success; the Lord Jesus emphasizes faithfulness. If there is one idol in our time that rears itself higher and prouder than others, I think it is the idol of success. In one way or another we all bow down to it. "There is nothing succeeds like success." The world has no use for the unsuccessful, and they just lie bruised and broken by the way. But blessed be his grace, that is not the way of our Lord. "It is required in a steward that he be found faithful." I am glad and grateful that the word does not say "successful."

In the holy scales of the Lord Jesus, the only success is fidelity So James Gilmour was successful in Mongolia, even though after many years of faithful labor he did not introduce a single convert into the home of his Lord. And there are multitudes of men and women who, because of their unfaltering rectitude, are reckoned by their Master to have been gloriously successful, even although at the end of the days their purse is almost empty. When we become the friends of the Lord Jesus his scale of values becomes ours, and the noble failures are reckoned among the aristocratic sons and daughters of glory.

There is great need in our time of "a new applause for the noble failures." And we shall find both the spirit and the eulogy in the companionship of our Lord. In the revised price list of the Christian life the supreme value is not given to worldly success, but to the grand faithfulness that remains constant through the drear and wintry day. "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience I also will keep thee. . . . Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God." J. H. JOWETT.

Awaiting the Transforming Touch

BY MABEL DODGE HOLMES

A CERTAIN STUDENT of human nature, visiting a prison one day, found his greatest interest in trying to read the faces of the men behind the bars. One of these faces, the story runs, affected him strangely, so gentle was it, so sensitive, so delicate.

"Friend," he said, "you have no look of a criminal. Why, may I ask, are you here?"

"I am here awaiting trial," was the answer. "I am unjustly accused."

"You have the appearance of an artist," said the visitor. This was quite true, for the man's coat was of velvet, his hair was long and his fingers were bedaubed with paint.

"I am an artist," he replied. "I was taken from my studio while at work. Do you not see my palette and brushes?" He pointed to where they lay in a corner.

"Is there no small service I could do for you?" asked the stranger.

The artist's eyes filled with tears. "I would to God," he said, "that I had but a piece of canvas."

The visitor knew it would be impossible to bring anything from outside for a prisoner, but as he looked about him he saw on the floor of the hall a soiled and wrinkled napkin, dropped from a tray. "Take this," he said, smoothing it out and pushing it through the bars. "Paint me a picture upon it."

Every day while the artist awaited his trial the stranger came to see how his picture grew. The napkin was nailed upon the wall, and every day the artist prayed, as he painted, "Lord God, help me to paint a picture of thee that shall win men to thee." And every day the touch of the brush brought out more clearly against the dull wall of that cell the radiant face of Christ in a picture so beautiful that afterwards it was hung high in a cathedral, to draw the reverent gaze of thousands. Yet before it was touched by the transforming genius of the artist it was only a soiled and wrinkled napkin, tossed aside into a dusty corner.

The story is a prison parable. There are lives, soiled and wrinkled and dusty, tossed aside, outcasts from the world, waiting only to be lifted by some friendly hand into the presence of the master Artist to be transformed by him into his own transfiguring and glorified likeness.

Where the Sea Calls to the Mountain

BY HARMON H. McQUILKIN

GET ABOARD the Del Monte express any afternoon as it pulls out of San Francisco and you are soon whirling through one beautiful little suburban town after another, such as Burlingame, San Mateo and Menlo Park, the latter once the home of the late Leland Stanford, until your train slows down for a brief stop at Palo Alto and you can catch a stray glimpse of the Stanford University through the great spreading live oaks; but it is only for a minute and then you are rushing on down through the world-renowned Santa Clara valley, fairly bewildered with the endless succession of prune and apricot orchards and vast fields of vegetables and sweet peas in the seed farms that fly by the window, flinging their many-scented perfumes to you on the wings of the soft California breezes

Old Custom House in Monterey Where First American Flag Was Raised in California

Twenty miles of this run and then the train slackens its speed and creeps into the depot at San Jose, the garden city of California, situated in the center of the valley, embowered in roses and geraniums, the latter blooming all the year, and with the perpetual green of the lawns giving the place the appearance of endless summer. The temperature seldom climbs above 80 degrees in the summer or drops below 40 degrees in the winter. Here palms of every variety and size spread their graceful leaves, and the great eucalyptus trees rise in solitary grandeur, attaining a height often of from 250 to 300 feet, shedding their bark, but never their rubberlike leaves of dark rich green, and furnishing lumber that excels walnut or mahogany for hardness and for the beauty of finish. San Jose is the metropolis of an exceedingly rich district.

After a ten minute stop your train is again in motion, carrying you on through a thirty-mile stretch of nearly the same fertility and fragrance, for you are still in the Santa Clara valley. On your right and to the west the Santa Cruz mountains wall you in, while to your left Mount Hamilton rises still higher, carrying on its summit the famous Lick observatory. Your train keeps flying on its way, carrying you on through the Pajaro valley, with its immense areas of rich apple orchards, and through the Salinas valley, with its vast acreage of agricultural land, until as the sun is sinking in thousand-tinted splendor into the great Pacific the moist salt air tells you that you are coming close to where the waters of the great deep call to the mountains.

Amid the graceful pine trees and with the gentle music of the waves of Monterey bay in your ears, the train pauses for a minute at Del Monte, where the great hotel is located with its 500 rooms, its art gallery and conservatory standing in the heart of a park containing 139 acres, in which are found all the beauties of tree and flower and fountain and landscape that the world can contribute—a perfect maze of beauty. This hostelry is the mecca of central California for tourists and is familiar to every accomplished globe trotter.

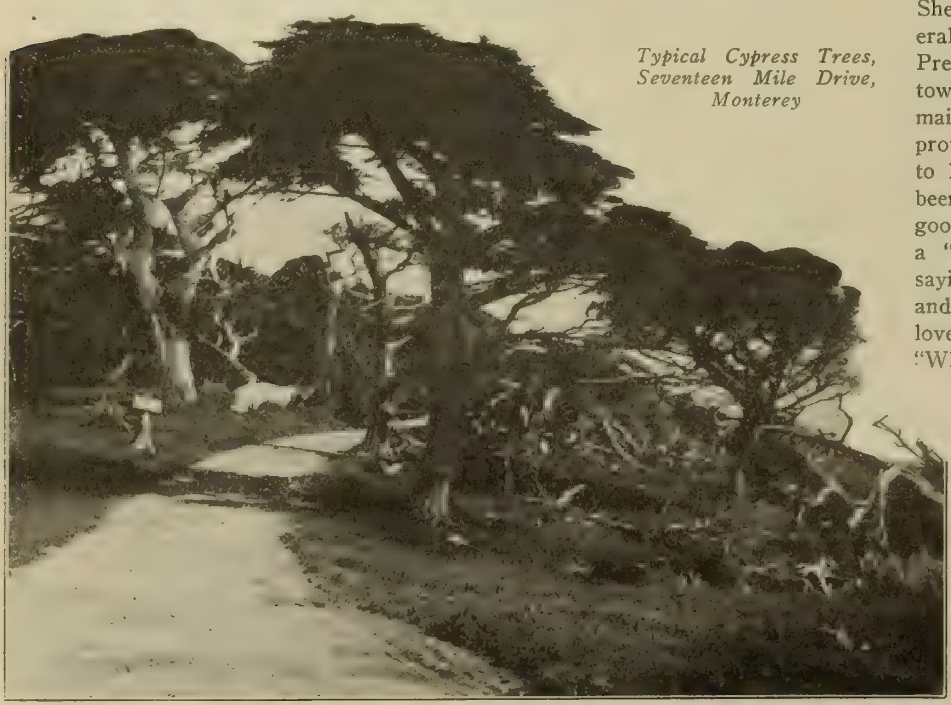
You are now on what is known as the Monterey peninsula and your train will make a short run this time, for the terminus of the road is about three miles ahead at Pacific Grove. When you alight and your eye sweeps the horizon of sea and forest and mountain, you will be glad everybody must needs stop here, for it is a veritable terrestrial paradise. It is Italy and Switzerland and Norway combined into a glorious composite of climate and natural scenery.

Interpenetrating the beauties of nature on the peninsula is the spirit of a romantic past that broods over the quaint town of Monterey, lying midway between Del Monte and Pacific Grove, and lends a peculiar fascination to the place, somewhat as the ancient castles and cathedrals throw the soft azure light of historic charm over the cities and rivers and mountains of Europe. The footprints of the past are to be traced not merely in the memories and traditions that cluster about the place like strains of distant music floating in on the ear at twilight but many structural remains are scattered about the town, monuments enshrining and perpetuating the story of the actors and events that hover on California's historical circumference like far-away vistas at dusk.

The traveler may see the old theater where Jennie Lind's lyrical voice sang itself to the many-voiced melodies of the waves in 1847. It is of adobe and in a state of preservation. Then there is the old custom house, begun by Spain in 1814, with the identical flagpole standing at one corner on which the first American flag was raised in California in 1846. Near by is Colton hall, the first capitol of the state, built in 1849; while not far away stands the three-story adobe Washington hotel erected in 1832 and said to have been the first hotel in the state.

Right in the heart of the town, on Alvarado street, which takes its name from Governor Alvarado, the first governor of the state, there stands, surrounded on both sides by modern business structures, the great "Sherman rose" in perennial vigor and beauty. The story of it is saturated in romance. When William Tecumseh Sherman, afterwards to become the famous general, was a young lieutenant, stationed at the Presidio that lies up on the heights overlooking the town and bay, he became infatuated with a Spanish maiden, Senorita Bonifacio, whose beauty was a proverb in the place. The day came when he was to leave Monterey for the East, whither he had been ordered, and he went to bid his sweetheart good-by. In a buttonhole of his uniform he wore, a "cloth-of-gold" rose, which the maiden took, saying as she did so, "Together we will plant this, and if it live and flourish, I will know that your love is true"; to which the young officer replied, "When it blooms I will come back and claim you."

Thus their vow was sealed. He went away and the senorita watched eagerly for the rose to send its tender shoot up in witness of the genuineness of her lover's affection. Her wistful eyes saw it one morning, and then she cared for it as a mother cares for her firstborn. It grew and spread its graceful branches over the arbor until it covered the adobe house in which the girl lived with its wealth of sweet-breathed roses. It bloomed once; it bloomed twice; it



Typical Cypress Trees, Seventeen Mile Drive, Monterey

"Where the waters of the great deep call to the mountains"—Monterey Peninsula Shore Line bloomed again and again. But the handsome young lieutenant did not come. The senorita, now an old woman, still lives in the adobe house behind the great rose tree, true to her vow plighted over the little spot of earth in which the tiny rose was planted.

A Haunt of Robert Louis Stevenson

But perhaps the most interesting spot in Monterey, at least to literary folk, is the old house where Robert Louis Stevenson came one morning in the autumn of 1879, sick and lonely and needy, and found a generous benefactor in Jules Simoneau, a Frenchman who conducted a restaurant which had become the favorite rendezvous of the artists and litterateurs who came to Monterey. It was a case of affection at first sight between the pair. The humble innkeeper nursed his friend carefully and supplied his needs during the five months of his sojourn in the place, careless of whether he ever should receive any money for the board and lodging of the young Scotchman. And when Stevenson went away to become the idol of the literary world, he carried in his heart an undying love for the man who had befriended him. Until the day of his death he wrote letters of the most familiar and affectionate character to the old man, who in turn treasured these letters above gold, which he stoutly and even scornfully refused in exchange for them, although in his last years he was poor and peddled tamales for a living. In a little iron box he kept them, guarding them with jealous care and perusing them with such frequency that they were thoroughly memorized. These and the complete set of Stevenson's works, sent to him by the gifted novelist and essayist and inscribed in each volume with some word of love, were his daily companions. At the mention of Stevenson's name the old tamale peddler's whole nature would awake into a sort of ecstasy of joy and his tongue would be touched with the subtle fires of eloquence while he discoursed on his favorite theme—his friend! Since the death of Simoneau three years ago these letters and the set of books have been sold to A. H. Brown of San Francisco.

House in Which Jules Simoneau Cared for Robert Louis Stevenson at Monterey

Out back of Carmel, the beautiful summer resort, weird and oppressively quiet, nestling among the pines and stretching down toward the long white beach, which measures a full mile in length and at least an eighth of a mile in width, there stands the Carmel mission built in 1771 by Father Junipero Serra, a Franciscan friar, who landed at Monterey June 3, 1770, bringing with him the religion and the civilization of his native land. The remains of this eminent forerunner of religion lie buried in one of the transepts of the mission. Some years ago in order to correct a rumor that had become current to the effect that the body of Padre Serra had in an early day been removed to France for final burial, Father Casa Nova had the remains exhumed and identified as those of the historic Serra in the presence of a large circle of influential citizens. In 1891 Mrs. Jane L. Stanford had a monument erected to the memory of Father Serra. To stand beside this mission landmark of a long since forgotten era fills one with a profound feeling of veneration. The solitude which envelops the ancient pile, unbroken save for the tinkling of the bells on the cows that graze in the vast meadows that run down to the Carmel river far below and the distant echoings of the breakers as they roll up on the long, deserted beaches or break into silvery spray on the huge bowlders that project themselves into the ocean here and there, gives a weird charm to the place. I have visited this cloistered spot in the deepening twilight, and can testify that the whole effect defies description.

Two miles west of Monterey and farther out on the peninsula lies Pacific Grove, a picturesque town, built largely among the pines, which until cut out to make way for building and streets covered the entire territory in a thickly grown forest. The streets and pavements are made of disintegrated granite, making a road as solid as rock, that glistens in the moonlight or under the arc lights like hoar frost. Here Stanford University maintains the Hopkins Seaside laboratory, a large and well equipped institution.

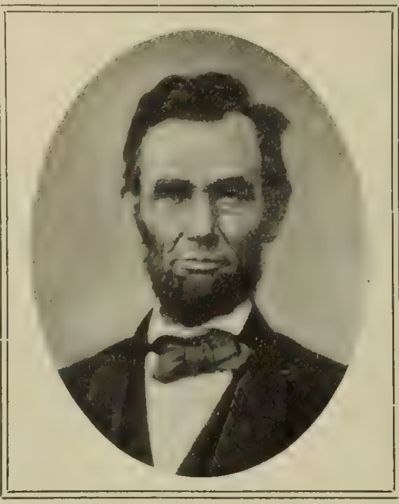
Beauties of the Seventeen Mile Drive

Who that has visited the Monterey peninsula will ever forget the Seventeen Mile drive! It leads out of Pacific Grove through the Del Monte park, which embraces about 7,000 acres of pine forest

(Continued on page 192)

They Saw Abraham Lincoln in Life

Readers of The Continent here briefly record the impressions that have lasted through the half century or more of their lives since they saw and heard and in some cases spoke with the great war President



In his debates with Douglas, at army headquarters, in the hospitals, in the White House—on all public occasions—those who met him noted his thoughtfulness, sadness, earnestness and, more rarely, his humor

In the Douglas Debates

THE ONLY TIME I ever saw Lincoln was in 1858 at Alton when he and Douglas were conducting their memorable campaign for election to the United States senate. Douglas was the candidate of the Democratic party for reelection. I was then a young business man living in a village near Alton. When the opportunity offered I was eager to hear one of their famous debates. It was held in an open square east of the city hall. Lincoln stood upon a very high platform; his tall, gaunt form outlined against the sky seemed to me like that of a prophet of old, while the sea of earnest listeners surging below him showed in their faces an intense interest in the questions under discussion.

Douglas spoke first, Lincoln followed, and I was impressed with his humorous touches and graver moods. When he arose to speak he compared the attitude of Douglas on the slavery question to the old story which portrayed a struggle between a man and a bear, while the man's wife stood by crying, "Go it husband, go it bear!" Later on he repeated those thrilling words which foretold the approaching conflict, "A house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe this government cannot permanently endure half slave and half free. It will become all one thing or all the other."

On this occasion he freely gave expression to his convictions regardless of the effect upon his election. Defeat resulted, but later the highest place in the nation was his. WILLIAM T. CARSON.

How He Cheered an Invalid

In May, 1862, Mr. Lincoln with some members of his cabinet visited Fort Monroe, and while awaiting preparations to capture Sewall's Point and Norfolk he made calls about the point, one of which was at the Hygeia hotel general hospital. His party, accompanied by Brigade Surgeon Shipman and staff, visited every room and cot containing his sick "boys."

My brother was convalescing from typhoid pneumonia and I had procured a pass to return from the front at Yorktown to nurse him, as we were in the same regiment. That memorable morning I had been reading the war news to him, and when the distinguished visitors entered our room I threw the paper on his pillow. It was The New York Herald, and Mr. Bennett had bitterly opposed and abused the President in his conduct of the war for months.

When the President grasped Jim's hand he asked questions, and I said, "Mr. Lincoln, he is my brother and too weak to converse, so I must talk for him."

Turning to me he said, "It is very fortunate that he has a brother here to nurse and care for him." While speaking he held my hand in a fatherly manner. Then he discovered The Herald, and he said, "Do you read the papers?"

I answered, "He is unable to read, but I read all the army news to him." Then a quizzical look came over his grand, sad face and his eye twinkled as he said, "Well, my poor boy, if you can read and digest the contents of The Herald, I think you will surely get well."

And what with Mr. Lincoln's prophecy and my best care he did get well, and served to the close of the war.

ALEX H. MCKELVY.

She Remembers His Smile

I have always boasted to my younger brothers and sisters of the fact that I saw Lincoln, "the great, sad, splendid man."

It was in 1862 when my dear father was a student at the theological seminary in Allegheny City.

Lincoln spoke on the common in front of our home, one of the professors' houses, and I distinctly remember the tall man who stood talking to the people, surrounded by one of the largest crowds I had ever seen. This is one of my proudest recollections.

It was a very serious time in the history of our country, but I recollect as Jennie, my twin sister, and I stood clinging to our father's hand and gazing seriously at the grave man he turned and smiled at the two solemn looking little girls, and that smile I have never forgotten.

The bands played "Rally Round the Flag," "Dixie," the boys in blue drilled, children sang, the zouaves marched, led by handsome, gallant Colonel Ellsworth, Lincoln's close friend, who, not long after, met such a tragic death and had such an honored funeral—poor fellow, so young and so talented. But these are only ghosts of memories to me, for the most vivid impression in my mind is Lincoln's face and smile.

On that sad day when "Captain, My Captain" left us forever, mother came in from the street weeping. She told us Lincoln was dead, he had been shot and killed, and I, in my childish grief and ignorance, cried, "Oh, will we all be killed!"

I have taught many years since then, and when we annually honor the 12th of February I alway tell my pupils when I saw and heard Lincoln and how he smiled at me.

And that smile is one of my cherished memories.

AGNES W. MORRIS.

Kept His Word to the Crowd

While Mr. Lincoln was President-elect he appeared at the New York city hall to meet the people. I took my place in line with the vast multitude in the park and it was over an hour before I got inside the hall. There stood about the center the noble form of the great and good man, toward whom all eyes were turned. Closer and closer we came, till the face of Abraham Lincoln was beaming kindly into ours at very close range. Next to and preceding me was a little old man who looked like a farmer. He grasped Mr. Lincoln's hand, shook it most vigorously, remarking, "I am so glad to see you," etc. At that moment the President-elect exclaimed: "My friends, that is the last man I shall shake hands with in this assembly today; my arm is tired; please excuse me." Of course I came next and my heart almost sank within me as he spoke, but I ventured to say, "Mr. Lincoln, won't you shake hands with me?" I shall never forget the kindly manner in which he replied, "My young friend, gladly would I shake hands with you if I could, but I cannot. I have just publicly announced that that was the last man I would shake hands with here today, and I cannot go back on my word." And as if feeling for me in my disappointment, he took time to say, "Now, my young man, I appeal to your own sense of honor in this case, would it be right in me to shake hands with any person in this place under these circumstances?" At once I replied, "No, sir, it would not." His mind seemed relieved as he said: "Thank you, my friend, thank you! Don't be offended. I must be true to my word." And the whole thing was done in such an exceedingly kind and gentle spirit that I took it like a father's benediction. ALEXANDER SHAW.

Great in His Humbleness

In the autumn of the year 1860 there was a Republican convention at Springfield, Illinois. Abraham Lincoln, a lawyer of that city, was the chief figure.

A train of twenty-five passenger cars slid out of Chicago drawn by two locomotives. The train took on a car containing a contingent from Kankakee city. I said to some friends on the depot platform, "I am going to Springfield to shake hands with Lincoln." They replied, "Why, you can't get within forty rods of Abraham Lincoln."

Fifty thousand people were for that day added to Springfield's population. A platform had been built across the street, from which leading men addressed the crowd. At the fair ground five speakers' platforms had been built to separate the crowd in the afternoon.

To one of these came the hero of the hour. He could not be hid. The surging thousands left the four stands and yelled around the one where Lincoln was.

The studding of the structure swayed before the sea of human life and seemed ready to collapse. Lincoln's native presence of mind saw the danger. He jumped from the platform. The crowd opened a path for him. Someone had brought a horse, and he rode away.

I knew he would go home, so I mounted an omnibus beside the driver and got off at the Lincoln house. A little boy was swinging on the wicket gate. Mr. Lincoln was on the porch taking leave of several men. He called to the boy, "Little boy, don't swing on the gate." He shook hands with me, an obscure young man, as cordially as if I were Seward or some other of the dozen leaders in the room. I said, "Mr. Lincoln, I am more proud of the handshake with you than I would be with any monarch in Europe." He laughed with his usual good natured smile and said, "Come in." I followed him to the parlor where were about a dozen of the political leaders. The coolness and poise of the man under the circumstances amazed me.

I have seen some men whom the world calls great. I was beside the duke of Wellington as he alighted from his horse entering the house of lords. At the duke's funeral I saw in the procession Benjamin Disraeli and Gladstone and others. I saw Louis Kossuth when he landed at the docks at Southampton. But the majesty of our king among men eclipsed them all. Lincoln's greatness was exemplified in the words of the world's Redeemer: "Whosoever shall be great among you shall be your minister, and whosoever would be first among you shall be your servant." John Cassell.

In the Trying Days of '62

I have always regretted that the last time I saw Mr. Lincoln was under most adverse conditions. It was on board his boat in Hampton roads in the early days of July, 1862. He was on the return trip from Harrison's Landing, whither he had gone to visit the army to see and learn its condition and prospects. He found it confined within narrow limits, in an unhealthy location, hundreds sick, many dying, and more than 38,000 absent by authority—a hopeless situation as to immediate service.

That large and grand army, the most magnificent army ever marshaled upon this continent, had retreated from in front of Richmond to the James river.

It was a terrible blow to the country; and Mr. Lincoln knew and no doubt felt that he, the head of the government and commander in chief, would be held responsible. And be it remembered that he was strongly opposed to the army's going to the peninsula; could not see any advantage in dividing the army and taking that roundabout way to find the same enemy that was only twenty miles from Washington. For the North it was the darkest hour in the history of the war, and for the South the high water mark.

I think these or similar thoughts were passing through the mind of the President as I saw him seated in an armchair—all alone—on that lovely July morning. He was utterly indifferent to the activity and bustle around him, his right elbow resting on an arm of the chair, his head leaning in his hand, knees crossed and eyes downcast.

Oh, the sadness and sorrow on that face, bowed down with the weight of the grief and agony, the tears and sighs of a great nation! For I believe, in his great-heartedness, he not only suffered by the South but with the South.

Firmly believing that "right makes might," that "right is right, since God is God," he patiently walked in the light as God gave him light until his work culminated in dying a martyr for his country, even as One, in the long ago, amid the far-away Judean hills, gave his life for the world. M. B. Chambers.

At the New York Capital

I saw Abraham Lincoln in Albany when he was on his way to Washington to become President. He arrived in Albany in the afternoon and was welcomed by the mayor. A procession was formed and escorted Mr. Lincoln to the capitol, where he was welcomed by Governor Edwin D. Morgan, and he spoke from the steps of the capitol before an immense audience. He then went to the assembly chamber and spoke to the legislature. I was a clerk in the comptroller's office at this time, my father, Robert Denniston, being state comptroller.

Mr. Lincoln stayed all night in Albany and was given a reception at the old Delavan house. He stood in the window of the reading room as the crowd passed by. I was in the room and stood near Mrs. Lincoln and remember well how she looked in full dress, with low neck and short sleeves. Mr. Lincoln had shaken hands with every man and said he was tired and must stop.

I went up to him and said, "Mr. Lincoln, won't you shake hands with me." He looked at me (and I shall never forget that look) and said, "I will, my boy." He took my hand in both of his and then turned away after saying, "I am very glad to see you." Mr. Lincoln that evening was attired in a dress suit which hung on his thin body, and he looked sad and weary.

I was a boy and was with my father at the convention which nominated him at Chicago, and all the scenes of that wonderful convention are very vivid in my mind. I went to Chicago on a special train which carried the New York delegation and their friends, who went out eager to nominate William H. Seward. I never saw Mr. Lincoln except the time referred to, but I saw him dead on the way to his burial. Augustus Denniston.

Earnestness, Benignity and Fairness

Abraham Lincoln visited Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, in February of 1861 on his way to Washington to be inaugurated President. As schoolboys we journeyed, with older companions, forty miles by rail, our first ride on steam cars, to look upon his face and hear him speak.

The day was an eventful one to the multitude that crowded the streets of the state capital. The threatening movements in the South, the fears of a dissevered union and the presence of one whose election to the Presidency had so inflamed certain sections of the country gave excitement to the occasion.

Mr. Lincoln spoke from an elevated platform facing Market square. In the applause which greeted his appearance there was evidence of very deep feeling. We had a good view of him and heard distinctly his every word. His tall form, rugged features and mass of black, shaggy hair first impressed us. His face resembled the pictures of him we had seen, but a benignity and earnestness of expression relieved to a great extent the homeliness of features apparent in his portraits. We had not previously been admirers of him, but his words that day made us his friends. We were convinced that he would do the right thing. He spoke very calmly but with much decision and declared that he would do all in his power to bring about a peaceful settlement of existing troubles. He promised to be impartial to all sections; to do what he thought was right for the North, the South, the East and the West. He said that the rights of the southern states would be respected by him and that they would have nothing to fear from his administration if they conformed to the constitution and the laws; that so far as consistent with the maintenance of the government not one drop of blood should be shed with his consent, but that nothing could ever bring him to consent willingly to the destruction of the union.

It was intended that Mr. Lincoln should proceed the next day direct to the national capital, but information of a conspiracy threatening his life on the way led to a change of plans, and he was persuaded against his will, it is said, to leave Harrisburg that night, retrace his journey to Philadelphia, and from there proceed secretly, the same night, accompanied by the superintendent of the railroad and a friend, to Washington. W. P. White.

Shook Hands with Him Twice

During the fall and winter of 1862-63 I was in charge of a ward in the Patent Office hospital for wounded and sick soldiers in Washington. One evening I attended a public reception, then called, I think, a levee, at the White House. The rooms were crowded. The progress toward the receiving party was slow and difficult, but after shaking hands with the president I could not resist the desire to make the circuit again and get another look at him and his receiving helpers. Not wishing to impose on his good nature, I was passing by without shaking hands, when a long arm shot out and a strong hand grasped mine. Evidently Mr. Lincoln thought I had been overlooked, and his kind heart would not allow me to pass unnoticed. I saw him again in the crowded east room chatting gayly with Secretary Chase and his daughter Kate, while General Fremont flitted nervously through the throng. Later in the evening I passed him in a smaller room, sitting quietly alone, apparently resting after the fatigue of the evening. His grave, thoughtful face, flushed with recent social excitement, I have never forgotten.

William Hoyt Coleman.

The Memory of His Sad Face

It was in Rochester, New York. Leaving my home just beyond the city limits about 6 o'clock in the morning, I was trudging along, a lad of 12, dinner pail in hand, toward the workshop of my employers on State street. Having entered the New York Central railroad depot, which in those days was just west of the bridge that spanned the Genesee river, I noticed something unusual was astir. What was it all about? "Why, don't you know? Lincoln is coming and he's going to Washington to lick the rebels!"

I had, meanwhile, somehow come to have a boyish preference for the man of destiny so soon to make his appearance before my very eyes. Having been beaten by a boy twice my size for hurrahing for Buchanan four years before, a sort of reaction set in in favor of the Republican nominee in 1860. Then, too, my father had taken me once to hear and see Stephen A. Douglas in Washington square. But the stately utterances of the "little giant" against the "rail splitter" of Illinois did not at all impress me.

Well, after a tiring wait in the drizzle, he came at last. This time we were sure, because the headlight of the locomotive bore the President-elect's effigy. As the train came to a stop, thousands of expectant eyes were fastened upon the rear platform of the last car. And sure enough, there he was—the tall, gaunt, sad-faced man who was being so abundantly blessed and cursed! I cannot now say whether I really heard his few words of greeting or not. If I did I have long since forgotten them. But the impression that his quiet, earnest manner and his sad face made upon me is ineffaceable.

J. MEULENDYKE.

Twenty Feet Away at Gettysburg

I was present at the dedication of the National cemetery at Gettysburg, November 19, 1863, and stood within twenty feet of the great President when he delivered that golden speech, now an heirloom in American homes, and enshrined in the hearts of millions whose key words are devotion to duty.

It was a moment of intense interest. The wonderful prayer of Dr. Thomas H. Stockton and the masterly oration of Edward Everett over, Mr. Lincoln arose amid a tumult of voices, stood a moment in silence and then pronounced those memorable sentences.

HILES C. PARDOE.

Showed His Great Sympathy

April 8, 1865, Grant was close upon Lee at Appomattox Court House. President Lincoln was at Grant's headquarters at the junction of the Appomattox and James rivers. Our cavalry corps hospital was on the Appomattox river a mile above headquarters. In the afternoon the President visited the hospital to see the sick and wounded.

All the soldiers who were able to be about were formed in a line, at front face, and the President walked the full length of the line and shook the hand of each man and said a word to him. Then he went through all the tents and shook hands with every man who occupied a cot.

He came and went without display or ostentation, and we soldiers failed to see the always pictured slouchiness of his figure. He was dressed in the style of the day and as became his position; he looked a gentleman; his eyes were kindly, his voice mild and subdued; there was fellowship in the close grasp of his hand. I noted in his face the look of "infinite sadness" that redeemed it from homeliness, the look so often mentioned but never depicted with pen or brush. I saw all the great men of war times. I have seen every President since then, and no other face than Lincoln's ever touched my sentiment of veneration.

This exhibition of real sympathy was a revelation to the soldiers and they never wearied talking about it. While they realized that the fall of the Confederate capital was bringing to a close the demands upon their sacrifices they little dreamed that within another week the hand of a coward was to give Lincoln to the ages.

HOMER ANDERSON.

She Saw Lincoln in Death

Fadeless in the memory of a little child the rugged grandeur of Lincoln's face will stay forever. But it was not in life that I saw that wonderful face. We were then living in Chicago and my father came home and in a husky voice told of the death of the beloved President on that April day in 1865.

Then my mother made her plans; we were to rise at 2 o'clock in the morning and go to see the great man as he lay in state. After a hasty breakfast, a walk of a mile brought us to the Chicago court house.

So at 3 o'clock in the morning, before the crowd gathered, my father lifted me up to see the dead President as he lay surrounded by what pomp a sorrowing country could give. Later my mother took me to a memorial meeting held in Methodist Church block.

Another day we sat for hours in the window of a store on Lake street and watched the mournful procession pass by on its way to the station and thence to Springfield for burial.

I yet remember the blue canopy with silver stars above the statuesque face as the President lay in state. He was so kingly in appearance that he seemed more than life size to me. The guards, the lonely court house, the stillness and the mysterious presence of death filled my childish soul with awe. I had always been taught to love and reverence our great ruler and I was shocked when told that someone had wished to take his life.

Although I never heard him speak, his silence was more eloquent than words, and the patient face of the great burden bearer appealed even to a little child.

CORA BANKS PIERCE.

To the writers of the first six "Lincoln incidents" here printed payment will be made in accordance with the announcement in The Continent on January 2. The other writers will be given subscription credits as compensation.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS—Bradford Horton is working his way through Prestonbury Theological Seminary. A fellow student, Austin Sleighton, becomes his loyal friend; but Oren-Toole, a jealous fellow bank employee, attempts to involve him in a money theft, using as his tool an old beggar, Andrew Drum, who proves to be Horton's own father. Miss Elmore, daughter of the bank's president, to whom Horton is greatly attracted, believes in his innocence, which is finally proved. Oren-Toole and Drum, however, are incriminated. Drum dies before his trial, and Horton begs that the case against Oren-Toole be dropped. This angers Mr. Elmore, and he writes Horton a note which causes him to resign from the bank and to give up his position as tutor to Mr. Elmore's grandson. Mr. Elmore still believes Horton an impostor. Sleighton tries to persuade him to clear himself. This Horton refuses to do because of a last promise to Drum that he would not reveal the latter's identity as the man of whom, in his youth, Prestonbury had prophesied ill, and whose marriage was opposed by his bride's family. Horton, because of the president's hostility, declines the cashier's invitation to return to the bank. Finally Mr. Elmore, realizing the need of the young man's assistance and admitting to himself that his prejudice is due solely to the fact that he fears his daughter may succumb to Horton's manifold attractions decides to apologize for his note and offer Horton the position of teller.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued

AT A LITTLE after 10 o'clock the Elmore carriage stopped in front of Morton hall. Horton opened his door at the knock of the two bank officials. "Come in, gentlemen," he said, astonished, but too well bred to show it.

There ensued an awkward pause. The banker noted the scantiness of the furniture and the general cheerlessness of the room. "I have but two chairs," Horton explained, offering them, "so if you will pardon me I'll sit on the table."

"I see the authorities do not mean you to have too much company, Mr. Horton," said Mr. Elmore with a somewhat constrained effort at offhand cordiality. "I've never had the pleasure of being in your room before. By the way, I must congratulate you on the way you acquitted yourself yesterday."

"Thank you," said Bradford gravely.

"Do you return to Glencoe for the vacation, Mr. Horton?"

"No."

"You will remain here, then?"

"No."

"I think you would find it pleasant here in summer." The president was becoming more ill at ease at the repetition of monosyllabic answers. "The lake is very attractive, and——"

"But I must have work, and there is none here for me."

"There is. That is the reason of my call. I have come to offer you a permanent position as teller of the bank."

"Indeed!" Bradford looked calmly at the president.

"Yes. We have concluded to make you teller after Hobbs leaves——"

The door flew open suddenly and three voices yelled together, "Oh, Brad! you old Brad, you've scooped the shiner; you've gobbled the yellow boy, you've——" then seeing the visitors and filled with confusion, the young men slammed the door and were gone.

"What did those fellows mean?" asked Mr. Elmore.

Bradford smiled. "I suppose they were telling me I had won the gold medal for Greek."

"That was good news, wasn't it? I wish I was a boy again. I would like to tell someone something in just such a way. Well, I suppose now you will be ready to begin work tomorrow."

"Pardon me. I have no present thought of working for the bank tomorrow or any other day. The causes which made me cease working there are the same now as when I ceased."

"I understand," said the president. "I had anticipated your answer. I am about to remove the obstacle. I will recall that unkind note I wrote you. I should have addressed you then as Mr. Horton. I ask your pardon for the offense. I think it was the occasion of the break between us."

"Yes, sir, it was. The pardon you ask is granted, but I am not prepared to say I will go to the bank again."

"May I ask your reasons for hesitation?"

"Certainly. You have called me impostor so often it has become widely known in Prestonbury. I do not wish to return to the bank branded with that mark. Then you propose to make me teller. That means permanence. I am not prepared to say I will abandon the study for the ministry to go into business."

"I see; I appreciate. I will make it as widely known as I can that you are my choice for teller, and that you have my entire confidence. And as for the second reason, I heard your examination. In it you were right, Mr. Horton, but you are fifty years in advance of your time. You will be tried for heresy by an unprogressive church. I can save you from that."

"I must take my own risks on that line, Mr. Elmore. I suppose men still have to suffer for bearing witness to the truth, as always they have. I cannot answer you today. In any event, I shall ask what, probably, you will not do."

"What is that?"

"Take this"—he drew from the table drawer Mr. Elmore's note—"ask Mr. Joseph Jickers to read it, tell him you have recalled it, and in his presence destroy it."

"Why, yes, Mr. Horton, I will do that." He took the note. "Anything more?"

"Yes. Make in writing your proposition to me to enter the employ of the bank."

"Very well; I will do that."

"Then I will give you an answer as soon as I can."

Thus closed a memorable interview. Mr. Elmore was very sure he had triumphed, but he did not know Bradford Horton.

At the drug store the president asked to see Joseph Jickers alone. The three men sat down in the private office. "Court is in chambers; counsel can proceed with his argument," said the little man.

"Well, your honor," Mr. Elmore began, laughing in spite of himself, "I wrote your friend Horton a letter four months ago, addressing him as William Drum. He was offended, probably justly. Here is the note. Will you read it?"

Joe read it slowly, quite as if he had not seen it before, and shook his head gravely. "Counsel wasted no words in his communication, but court gives no decision."

Mr. Elmore took back the paper and tore it into small pieces. "Your honor, that is my decision," he said. "I have apologized to Mr. Horton, and told him I would make this visit to you. That was my errand here. I fear I have been making some bad blunders, your honor."

"Shoot 'your honor,' and shoot 'the court'! It's man to man now, Mr. Elmore. The man who never made a blunder has never been born."

When Maxwell stepped down from the carriage at the bank, he added to his good-by the remark, "This is the best morning's work you've done in ten years, Mr. Elmore."

"A good morning's work—yes, Sam; good for the bank. But it mortified me extremely. And remember this; I may have blundered in acting hastily, but my opinion is the same; I have good reason to keep it so. That young man is no more a Horton than I am."

CHAPTER XV.

"As We Forgive Our Debtors"

IT WAS TO Bradford Horton's credit that the offer from St. Bartholomew's church of a place in its choir at $1,200 a year did not cause him a moment's hesitation as to his course. Nor was he disturbed or tempted by the Preston National bank's offer of the post of teller at $1,000. To each letter he wrote an answer declining, and to the seminary one accepting the position of tutor in New Testament Greek at a salary of $400. With both declinations he gave the same reasons: "I have begun to study for the ministry and I must complete my course before considering any proposition for permanent occupation of another sort."

On the steps of the post office, the evening when he mailed the three letters, he met Ansley Jickers, and together they walked up to the Jickers home.

"What's new, client?" asked Joe looking up from his paper as the newcomers joined the assembled family in the library.

"Nothing."

"Didn't know we had located O.-T., then?"

"No."

"Not interested? No questions to ask?"

"Yes, your honor. But I know and you know your honor's dying to tell. Go ahead."

"Well, O.-T. is in Albany in a department store. Floorwalker, you know. Jack Tappan saw him there last week, and he pretended not to know Jack. I'm going down sometime just to see him. Won't it be fun?"

"Does Mr. Maxwell know of this?"

"Yes; court served notice today."

Before more could be said, Lucy, full of the news of Horton's New York call, came into the conversation. "Mr. Horton, I'm glad you've had such a fine offer from New York, but I'm very sorry to have you leave us. We are just coming to feel that you are one of us."

His reply was a surprise. "I'm not going, Miss Lucy."

Dr. Jickers dropped his paper and pushed back his spectacles. "Bless my soul!" he exclaimed.

Horton laughed. "Are you as surprised as that, Dr. Jickers?"

"Yes, I am surprised. Most young men would jump at such an offer. But knowing you as I am beginning to, I ought not to be astonished. You are like your father in many things."

The talk ran on, flowing around the declination of the New York proposal and carrying on its current naturally enough the story of Mr. Elmore's offer and Bradford's refusal to leave the seminary for business till he knew more than at present of God's purpose with him. Once more the doctor laid down his paper, and once more he said:

"That's like your father, boy. You've made a good choice, and we'll give you another hundred for your singing next year. What chances young men are having now! Bless my soul! How I wish I was a young man!"

Bradford stopped in to see Sleighton on his way to his own room. "Here's a note for you, B.," said his friend. "I heard a knocking on your door, and found a messenger with this."

The note was from Mr. Elmore, asking him to receive Charlie once more as a pupil, and to stay by him for the whole summer. "I am very anxious to have the boy make Yale this autumn. He cannot without your help. With it, the outcome should not be doubtful. And he stubbornly says that it's Yale this fall or never."

The letter caused Bradford some misgivings. He liked Charlie Elmore almost as much as he disliked his grandfather. He almost resolved to change his whole plan for the summer. He had promised to undertake work for the board of missions of his church, and had only the day before received a definite assignment for the duty. He faced the proposition for an hour, then wrote to Mr. Elmore declining it, and giving in full his reasons.

But Richard P. Elmore was not a man to be defeated easily in a purpose. Taking Charlie with him, he went again to room 35. He argued and pleaded, while the boy sat by with wistful face, but Horton's answer remained the same:

"Inclination and personal advantage make me desire to accede to your wish. But I think I have gone too far with my present plans. I might get released, but I hardly like to try. I'm sorry for Charlie, but, Mr. Elmore, I cannot feel that the fault is mine."

So the interview ended.

Mr. Elmore accepted the answer as final and began a search for another teacher, but Charlie was not satisfied. He wrote another letter to his Aunt Eleanor, which he ended with the appeal, "You write to Mr. Horton, Aunt Lennie. Maybe he'll listen to you."

A week later Horton called on the president at the bank. He made no delay about his errand. "Mr. Elmore, is the place of teller yet filled?"

"No, sir." There was a curt tone to the answer.

"Can I have the post for the next four months?"

"I understood you to say you had other plans."

"I did have, but have been obliged to change them suddenly."

"Four months, you say?"

"Yes, sir."

"Does that possibly mean permanence?"

"No, sir."

Mr. Elmore summoned Maxwell. "Sam, can you use Horton for teller for four months? Is it worth while?"

"Doubly worth while."

The president turned once more to Bradford. "When can you begin work?"

"Today."

"Very good. The pay will be $100 a month for four months."

"There is one thing more, Mr. Elmore. Have you a teacher for Charlie?"

"No."

"Can I have him?"

"What has happened to you, Mr. Horton?"

"Nothing. I have only changed my plans. Can I have Charlie?"

"By all means. What will be your charge?"

"The same as before." Then, before Mr. Elmore could speak further, he added, "Perhaps it will be as well if I go at once to see Charlie and start him at his work. I will be back here after dinner."

When he had gone, "Sam," said the president to the cashier, who stood by smiling, "Sam, what's come over him? He never does anything for nothing. What's in the wind now?"

But though neither man could solve the problem, Eleanor Elmore could have told them the solution. While Horton talked to the father a letter in his pocket from the daughter was guiding every word:

"Dear Mr. Horton: Charlie writes his last hope of making Yale this year is gone, because you will not hear him recite. He is terribly disappointed, and I shall be. Can you not, will you not, take him? Yours sincerely, ELEANOR ELMORE."

(To be continued)

Has More Sense Since

A Kansas school teacher was drilling her composition class in the relative value of words and phrases. The phrase "horse sense" was discussed, and she told one of the boys to write a sentence containing that phrase.

The boy labored for ten minutes and produced this: "My father didn't lock the barn door, and he ain't seen the horse sense."

THE WAYFARER

Heroes of the Poles

THE MOVING-PICTURE SHOWS find that Indian and frontier scenes are the most popular. As it ever has been and ever will be, so it is now—all people feel the spell of the primitive and the adventurous. Deeds of daring and hardihood, though only the "make believe" of the cinematograph or of Homer's "Iliad" and "Odyssey," cast a spell of charm over the minds of even the most conventionalized of us. For somewhere at the core of every man's nature is a red Indian quality, which makes him admire the elemental virtues, the traits we still share with the cave man. This, the Wayfarer suspects, is why the polar explorer is most heartily accorded the world's laurels.

* * * *

The imagination of even the unimaginative is stirred by the feat of the man who has stood where never before mortal foot has trod; and who has broken through the icy doors of the North and of the South until he has wrested the secret of the pole itself. An occasional cynic, in self-conscious philistinism, may cry, "What's the use?" concerning the long, long quest for the poles; but the common mind of us all declares that, scientific results aside, the conquest of the earth's most inaccessible points is worth while as demonstrating the sovereignty of man. It is written in the nature of the race, as well as in the inspired revelation, that man should have dominion over the whole earth.

* * * * *

Upon a recent evening the Wayfarer heard and met the three most famous of polar explorers—Amundsen, Peary and Shackleton. As he looked upon these three brethren dwelling together in unity, each vying with the others in bestowing magnanimous praise upon his fellows, thoughts of the Cook-Peary controversy insisted upon arising. So the Wayfarer switched his train of thought to the theme of the potent contrast between these immaculately clad gentlemen in conventional evening dress and the same men, hungry, cold, unwashed, and clad in malodorous skins. It must have been a hardship to go for weeks or months without washing one's face, and without a change of clothing. Yet that is part of the explorer's lot, a link with the stone-age ancestry. The Wayfarer thinks he knows some men who are so tightly tied to Mrs. Grundy's apron strings that they could not go a week's distance from barber, bathroom, manicurist and haberdasher. As for eating blubber, or going hungry, or doing day-labor work in dragging sledges over heart-breaking stretches of broken ice, or toilsomely building shelters of snow, or enduring the indescribable cold, or the long, long night of loneliness—none but men brave and mighty in elemental qualities can essay this. To them we conventionalized stay-at-homes pay the tribute of unconcealed admiration.

* * * * *

The overmastering character of this admiration and interest was revealed at a reception given the three explorers by a club whose members are strong men of the world. They know the usages of good form, and in little things conform to the dictates of society. Yet on this evening, after passing down the receiving line, the men, one after another, by common impulse, turned and stared at their guests. Bad manners? Perhaps, by small standards—really a more solid tribute than the mumbled words of greeting as each had shaken hands with the evening's guests. Everybody wanted to study at close range these great achievers. They commented upon the granite face, with its pioneering wedge of a nose, and its genial wrinkles, of Amundsen, the gaunt Norwegian who had won the race to the south pole. Peary, better broken to the parlor than either of the men who flanked him, had the veneer of the public man; and it was hard to conceive of him in the snowy wastes of the North. Shackleton, typically British in appearance, was undergoing this social ordeal about as he would have buffeted an Antarctic storm. The bull-doggedness and virility written on his face made one regret more than ever that he should have been blocked by misfortune when so near to his goal.

* * * * *

Concerning the Amundsen lecture, see the advertisement. One who hears it does not want to say, like the boy who had been taken to a poor circus, "Come on out and let us look at the posters." The lecture, like the lecturer, is great. The simplicity of all vast achievement is in it. Never once is the pronoun of the first person used. Difficulties are related so simply that one scarcely grasps them. A touch of dry humor relieves the strain of the attention. And when the five men of the expedition are pictured with their hands on the staff of the Norwegian flag at the south pole, there is no need of rhetoric to make the scene dramatic.

* * * * *

Primitive qualities and equipment—men, dogs, sledges, such as might have been victorious thousands of years ago—won this victory. The world is gratified that the poles were reached by man and his sheer endurance and pluck before the airship enabled him to surmount the obstacles on wings. Unpredictable prizes await the ensuing generations of discoverers—but the old, simple traits of elemental manhood, unassisted by the wonders of science, have conquered all the important geographical secrets that the race has to learn from this goodly frame, the earth. The bays belong on the brow of man and not on a motor, an airship or a submarine.

* * * * *

Mechanical science went almost to the south pole with Amundsen in the form of a cinematograph—together, of course, with the scientific instruments of observation. A marvel of the lecture was the moving pictures of the great ice barrier of the Antarctic; of the methods of transportation, shelter and life in polar exploration; of schools of whales; of great, stupid, unfearing seals; of comical penguins, and of the redoubtable Fram. With new vividness the educational function of the moving-picture camera was brought home to many persons that night.

* * * * *

Some experiences are unique. No past generation ever saw, nor will any to come, the discoverers of the north and south poles met together. Their adventures were unique and once for all. They personify the epochal character of this our decade.

THE WAYFARER.

THE HOME COUNCIL

THE TESTS OF TEMPTATION

By Ethel Colson

"WELL, I DON'T want to judge," began one of the younger members of the sewing group in the tone that usually presages severe censure, "but when I hear certain people talking of the strange and awful temptations that have befallen them, I always wonder how they happened to become possible. Of course, there are plenty of people who are exposed to temptations of every known and imaginable sort, but it does seem to me that when any of us—comfortably situated, sheltered Christian women like us, for instance—are attacked by any of life's coarser tests, it must be more or less our own fault!"

A gentle-faced older woman looked up with a deprecating smile.

"From the heights—or depths—of my experience, I should be inclined to disagree with you," she said. "Of course we know that no trial or temptation beyond our strength will ever meet us, that no circumstance or event will be too hard or searching for divine grace. But temptations terrible as unexpected sometimes assail the purest, most circumspect, conscientious, exalted of souls.

"I knew a dear woman once, good almost to saintliness, of especially sweet spirit and holy life, who suddenly found herself in the position of loving another woman's husband and hungering after still another woman's child, and a fortune that had been declared legally not her own. And for these terrible temptations she was in no way to blame.

"The man had been her fiance, devoted, adoring, tender, for years; only duties and responsibilities on the part of each had held them apart while her youth and girlish beauty faded. Just when the way seemed clear for their marriage the man lost his head over a new and 'stunning' acquaintance. The first inkling his betrothed had of the matter came in the public announcement of his runaway marriage with the newcomer. One moment it was at once her duty and delight to love the recreant sinner—perhaps himself tempted beyond endurance; the next moment it was a serious sin. And it is no easy matter to tear out of a true and trusting heart the tender image of nearly twenty years.

"Years before, too, a relative of my poor friend, left widowed and penniless, had 'given' her dear little girl to my friend, who had tended, reared and learned to love her as a mother. Suddenly the real mother married again, found herself financially unrestricted and decided to take back her child. The proxy mother's heart ached sore to give her up.

"Then there was the fortune, long promised by a loving old uncle and prospectively dedicated to the good work begun in its expectation. The old man's sudden death, intestate, diverted the money in quite a different and apparently less worthy direction. My friend had to pass over her cherished task to another for lack of funds.

"Of course, being a true Christian, she fought these terrible temptations nobly, conquered, came, in the end, to see and reap good from them. But the triple ordeal tried her soul as by fire.

"Then, too," as the other sat silent, "I think that we often confuse temptation with sin. There's no sin in being tempted, we know, so long as we don't yield, consent to or dally with the temptation. And sometimes, perhaps, if we could really know the soul we criticise for being open to a temptation not our own we might wonder, indeed, but in a different way."

"Moreover," added the pastor's wife, taking up the parable, "the attitude of judgment is not the one best adapted for the helping of the tempted brother or sister—and, of course, being Christians, we should be anxious to help, always. I suppose, in the last analysis, the 'judge not, that ye be not judged' dictum applies just as fully to souls under temptation as to those actually convicted of sinning, and—none of us knows just what form our own next temptation may take!"

BITS BY THE WAY

"I GOTTA LEARN"

Patricia was only 5. She never meant to be naughty. It was just because there were so many, many things her mother had failed to caution her not to do that Patricia was frequently in trouble.

One day, when one of her difficulties was being straightened out, Patricia groped around in her troubled little mind for some extenuation of her naughtiness. Finally she sobbed out: "But mamma, I gotta learn!"

Thus did Patricia sum up life. We "gotta learn," if not by one method, then by some other. If the lessons are difficult, and the point obscure, and the pages blur before tired eyes, still they must be learned. It will help if we feel that the loving Teacher has set our task according to our ability, and that thus the solution of the problems must ultimately be possible to us.

We of necessity stumble in learning to walk. We all "gotta learn" strength through failure. When that strength is sufficient for a wider sphere, a broader usefulness, we shall hear the call, "Friend, go up higher."

HER 25-CENT LUNCH

Anne Morgan, daughter of the money king, recently ate a 25-cent meal with a view to convincing several hundred working girls that a 25-cent dinner is good enough for anybody. The menu consisted of chops, potatoes and apple pie.

Commenting on her well intentioned act, The Chicago Tribune says:

"Miss Morgan's efforts are wasted. There are no working girls in New York, Chicago, or any other big city in the United States who would not be satisfied with a 25-cent meal consisting of chops, potatoes and apple pie. The objection on the part of working girls and those championing their interests is that the 25-cent meal is out of the reach of the great majority of them. If Miss Morgan were to look into the lunch box of the shop girl on the East side in New York or on the West side in Chicago, she would find that from 7 to 10 cents is all that 70 per cent of them spend for their noonday meal. They cannot afford to spend more. Even the better paid girls, girls in offices and stores, do not spend more than 15 cents in a near-by lunchroom for their midday lunch. They cannot afford to do it and keep the strait and narrow path.

"Miss Morgan, while sincere in her sympathy for the poor, is hampered by her inability to look at things through their eyes. A quarter looks much bigger in the working girl's eye than Miss Morgan imagines."

PIN MONEY BY READING ALOUD

Would you like to earn a bit of extra money, and at the same time bestow a very real benefit? If so, suppose you try this successful plan of a young Oak Park girl.

She devotes certain hours of each day to reading aloud to children, old people, shut-ins and others who for one reason or another are unable to do their own reading.

She has printed business cards, and these she has given to a number of the town's doctors, since the physician, almost more than anyone else, comes in contact with family and individual needs.

Her range of reading is wide, varying according to the taste of her auditors—the newspaper for an old man, a light novel to an invalid who hasn't strength for heavy reading, history to a young man whose sight has become temporarily impaired, the Bible and a church paper to a saintly old lady, juvenile literature to children.

She receives 25 cents an hour for her services, but is planning a sliding scale of prices, dependent on what is expected of her. Story telling to children, for instance, demands special preparation, and hence, she thinks, should demand extra remuneration.

She declares that her work is a liberal education.
S. C. R.

Preferred Her Pie Roofed

Dorothy had never seen any pumpkin pie until her first visit to the country. Therefore she looked with astonishment at the spicy, fragrant pie that was put on the table for dinner.

"What is it?" she asked.

"It's pumpkin," replied her grandmother, "and very nice. Shall I give you a piece?"

"No, thank you," replied the little girl politely. "I never eat pie without a roof on it."

The Way the Medicine Man Does It

Carl Lumholtz gives in his "New Trails in Mexico" (Scribner's) an interesting glimpse of an old Papago medicine man, Castillo, who, when the writer first saw him, was singing outside of a house to soothe a patient, a middle-aged, powerful looking man, who was lying on his back in front of him.

Castillo's singing, says Mr. Lumholtz, was accompanied by the rasping of two sticks. Near an inverted basket on the ground an effigy of a horned lizard had been placed; it was made of wood and daubed with ocher, its head turned toward the patient.

The medicine man, whom I watched from my horse, finished his treatment by placing the effigy repeatedly on the patient's leg, breathing and blowing at the same time. The man had a pain in his leg which had been caused by a horned lizard, for, according to Papago beliefs, all animals have the faculty of making people ill except the deer and the pronghorn antelope. To relieve the illness the doctor had sung a song to the animal asking it to take the pain away. Then he walked into the house. Somebody must have told him I was a doctor, for a few minutes later, to my surprise, he brought out his medicine basket and began to unpack the contents of his tray.

There were many remedies of a similar character to the one just described. Images of certain animals, accompanied by appropriate ceremonies and exhortations, are thought to relieve illness. Like the native doctor himself, an animal is thought to be able to cause illness as well as to cure. The turtle causes stiffness, the butterfly produces vomiting and the badger gives backache. The deer makes persons cough and their voices weak, and may give consumption, but a deer-tail, placed on a stick and manipulated in the proper way by a medicine man, will cure that illness, for, as Castillo explained, "it is not often you see the deer thin." A piece of clay taken from a gopher's burrow is used against stomach pain. The sun is apt to give fever, and a patient suffering thus is relieved at sunrise; during the incantations of the doctor a small wooden image of the sun rests on the ground, while the patient faces the east.

The old man seemed glad to explain everything. He was also willing to sell me some of his treasures. One of them was a medicine man's plume, consisting of four eagle plumes tied together so that they diverged two by two. When young girls come of age they are "dusted" with this from all evil.

YOUNG AMERICA

The Way Bobbie Kept a Diary

BY PAULINE FRANCES CAMP

MARY ELLEN looked up from her writing right into two wistful blue eyes belonging to Bobbie. "Sister," he asked, "why can't I keep a diary?"

Sister laughed as she patted his round cheeks. "Oh, Bobbie boy, you must learn to write before you can do that! And you are a pretty small laddie yet, to be thinking about such things."

The little fellow opened his eyes very wide. "Why, Sister Mary Ellen, I can write; of course I can! I guess you've forgotten the letter I wrote you when you were in Boston!" and seizing a pencil his cramped little first scrawled some meaningless lines on a sheet of paper. "There," he cried triumphantly, "I can write just as easy!"

"What does it say?" asked Mary Ellen smiling.

"It says, 'I love you, and I want to keep a diary,'" said Bobbie positively, with a nod of his curly head.

"Will it say the same thing tomorrow?" laughed his sister.

Bobbie looked doubtful. "Why, I guess it will; only sometimes I forget what I write, you know."

"Well," said his sister, "when you keep a diary, the writing has to say the same thing all the time, so I'm afraid you will have to wait a while yet, little man."

Just then mother came through the room. "Oh, mother, can't I keep a diary, like Mary Ellen? Please, please let me," begged Bobbie.

Mother looked thoughtful.

"Why, dear," she said hesitatingly, "I don't quite see—— Yes, I do, too," she ended briskly. She picked up a pencil and wrote rapidly a few moments.

"There, Bobbie," she said, "put on your cap and take this note to Mr. Brown at the book store. Bring back the package he will give you and we will see!"

Away ran the little boy, with a light heart, for when mother said "We will see" in that brisk way, the thing was as good as done.

When Bobbie came back he found his own small table pulled out, and on it a pile of old and new magazines, a pair of blunt scissors and a little pot of paste. To these were added a fat red book from the bundle he brought and a package of colored crayons.

"Now, Bobbie," said mother, "a diary is a book that tells all about the happenings of the day. You are a little boy and will not be able to put down all the things that take place, but you can choose a few of the most important ones and tell about those. This is the plan—you are to think of some big thing that happened and then find a picture to fit it. See, here is one that will remind you of something you did yesterday," and she held out a print of a wagon with a load of merry, laughing children.

Bobbie gave a skip! "Oh, mother, the picnic! Why, it looks just like us! And there is a little boy that looks like me. Oh, mother, let me paint his coat red!"

"That will be a good plan," agreed mother. "Every boy that is meant for you shall have a red coat, and then you will always know where you are in the pictures. I think this book will be a great help to you, as well as lots of fun," and mother's brown eyes had a funny twinkle in them.

"Now, cut out the picture and paste it neatly in the first page, and sister will write the title and the date under it."

Bobbie thought of several other things that had happened the day before, and soon had the first page of his diary completed, to his immense satisfaction.

The days went by rapidly and Bobbie's diary grew bigger and bigger, and more and more interesting to its maker. It was almost like reading to turn the pages and be able to tell just what each picture stood for, and to follow little "Red Coat" through every one.

All kinds of pictures went in, for mother said the book must tell a true story. Sometimes the pages held things that Bobbie hurried past, with scarlet cheeks and drooping head. One picture of two little lads fighting he never wanted to look at. "Did we really look like that, mother?" he asked soberly as he was pasting it in, and saw the ugly expressions on the small faces, and the clenched fists, dealing such angry blows. "Did we really look so? I guess we won't fight any more!"

One page showed a dear, shaggy pony, a birthday pony, with "Toby" written beneath it. There was a picture of a dripping boy, a regular little drowned rat of a boy, running across a field. That was when Bobbie fell into the creek. There was a sweet-faced old lady stepping out of a carriage—grandmother coming to visit; and another picture of a small boy with a puffy face—Bobbie with the mumps. Another, one to be passed over very quickly, showed a little boy stamping his foot in a rage; and under it was a little boy in bed, with the big round sun peeping in through the window at him, on his way to Sunset Land.

But, oh, there were lovely, lovely things in the red book—pictures of all sorts of delightful happenings that had come to Bobbie. There was the first bluebird; the flower hunt in the early spring and the pretty May baskets, made and hung. There were postmen, in natty blue suits, carrying letters for Bobbie from papa, who was away on a long trip. There was little "Red Coat" in his first pair of trousers starting to school with a bag of books. There was the hundred mark for mounting to the head of the spelling class; and there were parties, and excursions, and—oh, I can't begin to tell you all of the good things!

The "hurry-over" pictures began to drop out, as Bobbie saw how the hateful things spoiled his pretty book.

But best of all was the picture of a tall man stepping from an automobile, with little "Red Coat" clinging round his knees and his arms full of delightfully mysterious bundles. The printing under this was in red, shaky and crooked, Bobbie's own work, and it read: "This is when my own papa came home."

Peter and Peekaboo

Peter and Peekaboo have grown up together and are the greatest chums in the world. They eat together, and sleep together, and play together, with never a cross word—which means, in dog and cat language, with never a growl or spit—and with never a bite or scratch. Peekaboo loves to snuggle up against Peter's long fur, which is soft and warm, and dream pussy dreams of birds and mice; while Peter is never happier than when he is being a bed for Peekaboo and protecting her from what he probably calls danger, in his doggy mind. They are never very far away from each other, these two, and one of the pleasantest sights in all the little town where they live is the friendliness and affection of Peter and Peekaboo.

A Boy's Thought of Lincoln

Some days in school, when teacher says,
"Jim, name the Presidents,"
I up and I commence,
And say them all from Washington clear through Buchanan, then,
I have to stop and clear my throat—I always have to when
I come to Abraham Lincoln's name,
E'en tho' the teacher whispers, "Shame!
Can't you remember, Jim?"
Can't I remember him!
Why, he's my hero! That is why
I get choked up and want to cry!
Once he was just as poor as I,
And homely, too, and tall and shy.
But he was brave and made his place,
Climbed to the top and freed a race!
When I think what he dared to do,
I just vow I'll do something, too!

—Children's Magazine.

None That Grew There

During a lesson on the animal kingdom the teacher asked if anyone could give an example of an animal of the order of Edentata—that is, one which is without teeth.

"I can," replied Tommy, his face beaming with eagerness.

"Well, what is it?" asked the teacher.

"Grandpa!" shouted Tommy.

She Remembered Her Manners

Susan had been to her first party and was eagerly telling her mother what a happy time she had had.

"Susan," said her mother, "I hope you remembered to tell the hostess that you had a pleasant time at the party?"

"Oh, yes, mother," answered little Susan; "I told her as soon as I got there, so I wouldn't forget it."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

February 16, 1913—The Call of Abraham

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 12:1-9. Golden Text, Genesis 12:2: I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing.

Abraham was great enough to have had two names. He began as Abram and passed on to Abraham. One meant "exalted father" and the other "father of nations." Both were appropriate. They mark the successive stages of his spiritual progress. The life of the patriarch forms the first chapter of a long story. He was literally the father of nations.

Great names are usually associated with beginnings. The American revolution was one of seven years' duration, and yet it produced more statesmen than has all our subsequent history. Time never recedes, but the fact remains that the morning stars are still the brightest. Inspiration may be a continuous process; if so, no second edition of Genesis has as yet been issued. There were giants in those days whose rivals are yet unborn.

The Birthplace of the Patriarch Located in a Rich Country

Man, when God drove him from the garden, kept on going. All save Noah and his family appear to have forgotten God. Then came the deluge and the race was given another trial. The three sons of Noah drifted in as many directions, Shem occupying a portion of the country afterwards known as Babylonia. This empire ranked among the mightiest of earth. The country was rich beyond description. A network of canals supplied the vast plains with water, so that the sower is said to have been rewarded by harvests literally three hundred fold. History says that it was the only country in the world where wheat grew wild. Cities and temples abounded. The Euphrates held its course southward, and where it emptied into the gulf stood Ur, the birthplace of the patriarch. In those days Ur was a maritime city, but the alluvial deposits of the river have pushed the coast line so far out into the sea that the site is identified today as over 126 miles inland.

The father of Abram was Terah. Of him we know but little. He was an idolater and, according to tradition, a captain at the court of Nimrod. Abram had two brothers, Nahor and Haran, and beyond this fact the Scriptures are silent. But tradition says that a wonderful star heralded his birth and Nimrod the king, fearing that he might prove a dangerous rival, ordered his father to put him to death. The father substituted a slave and hid his son in a cave. There he remained for years. When he emerged and looked for the first time upon the sun, he hailed it as God, but the sun went down and left him in darkness. Then the moon rose and the stars came out. The one he greeted as God and the other as his ministers. But the moon sank and the stars faded. The fact suggested the idea of a God above nature to whom he owed his future service. This is only a tradition, but tradition is sometimes something that might easily have happened and didn't.

Abraham, Born Amid Base Surroundings, Became Apostle of God

Abraham was a man of one idea, but that idea was large enough to include the universe. He was the apostle of the one God. The religion of the Chaldees was a polytheism of the higher form. They never descended to animal worship, but found their deities among the stars. They had their heaven and fallen spirits. There was but little in the sacred literature of those people to uplift the soul. They had their creation and their deluge, but inspiration has no duplicate. God always writes with the same pen. The theology of a nation will ultimately shape its life, and the Babylonians became among the wickedest on earth. They worshiped the base, the sensual and the cruel.

Amid surroundings like these Abram was born. His home does not seem to have differed from those about it. "Your fathers," said Joshua to the elders of Israel, "dwelt on the other side of the flood [authorized version], and even Terah, the father of Abraham, served other gods." In that dry ground God planted a root whose branches were yet to shadow the world. But the case is not solitary. Abraham, Moses and even Jesus were strangers to their birth.

The scene of Abram's life lay outside of his own country, so God bade him and his family depart into a land of which they knew nothing. The record of their going is simple: "And they went forth from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came unto Haran and dwelt there." That migration was a movement toward God. The future, replete with incident and revelation, went along. The course was to the northwest, and they followed it until they arrived at Haran, a city 500 miles distant from Ur. Here the wanderers pitched their tents and were afterwards joined by Nahor and Milcah. Prosperity attended the patriarch wherever he went. He had the instinct for wealth, a characteristic not wanting in the sons of Shem today. In the course of a few years Terah died and a second call came to the family.

Abram Brought Into Realization of Purposes of God

Then God spoke again, and in a clearer voice than before. "Get thee out of thy country . . . unto the land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation: and in thee shall all of the families of the earth be blessed." Grace is growth. God had been unfolding himself, as he ever does to those who listen. The second migration was far more spectacular than the first. Nahor remained behind, but Lot united his forces with those of his uncle and together they took up their march toward the southwest. The whole company is supposed to have numbered about 1,000. Haran proved to be only a bend in the road, and Canaan again became their objective point, as at the first. We are so often halted in our purposes for the better preparation to meet what is to come.

The story of the journey history does not fully record, but there are a few footprints that indicate the way. Bethel, Moreh and Sichem are familiar names. The patriarch surveyed the land and realized the purpose that God had in reserve. It was the land of promise—the home of David and the Christ. Faith had become sight.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins.

ANALYSIS—The call of Abram is the starting point of modern history. Before Abram could get into Palestine he must get out of Ur. The secret of his life was not the strength of his will but the clearness of his faith. He kept that faith alive by building an altar wherever he went.

We have dug deep enough into the ruins of ancient empires to know that the religion of the Old Testament—monotheistic, moral, spiritual—had its origin in none of the heathen codes. Where did this conception of one God who made the heavens and the earth—and still rules both—come from? Assyria did not know it, nor did Egypt, nor did Greece. Whence came this conception of a God who could not be represented by the bull nor yet by the man? Whence came this God who punished sensuality with death? Whence came this thought of an omnipresent beneficent providence, instead of a diabolic malevolence lying in wait? Suddenly, out of this welter of idolatry, sensuality and superstition, there issues the clear conception of one only supreme, omnipotent, omniscient and benevolent God; infinitely wise, pure and loving. Whence came that religion at a bound? There is only one answer. It came by revelation to a man chosen to hold it, teach it, live it. The call of Abraham is the birth of the modern world. And the man holding the germ of this faith in his heart was placed where three continents, the three continents of the Old World, meet. We can trace the modern world right back to Abraham and to his appointed home, Palestine. And we find it nowhere else. It was of God. Man did not find it by his own wisdom. It was divinely revealed to him from heaven (I. Cor. 1:21).

Abram Commanded to Get Out in Order to Get In Verse 1—Undoubtedly Abram, whose home was in Ur, had often felt his soul oppressed by what passed for religion among his compatriots. Ur is situated about 120 miles up the Euphrates from the Persian gulf. It was the center of power, of wealth and of fashion. But what religion it had was "earthly, sensual, devilish." Under every such debased religion there arise beings weary and disgusted with a life which contravenes all their spiritual instincts. Such a one was Plato. Such a one was the father of Pandita Ramabai. And when "in deep dream or solemn vision" the impulse came to Abram to found a new religion, he recognized that his first duty was to get away from the old. The man who would live a sober life must get out of his drinking "set." The man who would live a child of God must get away even from his own kindred, if his kindred are all hopelessly involved in the sin of the age and place.

Verse 2—In the very call, the first call to Abram, made hundreds of years before a word of the Old Testament was reduced to writing, the purpose of the religion to be fostered in Palestine is said to be the blessing of mankind. The germ of the New Testament salvation lies in the first call of the Old.

Verse 3—This is the more fully brought out in the third verse. His fidelity shall not only bless his family but the universal family embracing mankind. What Abram could not originate he could transmit.

Abram Ready to Risk All His Fortune for God

Verse 4—The route which Abram took led him some hundreds of miles to the north, but Palestine was his objective point. He followed up the Euphrates to its source in the mountains of Armenia, having with him a great company of his relatives and their servants (v. 5). The district he would have to cross had he gone more direct would have furnished no sustenance for his slow moving and multitudinous flocks. Abram was not seeking his fortune, he was risking it all for God (ch. 13:2). The "father of the faithful" was not like the young man who refused to follow Christ because of his "great possessions" (Matt. 19:22).

Verse 5—When Abram crossed over to the Damascus route and began to move southward he realized that he was likely to be opposed as an intruder. The Canaanite was in the land and the Canaanite had never welcomed strangers, especially those coming with such a retinue as this sheik from Ur brought with him. To add to his difficulties and make his advent even more distasteful, Canaan was suffering from one of its periodical droughts and the inhabitants had possibly fought among themselves for favorable pasturage. If Abram had been seeking reasons for noncompliance with the divine commands they would have been easily found. If he had had any doubt as to the future home of his descendants he would probably at least have left Lot and his half-heathen family behind. But what is told us in verse 6 shows that what he believed he believed with all his soul, and so became "the father of all them that believe" (Rom. 4:11).

Wherever Abram Stayed, There He Built an Altar to God

Verse 7—The Bible will tolerate no image of God, nor will it condone the absence of an altar. We cannot fitly represent God's person nor can we safely neglect his worship. Coming into Palestine when the land was burned dry, Abram could not long stay in any one place; but wherever he stayed there he built a shrine. When Abram stopped at Moreh he built an altar at Moreh, and when he went on to other fields between Bethel and Ai he built one there. One could have followed Abram by his altars.

Verse 9—It seems to have been the divine purpose to make Abram thoroughly acquainted with all of Palestine where his descendants were to make their home. In some respects it was not so goodly a land as that he had left behind him. Its mountains were rocky, its valleys were narrow, its rivers insufficient for irrigation and its rainfall uncertain. But he made no complaint. He was rich in faith and he left it to God to make plain his providences. He knew that there was something better for men than flocks and herds.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning February 9, 1913

TOPIC—The two debtors. Luke 7:41-42.

Interpretation of the parable depends directly upon a knowledge of circumstances and participants. Whoever the woman was who was a sinner, she owed all that was of worth in her life to Jesus. Somewhere in the midst of her hopeless, reckless way, she had encountered him, and had felt the holy attractiveness of his personality. Then, it may be, a weary, sin-sick soul she had sought him out and had talked with him for a little while. In that brief interval she had obtained a vision of a purity exalted above all imagination, a purity that might become hers, as she followed Jesus.

—

Jesus does not condemn her, but there is no possibility of misunderstanding him. The penitent woman, kneeling at his feet, is not in the slightest danger of believing that Jesus thought less seriously of her sin than did Simon the Pharisee. It was Jesus who had revealed its enormity to her, and this was something Simon could never have done. But the very power of purity that showed her sin to her contained within itself an attractive quality that drew her closer to the Saviour's presence.

—

This woman had been forgiven much. Her heart was overflowing with affection and gratitude. And the love that she bore to Jesus was so strong as to make her indifferent to all consequences that the profession of this love might entail. Having learned that Jesus was at dinner in the house of Simon, she followed him thither.

There is an element of surprise in Luke's own narrative, when he says, in the beginning of verse 37, "And behold, a woman!" But a banquet in a private house in Palestine was always more or less of a public occasion. Other people of the town, besides the invited guests, were at liberty to enter the house, and take seats, which had been set around the wall for their convenience. Thence they could hold conversation with the guests; and, in the case of the poor at least, they would expect to be fed with scraps from the table. There was nothing extraordinary about the presence of this sinful woman in the house, except that she was a sinner, and the house belonged to a Pharisee.

She pressed her way into the room and fell at the feet of Jesus, who was reclining at the table. The strain of her effort, the sense of her shame as the eyes of the guests were fixed upon her, conjoined with the rushing consciousness that she was in the presence of her Friend and Saviour, unnerved her for the moment. Her tears fell fast upon the Master's feet; with her loosened hair she covered her face and wiped his feet. This was the undesigned part of the event. Then she kissed his feet again and again, and anointed them with the fragrant oil which she had brought for the purpose.

—

Simon was scandalized. He knew nothing of the previous relations of Jesus and the woman, and he could not understand the present scene. And yet Simon was not a bad man. He was better than most conventional Jews.

—

Simon had invited Jesus to dinner. Herein he surpassed most of the Pharisees; for Jesus had many more opportunities of dining with the sinners than of dining with the righteous. Simon regarded Jesus as a "teacher." He might indeed be more. He might be a prophet. But Jesus was a man of unusual type; Simon was conventional in his views; and Simon had not yet come to an estimate of Jesus. One reason why he invited him to his house as his guest was that he hoped thereby to know more about him, and to judge him better than before. Simon was not devoted to Jesus; he was critical.

Evidently he did not regard Jesus as a social equal. He failed to wash his feet, to kiss his cheek and to anoint his head. At an ordinary dinner some of these courtesies might be omitted, but the washing of the feet was requisite to all true hospitality. Simon thought that Jesus had been brought up in rusticity; he would naturally know nothing of the manners of the rabbinical schools, or of the culture of polite society.

—

He had evidently not heard of the conversion of the woman, so recent was it. If he was shocked at her effrontery, still more shocked was he at Jesus' acquiescence in her action. He could only think that Jesus was no prophet, else would he have had the discernment to know who and what manner of person this woman was. He did not speak this thought, but Jesus read it, and answered it.

—

"Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee." Jesus would not only publicly justify the woman at his feet; he would also wholly save Simon, if that were possible. The critical moment of Simon's life had come. Hesitatingly, and yet respectfully, he answered, "Teacher, say on." The Master spoke to the unsuspecting Simon, and Simon stood self-convicted. This woman had been forgiven ten times as much as Simon, and her love was ten times as great. There are some things beyond the understanding of little sinners, like Simon; and one of them is the unspeakably great value of the devotion of the heart that loves much. And Jesus, in his biting, cutting words, was seeking not to rebuke Simon's pride and incivility to his guest but to lay bare the depths of Simon's soul, that he might forever heal him.

—

Then must a man be a great sinner like this woman, in order to have as great a love? No. His conduct need not be like hers at all. But he must be like her in having a great sense of sin. And this he will have if he has ever seen himself in the light of Jesus Christ. There can be no great love toward the Saviour, and no great saintship, that does not involve the penitent's extreme contrition.

—

Was Simon, the little debtor, saved? Was he changed, in spirit, into a great debtor? We believe that he was. At least he did not join with his guests in the expression of horror at the presumption of Jesus in forgiving sins.

—

And the sinful woman! Let us thank God that, during the days of the public ministry of our Lord, there was found one heart that, having been saved to the uttermost, loved with so great a love.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

February 16, 1913

THE BIG FIGHT

TOPIC—Bulletins from the temperance war. Rev. 13:1-8; 19:11, 12, 19, 20.

The most advanced temperance sentiment in the English-speaking or European world is to be found in North America. Here a fair majority of the population do not use intoxicants at all. In no considerable section of our North American life is there any such elaborate social drinking as prevails in Europe. In this land it is quite as good form to abstain from wine as to use it. A man does not here have to apologize for being a total abstainer. The common sentiment supports the person who does not make even a casual use of light intoxicants.

—

The sound, wholesome, common sense of the people is solving the temperance question. The sane and practical person reasons somewhat after this fashion: "Liquor does a lot of harm. It does practically no good. Its claim to existence is founded upon the temporary pleasant sensation which it affords. But why jeopardize one's real welfare—for absolutely nobody is beyond the possibility of risk in using liquor—and why countenance a thing which, on the whole, is bad for all of us, merely for the sake of a pleasant sensation? The game is not worth the candle. The wiser way is to do without the drink. A man must not be such a slave to his tastes that he will put the tickling of his palate above the actual safety of other men's bodies and spirits." And that argument is sound.

—

The most powerful ally which the temperance cause has had for a generation is the support of a host of strong daily newspapers. They are producing a new kind of temperance literature, measured to the needs of the man of the street.

—

Not only is it true that the drunkard cannot stand alone; it is equally true that he cannot fall alone.

—

If somebody could invent a mirror which would enable an intoxicated person to see straight long enough to behold himself as he is, there would be a great many sudden reformations among chronic tipplers.

—

This is the social service day in church and state. The trend is good. But it is in danger of becoming a mere fad and profession, a vogue without sustaining power. Over and over again real public leaders will have to raise the warning that the vital heart of all social service is a sincere spirit of self-sacrifice for the sake of others. Without self-denial social service will become "as idle as a painted ship, upon a painted ocean." The direct bearing of this principle on the temperance question is clear. The strong will bear the burdens of the weak. The men and women who feel able to sup wine with their meals without hurt to themselves will nevertheless abstain in order that they may be counted on the side of the men and women who need encouragement to forego their beer and whisky. The sense of social solidarity will inspire men and women to deny their own tastes for the sake of their fellows' welfare. The realization that the custom of drinking intoxicating liquors, considered as a whole, is detrimental to the welfare of people as a whole, will prompt the new chivalry of our day to cast itself heartily into the cause of the majority. Any possible personal inconvenience or sacrifice to self will not be considered. All of which is but saying, in other words, that the true and abiding basis for temperance is that laid down in the New Testament.

—

Recently I saw, at close range, three great achievers whose names are known to the whole civilized world. In the company with me were perhaps 200 men, not all total abstainers by any means. Therefore it was the more interesting to hear the many comments on the one of the three notables whose face was flushed with wine. He was the man to whom that group might have been expected to be most loyal; yet a note that was partly amusement and partly contempt ran through the comments on him. The men were rather ashamed of him of whom they wanted to be proud. He, the strong in deeds, had descended to weakness in wine. His fellows had kept themselves clear-eyed and steady. The judgment of the beholding company was a rather unusual temperance argument.

—

Not guns but men win wars. Let there be no illusion concerning the present temperance warfare. While methods are useful, methods are not going to destroy the liquor traffic. Only a dominant Christian purpose, the spirit of the Master who "pleased not himself," and who uttered anathemas against those who cause the least of the little ones to perish, can win in this fight with appetite and greed. The spirit of the Saviour alone can overcome the spirit of selfishness.

If we dare to link our will with the will of God, however feebly, however complainingly, if we desire and endeavor not to sin against love, not to nourish hate or strife, to hold out the hand again and again to any message of sympathy or trust, not to struggle for our own profit, not to reject tenderness, to believe in the good faith and the good will of men, we are then in the way. We may make mistakes, we may fail a thousand times, but the key of heaven is in our hands.—A. C. Benson.

Our best moments are not glimpses of another world. They are liftings of this world into the light of God.—Phillips Brooks.

MISSIONARY WORK

American Indians Cheer Dr. Moffett

Some of the observations of Dr. Thomas C. Moffett in his recent tour of Indian missions in the West were stated in an address to the Women's Board of Home Missions in New York recently. Dr. Moffett makes no secret of his admiration for the Indian race. He doesn't even consider extravagant the declaration of one white man that the American Indians are by nature the noblest race any country has ever known. Their independent spirit, their fortitude, their bravery and their sense of fidelity to their friends are marked traits which go to sustain this high estimate. And Dr. Moffett will not admit either that they constitute a dying race. In spite of the decimating effect of disease and liquor, it is his opinion that their number today at least equals the total of twenty-five years ago, and may possibly be even as large as the entire native population on the present territory of the United States when the first white settlers landed. Within the United States, exclusive of Alaska, there are now 1,800 American Indians who may be fairly numbered as Presbyterians. The denomination's work among these includes, besides ordinary congregations, ten mission schools, manned by forty-five workers, and instructing 450 pupils.

The roll of Presbyterians who have ministered to these tribes includes many names as conspicuous as any in missionary history—Whitman, Riggs, Williamson, Spaulding, Stevenson, McBeth and Cook. Of these the venerable Dr. Charles Cook still survives among the Pima and Papago tribes, with whom he has labored for more than forty years and to whom he has brought not only the blessing of the gospel but the blessing of beautifully irrigated farms, where his parishioners live amid the luxuriance of tropical fruit. The school at Tucson, Ariz., maintained for these tribes, Dr. Moffett considers the model Indian school of the whole country. Other important work was mentioned among the Navajos of New Mexico, among the Navajos at Needles, Cal., among the Cherokees and Choctaws at Old Dwight, Okla., among the Sioux in South Dakota, where Dr. John P. Williamson has been at work ten years longer than Dr. Cook in Arizona, and finally the wonderful mission among the Nez Perces in Idaho, where Miss Kate McBeth is the beloved mother of the people and where James Hays, the greatest native pastor yet produced from the Indians, is their church leader.

—

Consecration Rises High in India

Frederick Kehl, an English business man residing in Calcutta, is in close touch with the labors of missionaries all over India, and he writes very hopefully of the prospects of revival in that distant and strange Oriental empire. Evidences of it, he thinks, are already manifest in the quickened zeal of the native churches of India. In one mission alone in the northern part of the empire twenty-nine Indian pastors have recently accepted the voluntary proposition of their congregations to become dependent upon the efforts of their people solely. These pastors have all renounced the $10 salary which they have been receiving each month from their missionary societies and are now depending upon the much reduced pay paid by their own people, not in curerncy but in shares of the field crops of the district.

In Khassieland another remarkable instance of native missionary zeal is seen in the "consecrated rice" collections, which are made once a month from all the Christian families. A rule has been established of saving from the daily food portion a handful of rice each morning and evening, and these savings when collected are sold for the Khassie missionary fund. Families that have a monthly income of no more than $5 are thus giving 25 cents monthly to missions. And the sums so collected are spent to send preachers and teachers to remote villages in the Khassie hills not previously touched by the gospel. Mr. Kehl says that churches moved with this kind of consecration will certainly receive the outpouring of the Spirit, and he urges that throughout the United States and Great Britain all Christian people ought to join in prayer for this blessing on their Indian brethren.

—

Educating a Secretary in Africa

In a recent address in New York, Dr. Cornelius H. Patton of the American Board in Boston gave a striking illustration to support the point that the faith of the church in quick missionary results on foreign fields is by no means as strong as the facts of its experience would justify. He told of attending Sabbath morning service in a church among the Zulus in Natal, Africa. Dr. Patton declared that he never saw anywhere a congregation in which the average of faces suggested a higher degree of sincerity, alertness, cleanliness and intelligence.

But across the front of the church, in startling contrast, sat a row of naked savages, trimmed out in all the flimsy gewgaws of raw barbarism. The men were carrying the deadly native assagais that spilled so much English blood in the war against Cetewayo. Dr. Patton wondered what on earth these people were doing in such surroundings, until the big chief of the clan arose and began an address which made the missionary secretary realize that an object lesson had been prepared for his edification. As the chief stood on the rostrum, clad in all the habiliments of an English gentleman, including a Prince Albert coat, he shouted in a mighty voice, "Stand up!" Thereupon his naked retainers stood stiffly to their feet. Then turning to the secretary, the chief proceeded:

"Here, sir, you see precisely what we ourselves were before your missionary came to live among us. From this to this"—and his hand swept from the savage to the civilized portion of the audience—"we have come. For the difference we thank the people in America who sent our missionaries to us."

Thoroughly appreciating both the dramatic externals and the underlying realities of the object lesson thus furnished him, Dr. Patton replied: "If, sir, I could transport to America all the picture which I see in this room this day I could guarantee to you that there would not remain in all America one man who dared to say that he disbelieved in foreign missions."

—

Mission School for the Deaf in China

Until recently the school for the deaf, here pictured, was the only institution for those thus afflicted in all China. It is located at Chefoo, and is in charge of Mrs. A. T. Mills. Buildings of the China Inland mission are across the street.

Missionary Physician Applauds the Turks

Dr. William S. Dodd, head of the missionary hospital at Konia, Paul's ancient Iconium, after living many years among the Turks does not share the opinion of Turkish character which is entertained even by some missionaries in the Moslem field, and more largely still by Christians who are indifferent to the missionary impulse. Dr. Dodd in fact feels it his duty to exert all the influence within his power to give the Turk a juster standing in Christian estimation than he usually enjoys. In line with this purpose, Dr. Dodd writes to The Near East, published in London, a letter frankly praising the work of the Red Crescent in Constantinople during the late fighting with the Bulgarians. Dr. Dodd and his devoted wife, with some of the nurses from their hospital, went up from Konia to Constantinople as representatives of the American Red Cross as soon as the tide of wounded began to flow into the Turkish capital. They were received by Noureddin Pasha, head of the Turkish medical service, and his Moslem associates, with the most perfect courtesy, and to their delight the Americans discovered that Turkish hospital appointments were up to the most modern standards. The only thing which the Americans found to criticise was a certain excess of red tape in the organization, which in this sense seemed to be rather too perfect.

Dr. Dodd declares that his personal fellowship with Noureddin Pasha and the hospital staff was most delightful. He adds: "The respect accorded to the ladies could not have been excelled, and all was done that was in their power to make us comfortable." Relative to the men treated, Dr. Dodd has also a good word: "The Turks were most grateful patients. Their gratitude for the care given them was ample reward. 'Our own mothers would never have done so much for us,' was an expression heard over and over again." Dr. and Mrs. Dodd have now returned to Konia, but they have unquestionably left behind them in Constantinople a memory of true service which delightfully "commends their Master."

—

Then and Now in Western India

Miss Esther E. Patton of Kolhapur, western India, who has long had charge of an influential girls' school, gives this interesting bit of history: "In the famine of 1877-78 some boys and girls were taken by the Kolhapur missionaries and sheltered in the house now occupied by the Bible women. These orphans went to school with the Indian Christian children. Each caste occupied a corner of the building; the Marathas, Mahars and Mangs took three corners and the then very much despised Christians had the fourth corner. The girls were given a pice a day for coming to school. When the giving of pice stopped all but the Christians left school. The school was reorganized as a school for Indian Christian children. In 1887 Mr. and Mrs. Goheen obtained money and built the small schoolhouse and a small dormitory. When the girls came to their new home there were only seven of them; it seemed as if the buildings were far too large, but in 1896 the dormitory had to be enlarged, and again in 1902 two more dormitories and the large school home were built. There are now 180 girls in the three houses and at least 500 girls have 'had a chance' for a longer or shorter period in the school and home."

—

Board Notes and Announcements

—Results—Korea! Here they are: Mrs. Holmes Forsyth, in her map talk at the Friday meeting in Room 48, Chicago, told of a foreign mission movement in Korea. They are sending missionaries to China, and have $1,000 for their support. At the same meeting Mrs. Elisha Whitehead gave her check for $500 for China as a birthday memorial to her mother, Mrs. George H. Laflin, one of the founders of the Board of the Northwest. In a few minutes another $500 was announced; this from Mrs. T. B. Blackstone. Miss Forman of India, who, with her sister, is spending a few weeks in Chicago at the Moody Institute, appealed for the thousands of deaf mutes, that some educated, Christian deaf mutes might be found in America to go to them.

—The annual meeting of the Board of the Northwest is to be held on April 15 to 17 in Sioux City, Iowa. This early announcement is to give synodical and presbyterial officers ample time to arrange dates which will not conflict.

NEW BOOKS

England's Newest Poet

THE STORY OF A ROUND-HOUSE, and Other Poems, by John Masefield. When an age that is admittedly unpoetic produces a really great poet it is time for some sort of literary jubilee. John Masefield is a poet who may literally be called great. He gave us last year two big poems—one with a religious theme called "The Everlasting Mercy," and one a mad thing of love called "The Widow in Bye Street"; but his newest one is bigger than either of those, and places him definitely in the immortal company of those older Englishmen who told beautiful stories in terms of beautiful poetry.

The theme of "The Story of a Round-House" (the title, by the way, signifies the forecastle of a sailing vessel) is the old, old one of the artist in desperate struggle with a harsh and uncomprehending world. "Dauber," the hero—so called in contempt by his sailing mates—has followed the not unusual course of rebellious artist spirits—run away from home, broken his father's heart and shipped as a sailor in order that he may "paint great ships at sea" before he dies.

"'My mind was clear on what I had to try;
To see the sea and ships and what they meant.
That was the thing I longed to do; so I
Drew and worked hard and studied, and put by,
And thought of nothing else but that one end,
But let all else go hang: love, money, friend.'"

The thing is gripping. Picture the artist's eager striving for beauty, the grim jests of his companions, their cruel practical joking that leads to the destruction of all the Dauber's paintings—

". . . every trace
Of quick perception caught by patient skill
And lines that brought the blood into his face";
.

—and then the swift peace of lines like these, whose stately beauty catches you in a grip that is intense:

"He stayed a moment, leaning on the boat,
Watching the constellations rise and burn,
Until the beauty took him by the throat
So stately is their glittering overturn;
Armies of marching eyes, armies that yearn
With banners rising and falling and passing by Over the empty silence of the sky."

What does Masefield do with his "Dauber"? Well, we will leave that for you to discover; but, to the reviewer, what happens is one of the most solid arguments in our continuous debate upon the worthwhileness of "this long war beneath the stars" that can be made. What is the use of the struggle? Why the epic irony of the flame that leaps and aspires, only to burn out like so much kindling? Mr. Masefield answers all this; and his answer is a passionate creed of faith in living.

Other poems in the volume are so vital and so beautiful as to deserve separate and detailed treatment. There is only space, however, for a word of advice: If you love poetry don't stay unacquainted with John Masefield, the most interesting poetic personality of the day. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.50 net. MARGARET C. ANDERSON.

Religion and Theology

THE SACRED SHRINE: A Study of the Poetry and Art of the Catholic Church, by Yrjo Hirn. The author of this volume is primarily interested in literature and art. He happens to occupy the professorship of æsthetic and modern literature at the University of Finland. It is not art as brought to æsthetic handling but art as the expression of religious thought and sentiment that he aims to expound in this rather unique volume. The title is somewhat mystifying. The author has selected it as the symbol of the expression of the whole religious life. It is around the shrine that the devout worshiper places the diverse outcroppings of his religious beliefs and enthusiasms. Accordingly Professor Hirn goes to the shrine and, from it as a center, studies the historical growth of the various details of ritual and its artistic forms. Particularly is he interested in the religious life of the middle ages and of modern times; and for Europe and European life this means, from the point of view of art, the institutions of the Roman Catholic Church. Thus it comes to pass that the author gives an historical and critical account of the ritual of Roman Catholicism, tracing in the same fashion the growth and inner significance of the worship of the Virgin. This part of his subject occupies nearly three-fourths of the volume. The work is in no way intended to be controversial, although without question it offers many points on which devotees of the Roman Catholic ritual will assume the controversial attitude. For the general reader, however, it will serve as a source of valuable information. [Macmillan Company, New York. $5 net.

THE AUTHORITY OF RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE, by Charles Lewis Slattery. Dr. Slattery's main concern is to vindicate the nonexpert and his views of life and religion as contrasted with the professional theologian. He does not place these two types in sharp antithesis; but he perceives danger in the tendency of the scholar to look upon the opinions of the practical man as possessing little value for purposes of scientific construction. He believes that the complete orbit of truth cannot be fully perceived by the man of pure science; that his habits and tendencies, acquired through severe application to mere method and abstract principle, hide from him aspects of facts quite necessary in a full interpretation of truth. Accordingly, he makes a strong plea for the practical man and his views. He illustrates his argument by holding before the reader's eye the cardinal doctrines of Christian faith and throwing upon them the light of daily experience. But while laying much emphasis on the practical application of Christian doctrine as a source of light upon it, he is ready to concede the value of the expert student's contribution to religious knowledge. His spirit is irenic and will help toward a mutual understanding between scholar and practical man. [Longmans, Green and Company, New York. $1.80 net.

ELEMENTAL FORCES IN HOME MISSIONS, by Lemuel C. Barnes, is a study of America as a mission field. The work is worth consideration, although the style is subject to some criticism. Dr. Charles L. Thompson's commendation carries weight. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 75 cents.

Two Interesting Novels

THE HONORABLE MRS. GARRY, by Mrs. Henry de la Pasture (Lady Clifford). A novelist's greatest difficulty with a heroine who refuses to be a pattern of feminine virtue must be the temptation to exaggerate her faults—in order sufficiently to emphasize them. Mrs. Garry is such a heroine; but Mrs. De la Pasture is too keen a novelist to be led into the pitfall of exaggeration. She gives us a study of a vain, rather silly, characterless woman that has in it nothing of the caricature but a great deal of the truth. Everyone has known a Mrs. Garry; and everyone has known a Tom Garry, her handsome, boyish, honest, adoring young husband. Out of such contrasting temperaments spring most of the ironies of married life; and this author is a past master of the kind of irony that probes deeply but leaves no sting. The setting is English, of course; and the story is really a continuation of a last year's novel called "Master Christopher." [E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. $1.35 net.

HERSELF, by Ethel Sidgwick, is one of the most thoroughly enjoyable novels we've read for a long time, and one so skillfully written that we make great haste to learn something of its author. It develops that she is a young Englishwoman who has written two novels of French and Scotch life, "Promise" and "The Gentleman," with the same perception and finish that make the Irish story "Herself" so distinctive. Realizing the vast temperamental differences between her choice of characters, and the superlative skill with which she appears to assume all three nationalities, one eagerly concedes her a talent of big scope. "Harriet Clench" is a witch for charm, and so lifelike that she sticks in one's mind as a delightful new friend is likely to do. She belongs to that interesting class of persons called "artists," for want of a better term; and she humorously classifies all her Philistine friends as "uncollectibles." But she is by no means a mere visionary; she is sane and sound and practical—and of rare nobility of soul. The Englishman whom she marries and the Irish genius whom she almost loves are drawn with the same inimitable sureness. Truly a work of glorious imaginative power. [Small, Maynard and Company, Boston. $1.35 net.

Miscellaneous

WHO'S WHO, 1913: An Annual Biographical Dictionary. This is the sixty-fifth year of issue of this famous list of contemporary celebrities. Year by year the list grows longer, until now, although the size of the page has been enlarged, the volume numbers over 2,200 pages, exclusive of advertisements. Several similar works are published, with certain defined geographical limitations, but this book makes a broad attempt to include men and women of note from all the world, though the vast majority is British. Among the American names are Miss Jane Addams, Woodrow Wilson, Roosevelt, Taft, Rockefeller, the Pierpont Morgans (senior and junior) and Mr Hearst, the newspaper publisher. Every effort is made to make the brief data authoritative up to the day of closing—the first day of last September. Although the type is small, the book is clearly printed on good paper, and on the whole well meets the public need of a work of reference of this character. [Macmillan Company, New York. $3 net.

THE ART AND BUSINESS OF STORY WRITING, by Walter B. Pitkin. This is one of the first books issued by a professor of the Columbia University School of Journalism since the establishment of that latest influence in American letters. The author testifies to the practical value of the book in relating that classroom productions, written as part of the exercises given in the book, have been sold to high-class magazines for a total of $5,000, many of them from previously unproductive pens. Lest the uninitiated see visions of sudden wealth, he adds, however, that the delight of publishers with manuscripts is usually in inverse ratio to the joy of the writer in composing. The book seeks to have the writer scrutinize mankind as a draughtsman does masses and outlines. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

THE CONSERVATION OF WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD, by Theodore Roosevelt; THE LATENT ENERGIES OF LIFE, by Charles R. Brown; THE CALL OF JESUS TO JOY, by W. E. Griffis; THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES, by W. J. Bryan, and THE MISFORTUNE OF A UNIVERSE WITHOUT PAIN, by Dr. Hillis. Five little preachments done into dainty books, suitable for gifts and easy to carry in the pocket. [Funk and Wagnalls Company, New York. Each 35 cents net.

MAMMOTH CAVE OF KENTUCKY, by Horace Carter Hovey. A new and revised edition of an authoritative work, containing an account of Colossal Cavern, historical notes, descriptive and scientific matters of interest to visitors, based upon new and original explorations. The photographs are of tremendous interest. [John P. Morton and Company, Louisville.

Books Received

Coming to the Communion: A Manual of Instruction for Preparatory Classes and Private Study, by Charles R. Erdman. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. 10 cents.

Marriage Considered from Legal and Ecclesiastical Viewpoints, by Lewis Stockton, Huebner-Bleistein Patents Company, Buffalo.

The Presbyterian Handbook, 1913; edited by William H. Roberts. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. 5 cents.

The Open Hearth

[Writers of letters to The Open Hearth are reminded that excessive length of their contributions operates to shut out other participants in current discussions. Three hundred words is an acceptable maximum. Communications of greater length will be cut down, or will be returned if marked "in full or not at all."]

"Bring Thy Gift to the Altar"

At least mail it. The Bible contains endless references to offerings made to the Lord, or gifts brought to the temple. Evidently it was expected that when a man gave anything to the Lord or for his work the gift should come voluntarily from the impulse of the giver out of a grateful heart. The gift was not to be taken from a man against his will nor begged from him as a favor on his part.

No housekeeper will undertake to keep up a house without funds to do it with. No church can be maintained without funds to pay its minister, to pay for its lighting, heating, cleaning and for the music which lends beauty to the service. The members in regular attendance at its services should be able to know pretty accurately what it costs to keep the church in efficient service. Knowing this, is it not the part of each individual member of the congregation to give a little serious thought to determining just what his share is in the expense of maintaining his church? Having determined that, does his Bible reading seem to justify him in waiting for someone to call on him to ask him to give something toward the church expenses, to urge him to make an offering to the Lord?

When a number of men find it is necessary for their amusement to have a country club or a city club it is usually not difficult to get the money required. One reason it is easier to maintain the club than the church lies in the fact that no one expects to become a club member without paying his full share of the expenses. He pays an initiation fee of $50 or $100 or more and annual dues from $50 up. In a church, for some reason, there are always members perfectly able to bear their proportion of the expense, who for some reason do not feel the need of sharing the burdens of the church, though they enjoy sharing its privileges.

If the real spirit of the beautiful religion of Christ were in the heart of every church member the practice of soliciting funds for the church would be obsolete. Each member realizing his personal responsibility would be eager to know how much his church could use efficiently in the service of God, and having ascertained that, it would be his pleasure and good fortune to give gladly and freely. No man would stop to wonder what his neighbor was giving. He would be content to give for himself as bountifully as his thankfulness to God prompted him. X.

More as to Lay Moderators

I was much interested in what Dr. Niccolls said in The Continent of Jan. 16 on lay moderatorship as applied to the General Assembly. He discusses two subjects—the legality and propriety of electing a layman as moderator, and the advisability of electing Woodrow Wilson or Mr. Bryan as moderator of the General Assembly to be held next May. This latter question is one of personality and policy, and I shall not discuss it. But I do want to say a word on the first question, which is a broader one.

Dr. Niccolls's reasons why an elder may not legally be elected moderator do not appeal to me. One of them is that none has ever been chosen for that office. This is not convincing, in the absence of a positive rule on the subject in our form of government. The fact is, in all probability, that up to this time the occasion has not come when the Assembly thought a particular elder the best man for the place. When that time does come, there is no rule or precedent which will prevent that body from selecting a layman as moderator. The Continent, in its editorial columns, calls attention to the fact that the Assembly of the Southern Church has frequently elected an elder to preside over its deliberations.

It is also urged that in our form of government the pastor's office is "first" in the church. This has no bearing on the subject. The Assembly is made up of ministers and elders in equal numbers. Each is entitled to one vote, so that the clerical members have no more authority or rank there than have the laymen. Our Assembly usually, if not always, selects an elder for vice-moderator, and he sometimes presides at some of the sessions. There is the same authority for selecting an elder as moderator as there is for selecting one for vice-moderator.

Dr. Niccolls refers to the defeat by the presbyteries of a proposed amendment to the form of government permitting the election of an elder as moderator for the Assembly. This proves nothing, because the presbyteries might very well say that the right existed without the amendment and that the choosing of its moderator rested entirely with the Assembly.

Nothing need be said in answer to Dr. Niccolls's point that the great honor of presiding over our greatest church gathering should be reserved to the ministers, who have so few honors in life. To me, the test would seem to be not whether this or that candidate shall receive the "honor" but whose election will best promote the interests of the church.

CHARLES M. WILSON.

Foundation for Anti-Liquor Bill

There is one point in the discussion of the Kenyon-Shepard bill to prevent interstate shipment of liquor into dry territory that, it seems to me, has not been used as vigorously as it should have been.

The argument is made by the opponents of this bill that it will collide with the provision of the constitution which forbids Congress to pass any law restraining or forbidding interstate commerce and that the courts will declare it unconstitutional.

This opposition, in my judgment, fails to take into account the principle established by the supreme court of the United States in the noted George versus Aiken case. This principle is that intoxicating liquor is not an ordinary article of commerce as dry goods and groceries but a dangerous commodity that can be either controlled or eliminated as the public welfare may demand. This puts it on the same basis as dynamite, opium or drugs for immoral purposes, all of which are either controlled or eliminated by act of Congress from interstate commerce.

Our temperance leaders through the press, both secular and religious, ought to argue this point more fully and vigorously for the education of the people as well as to influence Congress. WILLIAM PARSONS.

The Minister and Collections

Church finances have always been a trouble in my experience and I have thought that one of the hindrances comes from the ministers' failing to set an example.

In the many years of my experience I have seen two ministers who set an example. One insisted that the basket be always passed to him. He claimed it as his right. The result was that the church increased the contributions to the boards and put in their subscriptions notably more freely.

It is my opinion that ministers help to make it hard to raise money for church support by hiding their contributions under a bushel. If they would let their light shine without ostentation, it would help more than the amount they contribute. The general opinion seems to be that none as a rule put aside the tenth, and if they do they hide it so thoroughly that they get the credit of neglecting that part of worship, and like pastor like people is the rule.

E. A. GERRARD.

Poses as Bible Society Agent

A man calling himself Rudolph Kunasz has been calling upon ministers representing himself as connected with the American Bible Society and soliciting help. He is not connected in any way with the society. He generally presents himself with a couple of Bibles under his arm. He was in the city of Joliet about the first of the year and was working through Bloomington and Springfield toward East St. Louis, where he claimed he was to work for the American Bible Society among foreigners. He has represented himself as being connected with the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist or any other church that suits his purpose. If any pastor has given him money as a representative of the American Bible Society, will he kindly communicate with the undersigned, in care of the American Bible Society, Chicago?

S. H. KIRKBRIDE.

Korea's Plea to Christendom

Korea has made good. Korea has glorified the cross of Jesus Christ as no other land and people. Korea has been denied higher training in European and American universities for her aspiring sons by her conquerors. High school privileges even have been denied her. Two hundred thousand Koreans are begging for Christian education in Korea now. An emergency exists. Three to five hundred thousand dollars are needed for educational purposes.

Korean advancement has been made almost exclusively by American teachers and American money. The work in Korea is organized. Our teachers are there. The work must be fostered. Four Presbyterian and three Methodist denominations are doing their best to meet the demands, but these denominations are well nigh overwhelmed. Hence should not a plea be made to Christendom?

Korea is the key to the East if the Bible is true. The Bible says, "Ye must be born again." Koreans are born again and have to show fruits of their salvation before they can be received into church membership. The Bible says, "Go work today in my vineyard." Koreans go and work. A missionary explains the gospel two or three times to a Korean. The Korean is converted. He buys a gospel of Mark or John, goes home, away from all missionaries, studies and prays and tells the "good news" to his neighbors, and in sixty or ninety days calls for a missionary to come to his home and organize a church of seventy-five to 300 members.

The Bible says, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." Koreans do. In Central church, Pyeng Yang—the mother of forty-one self-sustaining churches in seventeen years within a radius of fifteen miles of itself—you watch, as I did, the plate pass and you will not see it disregarded by a single soul. Why, you ask, can those poor people contribute when wages are from 17 to 25 cents per day? And Dr. Moffett will tell you that those without work will take a pinch of rice out of a too scanty meal, daily, put it in a consecrated vessel and on Saturday take the rice saved to the grocer and sell it for a contribution to God.

The Bible says, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Koreans do do this very thing. Not an elder in the Korean Church but is able to fill acceptably his pastor's pulpit if he is called away! The Bible says, "Lay up treasures in heaven." Koreans do. An old Korean woman with bleeding feet went limping along to an appointment to a Bible woman's class, and when asked why she went she said, "Why, to teach the precious way to hungry souls."

Seattle, Wash. W. W. BECK.

Explaining Poe's "Raven"

Referring to your recent explanation of "The Raven," for about forty years I have had an opinion of what I believe the true significance of this wonderful but truly pathetic poem. It is a personal experience allegorically expressed of that brilliant but unfortunate poet, Edgar Allan Poe. The characters are the raven, the demon of drink; Lenore, the ideal to which the poet aspired. Pallas was the goddess of wisdom and the fine arts. The choice of this goddess would, I think, indicate that the ideal of Poe's aspiration was intellectual rather than moral. Of course the demon of drink is destructive of the spiritual, moral, intellectual and physical, but there is nothing in the poem to indicate any feeling of solicitude for other than the intellectual. The forgotten lore was doubtless warnings read and received by word of mouth from friends and others, which warnings are hardly ever accepted until too late. The poet seems to have been indulging in a revery which quickly passes on to foreboding and then to hopeless despair. The relative position of the light, the Raven and the bust, by which the shadow was thrown upon the floor at the doorway of exit and entrance was used to represent the perpetual character of the raven's influence. The entrance of the raven by way of the window, not the door, indicates that he was not an invited guest, as no doubt he never is, but an intruder that subtly enters when not sufficiently guarded against.

A careful reading of this poem, possibly the most wonderful in our language, makes the heart bleed even when the exact import of the words is unknown.

This feature of Poe's writings is unique and is paralleled only by music which can play upon the imagination even though the words may not be understood. O. H. COOKE.

Clear Property Titles for Churches

It is probable that almost every pastor, at some time in his career, has seen and felt the need of more businesslike methods in the conduct of our church affairs. One of the most lamentable instances of a loose management of the interests of the church is that which appears in the transfer of property for the benefit of the church.

Two instances of this lack of business foresight, which have resulted disastrously to the church, have lately come to the writer's attention. Years ago a bright and consecrated young preacher was called to the pastorate of a thriving church in a factory town. The outlook for a splendid work was most promising. Members of the firm which conducted the manufacturing enterprise were prominent in the church. One was an elder. There were no saloons in the town. Immigrant labor was not felt to be competing with those who are classed as native Americans. About that time a manse was given to the church and has for years since been the home of the pastor.

Recently, however, the mills were sold. A New York business man now holds the controlling interest. He resides in the metropolis and seldom, it is said, visits the mill town. Further than this, he is not particularly interested in the church there, and, apparently, not overmuch absorbed in the work of any church. This man has discovered that the church has no clear title to the manse and has taken possession of it. The church, which has lately been feeling the problem of maintaining its former vitality in a community rapidly filling up with foreigners, has also had to secure another manse for its pastor, which has meant a severe drain on its lessened resources.

The second case which has come to my notice is of an entirely different nature. There is a neat little church building in a summer resort town not many miles from the eastern seacoast. It has grown in numbers. The Sunday school is crowded for room. An addition to the present building is a crying need. Land adjoining is unoccupied. It would seem that this land belongs to the church. Money would be forthcoming to use in the building plans. Every suggestion looking to an enlargement of the plant has, however, been unavailing, simply because of the old recurring question, "Well, can we go ahead when the deed to the land is not clear?"

And so the Lord's work is not set forward as it ought to be, and what were, no doubt, the plain intentions and wishes of those who gave the property are not fulfilled simply because of a failure to have deeds drawn and recorded according to the ordinary legal procedure. Let those who are disposed to give to the work of the Lord not fail to see that the titles are clear. GEORGE J. BECKER.

Immortality

The article on this topic by Mr. Lavely in The Continent Jan. 2 rings true and clear. There is no satisfactory proof of immortality outside of revelation. As a fact to take place in the future, it is in its very nature incapable of demonstration. History, reason, psychology, science have been invoked to the limit; and from every search the inquirer returns with the confession, "We find probability, almost certainty, but not absolute assurance." The fact remains—no Bible, no knowledge of immortality. Even a resurrection admitted would not prove immortality; there might be a second death. But Jesus Christ assures us, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

Most clearly, most positively, the whole gospel is seminally included in the inspired apostle's saying, "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Of all vain things in the world, the vainest is to look for immortality outside of Christ. R. B. A.

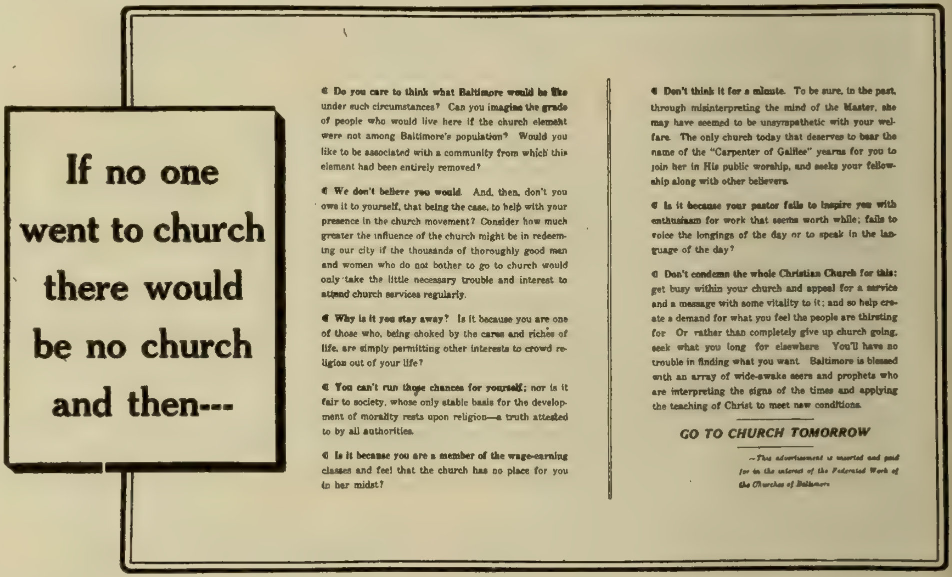
Ways of Working

Get Credit for Going to Church

The pastor of Alpha, Minn., church, Rev. L. Colyn, found during the early winter months that his young people were forsaking the evening service. He had tried the old methods to no avail. He could not be convinced of the modern custom of no evening churchgoing and devised an original scheme to draw the youth. He got a large number of tickets printed, with space for the name and twenty numbers. Every Sunday night that one of the young people attends service he gets one of these numbers punched and when eight numbers are punched the holder is entitled to some special attraction for the ticket holders only. When all twenty numbers are punched the holder gets a pin with the motto "Bound to Win." He must now win others to come to church and is a member of the "Bound to Win Society," which has officers. It has increased the attendance of the evening service at least 60 per cent. Young people 8 to 20 years of age are admitted to this society.

Advertising for Church Attendance

The Baltimore News has established a page of church advertisements which is different from any church advertising being done in this country. The top half of the page, reproduced here, is a logical argument to convince people of the necessity of going to church and is paid for in the interests of the federated work of the churches of Baltimore. The lower portion of the page is packed with small announcements of what appears to be practically every church in the city. Special attention is being paid to the page by the newspaper management, and this experiment will be continued each Saturday through the year.



If no one went to church there would be no church and then---

¶ Do you care to think what Baltimore would be like under such circumstances? Can you imagine the grade of people who would live here if the church element were not among Baltimore's population? Would you like to be associated with a community from which this element had been entirely removed?

¶ We don't believe you would. And, then, don't you owe it to yourself, that being the case, to help with your presence in the church movement? Consider how much greater the influence of the church might be in redeeming our city if the thousands of thoroughly good men and women who do not bother to go to church would only take the little necessary trouble and interest to attend church services regularly.

¶ Why is it you stay away? Is it because you are one of those who, being choked by the cares and riches of life, are simply permitting other interests to crowd religion out of your life?

¶ You can't run those chances for yourself; nor is it fair to society, whose only stable basis for the development of morality rests upon religion—a truth attested to by all authorities.

¶ Is it because you are a member of the wage-earning classes and feel that the church has no place for you in her midst?

¶ Don't think it for a minute. To be sure, in the past, through misinterpreting the mind of the Master, she may have seemed to be unsympathetic with your welfare. The only church today that deserves to bear the name of the "Carpenter of Galilee" yearns for you to join her in His public worship, and seeks your fellowship along with other believers.

¶ Is it because your pastor fails to inspire you with enthusiasm for work that seems worth while; fails to voice the longings of the day or to speak in the language of the day?

¶ Don't condemn the whole Christian Church for this: get busy within your church and appeal for a service and a message with some vitality to it; and so help create a demand for what you feel the people are thirsting for. Or rather than completely give up church going, seek what you long for elsewhere. You'll have no trouble in finding what you want. Baltimore is blessed with an array of wide-awake seers and prophets who are interpreting the signs of the times and applying the teaching of Christ to meet new conditions.

GO TO CHURCH TOMORROW

—This advertisement is inserted and paid for in the interest of the Federated Work of the Churches of Baltimore

Special Cards Tell of Sermon

A sermon on "The Balancing Power of the Holy Spirit" was advertised by Dr. H. O. Scott of First church, Salida, Colo., by a card in imitation of a pass over the mono-rail route as given here:

"THE MONO-RAIL ROUTE"

Pass bearer on the Mono-Rail car leaving First Presbyterian church, corner 3d and F streets, Sunday evening, Dec. 8, at 7:30.
(Not good on interstate trips.)
HARRY OMAR SCOTT, General Manager.
N. B.—The car will be explained before starting.

To Increase Social Life

In an effort to pay greater attention to the social life of a church whose members are widely scattered First church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, recently decided to have four "church nights" in the year on Wednesday evening after each communion. To this meeting the congregation, and specially strangers, were invited. The first meeting Jan. 15 was attended by 200. The first half hour was spent in an informal social way, followed by a song service interspersed with prayer and brief remarks by Dr. E. B. Burkhalter, pastor, and others. Amor H. Sargent, an executive in a large packing plant, in a talk urged the spirit of brotherliness should go beyond the spirit in the fraternal organizations. After further singing an hour was spent socially.

Advertises Reasons for Going to Church

A most interesting demonstration of effective publicity for church services has been made in Williamsport, Pa., during January, where twenty churches in nine denominations have united to buy a page of the morning local paper on which they have printed their announcements of Sunday services and six reasons why the reader should take to himself the motto printed at the head of the page, "I am going to church on Sunday." These reasons are in brief:

President-Elect Wilson says the church is the center of all thinking life.

The pulpit is the freest platform in America.

No other company of men lead the churches in benevolence and philanthropy.

The churches are one in the great essentials.

A city without a church would be—well——

God made me for himself.

The page also advertises the Biederwolf campaign in Williamsport March 23 to April 7. The five Presbyterian churches of the city join in this movement, and Rev. William Charles Hogg, pastor of First church, is the chairman of the committee directing the publicity enterprise.

Tells of Buffalo Advertising Plan

A comprehensive account of the advertising methods which are doing much to maintain Calvary church, Buffalo, in a downtown district is given in Printer's Ink, an advertising journal of New York City, in its issue for Jan. 16. A reproduction of the card used in the preliminary survey of the district about the church is given, as well as a sample of the ads used in the amusement columns of daily papers. Five cents for this copy from the publishers, 12 West 31st street, will be a good investment for every city church, specially the organization in the midst of a changing constituency.

Count the Worshipers

The churches of Elwood, Ind., began a campaign for larger attendance by counting attendance at morning and evening congregations in all churches and finding the percentage of church members who patronize the services. The largest congregation, 240, was found in the Christian church, which has a membership of 900.

Will Employ Trained Nurse

First church, Newark, N. J., recently decided to appoint a trained nurse as an extension of the social service work of the church. The nurse will minister to sick members of the congregation who are unable to provide such service for themselves.

Dr. Weaver Answering The Continent

I have read with interest The Continent's editorial criticising my article in The Presbyterian. You first speak of "new prejudices." If you mean that there were former prejudices then you stated a fact when you used the word "new." However, it would be well to remember that the "prejudices" against the plan of administration of the Board of Home Missions are not just "new," but old enough to have reached a great growth and not too old to continue to grow rapidly.

You then urge "not to use anything but facts." I cannot understand why this is not just as good advice for an editor as for a minister. Yet I propose to make it plain to you and to the readers of The Continent that if you had acquainted yourself with the facts and had used only facts you would have had no material for that editorial.

The following sets forth the facts in figures. These are the exact figures in the report of the treasurer of the Board of Home Missions. If there is an error, it is his and not mine:

Bureau of social service	$ 13,325.81
Department of immigration	6,468.37
Department of Indian missions	6,139.14
Department of church and country life	17,076.17
Salary and expense account of general department	51,649.32
Specials	12,449.09
Labor temple, New York City	11,757.46
Field work, including field secretary	30,117.30
Pastor-evangelists	85,982.68
Synodical missionaries and evangelists	21,113.55
Total	$256,098.89

If we knew what division to make of the $11,757.46, charged to the "Labor temple," and what division to make of the $12,449.09 charged to "specials," we would then know the exact amount of administration expenses. It is plain that they will amount anywhere from $240,000 to $256,098.89.

Now, were you stating a fact or were you not when you said that I had put much more under the head of administration than was fair? The fact is, I had not made it large enough. Another statement in the treasurer's report is that receipts for current work from "living givers" for the year 1911-12 amounted to $381,212.54. Thus it appears that the administration expenses amounted to more than 61 per cent and perhaps as high as 67 per cent.

Your next statement would indicate that the board keeps the funds separate, and that no part of "current donations" is used for "administration expenses." I have not denied this; I do not now deny it. I do say that I cannot find such a fact in Mr. Olin's report. I think it is plain that if you had not been "so anxious to make a case" you would not have written that sentence. You understand as well as I do that money in the possession of the board, not used for administration expenses, might be used for putting a missionary on a needy field.

You criticise me for putting pastor-evangelists on the administrative side. What is the fact? I was just following the example set by the board. A short time ago the Board of Home Missions issued a bulletin entitled "Presbyterian Home Mission Administration." The first question asked in that bulletin is, "Who are they?" In the board's answer to that question we find these words, "About seventy-five pastor-evangelists, under commission of the board." It is the board that puts them on the "administrative side." The treasurer's report shows how much this department costs. Just here I call attention to the fact that I have not found fault with the board's employment of pastor-evangelists. I think they are the only field workers needed.

Your editorial states that I assign the whole expenses of the immigration department to administration. If you will consult the figures in the article in The Presbyterian you will acknowledge that this is not a fact. It thus appears that in all these cases you failed to state facts. I cannot persuade myself that you did it intentionally. You simply failed to study the article and perhaps took the statements of others.

Now you have a right to criticise me. I have a right, as you acknowledge, to criticise the Board of Home Missions. If you can justify the board in its extravagances, well and good. If we can show the church that the administrative expenses are inexcusably extravagant, we have served the church well. I believe that when the church understands that, while the work of the Home Board is confined to twenty-five synods, Cuba, Porto Rico and the distribution of about $64,000 in self-supporting synods, the salaries paid for such administration amount to over $200,000, and the full expenses to not less than $240,000, and perhaps to $256,000, all will agree with us that this is a great extravagance and will insist that the work be done through one general department rather than through a large number of departments. When the church understands that the Foreign Board, with missions in so many parts of the world, gathering and disbursing a much larger amount of money than that gathered and disbursed by the Home Board, expends less than $94,000 for salaries and $123,725 for full expenses, it may still regard the Foreign Board as somewhat extravagant, but the Home Board as woefully so.

J. L. WEAVER.

What One Country Pastor Has Done

BY NELSON BURDICK CHESTER

Rev. J. E. Mallman

This story is told without the knowledge of its hero; the facts were obtained from him with no suspicion on his part of the use to be made of them. It is a tale of the growth of the old Presbyterian church at Shelter Island, N. Y., which has been molding Christian character for more than 104 years, and is today more vigorous and influential than ever. It has taken pardonable pride in its ability to pay the bills without outside help, although its people are neither wealthy nor needy. The permanent population is a little more than 900 and is nearly stationary, the last census showing a slight decrease. The summer population has little effect on this church, being mainly cared for by the union chapel at Shelter Island Heights, where prominent city preachers conduct services. No allowance is to be made, therefore, for special conditions. The work is steady and regular, not the result of any special movement, and only the ordinary methods of an old-fashioned country church are utilized.

The pastorate of Rev. Jacob E. Mallmann began at the beginning of 1896 and still continues. The figures given below include the work to Jan. 1, 1912, sixteen years of steady progress. The additions to membership total 232, an average of nearly fourteen per annum. It is a singular coincidence that last year's addition was just equal to the average and that the present membership is 232.

Congregational expenses increased from $1,518 in 1896 to $2,035 in 1911, with a total for the sixteen years of $39,114. More remarkable is the increase in benevolent gifts from $178 to $1,145, a gain of more than 643 per cent. The average for the sixteen years is $691. Congregational and benevolent contributions for the sixteen years total $50,862, a wonderful record.

The spiritual results are even more startling than the material. Most of the additions to membership have been on confession of faith and have included many men who had previously had little or no interest in the church or religion. A men's prayer and conference meeting is maintained on Sunday afternoons, without organization of any kind. It is purely spontaneous, yet it meets winter and summer and interest never seems to lag.

All this work has been done without special machinery of any kind by a man of great energy, earnestness and sympathy. Wherever there is sorrow he is present, not merely as a sympathizer but as a helper. The solution of the country church problem, or the city church problem, for that matter, is in the hands of such men who put their hearts as well as their heads into the work. The theories put forth regarding such work are good, but they will all fail without a man to work them.

What two elders said

One elder said:

"I don't believe in pensions or annuities for ministers. They ought to earn enough to take care of themselves. What, don't get salary enough? Then let them work six days in the week. Yes, at any sort of a trade, carpentering or selling books or anything else. I don't believe in asking the Church to provide for them, when they ought to provide for themselves."

This elder serves an eastern church and lives upon property that he inherited. The above statements were recently made by him one Sunday morning after the cause of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation had been presented in his Church.

The other elder said

"It may be said that when a minister enters upon the work to which God has called him, he expects to make sacrifices, but is it fair to him to add to his burdens the difficulty of providing properly for his family? Can he perform his duty in a manner that is satisfactory to himself or to his people when his income is insufficient to meet the actual needs of his home?

Under present conditions it is not only difficult for many ministers to live without anxious care, but almost impossible to die without it. The Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation is charged with the duty of providing for aged or disabled ministers, but it can only disburse what it receives, and how inadequate the provision is!

Is it fair to the ministers of the Presbyterian Church, who at best have little opportunity to save for time of need, to allow them, when incapacitated for further service, to lack the very necessities of life? To make suitable provision for these faithful servants of the Master is not a matter of charity but of common justice. The subject is not one that ministers should be called upon to present, but it is one that the laymen of the churches should seriously consider. The responsibility rests with them, and it should be met promptly and generously."

This elder is one of the most prominent business men in America and one of the most liberal contributors to the cause of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation.

Presbyterian Elder, which of these two elders speaks for you?

Presbyterian People, which of these two elders represents your Church?

If you are interested, consult your pastor or address

MINISTERIAL RELIEF AND SUSTENTATION
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
Witherspoon Building, :: Philadelphia, Pa.

Winter Ways at Winona

BY V. M. HATFIELD

PERSONS WHO ARE accustomed to visit Winona Lake during summer, when the chautauqua program is on, or when the Bible conference provides spiritual refreshment, cannot understand, perhaps, that the winter season is also of great interest. There are over a hundred permanent homes in the park, and the families occupying them, together with several hundred students attending the schools and colleges, and numerous visitors, compose a social center numbering on an average about 1,000 persons.

Winona College makes its presence felt throughout forty-eight weeks of the year. It is only five years since it was planted; nevertheless it is a tree of sturdy growth, and is big with promises for coming years. Dr. Jonathan Rigdon, the president, is an educator of long experience and signal results. The attendance during the summer months reaches nearly 1,000, and it is between 200 and 300 through the winter.

Another school with a fine record is the Winona College of Agriculture, of which Dr. J. C. Breckenridge is president. The students are given practical training on the college farm lying just outside the park grounds. Instruction is imparted in class rooms and in the laboratories, but the chief value of education for a farmer lies along the line of actual demonstration. All the conditions incident to life on the farm are met.

The federated church is an organization that has attracted the attention of Winona's friends far and near. No fewer than eighteen different denominations are represented upon the roll. Dr. J. W. Clokey is pastor. The membership of the church numbers above 300. The Sunday school is a live wire, and the current is never off.

The Winona Assembly promises to emerge from its grievous bondage of indebtedness. The settlement offered the creditors has been accepted by a large majority and it is planned that 283 acres of land, 1,053 vacant lots, four of the largest hotels and $100,000 in cash shall be turned over to those who hold claims against the institution, thereby relieving it of the financial obligations that now rest upon it. Freed from those incumbrances Winona can enter upon a career of increased usefulness and prosperity. Dr. Dickey, secretary and general manager of the Winona Assembly and Bible conference, has been in the East much of the time this winter arranging matters for the adjustment of the debt, and soliciting donations for both the assembly and the schools.

Hon. William Jennings Bryan has accepted a position on the new board and received the unanimous nomination for its presidency. He will assume his duties as soon as the reorganization is completed. The new board of directors will be made up of representative men in business and ecclesiastical circles.

Where the Sea Calls to the Mountain

(Continued from page 177)

bounded on three sides by the Pacific. This drive, which has now been extended into a forty-mile road, winding around the shore line and creeping over steep cliffs, following a serpentine course under the stately trees in the park for miles and miles, is from twenty to thirty feet in width and as smooth as a floor. It is the Appian way of California. No wonder automobiles are found here by the hundred every summer. They come from every part of the country, journeying as far as 400 and 500 miles to reach the magnificent drives. It is ideal sport. The breath of the sea carries in it the elixir of life; the tonic effect is felt within a few hours, restoring jaded forces and giving wings to the pulses. On this drive are many places of interest. There is Point Joe, with its great jagged rocks that have claimed their toll of ships that ventured too near. A little farther around stands Bird rock, on which hundreds of cormorants and long-beaked pelicans make their home. Next comes Seal rock, where scores of sea lions bark and bask in the sun. Occasionally one may see an Alaskan seal on the rock, for they sometimes swim down from Behring sea for a few weeks' outing in the warm California waters and then return to their native habitat. They are about twice the size of the sea lion. The latter possess no value as fur producers. Dr. David Starr Jordan, who is one of the highest authorities on seals, tells me that the sea lions belong to the bear family, while the fur seal belongs to the otter family. These animals are not dangerous unless cornered, when they become very ferocious.

Submarine Forestry an Interesting Study

Down on Fan Shell beach below the great sand dunes you find the most exquisitely formed mosses, traced in delicate designs that far exceed the power of man to imitate in laces. These cunningly designed mosses are like aquatic forests waving their graceful forms in the undulating wavelets that lap gently on the sand; or rocked and rent when, driven by the fierce storms of winter, the billows dash furiously over their abode. Submarine forestry promises much of interest to the willing student.

Passing on you are soon winding your way among the famed Monterey cypress trees that cover the steep cliffs which hang above the green-tinted waters of the ocean. They were formerly supposed to be identical with the cedars of Lebanon, but fuller investigation has led to the abandonment of the idea. But they possess a fascination of their own, with their foliage of livid green spread out in level shape to the sky almost like a floor, and their contorted trunks and branches twisted into the most grotesque shapes, so that "the ram's horn" is a most appropriate name for one which bears that title. They cling onto the overhanging rocks with little soil in which to nestle their roots, finding their congenial home exclusively along the edge of the cliffs. They are surely the sailors of the forest.

Suddenly you descend to Pebble beach, with its millions and millions of different-sized pebbles, worn perfectly smooth and round by perhaps countless ages of constant rolling against one another in the surf. As you lie on this beautiful beach and toss the inviting pebbles into the water you can look out across Carmel bay and see Point Lobos distinctly outlined against the gray sky, with its three great peninsular rocks and intervening canons upon which the swelling breakers rush with a sound half roar and half sob.

Leaving this beach, you strike into the forest. On and on you wind around the gently curving way, until at last you are on top of Carmel hill, where you can look out across the entire Monterey peninsula, with the bay sleeping at your feet, dotted with numberless white-sailed fishing boats out for their catch of salmon, for it is one of the great salmon fisheries of the world. Sometimes you may see this bay lying perfectly motionless, like a mirror on whose surface the white-sailed boats are reflected in perfect outline. But no matter what aspect is presented in this panorama that is unrolled far below you, the picture is said by experienced travelers to be more beautiful than anything in Europe.

New Churches Formed Near Denver

At the conclusion of a series of meetings held by Rev. W. L. Breckenridge and Rev. C. K. Powell, pastor-evangelist, Bethel church of Yuma county, Colo., was organized Jan. 19 with forty members, a session of five and a board of trustees of five, all members of the church. The initial act of the new church was to take an offering for home missions. It is grouped with Yuma under the pastorate of Mr. Breckenridge, and is the outgrowth of work begun by Rev. R. Buell Love when a summer student missionary two years ago, and carried on by the pastor-evangelist. James Millar, student supply at Timnath, assisted by Sabbath School Missionary Schureman, conducted a series of meetings at two points ten miles from the first church, also in Yuma county. This resulted in fifty-nine conversions, fifty of whom signed a petition to organize a Presbyterian church.

In Washington county Rev. W. G. White, Akron, has been looking after a fine country work at Abbott, and a church is to be organized there by him and the pastor-evangelist Feb. 24. A building for this church is already under way. These fields are in prosperous open country communities in the "dry land" districts.

New Buildings for Ward-Belmont

Work has already commenced on two handsome new buildings on the campus of Belmont College, Nashvile, Tenn., to increase the capacity of the institution, which will be known as Ward-Belmont after June 1. One of the buildings will be a residence hall, which, with the present hall, will make room for nearly 500 students. The other structure will be an administration building and will cost $100,000. It will contain class rooms and a gymnasium.

The newly consolidated school will be presided over by Dr. Ira Landrith, now president of Ward Seminary, and Dr. J. D. Blanton, vice-president, who now holds the same position with Ward Seminary. Misses Ida E. Hood and Susan L. Heron, founders and principals of Belmont College, will retire June 1 for rest and travel, but will lend constant support to Ward-Belmont. Nine of the wealthiest men of Nashville are backing this new educational enterprise.

Killing Snakes Part of the Job

Record of the work of Rev. Howard N. Frank of Volunteer, S. D., who preaches at five stations, is sufficiently interesting to print in full. Here is an account of what he did during the last quarter of 1912: Services held thirty-one, attendance 884, collection and subscription $91.56, funerals two, weddings two, churches reorganized one, members received on profession two, adult baptisms two, miles traveled on horseback and in rig 1,200, rattlesnakes killed sixty, hospitality to travelers who stopped at my shack, meals gratis, forty; wind and weather including 40 below zero.

Charles David Williams, D. D., bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, diocese of Michigan, preached in Willard Memorial chapel of Auburn Seminary Feb. 3 and gave addresses in the president's room Feb. 4 and 5.

COFFEE THRESHED HER
15 Long Years

"For over fifteen years," writes a patient, hopeful little Illinois woman, "while a coffee drinker, I suffered from spinal irritation and nervous trouble. I was treated by good physicians, but did not get much relief.

"I never suspected that coffee might be aggravating my condition." (Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "I was down-hearted and discouraged, but prayed daily that I might find something to help me.

"Several years ago, while at a friend's house, I drank a cup of Postum and thought I had never tasted anything more delicious.

"From that time on I used Postum instead of coffee and soon began to improve in health, so that now I can walk half a dozen blocks or more with ease, and do many other things that I never thought I would be able to do again in this world.

"My appetite is good, I sleep well and find life is worth living indeed. A lady of my acquaintance said she did not like Postum, it was so weak and tasteless.

"I explained to her the difference when it is made right—boiled according to directions. She was glad to know this, because coffee did not agree with her. Now her folks say they expect to use Postum the rest of their lives." Name given upon request. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Postum now comes in concentrated powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavor is always uniform. Sold by grocers—45 to 50-cup tin 30 cts., 90 to 100-cup tin 50 cents.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2 cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Talk of Sunday School Methods

Sixty-Five Missionaries to Confer in Second Church—Olivet Institute Hopes for New Plant—Mrs. Pullman Gives Organ.

CHICAGO—The meeting of representatives of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work and sixty-five Sunday school missionaries in this city next week promises to be an interesting occasion. The missionaries will make their headquarters at Second church and report there next Saturday. There will be a stereopticon lecture that evening by W. H. Schureman of Colorado. The missionaries will attend service at Second church Sunday evening. Sunday morning they will occupy local pulpits. Monday evening there will be a dinner at the Grand Pacific hotel, with Dr. E. P. Hill as toastmaster. Tuesday evening Dr. and Mrs. John Balcom Shaw will give a reception to the visitors and Wednesday they will confer with students at McCormick Seminary, Thursday afternoon and evening there will be a conference on Sunday school work open to the public. This begins at 2:30 o'clock in Second church. There will be a roll call of schools of Chicago by Rev. Manley F. Allbright of LaGrange, and interesting addresses by Dr. Alexander Henry, Dr. Gerrit Verkuyl, Rev. E. M. Fergusson and Ralph H. Houseman. In the evening Rev. H. M. Steidley and Rev. Hugh W. Rankin will speak. Mr. Allbright of LaGrange has in hand details for the convention in connection with Dr. Shaw and Dr. Hill.

ASKS MEN TO GO TO CHURCH

A circular letter from nine pastors of various denominations sent to 10,000 voters of the South side "Oakland" neighborhood invites the men to attend some church during February and March. The Presbyterian pastors represented are Dr. W. C. Covert and Dr. John N. Freeman of First church and Rev. G. K. Newell of Sixth church.

The annual meeting of Olivet Institute was held at the Auditorium hotel Jan. 27, with 150 at dinner. An illustrated address was given by Rev. Norman B. Barr, the superintendent. The annual reports showed that ten buildings are now being used for the widespreading work, nine of which are rented. It is hoped that a fund for a new plant can be started this year, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the mission from which the institute has developed. The list of volunteer workers in the institute is increasing each year.

Members of the trades unions of the city were especially invited to the Sunday Evening Club last Sabbath to hear Rev. Charles Stelzle, who spoke on "The Church and Social Unrest."

Dr. W. S. Plumer Bryan is a member of the committee which has been appointed to arrange a meeting of all social betterment organizations on Washington's birthday to discuss needed reform in the marriage and divorce laws of the state and nation. Tentative drafts of bills have been made by a volunteer committee, of which Dr. W. C. Covert and other Presbyterians are members.

Dr. Joseph T. Vance of Detroit, formerly pastor of Hyde Park church, will be college preacher at Lake Forest College this year. He will hold the first service on the day of prayer, Feb. 6, speaking five times.

The Christian Endeavor society of South Park church last Saturday visited Hull house. This is the first of several excursions carrying into actual life the study of the social gospel which the young people have been following in their weekly meetings.

GIVES ORGAN TO SECOND CHURCH

Mrs. George M. Pullman has presented Second church with an echo organ and chimes in memory of her husband. It will be installed at once. This $10,000 gift by a member of the church was announced by Dr. John Balcom Shaw last Sunday morning. The new organ will supplement the present large organ and will be placed at the opposite end of the church.

Seventy students of McCormick Seminary have volunteered to visit local churches as young men carrying the appeal of Christ and the ministry. Five teams visited as many churches last Sunday.

Dr. S. Hall Young, Alaskan missionary, will speak in Chicago churches Feb. 21 to March 16.

Dr. J. G. K. McClure, Rev. Norman B. Barr, Dr. C. B. McAfee and Dr. Hugh T. Kerr were among the ministers who assisted Rev. W. J. Ohan in special services in Eleventh church Jan. 6 to 10. A clever advertising card made to resemble a railway ticket added much to the interest and attendance of the services. The card was provided with coupons for each service, each labeled "Not good unless used."

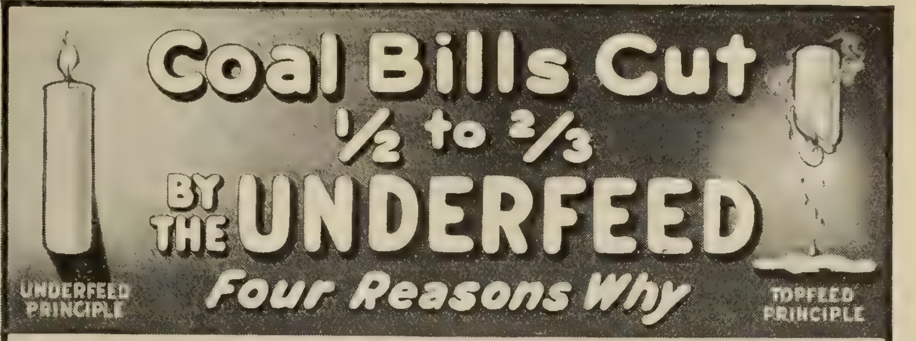
Rev. Charles Stelzle and Dr. Warren H. Wilson of the Home Board spoke at presbytery meeting last Monday.

Rev. J. S. Stowell of the Home Board is in the city to cooperate with pastors in generating interest among Presbyterian churches in "The World in Chicago."

Sunday afternoon meetings were started in Popular hall last Sunday. The hall was packed to hear Rev. George A. Kilbey speak.

Work with Chicago Men

Chicago Presbytery by a hearty vote has accepted the offer of the national Brotherhood to cooperate in a year of special and intensive work among men in the churches of Chicago. Dr. Francis M. Fox has been appointed associate secretary of the national organization and has come to Chicago from Iowa City, Iowa, where he was university pastor at the state university. He formerly was pastor in Fort Wayne, Ind. In conjunction with the local pastors he will study the men's work of the parishes and will help to organize the men for such activities as the local situation requires.



COAL in the Underfeed is fed from below and, like a candle, burns from the top down. Four big savings result—most interestingly explained in the Underfeed Furnace or Boiler Book—either mailed free upon request. Write today, using coupon.

The Underfeed does MORE than cut coal bills ½ to ⅔; it produces in coldest weather, more heat, cleaner heat and more even heat than other heaters, and requires least attention in feeding, regulating and cleaning. Our FREE Book fully explains the Underfeed's big Saving.

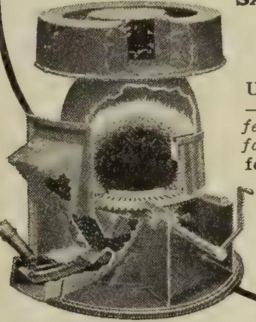
The Four Big Savings

SAVING NO. I—
Burns Cheaper Coal

Cheaper grades of hard or soft coal—costing from $1.50 to $4 less per ton than more expensive grades—are pumped up into the firepot underneath the fire and burn perfectly, from the top down. The Underfeed produces more clean, even heat per ton from cheaper grades of coal than topfeeds from most expensive grades.

SAVING NO. II—
Complete Combustion

Smoke and gases (25 to 40 per cent heat value in coal) pass up through the fire, are consumed and converted into useful heat; whereas in topfeed heaters, smoke and gases go to waste—up the chimney. Combustion being perfect in the Underfeed, no clinkers form and very few ashes.



SAVING NO. III—
All Heat Utilized

Live coals in the Underfeed are on top—nearest the most effective radiating surfaces; whereas in topfeed heaters live coals are smothered by fresh coal, which forms a blanket between the fire and heating surfaces, checking the heat.

SAVING NO. IV—
Self-Cleaning Feature

Since the Underfeed consumes smoke, there is no soot. The fire-glow is upon clean metal responsive to heat: whereas in topfeeds the "fireshine" is upon deadened heating surfaces, coated with soot and grime-insulation. Topfeeds require frequent, troublesome cleaning; Underfeeds are self-cleaning.

S. A. Clow, Fairview Castle, Dowagiac, Mich., writes that he had a five year fuel saving and heat experience with the Underfeed Furnace at his old Chicago home—so satisfactory that he installed an Underfeed Hot Water Boiler in his new Dowagiac home. "The Underfeed Boiler has no equal" he writes. "With 27 outside doors and windows, house exposed on all sides, there was no frost on the windows even when the thermometer registered 26 below zero. Our fuel bill last winter was between $29 and $30."

Write for FREE Book—Warm Air Furnace or Steam or Hot Water Boiler; how to obtain free heating plans and estimate of cost.

The PECK-WILLIAMSON CO. 316 W. 5th St. Cincinnati O.

The Peck-Williamson Co., 316 7. Fifth Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio
Send me UNDERFEED Furnace Book........ Boiler Book..........
[Indicate by X Book you desire]
Name..
Address.......................................
Name of my dealer.............................

One Million Dollars a Year for Church Debts!

JOSEPH W. POWELL, Expert in Church Finance

Brotherhood Organizer, Forward Movement and Dedication Day Leader.
Endorsed and recommended by hundreds of pastors and prominent churchmen of all denominations.
Originator and Owner of the Powell Copyrighted Church Bonds and Seal Register Charts.
Dedications managed and financed as they should be. Run down churches reorganized. Old church debts raised. Funds provided in advance for proposed new churches.

A Revival and Debt-paying at the same time.

Write for a Date. DO IT NOW.

M. G. McDERMOTT, Secretary, 1436 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Would Stop Business for Prayer

Dr. Wylie of Scotch Church Calls Mohammedan Practice an Example to Christians—Jews "Borrow" West End Church.

NEW YORK—That the men in Wall street would stop every day at 12 o'clock to pray was a desire expressed by Dr. David G. Wylie of Scotch church in his sermon the evening of Jan. 26. "The Mohammedans are an example to us Christians," said Dr. Wylie. "Every day at noon, no matter where they are, they stop their work and kneeling down on their prayer rug they say their prayers. Think of men in Wall street when Trinity church strikes the hour of twelve kneeling down and praying. Would to God we could see it."

West End church, of which Dr. A. Edwin Keigwin is pastor, has loaned itself to a new Jewish congregation every Friday evening and Saturday morning, beginning Feb. 9 and continuing indefinitely, for services. This is Temple Isaiah and Dr. Samuel Greenfield is the rabbi. A movable ark will be installed and reformed Jewish services held. The transaction is entirely one of courtesy on the part of the owners, the Jews simply meeting the expenses of the light, heat and janitor's services for their meetings. The Jews will advertise worship at "the Presbyterian synagogue."

Dr. Henry Evertson Cobb completed twenty years as minister of West End Collegiate Reformed church Jan. 31 and his parishioners celebrated the event by giving a dinner and reception to him and Mrs. Cobb at the Marie Antoinette hotel.

Rev. Graham Hunter of Hunt's Point church, has joined the Seventh New York regiment of the National Guard.

Dr. William P. Merrill of Brick church has undertaken to increase its endowment. There is some endowment now, but not nearly enough to make the church independent. Dr. Merrill will hold weekly during Lent a "minister's class" for instruction of boys and girls in the Christian religion preparatory for membership in the church.

Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson of Rochester will begin his pastorate of Lafayette Avenue church, Brooklyn, on Easter Sunday. He preached there Jan. 26.

Confer as to San Francisco in 1915

At the headquarters of the international committee of the Y. M. C. A. last week there was a conference held in which representatives of the Federal Council, the Missionary Education Movement, the Foreign Missions Conference, the Tract Society, the Bible Society and the Y. W. C. A. participated. The subject under consideration was the opportunities for religious work and impression in San Francisco during the Panama exposition in 1915, either by way of preaching at great popular meetings or by way of religious exhibits in the exposition itself. There was long and interesting discussion, but the only action of the conference was to appoint a committee on correspondence and investigation composed of Miss Allen of the Y. W. C. A., Dr. Macfarland of the Federal Council and Mr. Vickery of the Missionary Education Movement.

The Baptist Examiner, a New York weekly which was recently reorganized under a different management, will in the near future begin the publication of a series of articles on "What Other Denominations Are Thinking and Doing." It will start the series with an article on "What Presbyterians Are Thinking and Doing," by Dr. Joseph Dunn Burrell of Classon Avenue church, Brooklyn.

Miss Ellen M. Stone, once a missionary in Turkey, was the principal speaker at the midwinter reception of the Presbyterian Social Union at the Hotel Savoy Monday evening, Feb. 3. She gave an illustrated lecture on "Young Giants of the Balkans."

Dr. Francis L. Marsten, who begins as secretary of the Maine Bible Society this month, preached his final sermon as pastor of Bethany church Jan. 26.

The church extension committee of New York Presbytery is asking for $15,000 to complete paying the debt on the new Italian Church of the Ascension. The committee is erecting churches or parish houses in four other places, and it needs funds to undertake new church buildings in at least three other places. All of these enterprises have received the cordial indorsement of presbytery. The church extension committee is now aiding nineteen churches and missions in Manhattan and the Bronx. It has assisted eleven other churches.

Dr. Wilton Merle-Smith, chairman, and Dr. Jesse F. Forbes, secretary of the church extension committee, organized a new church in the Van Nest section Thursday evening, Jan. 30. At present there is a chapel, and Rev. F. N. Lindsay is in charge. There are about 200 attendants.

At the Monday meeting of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association William T. Ellis of Swarthmore, Pa., editor afield of The Continent, spoke on "Pastor Russell and His Propaganda." Feb. 10 General James Grant Wilson of New York will give his "Recollections of Abraham Lincoln." The following Monday the subject will be "Changes Which Have Taken Place in Religious Conditions in this Country During the Last Half Century," the speaker being Dr. Lyman Abbott of The Outlook.

Open Forum for Social Questions

Moral Leaders of Pittsburg to Speak at Sunday Afternoon Meetings — Leading U. P. Editor Dies in Hospital.

PITTSBURG—This city is to have an open forum for the discussion of religious and social questions Sunday afternoons from Feb. 16 to March 16. It is to be held in Second church under the auspices of presbytery. Feb. 16 the address will be made by Dr. J. H. Snowden on "Are There Spiritual Elements in Social Wrong?" Other speakers and subjects are: Feb. 23, Professor A. G. Taylor, "The Moral Side of the Taylor Systems and of Efficiency Engineering"; March 2, Rev. C. R. Zahnizer, "The Ethics of Minimum Wage and Short Day"; March 9, Professor Charles Scanlon, "The Drink Evil; Cause or Result of Social Degradation?" March 16, C. C. Cooper, "The Church as a Civic Agency."

The Allegheny County Sunday School Association held one of its most successful institutes Jan. 25-27. The Monday evening session in Second church was addressed by Dr. W. E. McCulloch on "Essentials in Effective Evangelism" and J. Denny Oneil, one of Billy Sunday's McKeesport converts, on "Pennsylvania's Opportunity for Temperance." Mr. Oneil is one of the most sought after temperance speakers in this section of the state since the Sunday meetings.

Seventy-six Baptist churches of Pittsburg celebrated a century of organized work in Pittsburg and vicinity Jan. 31 to Feb. 2. The celebration was under the auspices of the Pittsburg Baptist Association in the new Baptist church in Oakland.

Dr. J. D. Sands, for thirty-four years president of the U. P. Board of Publication and for thirteen years its president, died at St. Francis hospital Jan. 29 after a short illness. Dr. Sands was widely known, as he was also associated with The Christian Union Herald and was associate editor of The Christian Instructor.

Rev. Y. Minakushi, who was prominent in the Men and Religion Movement, has been in Pittsburg during the past few days. Jan. 28 he addressed a number of Presbyterians in the Fort Pitt hotel.

Rev. Alexander Mackenzie Lamb of Cleveland occupied Central church, North side, Jan. 26, and will continue to fill the pulpit during the month of February. Rev. Isaac Boice, formerly a missionary in Mexico, has been supplying Blackadore Avenue church, recently made vacant by the resignation of Rev. J. H. Lawther.

P. W. Snyder.

Overtures Need More Votes

Less than half of the presbyteries have reported action on the eight overtures this year. There are 296 presbyteries and the affirmative action of 149 is necessary to adopt. The highest vote so far is on No. 7, with 121 in favor of it. The vote on Jan. 30 as reported by Dr. William H. Roberts, stated clerk of General Assembly, follows:

	Yes	No
No. 1 Federated churches	101	16
No. 2 Federated churches	98	19
No. 3 Federated churches	105	13
No. 4 Federated churches	97	17
No. 5 Federated churches	100	12
No. 6 Assembly reduction	78	40
No. 7 Sessional rolls	121	8
No. 8 Sessional rolls	117	9

Good Citizenship Their Topic

Mass Meeting in Philadelphia for Conference in Portland—Meeting of Social Union Largely Attended.

PHILADELPHIA—A conference and mass meeting, preliminary to the second world's Christian citizenship conference to be held the coming summer in Portland, Ore., took place Jan. 28. The day sessions were held in Chambers-Wylie church and the evening meetings in the Academy of Music. Among those who spoke were Dr. J. R. Wylie, Beaver Falls; Dr. H. C. Minton, Trenton, N. J.; William A. Pike and Bishop Garland of Philadelphia. Judge Staake presided at the evening meeting and the principal address was made by ex-Governor Stokes of New Jersey.

The January banquet of the Presbyterian Social Union was attended by about 250 men. The principal speaker was ex-Governor Fort of New Jersey. He discoursed on "Religion, Business and Politics." Dr. Reeve of Fourth church spoke on the importance of bringing children into the church and Dr. John Grant Newman of Chambers-Wylie on "The Church's Duty Toward the City's Foreign Population." It was announced that Moderator M. A. Matthews and Bishop Berry of the Methodist Church would be the speakers at the February banquet of the union.

Dr. J. C. McCracken, president of the University of Pennsylvania's medical school at Canton, China, spoke at the Richardson Memorial church Sunday school, Dr. O. G. McDowell pastor, on Visitors' Day. "New Views of Old Places" was the subject of an illustrated lecture by Professor C. O. Althouse of Central high school on a recent evening at the same church.

Memorial for Honored Pastor

At a recent memorial service to Rev. Edward B. Bruen in Scots church tributes were paid to the memory of the deceased by the pastor, Dr. D. Stuart Moore, and by Doctors S. T. Lowrie and J. A. Worden. Mr. Bruen, who died in December, was the oldest Presbyterian minister in Philadelphia and had preached in its churches for more than sixty years.

A paper read before the Presbyterian ministers by Dr. S. H. Cox of Central Congregational church on "The Realities of Experience the Social Expression of Individual Righteousness" was the occasion of a heated discussion. The faithful secretary for thirty years, Dr. William Hutton, is sadly missed from the meeting. He is suffering from a painful malady.

The attendance at the illustrated lecture of Dr. William H. Oxtoby in Westminster hall on the Waldensians was large. Dr. R. H. Morris presided. In the reelection of officers of the Waldensian Society Rev. Finley M. Wilson, Doctors E. Y. Hill and R. H. Morris were added as vice-presidents.

Large audiences greeted Dr. Jarvis of Bethany on the Sabbath succeeding his return from Nebraska in the interests of the Board of Education. January communion was largely attended.

Miss Mary Peacock is conducting a normal mission study class for members of the woman's missionary societies on six successive Tuesdays. Her subject is "Mormonism." A popular mission class on "China's New Day" will be held in Westminster hall on Fridays from 11 to 12 during February and March. On Feb. 7 Miss M. W. Kerr will present "China Through Forty Centuries." On Feb. 14 Mrs. B. B. Comegys will speak of "The Break with the Past."

Dr. John Eliot Wright, a former pastor of Market Square church, Germantown, has been elected chaplain of the state house of representatives.

W. P. White.

Rev. A. A. Pfanstiehl sailed Tuesday for Rotterdam, Holland, expecting to remain in Europe for a year and a half. He goes equipped with a great quantity of slides and reels to lecture with stereopticon on American cities, industries and scenery, in Holland, Germany, Italy and Great Britain. Dr. Pfanstiehl's linguistic abilities will enable him to deliver his lectures in Holland and Germany in the native tongue. He has resigned the pastorate which he has held for four and a half prosperous years over Second Reformed church, Somerville, N. J., and has transferred his membership back to the Presbytery of Chicago, where he long served Highland Park church.

Creates Church Extension Board

Los Angeles Follows Eastern Cities in Home Mission Work – Two Pastors Resign – Call to Dr. Matthews Unsettled.

LOS ANGELES—Rev. John Ferguson has resigned St. Paul's church after a pastorate of a year and has accepted the invitation of Burbank church, and has begun his work.

Rev. S. T. Montgomery has resigned Alhambra church, where he had had a pastorate marked by growth and enlargement both as to membership and buildings. He has not yet committed himself to any new work. For some months he was in poor health.

Los Angeles Presbytery has taken radical action as to its home mission work. At present there are home mission, church extension and evangelistic committees, but beginning with April 1 there will be but one committee, designated the Church Extension Board, and it will consist of seven ministers and eight elders. It has been given power to do what seems necessary and its line of work is modeled after that of the Presbyteries of Chicago and Pittsburg. There is great need of aggressive work, as the growth in all directions is phenomenal. President Baer made a statement of the progress of the new buildings for Occidental College and his plans. A strong committee of presbytery has been appointed to cooperate with President Baer in a campaign for an enlargement of the endowment.

Rev. Clarence Spaulding, a Rhodes scholarship graduate of Occidental College, has received and accepted a call to Westminster church, Pasadena.

Rev. Robert W. Holman, the pastor until September of the only colored Presbyterian church on the coast, has been dismissed to Oakland Presbytery.

Jan. 15 was made notable by the presence of Moderator Matthews in Los Angeles. It is an open secret that the pastoral committee of Immanuel church held a conference with Dr. Matthews as to their vacant pulpit, but no definite announcement has been made.

Rev. Joseph R. Compton, for over thirteen years pastor of Second church, has been called to pass through deep waters, his wife passing away after much suffering Jan. 13. She was a beautiful character and a devoted helpmeet.

ELIJAH OXYMEL.

Deacons Serve Dinner to Men

Brotherhood Honors New Pastor of North Church – Cincinnati Loses Two Active Women – The China Campaign.

CINCINNATI — Increased activity among men is one of the most encouraging signs of the Presbyterian times in and about this city. One of the recent notable men's gatherings was held at North church, where for the first time in the history of that old organization the men were hosts. The board of deacons served an excellent dinner. Nearly seventy-five men sat down to the feast which was arranged for Rev. Otho S. Thornberry, the new pastor, who was stirred by the evidences of support he might expect from the men. Norwood chapter was called on for two speakers. Ren Mulford, Jr., himself an old North side church boy, spoke of the opportunity to increase "official averages," and E. F. Evans, president of the Union of the Brotherhood in Cincinnati Presbytery, urged organization for more aggressive work.

Death has taken two women whose hearts were wrapped up in the better things of church life. Mrs. Peter G. Thomson of College Hill church was fatally stricken at her winter home on Sanibel island, Fla. Another sudden affliction fell hard upon Mount Auburn church, which lost Mrs. Matthew Addy. A gentlewoman of wealth, love and great capacity for service, she will be sadly missed. Her fortune was ever at the command of all good causes.

Another death that touched old church associations here was that of Mary Eva Reynolds, who passed away at Elizabeth, N. J. She was the granddaughter of the late Rev. A. J. Reynolds, who for years was the patriarch of Cincinnati Presbytery. She was buried from her grandfather's old church at Norwood and interment was at Spring Grove.

Mrs. Fred J. Brunner is giving an illustrated lecture on "Panama" for Presbyterian ladies' societies of suburban churches.

The Revised Hymnal of the Presbyterian Church

The revised edition of THE HYMNAL recently published should be carefully considered for adoption by every Presbyterian Church in the country for three very sufficient reasons:

1. It is the authorized Hymnal of the Church.
2. It is by far the best hymn-book before the public to-day.
3. It is the cheapest book on the market.

One competent reviewer says:

"For writing that has motor power to drive and shape life one can find, outside the Bible, no rival to such a collection of Christian hymns as this. This is the theological textbook for ninety-nine in every hundred of our membership. And one is astonished anew in reading over casually these splendid poems, to find again and again phrases in old hymns that have been the inspiration, and furnished the motive of some of the purest gems of recent poetry."

Another reviewer has to say:

"The music is such as any congregation, under the lead of a good choir, can soon master, and, in doing so, become acquainted with music of the best type of real church music."

From the point of manufacture

THE HYMNAL has been entirely remade. The price, however, has been fixed unusually low so as to enable churches of every grade to share in its advantages.

PRICES
8vo. Cloth, $1.00
12mo. " .75
Words Only, " .65

Special rates on introduction orders.
Send for sample copy.

THE PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION
Headquarters: PHILADELPHIA, Witherspoon Building
New York, 156 Fifth Avenue
Chicago, 509 S. Wabash Avenue
St. Louis, 505 N. Seventh Street
San Francisco, 400 Sutter Street
Nashville, 415 Church Street
Pittsburgh, 204 Fulton Building
Cincinnati, 420 Elm Street

Westwood's Sunday school announces a novelty—a Valentine party by the Sunday school for the piano fund.

Dr. William McKibbin of Lane Seminary spoke at the last meeting of the Evangelical Alliance on the meeting of the Federal Council of Churches.

Presbyterians are massing for the China campaign, which is to be waged here Feb. 7-10, commencing with a Lane Seminary meeting.

Norwood's Sunshine girls took advantage of the baccalaureate sermon of Rev. George W. Shields to the February graduating class of Norwood high school and welcomed the class at Sunday school before church service.

REN MULFORD, JR.

Surveyors for Brooklyn

Brooklyn Presbytery has decided to put to the test the value of the maxim, "Know thyself." In order to know itself it has called in an expert ecclesiastical diagnostician, Dr. William P. Shriver, superintendent of the immigration department of the Board of Home Missions, as consulting specialist. His interest is, of course, particularly with immigrants in Brooklyn, but he has agreed, while finding out this information for his own department, to make a survey that will cover a mass of other facts important for the presbytery to know about its field. Particularly the presbytery wishes to know any points on which an impartial investigator can fairly charge it with being inefficient. "Efficiency" is to be the watchword under which the presbytery advances to this task. Moderator Burrell, following the January meeting at which the presbytery voted to authorize Dr. Shriver to go ahead, declared that in his judgment this was the most important action of the body for many years. Rev. Herbert B. Howe will assist Dr. Shriver in the canvass. Careful questionaires are now being sent out to all pastors.

As a part of the same movement, arrangements are being made for a mass meeting of the churches of presbytery in the Academy of Music the evening of March 5, when Moderator Matthews of Seattle will be the speaker.

Clergy and Laity

John L. Roemer, D. D., pastor of Tyler Place church, St. Louis, spent a few days recently visiting his classmate, Rev. Charles Chalfant, pastor of First church of Boise, Idaho.

Mrs. E. V. Robbins, a stanch California Presbyterian on whom the years have no aging effect, has published through the Westminster book store of San Francisco a vigorous pamphlet on the "Virgin Birth," rebuking both rationalist and Romanist divergences from biblical doctrine on that point.

Dr. Edward H. Dickinson, pastor of North Presbyterian church, Buffalo, has been sadly bereaved by the suicide of his son, Burgess Dickinson, in New York City. The young man was 28 years of age, a graduate of Yale and had obtained considerable note as a musical composer. He had for some time been subject to fits of melancholy.

Uniting Agencies for Moral Good

Omaha Feels Need of Greater Sentiment for Law Enforcement—Elder and Wife Honored—Churches Are Active.

OMAHA—The crystallizing of sentiment for the enforcement of laws with a distinctly moral bearing has been a recognized need in this city. The agencies now at work either do not have a body of hearers sufficiently large to create public sentiment, as with the Protestant churches, or they lack freedom because of business or municipal affiliations, as with the daily press. While not reflecting on the limitations of either class of influences, many are of the conviction that both together are not at present sufficient for the task. The best of both interests would welcome a third agency to supplement the work of direct moral uplift arising through making operative statutes of the highest type and effectiveness. Many influential citizens are at work quietly effecting an organization to this end.

The cause of religion in this city has lost a man of uncommon ability as a mission leader in the passing away of Charles F. Shaw of Westminster church. He has for years superintended the most aggressive church mission in the city, Westminster chapel.

Rev. John F. Mueller has begun his work with First German church by issuing the initial number of a periodical entitled Der Hausbesucher (The Home Visitor).

Lowe Avenue congregation united heartily in the celebration of the golden anniversary of its oldest elder and his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Fleming were on this occasion recipients of gold coin in amount commemorating their years of married life.

Rev. Arthur J. McClung in his new work at Benson church is seeing a quickening of the parish interests through the organization of a chorus choir and the launching of regular social events.

Rev. Walter N. Halsey as dean is issuing the University of Omaha Reporter, a folder setting forth the activities of that institution.

Fairview and Parkvale churches have each added much needed improvements to their buildings. The former installed a furnace and the latter constructed a two-room addition.

Third church is being supplied by Rev. George Jack, formerly of Glasgow, Scotland.

First church has a class of sixteen in teacher training. The pastor, Dr. Jenks, is instructor.

RALPH H. HOUSEMAN.

Progress of Evangelism

Dr. Francis E. Smiley and W. P. Hanson closed an evangelistic campaign in Mitchell, Neb., Feb. 2.

A large number have made professions through the work of Dr. H. P. Dunlop at Albany and Millersburg, Ill.

Dr. George N. Luccock of Oak Park, Ill., assisted Dr. E. E. Hastings of Fort Dodge, Iowa, in special services which began Jan. 27.

Rev. W. F. Finch of Slayton, Minn., and Dr. T. R. Paden, Mankato, Minn., have been conducting services for two weeks in St. Peter, Minn., church.

In the West side churches of Scranton, Pa., Evangelist Bob Jones has just closed a two weeks' meeting with ten united churches. Large crowds have been in attendance.

The churches of Forest, Ohio, are planning union evangelistic meetings during March. They will be held in the Presbyterian church and the local pastors will be their own evangelists.

Rev. Elmer P. Loose of Waukesha, Wis., and party have been engaged in a union meeting in Ukiah, Cal., since Jan. 5 and there is prospect of great good to all the churches as well as the entire community.

Special services were held recently at Grand Rapids, Ohio, by the pastor, Rev. F. G. Schlotter, with the assistance of Rev. D. H. Johnston. Services are being held at Weston with the help of Mr. Johnson, presbyterial chairman for evangelism.

Revival services in the Wellsville, Mo., church by Rev. S. T. Larkin have been aided by the publication of The Wellsville Daily News, of which Mr. Larkin is editor. This is the first daily paper published in the city and in addition to current news items, each issue has some pungent comment on man's relation to the church.

Tusculum Bulletin No. 1

The Story of Tusculum

℄ Tusculum College is one of the most useful and unique institutions of learning in the United States.

℄ It was founded in 1794 by a heroic Princetonian named Hezekiah Balch. It perpetuates the work also of the noted pioneer Samuel Doak.

℄ For 119 years it has kept the lamp of Christian education burning among the people of East Tennessee.

℄ Tusculum is one of the most historic of Southern Colleges. It has lived through a century of heroism.

℄ It has survived poverty and neglect and civil war, and stands today as a monument of Scotch-Irish tenacity.

℄ Tusculum is a PRACTICAL CHRISTIAN COLLEGE. We are proud of its success and we want all the readers of THE CONTINENT to know about it.

C. O. GRAY, President, Greeneville, Tenn.

(See Next Week's Bulletin.)

The Carroll College gospel team held meetings during the vacation at Elkhorn, Wis.

Ossian, Ind., church held a series of meetings during the early part of January. The pastor, Rev. Frank K. Baker, was assisted by George "Irish" McGowan. The church has been aroused to greater activity.

New Jersey Men Meet Feb. 12

The New Jersey brotherhood always employs the Lincoln birthday holiday for a state convention. Feb. 12 the men of New Jersey churches are invited to be guests of the Presbyterian men of Flemington. The men's club will serve luncheon and supper. The hour of meeting will be from 9:30 a. m. to 5 p. m. This makes it possible for men to come from any corner of the state that morning and get home the same evening. Flemington is reached by the Lehigh Valley and New Jersey Central roads. Among the speakers will be Dr. Edgar W. Work of New York City, "Bible Study"; John R. Boardman of the Goodwill Farm, "The Boy and the Big Brother Movement"; Dr. Warren H. Wilson, "Brotherhood and Country Life"; Dr. William Y. Chapman of Newark, "The Social Side of Men's Organizations as a Means to Spiritual Results," and William W. Whitaker of Elizabeth, "Personal Work."

Help Lake Forest Endowment

The General Education Board has voted to contribute $50,000 to Lake Forest College toward the new endowment fund of $400,000 which the college is seeking. The college is given until June 30, 1914, to meet the conditions by completing the fund. As no legacies are counted toward the fulfillment of the pledge, three recent legacies received by the college cannot be included. The trustees and friends of the college have already subscribed or paid toward the new endowment $123,000. There remains thus $227,000 to be secured by June, 1914.

Dr. G. Frederick Wright, editor of Bibliotheca Sacra, geologist and author, of Oberlin, Ohio, lectured at Western College, Oxford, Ohio, recently on "The Ice Age and Its Relations to the History of the Human Race."

Two Sentinels of San Fernando

[The Continent's Cover Page This Week]

The man of the Middle West who visits Lexington and Concord has a feeling of veneration akin to devotion as he stands before the monuments to the devotion of our forefathers. When the same traveler sees in southern California the houses of worship which were erected before the nocturnal ride of Paul Revere he is amazed in spite of himself at the evidences of the civilization which had then penetrated to that part of the country. The cover of this week's issue shows one of the much visited missions in southern California. San Fernando is about thirty miles northwest of Los Angeles and was one of the group of missions built after 1769. The outstanding palms as shown in the photograph mark this mission, and at the same time typify the wide diversity of trees to be found in California. The redwoods and the big trees are well known. The Monterey cypress has a unique place in the flora of the state, as Dr. McQuilkin describes on page 176.

Farm Mortgages 6%

Interest and principal collected and remitted free. Send for pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. Large or small amounts furnished. Highest references. Est. 1883

F. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL without a cent deposit, prepay the freight and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL.

IT ONLY COSTS one cent to learn our unheard of prices and marvelous offers on highest grade 1913 model bicycles.

FACTORY PRICES Do not buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you write for our large Art Catalog and learn our wonderful proposition on first sample bicycle going to your town.

RIDER AGENTS everywhere are making big money exhibiting and selling our bicycles. We Sell cheaper than any other factory.

TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, repairs and all sundries at half usual prices. Do Not Wait; write today for our special offer.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept 2879 CHICAGO

STEREOPTICONS

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION - MISSIONS - EVANGELISM

THE CHRISTIAN LANTERN SLIDE AND LECTURE BUREAU, 30 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

From Various Fields

Oregon

With Portland Churches

Dr. J. H. Boyd, pastor of First church, is giving special studies in the "Mind of Christ" in the Thursday evening meetings. He has arranged the following topics for the month: "Christ Before His Public Ministry," "Christ's Entrance Upon His Public Ministry," "The Mind of Christ" and "Christ the Teacher." In the leaflet issued in connection with these studies, Dr. Boyd has asked his people to reserve the evenings of Thursday for this purpose, and to avoid getting home late, business engagements, dinner parties, receptions, social visiting, card parties and whatever will prevent attendance. Dr. Boyd has been asked to address the Y. M. C. A. on Saturdays and has chosen the following topics: "The Changing Conception of the Nature and Function of the Bible," "The Changing Interpretation and Emphasis Concerning Salvation," "The New and Larger Significance of Jesus," "The Fact of Human Inequality and the Restatement of the Dogma of Election," "Mystery in Religion and the Development of a Christianized Agnosticism" and "The Changeless Certainties of Christianity."

Rev. Henry Marcotte, pastor of Westminster church, has been invited to give a series of noon addresses before the Y. W. C. A.

At a recent meeting of Millard Avenue church two elders were elected. It was decided to find a minister to serve the church. Rev. Levi Johnson, assistant pastor of First church, has been holding services Sunday morning only.

Rev. J. W. Hoyt and family passed through Portland last week on the way to Gold Beach. They came from Blauvelt, N. Y. Mr. Hoyt has been in charge of the summer Bible school work in Philadelphia for some years. He is the only Presbyterian minister in the whole of Curry county. His work is supported by the church at Pelham Manor, N. Y. Dr. Leary, now pastor at Pelham Manor, preceded Mr. Hoyt at Blauvelt.

Rev. R. N. McLean of Annabel church was married last month. W. S. HOLT.

The Presbyterian, Methodist and Disciple churches of Enterprise have decided to federate themselves and have completed the arrangement. The federation elected officers, representing each of the churches, and selected the Presbyterian minister pastor for the next year.

California

Threats against three pastors of Redding who have been active in fighting saloons have been made anonymously. An attempt was recently made to burn the Presbyterian church.

The moral forces of the state are urging the legislature to pass two bills directed at an effort to make San Francisco morally clean before the Panama exposition. One bill is aimed at "the Barbary coast" and the other seeks to prohibit the sale of alcoholic liquors on or within 150 yards of the exposition grounds.

The church at Azusa, together with the valuable library of Rev. C. F. Richardson, was destroyed by fire early Monday morning, Jan. 6. Prayer meeting was held in a hall the following Wednesday. The net loss to the church is $10,000 in addition to all the sermons and collections of curios of the pastor.

At the January communion of West Adams church, Los Angeles, Dr. William H. Fishburn, pastor, welcomed into its membership representatives from eleven different states, besides from Scotland and Canada. At another communion this church welcomed persons from fourteen different states, and from India, Peru, Australia, Canada, Scotland and England.

Minnesota

Austin church, Rev. Robert Brown pastor, carries on a vigorous mission Sunday school on the East side.

Bethlehem church, Minneapolis, following the recent China campaign, pledged $1,000 a year for three years for special work in China. The church now pays $1,100 annually toward the support of Dr. Charles Clark of Korea. Dr. Stanley B. Roberts, pastor, who has been with this church for fourteen years, now presides over a membership of 715.

Men of Second church, Duluth, are counting upon a visit from Dr. John Timothy Stone of Chicago Feb. 7.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press on a recent Sunday reprinted from Collier's the story of the life of Rev. Frank E. Higgins.

Rev. P. A. Schwarz, Jr., pastor of First church, Eveleth, has declined to become secretary for Minnesota for the World's Citizenship conference and will remain with his church.

Wabasso and Seaforth churches have been without pastors for several months, but are maintaining regular Sunday services. In Wabasso people meet in their church each Sabbath morning at 10 o'clock and devote an hour practicing sacred music for the other services. At 11 o'clock Sunday school convenes for another hour. At 7 p. m. an hour is devoted to a teachers' training class of forty. At 8 p. m. a song and prayer service is held.

Iowa

Rev. J. C. Templeton is making a canvass of Cedar Rapids Presbytery for the Board of Relief and Sustentation.

Springville, the boyhood home of Rev. George Dunlap of Cebu, Philippine islands, raised $66.25 for the typhoon sufferers.

Dr. Charles Franklin Ensign, Marion, who has been in the hospital several weeks, has taken up his work again. The church is raising $3,000 toward a new manse.

The Salem, Tama county, people, who recently lost their house of worship by fire, have $4,200 raised toward the $5,000 necessary for their new building. The surrounding community has assisted generously.

Dr. A. P. Walton, Maxwell, closed the week of prayer Sunday, Jan. 12, with the ordination and installation of three deacons. Two elders were ordained and installed Jan. 26. The organization of a brotherhood was effected Jan. 17, with an enrollment of 114 men as charter members. Rev. E. Wade Koons of Korea will give a missionary address to the men Feb. 13.

Oklahoma

Arrangements are being completed for Dr. William Sunday to hold evangelistic meetings in Oklahoma City. The dates have not yet been announced.

First church, Oklahoma City, has recently announced that it desires to entertain General Assembly soon. It has nearly 1,000 members under the leadership of Dr. Phil C. Baird. The auditorium will seat 2,000 people and the church has a splendidly equipped plant. Six choirs composed of members of the Sunday school of various ages are trained constantly by Professor McIntyre and his wife. The church supports four missions in various parts of the city. It is here that Governor Lee Cruce worships.

Colorado

On the anniversary of their wedding recently First church, Boulder, gave Dr. and Mrs. H. B. Hummel a set of china. Professor B. C. Montgomery, musical director and assistant pastor, leaves this church soon for evangelistic work.

Estes Park has filled its vacancy caused by the removal of Rev. W. H. Hyatt to Antonio by securing the services of Professor Montgomery of Boulder. The Y. M. C. A. summer school is located here, and this will place a man who will be of special service in the combined work. This church is to begin at once the erection of a manse.

Wisconsin

At the mission station at Gilman a church of twenty members was organized after a series of meetings, in which Miss Clara B. Austin of the Woman's Board of Missions took part.

The church at Island Lake, Rusk county, has been much encouraged by the labors of Miss Carolyn Smith and Miss Laura Hintz of Rice Lake. They visited the homes and the school and held gospel meetings.

A five days' institute of Sunday school methods has been held recently at Crandon, with excellent interest. Dr. Gerrit Verkuyl, educational superintendent of Sunday schools for the synod, and Rev. C. M. Fraser, pastor at

The Modern
Individual Communion Service
Made by Reed & Barton, has many advantages over the old style. Ask us for illustrations.

REED & BARTON, Silversmiths
Established 1824 Represented at TAUNTON, MASS.
Fifth Avenue and 32nd Street 4 Maiden Lane
New York

Hymns of the Kingdom
Edited by
Henry Sloane Coffin & Ambrose White Vernon

"More nearly than in any other collection does it express the modern view of the relation between religion and the whole world of human life."—Graham Taylor in "The Survey."

Some typical adoptions—
Piedmont Congregational, Worcester, Mass.
First Presbyterian, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.
First Congregational, East Orange, N. J.
South Street Presbyterian, Morristown, N. J.
University Congregational, Chicago, Ill.
Yale Divinity School, New Haven, Conn.
Labor Temple, New York

A returnable copy is awaiting your request
THE A. S. BARNES COMPANY
Publishers of Hymn Books since 1855
381 Fourth Ave. (27th St.), New York

MEMORIAL WINDOWS

reach their highest excellence in the examples of color harmony and drawing, in our productions. Whether you desire simplicity or elaborateness in design or coloring, write to us before ordering. Shipments made anywhere. We submit designs and estimates on request.

Sent on application our 48-page book for Memorial Windows.

The Flanagan & Biedenweg Co.
Est. 1883. 318-322 W. Illinois St.,
CHICAGO

The American Epic: "Manson's Vision"
A poem by Rev. Thomas Nield. Pp. 280; price $1.50.

"It is unquestionably the best epic yet produced in America, and there have been many attempts at epic poetry in this country. Indeed, I consider this a real contribution to the literature of America."—Paul E. Doran, Cumberland University.

"A work of high literary excellence and profound and original thought—an unusually good piece of work of its class."—J. E. Clarke, Editor The Presbyterian Advance.

The Advance Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

CHAUTAUQUA ORIENTAL TOURS

Sailing Jan. 21, Jan. 30 and Feb. 18, 1913. The finest obtainable throughout. Special Comfort Tour, EGYPT and PALESTINE, May 10, $470; Four Sunday School Convention Tours; Fifteen Tours to Europe, Norway and Russia.

The Chautauqua Tours (Inc.)
Marquette Building -:- Chicago, Ill.

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments
Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings
COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

CHURCH MONEY

Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their

OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER

This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.

Write us at once for information and prices.

THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., .: CHICAGO

Bessemer, Mich., conducted it. A similar institute will be held in March at Athens, Superintendent Verkuyl being assisted by Rev. A. A. Amy, pastor at Stanley.

A new church organization was formed by Rev. C. J. McConnell and Rev. J. F. Butler in Emet, Rusk county. Seventeen members were enrolled and more will soon be added. The people are talking about a house of worship and regular services will be held in connection with the church at Island Lake, five miles distant.

Baraboo has for several years conducted successful and satisfactory union meetings, Baptist, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches combining and the pastors alternately presiding. The week of prayer was thus observed lately. About once a month a Sunday evening service is held together. Feb. 2 the thirty-second anniversary of Christian Endeavor was celebrated with a rally in the Presbyterian church.

Dr. Gerrit Verkuyl, superintendent of Sunday school work, and Rev. F. A. Hayward, superintendent of Sunday school work of the Baptist churches in Wisconsin, are touring the state holding conferences and institutes in leading cities. They held a conference Jan. 19 at Beaver Dam. Other meetings were at Pardeeville, Kilbourn (where Rev. W. F. Goff of Cambria assisted), Mauston, Bangor, Reedsburg, Baraboo, Barneveld, Verona, Lancaster and Portage.

Ohio

Cleveland Union at Work

A very stormy evening interfered with a good attendance at the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Union. Elder James M. Richardson, one of the most efficient presidents the union has ever had, and F. B. Bicknell, a most efficient secretary, both declined to serve longer. Elder James A. Robinson was elected president, Elder John D. Chambers vice-president and Rev. E. R. Wright secretary.

The main work of the union for the coming year is the fostering of Phillips Avenue church. This was originally Christ chapel, started by Windermere church. An attempt was made to merge Eells Memorial church with Christ chapel, but after presbytery sanctioned the plan, the discovery was made that the property of Eells Memorial would revert to the heirs of Dan P. Eells in case it were no longer used for religious purposes. Since the heirs have claimed this right, the Christ chapel-Eells Memorial project has now become the Phillips Avenue church. There is good outlook for a church as substantial as Eells Memorial ever was. Inasmuch as Elder Dan P. Eells, brother of James Eells, D. D., twice pastor of Second church, was a most honored elder in presbytery, there is general regret that the title "Eells Memorial" disappears from the roll of churches.

Euclid Avenue church entertained two conventions in one week—that of Presbyterian Magyar workers, lasting two days, and the convention of synodical and presbyterial superintendents.

Extensive preparations are being made for the decennial convention of the Religious and Educational Association to be held March 10-13. Rev. Edward C. Young, assistant pastor of Second church, is the secretary of the local committee of arrangements.

Arthur C. Ludlow.

Among the Toledo Churches

The large chapel used by Rosewood Avenue church is crowded by the large congregations and a church will have to be built soon. The pastor, Rev. D. H. Johnson, is chairman of presbytery's evangelistic committee and is much in demand as an assistant in special services.

The indications are that Dr. John S. Edenburn of Little Rock, Ark., will accept the call to Westminster First church.

The congregations of Dorr Street church are becoming too large to be accommodated and measures are being taken to build a new structure. Rev. Norman F. Nickerson is pastor.

Dr. Samuel C. Black, pastor of Collingwood Avenue church, is conducting a personal workers' class at the Y. M. C. A. The brotherhood Jan. 18 gave a dinner addressed by Dr. Isaac J. Lansing of New York.

Presbytery of Dayton at Springfield Jan. 15 answered overtures 1 and 5 inclusive, relating to federated churches, in the negative; No. 6, relating to reduction in Assembly, negative; Nos. 7 and 8, relating to church rolls and suspended members, affirmative. An overture was sent to General Assembly asking for an earlier issuance of the Minutes of the Assembly and reports of the boards.

Illinois

First church, Piper City, a new $16,000 building, was destroyed by fire Jan. 22. The building was one of the finest in this part of the country. The people feel their loss very keenly, but without discouragement, for as soon as possible they will rebuild. For the present the congregation will worship in the U. P. church, holding their Sunday school and service in the afternoon and uniting with the U. P. congregation in the evening. Rev. Louis J. Albert is pastor.

The sixtieth anniversary of First church, Dixon, was remembered during the week of Jan. 26. This church was founded in 1853 by Dr. W. W. Harsha. There have been but five pastors—Dr. Harsha, Dr. E. C. Sickles, Rev. A. R. Bickenbach, Dr. S. S. Cryor and Dr. Ralph M. Crissman. The present gray stone structure was erected in 1864, the new chapel being built in 1898. The church had but ten charter members. The present Dixon College was originally organized and chartered as a Presbyterian school under the direction of presbytery. Jan. 26 the pastor, Dr. Crissman, read an historical account of the sixty years of Presbyterianism in Dixon. Wednesday evening a jubilee and fellowship meeting was held, eight of the city churches uniting. Greetings were read, reminiscences given and an address was delivered by Dr. Cryor of Oregon, Ill. The congregations have not been so large for years. The large boys' club is under the personal direction of the pastor.

South Dakota

Two hundred students at the state college are now regularly enrolled in Bible study classes of the college Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., and the men outnumber the women.

The church of Mitchell, Rev. Henry Snyder pastor, has raised the house of worship sufficiently to put in comfortable and attractive basement rooms for the Sunday school and social service. They have a live Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society, a brotherhood and men's Bible class. They refused to accept their pastor's resignation to accept a recent call to another church.

The churches of Bridgewater and Canistota under Rev. A. C. McCauley for twenty-eight years experienced revival in connection with their unanimous and successful pleadings with their pastor to withdraw his resignation. The congregatons are greatly increased, including now men who had not attended church for years, and members are received into the church almost every Sabbath. The round the world trip their pastor had arranged he gave up and will take a brief rest in southern California. There are only two other pastorates in the synod approaching Mr. McCauley's in length—those of the twin brothers, Rev. D. M. Butt at Britton and Rev. J. Scott Butt at Groton.

Kansas

A membership contest in the Sunday school of Hutchinson church during six weeks brought an increase of 21 per cent.

Wellington church, Rev. D. H. Stewart pastor, welcomed a large number of members Jan. 26. This is part of the results of a two weeks' meeting held by Rev. P. M. Fitzgerald of Arlington, Texas.

Michigan

Preliminary efforts are being made by members of First Congregational and First Presbyterian churches of Kalamazoo to unite in the Congregational edifice under one pastor. The Congregationalists are now without a minister. Dr. Henry W. Gelston is pastor of the Presbyterian church.

New Jersey

Rev. Edwin A. McAlpin, Jr., formerly of Babcock Memorial church, Baltimore, was installed pastor of First church, Madison, Jan. 29. He is the nineteenth pastor of this church, which dates back to 1747. George Washington and the officers and privates of the American

The Leaders of the World
The Greatest Bible in 300 years

THE 1911
BIBLE
OXFORD
EDITION

"Just the Bible the world has been waiting for."

Oxford Teachers' Bibles
WITH NEW AND UP-TO-DATE HELPS ARRANGED UNDER ONE ALPHABET
Over 3,000,000 Copies Sold
"They are known from Greenland's Icy Mountains to India's Coral Strand."—The Bookshelf.
From $1.50 upward

The Scofield Reference Bible
A wonderful Book for the English-speaking world. With an entirely new system of helps and references.
From $1.50 upward

Full explanatory booklet on application.
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
American Branch, 35 West 32nd Street, New York

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.
Will Send BOOKLET on Receipt of Six Cents Postage

Henry Ward Beecher's Centennial

Fourteen sermons on his life and great work by a successor, the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, who has made a close study of the great preacher's life.

Published each Monday in Sermon Edition of Brooklyn Daily Eagle, Brooklyn, New York. Subscription for series, 50 cts.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED

Samples at Wholesale
Get in Business for Yourself
Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.
Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.
MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

Smith Granite Monuments
The Standard of Excellence — in originality of design and workmanship. Write for booklet.
SMITH GRANITE CO. :: :: Westerly, R.I.

revolution were attendants here the two winters the troops were quartered in the vicinity of Madison.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Morris and Orange Jan. 21 Dr. Merle H. Anderson reported 363 professed conversions during the year. Four of the churches are without pastors.

Crescent Avenue church, Plainfield, Dr. John Sheridan Zelie pastor, at the recent visit of Dr. Foulkes and Mr. Johnson in behalf of the Ministerial Relief and Sustentation Fund pledged $6,000. This is the largest amount the board has received from any one church.

Plans have been filed for the new uptown branch of Third church, Newark, about which there was so much discussion in Newark Presbytery. It will be known as Third church, North, it being a part of the new collegiate system. It will cost $80,000 and will be yellow tapestry brick, trimmed with terra cotta.

West Jersey Presbytery at its recent meeting disapproved of the proposed intermediate catechism as uncalled for and unnecessary, believing the shorter catechism fully satisfactory. An overture will be sent up to General Assembly for recommendation and a dismissal of all attempts in this direction. Presbytery marked with special service the death of Rev. Alfred J. Snyder, one of its oldest ministers.

Elizabeth Presbytery held its 100th stated meeting in Westminster church, Elizabeth, Jan. 21. Rev. George P. Pierson of Hokkaido Presbytery, Japan, a former member of this presbytery, made an interesting address on his work. All the addresses of the lunch hour were on foreign missions. Rev. Edwin I. Stearns of the Anti-Saloon League of New Jersey made a strong plea for action against sending intoxicating liquors into dry states. Dr. John T. Kerr resigned the chairmanship on church extension and home missions on account of his health and Rev. Herbert K. England was appointed. The first five overtures from the Assembly were answered in the negative, the principal objections seeming to be the difficulties in their practical working, and the lack of any necessity for them, since all that they aim to accomplish is permitted and practiced now. Overture 6 was answered in the negative; overtures 7 and 8 in the affirmative.

Amzi Dodd, who died last month, was for seventy years a member of "old" First church, Bloomfield. A memorial service was held there as well as his funeral. The speakers were Dr. George L. Curtis, his pastor, and Rev. William T. Wilcox, of Westminster church, Bloomfield. No large financial project was ever launched by the church without consulting Mr. Dodd. He was president of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Newark.

District of Columbia

Seven lectures on China by Dr. Isaac T. Headland of Peking began Jan. 20 in New York Avenue church, Washington. They are given under the auspices of the women of the Presbyterian churches of the capital and will continue until Feb. 10.

Chinese Christians Jan. 12 celebrated the first anniversary of the opening of their chapel, 207 John Marshall place, N. W., Washington. Invitations had been sent to the 400 Chinese in the city and the hall was crowded. About 100 churches working through the Woman's Interdenominational Missionary Union, of which Mrs. John N. Culbertson is president, support this work. An effort is being made to form a church.

West Virginia

Following the week of prayer at Moundsville First church the pastor, Rev. J. F. Slagle, was ably assisted in a week of special services during which Rev. J. W. Wilson of New Martinsville preached.

Pennsylvania

In Wilkes-Barre an enthusiastic eight-day campaign of prayer and works to lift the $60,000 debt on the Y. W. C. A. buildings resulted in raising nearly $63,000. Even greater enthusiasm now prevails in the construction of the tabernacle for Dr. William A. Sunday's campaign, which opens Feb. 16. It will seat 12,000 people. More than 100 workmen, fifteen ministers and many volunteer laymen have helped rush the construction, which is begun each morning with prayer. At noon, all go to some church for dinner free, singing all the way. Saloon and liquor interests are trying to hinder the work.

What the Men Are Doing

The boys' club of Batavia, N. Y., church recently gave a "dad" banquet, when the members were privileged to invite their fathers.

Men of southern Illinois will meet at Albion Feb. 27 and 28 in the brotherhood convention. It is expected 160 men will be present.

The Presbyterian brotherhood of Marquette, Mich., has been urging medical inspection and physical training for the pupils of public schools.

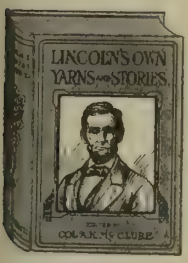
The brotherhood of Immanuel church, Danville, Ill., has taken the initiative toward the organization of a council of men's brotherhoods in that city.

The Laymen's League of the Protestant churches of Murphysboro, Ill., meeting recently at the Presbyterian church, decided to initiate an effort to remove saloons from the town.

Men at Work, the organ of the national Brotherhood, in its January number has enlarged the department devoted to news of what men are doing in various churches of the country.

The brotherhood of First church, Mishawaka, Ind., is conducting a vigorous churchgoing campaign. Placards in homes, cards in street cars, buttons and newspaper space are all being used to induce people to attend church.

The brotherhood of First church, Kankakee, Ill., attracted large attention to a recent meeting by an address on eugenics by Dr. S. P. Wilgus, superintendent of the state hospital. Members of the county medical association were especially invited to attend.



LINCOLN'S OWN YARNS AND STORIES
COL. A. K. McCLURE

Lincoln's Own Yarns and Stories

With an introduction by
Col. A. J. McClure
Free to Continent readers

Lincoln could tell more in a story than most men can bring out in an hour. The stories in this book are the best that have been gathered and are just as Lincoln told them. The volume makes a splendid souvenir of him at this fiftieth anniversary of the Civil War.

You will enjoy this book

Authentic stories, yarns and ancedotes that Lincoln told are here collected in convenient form for reading or reference. There is wit, pathos and humor blended as only he could do it. The reading of these stories will cheer many a dull day. He is acknowledged as one of the best story tellers the country ever had. Here are the best of his stories covering every phase of his life from the backwoods days to his rule in the White House.

How to get the book—By special arrangement with the Philadelphia publishers The Continent offers this volume of 416 pages, illustrated, bound in cloth, free to subscribers. Send us one new subscriber to The Continent who will pay in advance for six months, $1.25, and we will send you the book without charge. Get your neighbor to give you $2.50 for a year's subscription and we will give you two copies of the book and send them to different addresses. If all your neighbors take the paper and you have no friend for whom you care to subscribe, you may have the book for 75c. This offer is open only for a short time. Send the money to The Continent, 509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, or 156 Fifth Ave., New York City

Three Fast Luxurious Daily Trains to California

via Chicago, Union Pacific and North Western Line

San Francisco Overland Limited
Leaves Chicago 8:30 p. m.

Los Angeles Limited
Leaves Chicago 10:16 p. m.

California Mail
Leaves Chicago 10:45 p. m.

¶ These splendid trains include in equipment all that is modern and luxurious in railway travel.

¶ Electric-lighted throughout with perfect devices for ventilation and sanitation.

¶ Automatic safety signals all the way and more than 900 miles of double track.

Dining Car Service Unequaled

THE NORTH WESTERN LINE
UNION PACIFIC
THE OVERLAND ROUTE

Your comfort begins when you enter the New Passenger Terminal, Chicago, the most modern railway station in the world.

For rates, reservations and descriptive booklets, apply to

Chicago and North Western Ry.
A. C. JOHNSON, Passenger Traffic Manager
C. A. CAIRNS, Gen'l Pass'r and Ticket Agent
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

OL2651

Let Us Tell You

WHY Other Continent Readers are purchasing liberally our High Grade Farm and City Loans. If you have any funds to invest, or desire a larger rate of interest, still considering perfect safety for your principal, we shall be pleased to refer you to some of your fellow subscribers. They can tell you what they know of our reliability and about the manner in which we are handling their own money. Our many years' experience in this field gives us exceptional opportunities to secure the choicest securities. No investor has lost a dollar through his investment in these mortgages, which are carefully selected in one of the best investment fields in the Northwest.

Drop us a line today.

Idaho Title & Trust Co.
BOISE - - - IDAHO

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

6 and 7 % Sure When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."
Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

6½% Net First Mortgages on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St Chicago.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted, the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.
BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

Good Things in This Issue

For the Father

Fifty years ago children in many parts of the country caught a glimpse of the tall form of Abraham Lincoln. In this week's issue of The Continent on pages 178, 179 and 180 some of those children, now grown older, relate their impressions of the great war President. Your children want to know about Lincoln, and The Continent has taken great pains in arranging these special articles for this issue, so near the 104th anniversary of Lincoln's birth—Feb. 12.

You and your children will be interested in knowing some of the details concerning the visit of Robert Louis Stevenson to Monterey, Cal., as given in the interesting article by Dr. McQuilkin on page 176. You will care to visit the places described if you go to California this winter.

For the Trustee

An illustration of the advance which churches of the country are making along advertising lines is given on page 190 in this issue under Ways of Working. Here are gathered concise accounts of a number of advertising campaigns which will suggest ideas of practical work to any church officer who gives them careful thought. This department of Ways of Working is remarkably refreshing to church workers seeking new ideas.

Financial Situation

Advance in Oil and Division of Harvester Business Attract Attention—"Blue Sky" Law Favored in Two More States

Two of the most interesting topics of discussion in the business world during the past ten days were the formation of a separate corporation to carry on the foreign business of the International Harvester Company, and rise in the price of crude oil. In December, 1911, when Standard Oil was dissolved, Pennsylvania crude oil was $1.30 a barrel. This had been the price for eighteen months preceding the dissolution. But a week ago the price had advanced by small raises at short intervals to $2.33, with prospects of more increases. It is realized that there is a scarcity of oil, but many consumers feel that the steady advance is a result of abnormal commercial conditions. There is said to be large activity in preparations for drilling for more oil to reap the benefit of the present market.

The International Harvester Corporation will take over all the factories of the International Harvester Company in Canada, France, Sweden, Germany and Russia, and a number of the American concerns as well. It is capitalized at $70,000,000, half the capital of the parent corporation, and is expected to have an earning power of about half the original concern.

Investigation into the securities of prominent colleges and universities of the country shows that sixteen of them have money invested in western farm mortgages, three have no funds for investment and two others have no such loans, but consider farm mortgages good investments.

Brief Bits of Business News

—It is expected that a heavy demand for money will develop in world money markets as soon as peace is established in the Balkans.

—The gross revenue of Sears, Roebuck and Company of Chicago last year was $77,300,000, an increase over 1911 of $13,000,000. The net profits for the year were $8,300,000.

—The Kansas "blue sky" law has been recommended for adoption in Pennsylvania by a legislative committee which has spent two years making investigations. The law is designed to protect small investors against "fake" companies. Ex-Governor Deneen of Illinois made a similar recommendation in his final message to the legislature.

—An example of the increasing care which large corporations are taking of their employees is the appointment of Dr. A. H. Doty, formerly health officer of the port of New York, as director of the medical department which will have oversight of the 200,000 employees of the American Telephone and Telegraph

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency
Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the
Illinois Trust & Savings Bank
Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. & JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY
Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK
La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO
Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.
3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

6% 7% We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request
JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

REAL ESTATE LOANS
6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%
During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

GOOD 6% Farm Mortgages
The BEST and SAFEST Investment on Earth.
Write us for information regarding our Farm Mortgages on lands located in the fertile James River Valley, North Dakota. We guarantee to look after collection of interest so that the investment will net you 6%. Write us for lists.
H. J. JOHNSON LAND AND CATTLE CO.
OAKES, - - NORTH DAKOTA

Company, the Western Union and Western Electric Companies.

—Charles R. Heike, formerly secretary of the American Sugar Refining Company, will be forced to serve his eight months' imprisonment and pay a $5,000 fine as a result of a decision of the supreme court, in which it was held that he could not be considered immune from punishment on account of testimony in connection with the recent sugar frauds.

—Governor Sulzer of New York in his message to the legislature said that it was time for the state to step in and end flagrant abuses, shifty schemes and clever combinations that tax the unwary and mislead the public. He advocates a number of definite laws seeking to do away with many of the present abuses in the New York Stock Exchange.

—The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road will soon have 450 miles of electrified railway in operation across the Rockies. The New York, New Haven and Hartford road has but seventy-five miles electrified. Engines of the St. Paul road will be so constructed that on the down grade the motors may be reversed and used as generators of power for the return trip.

A Reader's Problem

E. W. E. writes: "Do you regard the various concerns advertising 6 per cent to 8 per cent mortgages in the West and Southwest as reliable? I have $500 belonging to my mother, whose means are limited. I wish to invest for her at as high a rate as consistent with safety."

Rates of interest vary with localities. In some sections 7 per cent would not be excessive; in others it might properly be questioned. First of all, make sure of the safety side; and the best way to make sure of that is to make sure of the man on the ground who places your money. The Continent goes to a great deal of effort to investigate the ability, character and experience of its financial advertisers and believes they are all absolutely reliable.

Our readers are invited to write us regarding their treatment by our advertisers not only in the event of there being cause for complaint, but in corroboration of our belief that they are getting fair treatment.

Week's Campaign to Combine Service and Evangelism

The bureau of social service of the Board of Home Missions under Rev. Charles Stelzle has outlined a week's campaign on social evangelism and church efficiency which will soon be put into operation in certain cities under the direction of the board. The campaign consists of survey work, exhibits, mass meetings, conferences, noonday shop meetings, and meetings with particular groups, with a view to committing men and women to allegiance to the church through a definite form of social service. Dates are now being arranged with local churches.

Special efforts will be made to reach the workingmen and conferences will be planned with the trades unions, employers of labor, business and professional workers and other groups. The results of the survey, which is to be made by local workers under direction of the bureau, will be exhibited by charts and posters and compared with the results in other cities.

Pew Rent Abolished; Offerings Gain

Lafayette Avenue church, Buffalo, had no sooner got its new pastor, Rev. Murray Shipley Howland, installed and well settled than the session began to move for the abolition of pew rents and the substitution of the duplex envelope system of free will offerings. A financial campaign of thirty days was set afoot. A budget of $30,000 was laid out, $18,000 to be devoted to current expenses and $12,000 to benevolences. Within the thirty days 1,000 subscriptions were received, aggregating $28,000. Eight hundred of these came in with no solicitation except the committee's letter of explanation. The current expense fund was bettered by 50 per cent above the budget which the pew rents provided, and the benevolences were increased even more. A. H. Whitford, chairman of the session's finance committee and secretary for many years of the Buffalo Y. M. C. A., planned the campaign, and was so pleased with the practical demonstration of

"The Oklahoma House"

Let your money make 6%—NET

¶ The three or four per cent the savings bank pays does not fairly represent your money's earning ability. Is is simply the small end of the profits. The bank keeps the big share as their fee for re-investment—RE-INVESTING YOUR MONEY IN MORTGAGES—something you refuse to do for yourself. By investing direct you can at least double the profits of your savings as they now accrue to you. Oklahoma first mortgages—amply secured by two to four times the amount of the loan—make this possible—the same kind the banks and insurance companies buy.

Why Insurance Companies Buy Oklahoma Mortgages

Experience showed them that in order to meet competition they must secure as high a rate per dollar as sound business judgment allowed. Investigation proved that Oklahoma offered a choice field for investments of this kind. Approximately $415,000-000.00 is now invested by the insurance companies in farm mortgages—and a good share of this in Oklahoma mortgages. Surely you can't do better than follow the example of these trained buyers of conservative investments. So decide now to give your money a chance to make good for you.

Write now for interesting Booklets describing our comprehensive investment service and Mortgage List No. 712.

OKLAHOMA CORN

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co. (Inc.)

OLDEST AND LARGEST MORTGAGE HOUSE INCORPORATED UNDER LAWS OF OKLAHOMA

Business Founded 1892 Oklahoma City, U.S.A. Capital and Surplus $145,000.00

TEXAS

MORTGAGES 6% and 7% NET

BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

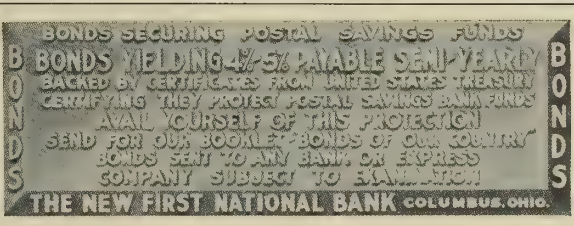
REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY

R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres

Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

4 Per Cent



BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY
CERTIFYING THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS BANK FUNDS
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR COUNTRY"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO.

5 Per Cent

Place Your Funds in Safe Securities.

No matter if you have a large or small amount for investment, a well placed First Mortgage upon an improved or cultivated farm can always be depended upon to yield a liberal rate of interest with the assurance of prompt payment of interest and principal at maturity.

My offerings range in amounts from $500.00 to $5,000.00 bearing 5½% and 6% interest. All loans carefully inspected and closed with our own funds before being offered for sale. Interest and principal collected without charge. Correspondence invited and detailed information with references and list of offerings will be mailed upon request.

G. W. HART, President Merchants' Bank, Bryant, S. D.

6% FIRST MORTGAGES ON IMPROVED FARMS 6½%

YIELDING 6% AND 6 1-2% PER ANNUM NET.

The first morgtgages we sell are secured by improved farms in the most prosperous sections of Oregon and Washington.

The investor in one of our mortgages has possession of all the papers comprising the loan, including the actual mortgage itself—together with the notes and abstract of title. We guarantee all titles and will collect and remit interest in New York exchange without charge.

We invite correspondence and will send lists of mortgages and booklet.

THE DEVEREAUX MORTGAGE COMPANY
1014 SPALDING BLDG., PORTLAND, ORE.

6% NORTHEASTERN OKLAHOMA FARM MORTGAGES 6%

We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Farms in Northeastern Oklahoma. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Highest of bank references. Write for descriptive Booklet.

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT COMPANY, :: VINITA, OKLAHOMA

its success that he has organized a course of study in church finance to be given by the Associated Institute in eight successive lessons Thursday evenings during February and March, with lectures by himself, Mr. Howland and other pastors and workers in the city.

Pittsburg's Solution of Downtown Church Problem

The historic First church of Pittsburg, with its towers overshadowed by modern skyscrapers, is the center of large religious activity. It is not only occupying the old site, refusing to retreat to the residential district, but it is making it a field of conquest. As a downtown church, whose congregation is the oldest in Pittsburg, six of whose first trustees were officers in Washington's army, it is conspicuous in the denomination both for the crowds that fill its large auditorium morning and evening and for the varied spiritual and philanthropic work that it is carrying on through its institutional branches, which touch more than 2,000 people weekly.

How is it done? The human secret heads up as usual in the pastor, Dr. Maitland Alexander, whose energy, organizing ability and power as an evangelistic preacher are well known. His associate and assistant minister, together with a layman who takes care of much detail work, a district nurse, secretary and clerk, contribute a share and are the paid workers. There are no sensational methods employed. They do not even depend very much upon advertising. The Christian service rendered is the "drawing card." The people fill the church in the evening (about 1,600) because they hear good, soul-inspiring music and a gospel message warm, virile and appealing. The preaching is sound, interesting and evangelistic. A Sunday afternoon service for men is held, a work launched by the brotherhood, which attracts a large number of men, usually from 200 to 250. Gospel singing, a talk from one of the ministers or some visiting brother, an appeal for decision and prayer, followed by the serving of a cup of coffee and a sandwich, are the usual features of this service. The men attending are not what Gipsy Smith calls "bench warmers" but men of the downtown district—men that such a service is designed to help. Many of these have been converted, some have been brought into close touch with the church, a large number have been received into its membership. One man is preparing for the ministry. An employment bureau is maintained and positions are secured for men out of work.

A feature of the evening service is the announcement on a card that at the close of the service a few musical numbers will be given, and an invitation to remain. These cards are handed to strangers by the ushers and personal workers. While the program is being given the pastor and his helpers move among those remaining, making their acquaintance and helping inquirers. The "follow up" work from this after service of music is very fruitful. In this, as in all the institutional work of the church, there is a distinct purpose to bring the individual to Christ. The manual declares, "There is no work, however apparently secular, that does not have a religious aim."

J. T. H.

Must Draw Pledges Carefully

Church trustees who expect to have to sue in the courts for pledges made by members should include in the subscription blank "for value received," according to the experience of officers of the Morris, Ill., church. A delinquent member was threatened suit on a pledge of $25 for church support. On advice of attorneys, who saw the technical defect in the pledge, the case was not tried. The member gave the amount in question to a local charity.

Temperance Forces Are Active

The Burlington railroad has issued an order forbidding employees to cash their pay checks in saloons.

Through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. a measure has been introduced in Congress to close saloons in Washington on the day of the inauguration of Woodrow Wilson.

Rev. Henry N. Pringle, for twelve years secretary of the Christian Civic League of Maine, has become assistant superintendent of the International Reform Bureau in Washington, D. C.

William E. Johnson, formerly chief officer of the United States Indian service, is announced as editor of a new temperance paper, The New Republic, to be published at Westerville, Ohio.

Forty-seven years ago Rev. Henry E. Niles, then pastor of First church, York, Pa., organized a temperance society which now has a total enrollment of 2,268. Eight names were recently added from among the Sunday school pupils.

First Church Was of Canvas

When a Sunday school or church is started in a town so new that there is no place in which to hold services, a structure must be put up at once, even though the nearest lumber be fifteen miles away. The church at Aberdeen, Idaho, which is now housed in a commodious structure costing $3,600, was first organized in a much more modest building.

Canvas Formed Roof and Walls of First Aberdeen, Idaho, Church

In 1907 the synodical and presbyterial Sunday school missionaries visited Aberdeen when the only structure on the townsite was a store. Settlers were coming in along the near-by irrigation project and it was decided to organize religious worship. The missionaries hauled lumber from American Falls, fifteen miles away, and in five days had erected a tabernacle, a building with board floor, and walls and roof of canvas. In a week a church of nine members was organized, as well as a Sunday school. For three years this tabernacle was used as a church and also as public school.

The rapidity of growth of a home mission church depends much upon the development of material resources and efficient leadership. At Twin Falls, Idaho, where settlement was much more rapid than it was in the early days of Aberdeen, a church was organized in 1905 with seventeen members. Four years later it became self-supporting, and it now has 300 members. It will soon erect a building costing $30,000.

Aberdeen Church Three Years Later

Woodrow Wilson will be the principal speaker at the world's Christian citizenship conference at Portland, Ore., June 29 to July 6. His subject will be "The Moral Implications of the Right of Suffrage." This will be the first trip West Mr. Wilson will take as President.

Where Rest and Baths Help to Banish Disease

Not the least important item in the determination of a place in which to spend those restful weeks required by convalescents or by sufferers from stubborn diseases is the selection of a stopping place. In such a place as Mount Clemens, Mich., where hundreds of people spend weeks, summer and winter, there is no more choice place to make headquarters than at The Colonial. In this well known hostelry may be found all the comforts of a first-class city hotel. The entrance to the bathhouse is but ten feet from the elevator and the bathhouse of The Colonial is lined with marble and fitted with porcelain tubs, so that the whole is as sanitary as modern science can devise. The ventilation system, whereby the air is changed without draught, also adds to the comfort of guests. Mount Clemens is connected with Detroit by an electric line which passes the door of The Colonial.

The large lobby and comfortable sun parlor are centers of interest during the winter months when the weather prevents enjoyment of golf or walks along the Clinton river near the hotel. Baths are given for the treatment of rheumatism in all forms, neuralgia, blood and skin diseases, nervous diseases, dyspepsia and other stubborn ailments. The drinking water at Mount Clemens is said to be the purest in the state, the waters from various artesian wells having different curative properties.

The Colonial is situated on the highest elevation in the city, overlooking Lake St. Clair It is constructed of brick, stone and cement, and is thoroughly fireproof, so arranged that it is open for business at all seasons of the year. Mount Clemens may be reached from Detroit, thirty miles away, by frequent electric cars or by the Grand Trunk railway.

The medical director of the house is Dr. A. N. Shotwell, whose experience with the baths extends over twenty-five years. Massage is given under the physician's direction by trained attendants.

Thornwell Home Trains Orphans for Work

The Thornwell Home and Schools for Orphans at Clinton, S. C., is a Presbyterian institution in connection with the Southern Church. In receiving pupils no distinction is made as to whence the orphan comes. It is a protest against the methods adopted for child care by the average orphan asylum. It differs from them in that it accepts no legal control for its wards, it does not find homes for them, and does not forbid them to leave its care whenever they feel that they must.

The young people are trained to industrial habits. By their various industries they provide about 33 1-3 per cent of the total cost of their maintenance. There is a technical school in which various arts are taught, including printing, carpentry, mechanical arts, shoemaking, typewriting and shorthand, laundry work and cooking, dairy work and many others.

A Presbyterian church building (the Thornwell Memorial) is on the campus and is owned by the institution.

The institution is seeking an endowment. Its board of trustees is urging an immediate fund of not less than $100,000. It has no debt. The annual income from the contributions of the Southern Church is about $32,000.

The Thornwell Home has sent out fourteen ministers, twelve missionaries and over 125 teachers. More than 1,000 young Christians have left its walls.

The president of the institution is Rev. W. P. Jacobs, Clinton, S. C.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

A 6% January Investment

$2,500.00 First Mortgage secured by 160 acres tillable black loam, 3½ miles from Noble, Alberta, 110 acres under plow. Buildings worth $1,000.00. Mortgagor owns 42 horses, 30 cows, 500 sheep, 50 hogs, 1,280 acres other land, private grain elevator. Full particulars of this and other Alberta mortgages, $500.00 to $32,000 denominations on request.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer
1201 Granite Building :: Rochester, N. Y.

5% FARM MORTGAGES

ON IOWA and MINNESOTA FARMS are the SAFEST FORM of INVESTMENT—Tested by our customers for 40 years. We collect and remit interest wherever investors desire. Write for booklet and list.

ELLSWORTH AND JONES.
IOWA FALLS, IOWA.

Ministerial Obituary

William C. Maloy

At the age of 81 years Rev. William C. Maloy, retired, died Jan. 21 at his home in Baltimore, Md. He spent nearly sixty years in active pastoral work and was probably best known in St. Helena, Md., where he built First church. One of his surviving children is William N. Maloy, a state senator of Maryland.

Rev. Samuel H. Edgcumbe

Rev. Samuel H. Edgcumbe died at Deerfield. Mich., Jan. 25 and was buried there Jan. 28. About a year ago he was called to the pastorate of Cass City church, but his health failed a short time after his installation and since June he had been living at Deerfield, his former home. He was born at Coburg, Ontario, and began his ministry as a Methodist, having been ordained in 1882 by the Detroit Conference. He was received by the Presbytery of Flint April 18, 1895, and at various times was pastor at Morrice, Fenton, Grand Rapids Third and Cass City. During the last few months, when preaching became impossible, Mr. Edgcumbe was busy with the preparation of a book of devotions. He leaves a large family. W. B.

H. M. Parsons, D. D.—A Tribute

In the death of H. M. Parsons, D. D., of Toronto, the Presbyterian Church has lost one of her great men. His ministerial life was pretty nearly equally divided between his own country, the United States, and Canada. He loved both lands equally well. Dr. Parsons was one of God's true saints. Few men were so well versed in the Scriptures or possessed so deep a spiritual life. His knowledge of "the word" (as he fondly spoke of the Bible) was simply wonderful. He not only knew the facts of the Scriptures but their spirit also. He was literally saturated with divine truth, and he believed most firmly what he knew, and exemplified it also in his walk and conversation.

For twenty-one years he was the beloved pastor of Knox church and for eleven years its honored pastor emeritus. His capacity for work, even to the end almost of his life, was marvelous. He was both a preacher and a pastor. He loved his Bible and he loved his flock. Everybody in turn loved him. No matter how much he differed from those who ruthlessly dissected God's word, he never spoke of them with bitterness or personal criticism. It was rather their views which he challenged.

To the writer he was most beloved, both as a wise counselor and a faithful friend; yes, even as a spiritual father. It was Dr. Parsons's influence, more than that of any other man, that drew him to Toronto to teach in Knox College. For this no adequate gratitude can ever be paid. As an American he could see Canadian opportunities through American eyes, and his counsel was welcomed and followed.

When I last saw him, Sabbath, Nov. 17, he was confined to his bed with illness which he already recognized was probably his last. Though weak in body he was as vigorous as ever in mind. In the conversation between us he spoke vividly of the Lord's coming, as he was frequently wont to do, and then pressing my hand he made the characteristic remark—a remark which was an exponent of both his theology and his life—"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

He leaves a widow, three daughters and two sons; one of his daughters being the wife of John Timothy Stone, D. D., pastor of Fourth church, Chicago. GEORGE L. ROBINSON.

For More Emphasis on Temperance in Sunday School

Plans were outlined for Sunday school lesson courses for use in foreign fields, for instruction in missions and for larger emphasis upon temperance instruction by the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations held recently at Dayton, Ohio. This council is composed of Sunday school editors, secretaries and publishers representing twenty-eight denominations, and seeks to standardize Sunday school work as much as possible.

A committee was appointed to study the question of religious education for incoming foreigners. The council spent considerable time discussing the problem of weekday religious instruction under church auspices. Members of the council were united in believing that all Sunday schools should be graded and the lessons prepared with reference to actual conditions as determined by each denomination.

Says It's the Oldest Church

Christ's church, Hempstead, L. I., has started the 219th year of its organization and claims to be the oldest Presbyterian church in the country. Dr. F. M. Kerr, pastor, has been there twenty years.

Calendar and Record

Ordinations

Morris and Orange—William LeRoy Haven, Jan. 21.

Resignations

California—San Jose First: J. N. Crawford, assistant.
Kansas—Paola: A. Z. McGogney; Howard: J. E. Deggendorf; Caldwell: T. B. Haynie.
Illinois—Mendota: F. O. Hellier; Earlville: B. R. Von der Lippe: Brookfield: J. H. Stevenson.
Indiana—Evansville: H. S. McCord.
Minnesota—Minneapolis Homeward: W. S. Middlemass; Pine City: Frank L. McKean.
New Jersey—Washington: F. W. Johnson.
New York—East Bethany: Frederic Rimanoczy; Waterville: J. C. VanDoren.
Pennsylvania—Lower Marsh Creek: C. Dalzell.
Ohio—Madisonville: H. M. Campbell; Mason and Gano: A. Husted; Uhrichsville: A. B. Allison.
Oregon—Portland Hawthorne Park: E. N. Allen.

Calls

Indiana—Kendallville: M. P. V. Yeamen; Dayton: W. J. Malcolm, accepts.
Minnesota—Two Harbors First: Louis B. Sherwin.
New York—Rochester Grace: Walter B. Jorris; Belmont: Thomas Melvin, accepts; New Rochelle First: George Reynolds, accepts.
New Jersey—Belvidere Second: W. H. Stone, accepts; Phillipsburg First: W. B. Johnson, accepts; Oxford First: Dr. Shaw.
Ohio—Cincinnati Westwood German: Fred Heldner, accepts; St. Marys: S. C. Dunning, accepts.
Pennsylvania — Utica and New Lebanon: Charles W. Swan, accepts.

Installations

Minnesota—Duluth Glen Avon: W. W. Lawrence, Jan. 10.
New York—Albion First: Godfrey Chabot, Jan. 22; Far Rockaway First: Russell Sage Memorial: J. Milton Thompson, Jan. 23.
New Jersey—Belvidere Second: W. H. Stone, Jan. 28.

Supplies Arranged

Michigan—Detroit Trumbull Avenue: John Clark Hill.
Minnesota—St. Paul First: John Robertson.
New Jersey—Wyoming: George T. Eddy.
Pennsylvania—Forest Grove: Hugh Miller.
Wisconsin—Oxford and Douglas: H. C. Ramsey.

Change of Address

Davis, Howell—Downsville, N. Y., to Bordentown, N. J.
Hoyt, Frank E.—Meridale to Arleport, N. Y.
Johnson, F. W.—Washington to Rahway, N. J.
Johnson, W. B.—Campbell Hall, N. Y., to Phillipsburg, N. J.
Park, David—St. Louis, Mo., to 2409 33d avenue north, Birmingham, Ala.
Stone, W. H.—Port Carbon, Pa., to Belvidere, N. J.
Winnemore, J. L.—Palmerton to Williamsport, Pa.

Vacant Pulpits

Kentucky—Providence.
Kansas—Hutchinson Irwin Memorial, address Rev. J. S. Blayney.
New York—New Hyde Park and Jamaica German.

Accessions

On account of the increasing realization by pastors of the value of this column it has become necessary to compress "accessions" as much as possible. Hereafter the word "pastor" or "stated supply" which has usually followed the name of the one who received the additional members will be omitted, and merely the name of the minister without titles will be printed.

California—San Francisco Chinese, 23, Jan. 12, J. H. Laughlin; Oakland Golden Gate, 3, Jan. 12, H. W. Harbaugh; Los Angeles West Adams, 40, Jan. 12, W. H. Fishburn.
Colorado—Longmont, 15, Jan. 12, W. L. Phillips.
Iowa—Cedar Rapids First, 7, Jan. 12, E. R. Burkhalter; Hedrick, 1, Jan. 5, Louis Pillmeier; Elm Grove, 18, Jan. 19, E. S. Chaffee; Des Moines Clifton Heights, 6, Jan. 26, J. B. Howard.
Illinois—Chicago Fifty-Second Avenue, 4, Jan. 12, W. E. Donaldson.
Idaho—Boise Second, 13, Jan. 12, Henry Quickenden; Falk, 7, Jan. 5, S. M. Hunter; Boise Pierce Park, 7, Jan. 5, E. N. Murphy.
Indiana—South Bend Trinity, 18, Jan. 19, J. S. Burns.
Kansas—Hutchinson, 35, Jan. 12, J. P. Blaney; Yates Center, 11, Jan. 12, N. A. Shedd; Osage City, 2, Jan. 5, J. F. Cowling; Abilene, 7, Jan. 5, F. S. Blayney; Humboldt, 17, Jan. 5, J. M. Todd; Cherryvale, 32, Jan. 12, C. L. Combs; Dodge City, 16, Jan. 19, J. C. Berger; Wellington, 24, Jan. 26, D. H. Stewart.
Michigan—Detroit Central, 32, Jan. 12; Detroit Immanuel, 26, Jan. 12, Angus H. Cameron; Detroit Covenant, 16, Jan. 12, Robert J. Young; Detroit Scovel Memorial, 15, Jan. 12, James D. Jeffrey; Detroit Bethany, 11, Jan. 12, James T. Black; Detroit Cadillac Avenue, 9, Jan. 12, L. B. Bissell; Detroit Fort Street, 8, Jan. 12, Edward H. Pence; Detroit Calvary, 8, Jan. 12, David I. Sutherland; Detroit St. Andrew, 4, Jan. 12, T. Walker Malcolm; Big Rapids, 11, Jan. 26, George Cleaver; Stockbridge, 15, J. A. Adair.
Minnesota—Minneapolis Aldrich Avenue, 21, Jan. 12, A. G. Patterson; Austin, 10, Jan. 19, Robert Brown.
New Jersey—Elizabeth, 14, Jan. 12, C. G. Reynolds.
New York—North Tonawanda Third, 5, Jan. 12, W. P. Hume; Syracuse East Genesee, 12, Jan. 12, C. P. Terry; Mount Vernon First, 43, Jan. 26, Joseph Hillman Hollister.
Ohio—Upper Sandusky, 13, Jan. 19, C. B. Wible; Toledo Rosewood Avenue, 45, Jan. 19, D. H. Johnston.
Pennsylvania—Pittsburg Homewood Avenue, 53, Jan. 19, P. W. Snyder; Pittsburg Friendship Avenue, 24, Jan. 19, D. M. Curry; Greensburg First, 22, Jan. 19, Charles Schall; Pittsburg Brighton Road, 13, Jan. 19, R. M. Allen; Huntingdon, 25, Jan. 26, R. P. Daubenspeck; Grove City, 42, Jan. 12, Herbert Hezlep; Pittsburg Knoxville, 38, Jan. 12, W. A. Jones; Pittsburg Hawthorne Avenue, 23, Jan. 12, A. T. Schleich; Mount Lebanon, 35, Jan. 12, H. M. Campbell; Pittsburg Hermon Avenue, 6, Jan. 12, J. E. Garvin; Wilkinsburg Calvary, 11, Jan. 12, F. D. Miller; Marietta, 22, Jan. 12, E. F. Reimer; Philadelphia Gaston, 19, Jan. 19, W. B. Greenway; Philadelphia Ninth, 28, Jan. 19, J. A. Higgons; Philadelphia Hollond, 5, Jan. 19, C. A. R. Janvier; Philadelphia Trinity, 20, Jan. 19, R. B. Wallace; Philadelphia Beacon, 38, Jan. 19, G. P. Horst; Philadelphia St. Paul, 66, Jan. 19, J. Beveridge Lee; Delta, 51, Jan. 12, A. Lewis Hyde; Mount Union, 8, Jan. 19, C. W. Todd; Pittsburg McKinley Park, 19, Jan. 12, George S. Phillips; Berwick, 26, Jan. 19, Edward A. Loux.
South Dakota—Wetonka, 6, Jan. 5, L. L. Saunders; White Lake, 6, Dec. 29, Edward Van Ruschen.
Washington—Seattle Westminster, 41, Jan. 12, F. M. Silsley.
West Virginia—Moundsville First, 5, Jan. 19, J. F. Slagle; Wheeling Vance Memorial, 12, Jan. 12, J. M. Potter.
Wisconsin—Eau Claire First, 22, Jan. 19, W. T. Angus.

Churches Organized

New York—Hassdale Hitchcock Memorial, 19 members.
West Virginia—Weirton, 31 members.

Necrology

Fisher—Washington, D. C., Jan. 28, David W. Fisher, retired, aged 75.
McDonald—George N. McDonald, aged 72, Yonkers, N. Y.
Pease, Randall—Hamden, N. Y., Jan. 2.

Rev. J. M. Wilson, after an absence of eighteen month, has returned to his pulpit in South Bellingham, Wash.

Marriages

A charge of one cent per word is made for marriage notices. Payment must accompany copy.

NETHERY-MACDOWELL—On Jan. 14, at the home of the bride, Gravel Bank, Ohio, by Rev. John MacDowell, Rev. Thomas George Nethery and Miss Madge MacDowell.

The Spirit of Stage-coach Days

Old-fashioned simplicity, grace and quality, symbolic of the early days of our country, are typified by our Old Colony pattern, which is, without doubt, the highest achievement attained in silver-plated ware.

Appropriate for any time and place, it is pre-eminently fitted for Colonial and Old English dining rooms. Like all 1847 ROGERS BROS.

"Silver Plate that Wears"

it is made in the heaviest grade of silver plate, and is backed by the largest makers with an unqualified guarantee made possible by the actual test of over 65 years.

Sold by leading dealers. Send for illustrated catalogue "B-80."

INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO., MERIDEN, CONN.
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
NEW YORK CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO
HAMILTON, CANADA

The World's Largest Makers of Sterling Silver and Plate

The Question of Lafayette College

LAFAYETTE COLLEGE is a Presbyterian College situated in Eastern Pennsylvania at Easton. It is the only men's College in Pennsylvania of the first class directly under the control of the Synod. For years it has been a positive Christian force in education. For years it has trained free of tuition many candidates for the ministry. Recently a movement has been started to sever the ties that bind the College to the Church. The Church is really to blame for this movement, for the Church in recent years has failed to give the College the support it requires. The Synod of Pennsylvania in session at Butler, Penn., October 23, 1912, recognized this fact, and appointed a Committee to secure an additional Endowment of $500,000 for Lafayette College.

This Committee intends to tell the Christian people who read this paper in the next few weeks just what Lafayette is, has done, and needs.

The Committee of the Synod of Pennsylvania

Rev. W. E. BROOKS, Chairman
Vice Moderator of the Synod
Rev. S. A. CORNELIUS, D.D. Rev. H. L. BOWLBY
Mr. CHARLES B. ADAMSON

Field Secretaries { Rev. S. H. DOYLE, D.D.
Rev. W. T. NEVIN, D.D.

Office of the Committee—ALLENTOWN, PA.

A West Point on the Mississippi

Molding public opinion for the future years

The interest of many people in recent immigrants ends with the turning [illegible] page which portrays their arrival with [illegible] baggage. Even the interest in foreign [illegible] people in the same community is not great. The children may go to your Sunday school and you may know the parents, but the relation is not a close one on account of the language barrier. But each one of the millions in America who were born in other lands is affecting this country in a multitude of ways. In your community these men are molding public opinion. They soon vote, and not always is their support given to the nominees whom you would choose as the safest leaders. These strangers in the land may have as high moral ideals as have those who trace their descent from the signers of the Declaration of Independence. They are, however, separated from the influences which in their native towns have held them true to their best light. In America they are frequently placed in environments which do not tend toward moral uplift. These are the men who in the future—as even now—will do much to control public opinion From whom are they receiving their ideas as to observance of law, of the Sabbath, and the rights of their fellow men? There are agencies at work which train them to support their own selfish designs. They will not attend churches where English is spoken. They must have services in their own tongue. They can be reached best by their fellow countrymen who have been trained as preachers. To do this work for the nation Dubuque German College and Seminary has been at work for many years. Natives of a dozen or more countries there are educated for preaching and mission work among immigrants in this country. This work is supported by Presbyterian friends of Christian education. They are helping solve the immigrant problem on a Christian basis. They are aiding in the molding of public opinion of the future. Full details of the work will be sent on request to Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Ia.

Sparks Marion E † Jan 13
1205 Springfield av

THE CONTINENT

FEBRUARY 13, 1913

"Joy-Mushing" in Alaskan Snows

S. HALL YOUNG

The Sin of Doing Nothing

WILLIAM P. MERRILL

A Call to Women: Big Tasks Best

HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

The Man Who Can't Pay for His Keep—Editorial

Benjy and Betty's Easter Plan—Children's Story Contest

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Ohio

BROAD SCHOLARSHIP BEAUTIFUL SURROUNDINGS

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO.
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges.

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Faculty of capable men and women; comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Perfect sanitary conditions. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium.

Illustrated literature sent on request

Mary A. Sawyer, A.M., Litt. D., Dean

Box o OXFORD, O.

Illinois

A BOY'S WHOLE TIME

Must be profitably occupied if he is to receive the best kind of education: the kind that stands for moral strength, intellectual alertness, physical fitness. LAKE FOREST ACADEMY merits the serious consideration of those who understand the manifold needs of a boy.

Address WILLIAM MATHER LEWIS,
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Tennessee

Ward Seminary

For Girls and Young Women 42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres.. Nashville, Tenn.

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD

A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place. Catalogue mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN. President.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Do your trustees pay all the bills?

Many churches permit the treasurers of each society in the whole organization to solicit funds. Other churches say, We will center our financial matters. We will not allow our members to be asked for money for half dozen different purposes. They put their trustees in charge of the accounts of all subordinate organizations. The members pledge what they please and are assured that there will be no special collections. Such a plan increased benevolent contributions 200 per cent in one church the first year it was tried. It will be explained in full soon in

The Continent

The buyer's instinct

Very generally, woman is considered the home provider. She buys most of the family supplies from baby's bibs to daddy's necktie.

It is well—because women are the best shoppers. They DARE to ask questions and prices—they have to be pleased before they PAY. A man will give up in order to get out!

Most advertising is addressed to women for all things intended for the home. Because they have the buyer's instinct—they can separate the sheep from the goats!

I wish I might consult personally with each and every one of our women readers. I could tell you things about advertised goods that would keep you writing postals for weeks.

THE ADVERTISING
MANAGER

Secure your position through the want columns of The Continent. Among the many thousands of our readers you are pretty sure to find someone who needs the services which you can render. We make a special rate of three cents per word for notices in the want columns. If answers are to come to us, allow three words for The Continent address in remitting. Cash must accompany order

Read the "WANT" Column every week. The thing in which you are interested may be advertised in this very issue.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

REAL ESTATE

ARKANSAS BARGAIN—FARM 80 ACRES IN FAMOUS Blackfork River valley; 45 acres in cultivation and fenced; 30 acres more tillable; 300 fruit trees; good soil; two-room house, barn, etc. Well and spring. Near school, church and postoffice. Price $7.50 per acre cash. No trades, terms or commissions. Ringland, McAlester, Okla.

JOIN PRESBYTERIAN COMMUNITY, SOUTH MISSOURI. Bargains in land, suited to farming, stock raising and fruit. Rev. Cort, Pomona, Howell County, Missouri.

ESCAPE THE COLD WINTERS. LOCATE ON A southeastern farm. Profitable lands $10 to $300 an acre, easy terms. Poultry, truck and fruit pay $50 to $300 an acre. Unexcelled living conditions. Land lists and the "Southern Field" magazine free. M. V. Richards, Land and Industrial Agent Southern Railway, Room C-22, Washington, D. C.

TEN THOUSAND EASTERN PRESBYTERIANS WILL locate in California before and after opening of Panama Canal. Carpinteria Valley, Santa Barbara county, "The American Italy," offers superior opportunities and attractions. Sea bathing, mountain scenery, lovely canyons. Cool in summer, warm in winter Practically frost-proof; suffered little from recent State freeze. Good schools, churches, etc. Abundant supply of artesian water. Paved roads to Santa Barbara. State highway to Los Angeles. Lima beans, lemons, walnuts, apricots, olives, etc, return from $100 to $300 per acre. Small capitalists could raise vegetables, room tourists, etc. For literature address Presbyterian Manse, Carpinteria, California.

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED—AN ENERGETIC MAN OR WOMAN IN every city of the United States, to take subscriptions for The Inter-Church, a national, interdenominational weekly, that is being warmly received by the people of all churches, and the only religious paper of its kind in the world. A most liberal and profitable proposition to person furnishing satisfactory references and who will make good. Write at once to The Inter-Church, Clinton, S. C.

FOR SALE—ABOUT SIX HUNDRED VOLUMES OF A minister's library. List sent on application. Edyth Gwynne, 208 S. Crystal street, Butte, Mont.

WANTED—PRESBYTERIAN PREACHER AND lecturer of national reputation desires to supply pulpit during June, July and August in large Atlantic or Pacific Coast city church. Address "Author," The Continent, Chicago.

EASTER POSTCARDS—12 BEAUTIFUL EASTER postcards mailed for 10 cents. The Book Store, Montrose, Pa.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, LANSING, MICH., has silver communion service to present to worthy home missionary church. Address F. S. Lawrence.

FOR SALE—GOOD AS NEW NO. 8 BLICKENSDERFER typewriter, aluminum, with three type wheels, at half the original cost. Also Vols. V. to XXXV. of the Review of Reviews, half leather, and unbound numbers up to December, 1912. Rev. J. K. Alexander, Vineland, N. J.

CHAS. W. FYE, PASTOR-EVANGELIST, OAKES, N. D. Write for work.

WANTED—INFORMATION. JOHN SKINNER, 127 Boyd street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, asks for communication from anyone who can tell him anything concerning the whereabouts of his parents, brothers and sisters, Mr. and Mrs. John Skinner and family, who emigrated from Skinner's Yard, Newbiggin by the Sea, England, in 1881, and are supposed to have settled somewhere in Pennsylvania. Being ardent Presbyterians, they likely joined some Presbyterian congregation.

LADY OF EXPERIENCE DESIRES POSITION AS companion. References exchanged. Address Maria L. Phelon, Cherry Valley, New York.

GOOD PRESBYTERIAN NEWSPAPER MAN WANTED to buy good paper in town of 5,000. Address Pastor Presbyterian Church, Nampa, Idaho.

PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WOULD LIKE TO correspond with pastorless church, within a radius of 75 miles of Chicago, 308 Lafayette Ave., Bay City, Mich.

TOURS

A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WILL CONDUCT A select company to London about June 1 for a month. For particulars inquire of Rev. J. E. Day, Butte Falls, Oregon.

EUROPE—A DELIGHTFUL COMPREHENSIVE SUMMER tour with limited party. Sailing June 17. $500. Booklet. Miss E. L. Marshall, Sebeka, Minn.

EUROPE and ORIENT. 32nd Year. Limited Parties. Comfort and Leisure. Thorough Sight-seeing. Expert Guidance. Strictly first-class. Special Tours for Private Parties. PAINE TOURS, Glens Falls, N. Y.

EUROPE POPULAR TOURS AT POPULAR PRICES $380 and Up
February Season. Announcements.
The Shelton Tours, Waverley-Belmont, Mass.

You might try for months to accomplish what our "Want" column will do in a few weeks. Some one of our many thousand readers will be interested to know of your want. We make a special rate of three cents per word for advertisements in the "Want" column. If answers are to come to us, allow three words for The Continent address in remitting. Cash must accompany order.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
EVERETT SISSON, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1913

THE MORALITY OF BEING EFFICIENT...... 209
EDITORIAL—
The Man Who Cannot Believe........ 212
Union by All Means, but Not Through Disunity 213
Two Men Measured at Two Poles...... 213
THE WORLD—
Coup d'Etat in Mexico; Madero Overthrown 210
Second Chapter of Turko-Balkan War.. 210
Welsh Disestablishment Bill Passes.... 210
Income Tax Amendment Ratified..... 210
Firemen May Strike: Labor Unrest... 210
House Acts Against Liquor Shipments.. 211
RELIGIOUS WORLD—
Great Hoax Proved on Mormon Prophet 211
Quarterly in Interest of Christian Unity 211
Beginnings of an Old Catechism...... 212
SIN OF DOING NOTHING ....William Pierson Merrill 214
AN ALASKAN "MUSH" TO PRESBYTERY (Illustrated)..............S. Hall Young 215
LET'S TALK ABOUT OUR REAL WORK (with Portrait).........Helen B. Montgomery 218
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XV.—Continued...........Richard S. Holmes 219
THE HOME COUNCIL—Refined Speech in the Home....................Alice Urban 220
YOUNG AMERICA—Betty and Benjy's Easter Plan—Unfinished-Story Contest........ 221
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 222
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 223
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 223
MISSIONARY WORK...................... 224
NEW BOOKS............................ 225
THE OPEN HEARTH...................... 226
WAYS OF WORKING...................... 226
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 228

Around the Shop

Any one of the host of honored physicians who read The Continent will tell you that even though a little of some one thing may be very good, it does not follow that a great deal of it is better. Who that has endured after dinner oratory has not heard, "Once there was an Irishman——" (the nationality of the hero being determined with due reference to the sensibilities of the audience) who swallowed the whole box of pills at once to hasten a cure?

When folks write pleading that more space shall be given to this department the Around-the-Shop Man, being uninoculated against flattery, is apt to become almost unendurably gracious. There are, of course, some drawbacks to limited space. You remember—do you?—the German writer who had been ordered to prepare a story not to exceed a certain length. The last installment proved much too long, so the inflexible editor ordered an assistant to condense the ending, with this result:

"Von Berken took a small glass of Apollinaris, his hat, his departure, no notice of his pursuers, a revolver cut of his pocket, and, finally, his life."

The world of sensible people is not anxious for words, it is anxious for thoughts and pregnant facts. We doubt if any valuable thought or useful fact has ever been lost by the wise limitations enforced by editors who have sense of proportion.

The Around-the-Shop Man has much to say. It isn't what he says, however, but what you listen to that counts. And it isn't the number of periodicals you take that counts, but the number that really help. The Continent is made to help you. Why not talk to others about it, just as you would pass on to your friends or neighbors a way to make hens lay or plants to grow, the address of that laundress who does such nice work, the latest book that you enjoyed, or that excellent new recipe you found?

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B."
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

PIPE AND REED ORGANS
AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
Hinners Organ Co., PEKIN, ILL.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat, or Acetylene Generator, $29.00. Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus. Get our latest catalog and terms.
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect
Minneapolis, :: Minn.
Will be glad to send church booklet to churches intending to build, upon receipt of 6c postage stamps.

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

GOOD SUBSCRIPTION MAN WANTED to travel in Eastern States. Address with references The Continent, 156 5th Ave., New York, N. Y.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

The Best Way
The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

Memorial Windows
Beautiful in design, highest quality in materials, best workmanship in execution. We number many Presbyterian churches among our patrons. Let us tell you what we can do for you. Write today for particulars.
FLANAGAN & BIEDENWEG CO., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work? The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only
C105 Church F'rnit're | School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture | Office Desks D105
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

Registered Trade Mark

Established Half a Century

White and Colored Wash Fabrics

Spring 1913

Our collection of Dress Cottons, Shirtings and Dress Linens is now very complete. Among the new materials are the latest French shades and color combinations. The assortment includes:

Cotton Voiles, in stripe, check, solid colors, embroidered figures, silk stripe, etc., 40 to 45 inches wide, 28c to $1.25 per yard.

Poplins, Repps, Gros Grain and Ottoman Cords in colors and white, 28 inches wide, 25c to 75c per yard.

White Pique, French and English manufacture, all size cords, 27 to 44 inches wide, 35c to $1.25 per yard.

French Crepe, in white and colors, showing a wide range of plain and embroidered effects, also plain shades, 31 to 44 inches wide, 75c to $1.75 per yard.

Japanese Crepe, in a range of solid colors and colored stripes on white grounds, 30 inches wide, special at 25c per yard.

French Crepe and Voile, printed or embroidered in Dresden or Bulgarian colors, 40 inches wide, $1.75 to $2.50 per yard.

Irish Dimities, in all white or white grounds printed in floral effects, also dots, figures and stripes, 25c to 45c per yard.

French Eponge, Ratine and Velour, in white and solid colors, also two tone black and white stripes and mixed suiting effects, 40 to 52 inches wide, $1.25 to $3.75 per yard.

Dress Linens from the leading French, Irish and Continental manufacturers. Every new weave and shade is represented as well as the various widths and weights in whites, also natural black and white, and mixed suiting effects, prices 25c to $1.25 per yard.

Samples of any of these lines, except bordered material, mailed upon request.

James McCutcheon & Co.,

5th Avenue & 34th Street, N. Y.

Look Out for Burglars!

PUT YOUR

Abstracts, Notes, Bonds, Jewelry, Deeds, Silverware, Diamonds, and all Insurance Other Policies, Valuables

IN THE

Royal Safety Deposit Vaults

160 W. Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO

TRUNKS STORED

BOXES RENTED FOR $3 PER YEAR
AND UPWARDS

Representative Wanted

Employment can be given another man of suitable age and experience to act as subscription field representative of THE CONTINENT in specially good territory. The work will be found pleasant and profitable. Give age, references and qualifications in your reply, addressing "B,"

The Continent
156 Fifth Avenue :: New York City

"The Leading Fire Insurance Company of America"

ÆTNA
INSURANCE COMPANY
HARTFORD, CONN.

Incorporated 1819 Charter Perpetual

Cash Capital,	$5.000,000.00
Cash Assets,	23,051,531 36
Total Liabilities,	9,813.138.86
Net Surplus,	8,238.392.50
Surplus for Policy-Holders,	13,238,392.50
Losses Paid in 94 years,	132,981,553.48

WM. B. CLARK, President

Vice-Presidents,
HENRY E. REES, A. N. WILLIAMS

E. J. SLOAN, Secretary

Assistant Secretaries,
E. S. ALLEN GUY E. BEARDSLEY RALPH B. IVES

W. F. WHITTELSEY, Jr., Marine Secretary

WESTERN BRANCH 175 W. Jackson Boule'd, Chicago, Ill..........	THOS. E. GALLAGHER, Gen'l Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Ass't General Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Marine General Agent.
PACIFIC BRANCH 301 California St., San Francisco, Cal..........	A. G. SANDERSON, General Agent.
MARINE DEPARTMENT..................	CHICAGO, Ill., 175 W. Jackson Boule'd. NEW YORK, 63-65 Beaver Street. BOSTON, 70 Kilby Street. PHILADELPHIA, 226 Walnut Street. SAN FRANCISCO, 325 California Street.

"A FAIR FACE MAY PROVE A FOUL BARGAIN." MARRY A PLAIN GIRL IF SHE USES SAPOLIO

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 7 FEBRUARY 13, 1913 WHOLE No. 2229

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

The Morality of Being Efficient

"THE MAN NOT ABLE TO PAY FOR HIS KEEP——"

Half the economic problems of the times center in this pathetic and almost unhelpable figure.

Deliberate crowding down of wages by playing off one group of needy workers in competition against another is, of course, the most evident reason for underpayment of workers, and it is not right to say a word that will minimize the enormity of that injustice. It is human selfishness at its meanest.

But fair handling of all the facts in the case soon shows that employing greed is not the only reason why workers are paid less than they can live on. The other reason is the sad prevalence of inefficiency among the workers themselves.

To the just economic ideal of a comfortable livelihood assured to every individual member of the social order, there stands one baffling obstacle in the grim fact that a multitude of persons are not prepared to render the world any service worth a livelihood.

In many minor industries where pay is confessedly too low, the inherent trouble is that the product which the labor creates is of too slight importance to popular needs for it to stand a higher selling price. In such cases increased labor cost would simply end the industry, and in place of low-paid work there would be none at all. The same remark applies to much "common labor" elsewhere.

And unhappily, workers thus employed are usually incapable of more skilled service for which the market of the world's necessities would return a living wage.

A concrete example is the industry of shelling nuts—notoriously ill paid. Doubtless, there is selfish exploitation mixed up even in this situation, but the determining fact is that users of nuts will shell the nuts themselves rather than pay a considerable price to have the work done by others. Inevitably the wage stays at bottom.

◆

The condition so illustrated is a complex question that could be commented on in many phases; as, for instance, the deplorable causes of inefficiency in the limited opportunities of many and the evil habits of some, or perhaps more to practical point, the duty of successful employers to provide for workers thus hampered as generously and sympathetically as resources will by any means allow.

But the purpose of referring to the subject here is to point out a thought to which parents and teachers ought to give conscientious attention in view of the trouble that the inefficient man causes in the world—the necessity, to wit, of instructing boys and girls in the absolute obligation of every human life to "pay full fare" for riding on this old planet earth.

For normal young folks in full possession of average faculties there is no possible chance of overemphasizing this principle:

It is a fundamental dictate of decent social morality that every young person anticipating active life in the world ought to prepare himself to render his community some kind of service worth at least as much to the common well being of men as he expects to receive for his own well being.

That is to say, efficiency is a moral duty.

◆

As ordinary sentiment runs now, efficiency in life is commended to the young only as a condition of personal success—a means of getting ahead and achieving wealth or fame. And on that ground it is commended only to the bright young folks; others who have little chance or show no promise of doing unusually well, are left outside the pale of the lesson.

But when it is appreciated that efficiency is the only foundation on which an equitable social order can be finally built—with comfortable earned livings for everybody—effective service becomes just as significant in the mediocre man as in the brilliant man.

"Find out what you can do. Then learn to do it. Then do it for the sake of people around you."

Under that advice, accepted with true vision, there can really not exist the contrast between brilliant and mediocre individualities. The Creator has made a wonderful distribution of abilities among his children in the world, and every man would be brilliant if he would only be loyal to the thing he is most capable of and make fine work in that one thing the goal of his ambition.

It is a totally external and largely false rating of things by which human opinion appraises some occupations to be more worthy of a youth's ambitions than others.

Intellectual professions and business pursuits are generally regarded as somehow more honorable than manual occupations, but to the man whose talents God has fitted for handwork the discrimination is totally unfair. It has misled many a young man from the course of life in which he could most usefully and therefore most honorably have "paid for his keep."

◆

One very important deduction from all this, which the conscientious young man or woman will quickly see, is that the choice of one's occupation and manner of life in the world is by no means wholly or even mainly a question of "what one would like to do." That has bearing as an index to the bent of nature; but the question that really overrules it in the last analysis is this: "What does the world most need of me?"

To seize on an illustration close at hand, the common current remark that the nation needs more farmers ought to be to a young fellow choosing his life occupation more than an interesting note of economic conditions. He should take thought whether it may perhaps be a message of direct command to him.

If the country needs farmers more than it needs doctors, for example, there is a square-cut moral issue for him to face before he decides to be a doctor. Only a conscientious opinion that he is likely to be more efficient as doctor than as farmer can justify him in choosing the occupation for which there is less public need.

◆

Ambition is dangerous except in one form.

The only virtuous and wise ambition is ambition to do some service to one's fellow men just as well and effectively as it can possibly be done.

Contrariwise, the willingness to receive good from God and the world without rendering in return the utmost measure of helpfulness within one's power, is always shame, degradation, sin.

And these broad principles apply to all work and all workers—to men of few talents and men of many. They also apply equally to men of wealth and men of poverty. Observed, they will glorify any occupation—even scavenging from the streets. Ignored, they will condemn to disgrace any personality, however favored.

The World

Coup d' Etat in Mexico; Madero Overthrown

Mexico City captured by revolutionists, President Madero and his family in flight, the cabinet resigned, the federal army in revolt and General Felix Diaz in control was the news from the southern border on Monday. Diaz and General Bernardo Reyes, two leaders imprisoned by Madero, were released by the revolting soldiers, who followed their leadership in an attack on the national palace. During this attack General Reyes was killed. He was one of the strong men of the Porfirio Diaz regime, a statesman as well as a soldier. Ex-President Diaz feared his popularity and sent him out of the country, ostensibly on a diplomatic mission, but hurriedly recalled him when attacked by Madero—too late, however, to be of any assistance. General Reyes made his peace with Madero and entered the new administration, but withdrew and contested unsuccessfully for the presidency against Madero at the first election. From El Paso, Texas, he laid plans to overthrow his younger rival. Lured back to Mexico, he was forced to surrender, and had been in prison for over a year, as President Madero did not dare or did not wish to execute him. The son of General Reyes committed suicide because of grief over his father's death.

The same sort of conciliatory or vacillating treatment of Felix Diaz saved the latter from being shot after the failure of his attempted revolution at Vera Cruz last October. He is a nephew of Porfirio Diaz, but is not known to represent the latter.

Events moved swiftly in the Mexican capital last Sunday, which was a day of intermittent fighting in the streets. The killed were placed at 250. Madero was sure that he was victorious until he learned that General Blanquet, whom he had relied upon for defense, would refuse to fight Diaz.

Great concern was felt for the safety of foreigners, as neither the old nor the new leaders could promise protection. Over 100 Americans are said to have been slain in Mexico within the last two years, but President Taft has steadily adhered to a policy of nonintervention, apparently hoping and believing Madero was strong enough to cope with the situation.

This policy of noninterference was not followed in Nicaragua and Honduras, where American sailors and marines acted vigorously to restore order. But revolutionary plottings were again reported in those countries and in Salvador and Guatemala. The president of Salvador, Dr. Araujo, has just died as the result of an attack by a band of assassins who came from and returned to Guatemala. Last Saturday President Taft ordered American warships to cover all the important points on the east and west coasts of Central America.

* * *

Second Chapter of Turko-Balkan Warfare Is Bitter

War was resumed last week between the Turks and the Balkan allies—more bitter, fierce and bloody than before. At Scutari the combined Montenegrin and Servian forces attacked the fortifications under the personal direction of King Nicholas of Montenegro. The king is striving desperately to regain the prestige of his royal house, which was sadly impaired by the lack of success of the Montenegrin arms during the first chapter of hostilities. Bombardment of the great fortress of Adrianople was incessant, but up to the first of the week fruitless. Its defense under Shukri Pasha, both before and after armistice, is the one great heroic page thus far written for Turkey in this war.

The principal operations are along the Tchatalja lines and the Gallipoli peninsula. Observation and experience are said to have shown the Bulgarians that the forts were well nigh impregnable to frontal attacks, and a flanking movement was attempted. As war correspondents were excluded from the armies and all dispatches rigidly censored, information has been meager and indefinite. At Sofia it was reported that all attempts on the part of the Turks under Enver Bey as commander had been repulsed. Shefket Pasha, the new grand vizier, made extraordinary efforts to reanimate and reorganize the army near Constantinople. To insure a supply of food for the fighting men the larger part of the provisions in the capital are said to have been seized by the government.

* * *

Millions for Gospels in Native Tongues

What is believed to be the largest single bequest ever made to the cause of foreign missions was the recent gift of $4,500,000 by Robert Arthington, who lately died at Teignmouth, England. His will leaves $2,500,000 to the Baptist Missionary Society of London and $2,000,000 to the London Missionary Society for the primary purpose of circulating the Scriptures in native tongues. Where the people do not know how to read they are to be taught. Mr. Arthington's instructions for the carrying out of his noble purpose are interesting. He says:

"If practicable the income shall be applied for the purpose of giving to every tribe of mankind that has them not and which speaks a language distinct from all others, accurate and faithful copies of at least the gospels of St. John and St. Luke, together with the book of Acts of the Apostles, printed in the language of that tribe, and to teach in some way at least ten or twelve persons of each such tribe how to read and perhaps one tribe of people, some of whom know how to read, and have printed gospels, may be urged to evangelize some other tribe. It is my wish that everywhere in all Africa, in South America, in Central America, in Asia, in the South Sea islands and in the Indian archipelago, all tribes and great peoples destitute of the gospels should in some means be reached promptly (the actual heathen first) and put in possession of the gospels. I desire that the Light of Life as a lamp shall be left standing among them until each tribe has formed a church, and that they shall be visited regularly by devoted teachers until every tribe in the land shall have the gospel in print. No delay shall occur in taking the inestimable treasure to every unreached tribe."

* * *

Firemen May Strike; Other Labor Difficulties

Labor unrest continues to prevail in New York City and state and in the eastern section of the country, notably among the garment workers and the railroad firemen. The latter voted, on a referendum, in favor of a strike, although the railroads had offered to arbitrate the differences. But the railroads wished to use the large board of arbitration specially created last year to pass upon the demands of the locomotive engineers, whereas the firemen want to use the machinery of the Erdman act, which provides for only three arbitrators—one to represent the roads, one to represent the men and a third to be named either by the two sides or appointed by Judge Knapp of the commerce court and the United States commissioner of labor. A fact which neither side emphasizes is that the finding of the special board was far from satisfactory to the engine men.

The garment workers' strike involved over 150,000 men and women in New York City, and received personal attention and investigation from Theodore Roosevelt and a large number of prominent social workers. Colonel Roosevelt wrote a letter to one of the Progressive party's representatives in the state legislature suggesting bills for the creation of minimum wage boards in the garment trades. A large section of the industry has already been reorganized, and substantial betterment in working conditions assured.

Waiters in the big New York hotels and restaurants went on a strike which was marked by window smashing and violent encounters with the police. Riotous processions on Broadway were a feature, but the strike failed to enlist public sympathy to any general degree and soon collapsed.

Another strike of most curious nature which occurred in New York last month was that of the reporters and writers employed on four Jewish daily newspapers. They formed an organization with definite requirements for membership and proposed a minimum wage of $25, with a maximum working day, pay for overtime and a limit to output. Newspaper editors throughout the country regarded the news writers' union as a good deal of a joke.

* * *

Income Tax Ratified by Thirty-Six States

Thirty-six states have now ratified the income tax amendment, Wyoming last week completing the three-fourths necessary to authorize Congress to make the levy which Congress has sought to impose in the past but was blocked by the supreme court. The Wilson tariff act of 1894 contained a provision for a tax on incomes of more than $4,000 a year. The new law which Congress is now free to enact may place the minimum at $5,000, although there is some sentiment in favor of putting it lower, on the principle of making everybody contribute his share, even though small. A graduated tax, increasing in rate with the size of the income from 1 per cent up to 3 per cent, is also proposed.

It is estimated that the income tax will bring in about $100,000,000 a year to the government, or more than three times the revenue produced by the present corporation tax or excise. The latter is to be dropped when the income tax becomes effective. This amendment to the federal constitution—the sixteenth—is the first since the reconstruction days following the civil war. It will afford the Democrats an opportunity to reduce some of the protective tariff duties. The seventeenth amendment is already in sight, ten states having ratified the proposal for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people.

* *

Polar Exploring Party Meets Tragic Fate

Captain Robert F. Scott, noted British explorer, and four of his companions lost their lives in a blizzard after reaching the south pole, according to a dispatch from the relief expedition last Monday by way of New Zealand. Although a young man, Captain Scott had made a previous trip to the Antarctic region, competing first with Sir Ernest Shackleton and later with Captain Amundsen, being beaten by the latter by only a month in the race to the pole. Records found on Captain Scott's body showed that he gained the pole on January 18, 1912, only to be frozen to death as he and his party struggled back to their base of supplies.

* *

Welsh Disestablishment Bill Passes

Welsh church disestablishment passed the British house of commons last week by a government majority of 107, nearly the same as the Irish home rule majority. This is one of the important and hotly contested measures of the Liberal ministry, and its passage is another triumph for Premier Asquith and his associates. A most unusual event followed the announcement of the result. A dozen members, led by John Williams, miners' representative, sang with great fervor the Welsh national anthem in the native tongue within the precincts of the house, said to be the first time a chorus had ever been sung there while parliament was sitting. The measure is now in the house of lords.

Since the bill was first introduced it has been considerably modified, and while the church has been disestablished it has not been disendowed, as it will continue to receive the greater part of its present annual income of £260,000 in case no further change is made before final enactment.

* *

House First to Act Against Interstate Liquor Traffic

While public attention and expectation were centered upon the senate waiting for the vote on the Kenyon-Sheppard bill last Monday the house of representatives scored a "beat" by passing the Webb bill of similar import on Saturday. The vote was 240 yeas to 65 nays. The Webb bill prohibits the interstate shipment of liquors with intent to violate the laws of the state of destination, but is weaker in its terms than the senate measure, whose passage was confidently looked for this week. The differences between the two bills will probably be speedily adjusted in joint conference, but the liquor interests are hoping that some delay will prevent agreement and final enactment of the statute before the adjournment of Congress, less than three weeks away.

As repeatedly pointed out, this legislation will simply give to each state the right to deal with the liquor traffic as it sees fit, without having its prohibitory laws nullified by the action of liquor sellers in other states. The constitutional question involved may safely be left to the supreme court. Christian people and friends of temperance everywhere are rejoicing in this latest victory for righteousness.

* *

American Report on Putumayo Horrors

Congress has received the report of the cruelties practiced upon the Indian tribes of the Putumayo district of Peru which were first given publicity in London a few months ago and shocked the whole civilized world. Stuart J. Fuller, American consul at Iquitos, Peru, made the investigation, and his findings are in line with those of Sir Roger Casement, British consul-general at Rio de Janeiro in 1910. The scene of the outrages is the remote rubber gathering district in the upper Amazon country, lying east of the almost impassable Andes and over 3,000 miles by river route from the Atlantic. Mr. Fuller found that the labor of the natives is secured by a system of peonage amounting to slavery. Laborers who failed to bring in the required quantity of rubber were beaten, maimed and even killed. Attempts to escape were met with additional barbarous punishments.

The Peruvian Amazon Company and Arana Brothers are two of the firms first mentioned as profiting from this slave labor, and the responsibility of the London directors of these concerns was investigated by a committee of the British parliament.

Coincidentally with the publication of Consul Fuller's report Mr. Pezet, the Peruvian minister to the United States, gave assurances to the state department that steps have been taken by his government for the improvement of conditions.

Religious World

Great Hoax Proved on Mormon Prophet

Bishop F. S. Spalding, presiding over the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Utah, has been noted among orthodox church people in that state for his aversion to harsh controversy with the Mormons. He has in fact been often criticised for his placable temper. But the bishop has proved in a highly interesting document that his scrupulous courtesy is capable of doing Mormonism more harm than many attacks of bitterness. It is a very modest pamphlet which Bishop Spalding has published, and it is characteristically dedicated by "my many Mormon friends who are as honest searchers after the truth as the author hopes he himself is."

The pamphlet is entitled "Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator." From the first it admits and pays tribute to the intellectual honesty of the best of the Mormons. But the honesty of Smith is held fairly open to historical question. His story of the golden plates from which the Book of Mormon is said to have been miraculously translated cannot be tested, since Smith declared that he was compelled to return the plates to their original burial place. But there do remain the complete conditions for determining Smith's truthfulness in regard to another pretended historical discovery of his, and Bishop Spalding submits to his Mormon friends that if Smith did not tell the truth in regard to that, it is almost certain that he was a deceiver in regard to his story of the origin of the book of Mormon.

In the year 1835, when Smith and his supporters had established themselves in the first Mormon colony at Kirtland, Ohio, a roving Irish showman appeared there carrying four Egyptian mummies for public exhibition. Interested Mormons bought the mummies from the wanderer and with them several strips of papyrus covered with Egyptian hieroglyphics—which were at that time not entirely decipherable even by the most learned scholars. But the pretentious Smith soon announced that he had been enabled by direct divine revelation to read the inscriptions, and he had discovered them to be autograph writings of the patriarchs Abraham and Joseph. Later he published "The Book of Abraham," purporting to be a translation of the Abraham papyrus, and with it he reproduced rude copies of the hieroglyphics which he claimed to have rendered into English. All this material is preserved to the present generation in that volume of Mormonism's sacred library entitled "The Pearl of Great Price."

This book Bishop Spalding submitted to the most distinguished Egyptian scholars alive today and asked if Smith had translated correctly. Without comment—for no comment is needed—the bishop's new pamphlet prints their answers. Dr. Spalding received replies from Dr. A. H. Sayce of Oxford, Dr. Flinders Petrie of London, Professor James H. Breasted of Chicago, Dr. Arthur A. Mace of New York, Dr. John Peters of the University of Pennsylvania, Professor Mercer of Pittsburg, Dr. Edward Meyer of Berlin and Dr. Friedrich von Bissing of Munich. Higher authority would be impossible to name. And all of them say in unqualified terms that nowhere in the hieroglyphics which Smith reproduced is there the slightest resemblance to the meaning which he attributes to them. So far from being documents connected with Abraham, the papyri that Smith found rolled up in the mummy wrappings were simply the ceremonial funeral incantations which the Egyptians always buried with their dead. The identical sort of thing has been found in thousands of tombs, and can be seen on exhibition in many museums.

A keen Protestant layman long resident in Salt Lake City says he believes the Spalding pamphlet to be the most shaking blow which the faith of Mormons there has ever received.

* *

Quarterly in Interest of Christian Unity

Dr. Silas McBee, former editor of The Churchman, announces the forthcoming publication of a religious quarterly, which will be of a character unique not alone in America but, indeed, in all Christendom. As might be inferred from the well known enthusiasms of the editor, the new magazine, which is to be published under the name of The Constructive Quarterly, is to be devoted to the unity of all Christians. But it is not to stand forth as the advocate of any particular policy or method of union. In order that it may be absolutely clear of any sign of propaganda, Dr. McBee states that the magazine will maintain no editorial department whatever. Standing thus impartially among the churches and urging no program upon them, The Constructive Quarterly is designed to offer an absolutely free forum in which men of all communions are at liberty to state their own conceptions of Christian truth, not holding in abeyance even tenets which excite controversy.

In this way Dr. McBee expects to cultivate loyalty of conviction while he also trusts that unhindered discussion will in the end accentuate more points of agreement than of disagreement, and so minister directly to the sentiment of Christian union. To support his enterprise the editor has assembled a conspicuous editorial board, including in America Archbishop Platon of the Russian Church, Dr. William Adams Brown, President Robert A. Falconer, Dr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. Henry van Dyke, Presbyterians; Dean Shailer Mathews, Baptist; Chancellor J. H. Kirkland and Bishop F. J. McConnell, Methodists; President W. Douglas Mackenzie, Congregationalist, and Dr. W. P. DuBose, George Wharton Pepper and Dr. W. H. van Allen, Episcopalians. The British list includes the bishop of Winchester, ex-Premier Balfour, Arthur Henderson, labor member of Parliament; Professors Denney, Paterson, Sanday, Selbie and Glover; Dean W. R. Inge, Dr. James Hope Moulton and Rev. William Temple. Members are also announced from Germany, Russia and India. All of these are Protestants or Greek Catholics. No Romanist would join the editorial board, but several in America, England and on the continent agreed to have their names announced as "cooperators." Among these in America are Father John J. Wynne of the Jesuits, Monsignor Shahan, Professor Pace and Dr. Andrew J. Shipman.

The first number will appear March 1. The list of writers in the initial issue and for succeeding numbers includes a remarkable array of the most eminent church leaders of both America and Europe. The George H. Doran Company of New York will become the publishers.

✣ ✣

Remembering Beginnings of an Old Catechism

The Reformed Church in the United States—historically descended from German Calvinistic congregations of the Rhine valley in reformation times—is this year observing the 350th anniversary of the promulgation of the Heidelberg catechism, which is the established doctrinal standard of that church.

The Heidelberg catechism was formulated at the command of a great Protestant prince, Frederick III., who ruled in Heidelberg as elector of the Palatinate. Troubled at the quarrels of Lutheran scholars over the competing catechisms of Brenz and Luther, the elector thought he could bring peace by having two Reformed professors in his university—Ursinus and Olivianus—make a new catechism better than either. The Lutherans, however, failed to appreciate this well meant service, and the only effect on them was to turn them from conflict among themselves to launch a fiercer storm of theological assault on what Ursinus and Olivianus had written. But the work of the Heidelberg theologians lived through all criticism to become perhaps the most affectionately cherished of all the doctrinal symbols of Protestantism. Its warm tone of Christian experience, contrasted with the severe technical language of theology in which other creeds and catechisms are expressed, has been admired by spiritually minded Christians of many connections, and no doubt accounts for the peculiarly tender reverence in which it is held by those who studied it in youth.

January 19, 1563, was the actual date on which the Synod of the Palatinate ratified the elector's proclamation of the then new catechism. The same date this year fell on Sunday and that day was kept by many Reformed congregations as a high feast of commemoration. Other observances, with looks both forward and backward, will follow later in the year in classes and synods of the denomination. It is significant, however, that even this celebration year is marked by considerable agitation among Reformed people for the preparation of a modern catechism to be set alongside the venerable instrument from old Heidelberg, just as Presbyterians have prepared a modern intermediate catechism to supplement the shorter catechism of the Westminster fathers.

—The Continent observed not very long ago that Dean Shailer Mathews, the new president of the Federal Council of Churches, stands out exceptionally strong from the mass of modern champions of social Christianity by reason of his strong primary emphasis on the spiritual life. This attitude found new expression in a recent address in which Dr. Mathews said: "You cannot save the world by going into antituberculosis societies. The needs of the age are not to be met by the mere practicing of good Samaritanism. Christ is a great Recreator, not a reformer. The church is not the jack of all reforms. The church has a function, and the first item in it is to convict the world of sin."

—The term Catholic when applied to a single denomination is more signboard than steeple.

Editorial

The Man Who Cannot Believe

IN A RECENT volume which discusses religion and modern psychology, without any particular erudition regarding either of them, but with a human sympathy which is very attractive, the writer suggests that there are really three groups of people, and only three, in the matter of Christian faith—those who do believe, those who won't believe and those who cannot believe. He says of himself that he belongs in the last group. He has no word of contempt for the man who does believe, nor any word of condemnation for the man who will not believe. So far as he is concerned, he simply cannot believe in the Christian teaching.

Now, a man must be in a curious state of mind when he sets out with the declaration that he cannot believe a thing. There is no possible ground which will justify that position except one. If he has had an experience which absolutely convinces him of a truth, then he may be very sure that nothing that will occur would convince him of the opposite of that truth. Experience may have confirmed him in one opinion, so that he could not take the opposite opinion. There can be no other ground for saying so strong a thing as that one cannot believe.

There is no man who cannot believe what is true when evidence comes before him, unless he is in that far irrational. There can be nothing in the intellectual constitution of a man which forbids his accepting any truth of any sort, provided the evidence sufficient for a rational mind lies before him. That apparently obvious fact needs to be pressed in our own day. A good many men are ready to throw the responsibility for their unbelief back upon God by declaring that the element that makes for faith has been left out of them. Belief is simply an act of a rational mind. It is no peculiar quality of the soul, which might be omitted in the mental makeup.

As a matter of fact, there are only two groups of people with regard to the Christian faith—those who do believe, and those who do not believe. In the latter group there are doubtless some who are stubbornly determined they will not believe. In the same group there are those who are quick to see the opposing evidence and are not inclined to give as much weight to some lines of evidence as to others. But the Christian faith does not depend on any one line of evidence. It has as many lines as there are minds to be reached. Those who find it difficult to believe in the Christian faith, or any other thing that claims to be true, ought to guard themselves against falling into a way of carelessness and indifference, excusing themselves on the ground of the difficulty of belief for a neglect which is itself wrong.

This author in the same book gives us a little glimpse of the weak point in many who say they cannot believe. He tells that once a pious lady insisted upon quizzing him as to whether he believed that Jesus was God. He replied that he had not studied the matter sufficiently to have any definite opinion; to which she retorted, "with suprising tartness," that as for her, she had not studied it sufficiently to have any doubts. Her reply affords him a starting point for considerable comment upon the number of people who have accepted faith with no thought. Most that he says is eminently true and deserving. He does not, however, pay the slightest heed to the revelation he has made of his own position. Here is a live, vital question, which is vastly important if it is anything; here is a man writing a book which involves that question, and declaring that he has not thought about it enough to have formed any definite opinion about it! Yet, this is the same man who "cannot believe" in the Christian faith.

The hitch in the logic is perfectly obvious. But it is only an instance of what every Christian worker has seen over and over. The reason so many men think they cannot believe is simply that they do not "study the matter sufficiently to have any definite opinion." There needs to be a new note sounded in our pulpits, a note of daring and of challenge. The Christian faith is entirely capable of standing at the bar of human reason. It will not submit itself finally to human reason, because it must necessarily go beyond the present power of the mind, but it nowhere goes counter to reason. It is nowhere irrational, even though it may be at some points superrational. That is, it does not cross reason—it simply goes out beyond it. Any man, therefore, who maintains his rational powers can believe in the Christian faith, if that faith is true. He may not believe it because the evidence may not be so presented to him that it is convincing. Then it becomes a question of his own readiness to "study the matter sufficiently."

Union by All Means but Not Through Disunity

One of the most encouraging recent signs in the sunrise sky of Christian unity, as the Presbyterian eye may view it, is a widely published article from the venerable Dr. S. A. King of Austin, Texas, wherein he advocates union of all Presbyterian bodies in the nation. It is sometimes alleged that the Southern Church will not be able to rejoin the church from which war separated it until the whole generation is dead that remembers the bitter feelings then aroused. But such a declaration does scant justice to these now aged men. Dr. King's letter shows how veteran hearts, yearning over the great problems of religion, can feel as keenly as younger men do the strength-sapping tragedy of divisions among brethren, and the imperious call for unity in face of the church's task. And it is a joyous thing that for these old men, so eminent and influential a representative as Dr. King is ready to lift a voice in favor of ending the severance begun in their days of youth.

From this appreciation for Dr. King's unifying word it detracts nothing to say, however, that his proposed method of unification is inadmissible. He suggests three or four sectional Assemblies, semi-independent, represented at intervals in some sort of supreme Presbyterian court. But where unity is the demand this plan contemplates new divisions. What is wanted now is a measure to bring North and South together, and it will not aid that to cut apart East and West, as Dr. King's plan obviously contemplates. To hold Presbyterians from all quarters of the nation in unity of fellowship and conjoint action, there must be one national legislature, and only one. There must be one and only one national system of benevolent boards. Union must unite.

The argument that such an organization would be too big to handle is only an ecclesiastical survival from political talk now seventy-five years out of date. Then unimaginative statesmen were saying that a nation stretching from Atlantic to Pacific would be too big to administer, but how childish now their timid phrases sound. The church must think in terms too ample to be bound by ancient dreads of great effort and great responsibility. When viewed carefully from all angles, this idea of provincial church assemblies in a republic where the very thought of political provinces would affront patriotism will quickly exclude itself from consideration by its own terms.

What is possible, we believe, is a union between Presbyterians U. S. and U. S. A. so devised as to leave the present General Assemblies to continue their separate existence for the time being. A geographical line would have to be drawn somewhere between them, so they would no longer overlap in territory. It could be understood that they would consolidate their benevolent agencies as rapidly as seemed practicable. Constitutional changes would be effected only by consent of both. This association of Assemblies would inevitably lead in time to their consolidation, so that in this case the consent to provincial assemblies would be recognized as only temporary.

Two Men Measured at Two Poles

The north pole's discovery stands to the credit of the United States, but in one respect it credits America less than the discovery of the south pole honors Norway. America's flag bearer, Admiral Peary, frankly confessed that he did not want anybody else to share with him the glory of reaching the pole, and so, as he approached his destination, he left behind all his companions except one colored man—an insinuation that a negro couldn't acquire glory, which happily this same negro has since disproved. But Amundsen, carrying the Norwegian flag to the south pole, bore thither also a more generous and a nobler heart. He says in his book describing the journey that he expressly planned that four of his most faithful men along with him should attain the great goal of their hard travel. "I had determined," he writes, "that the act of planting the flag at the pole—the historic event—should be equally divided among us all. It was not for one man to do this; it was for all who had staked their lives in the struggle, and held together through thick and thin. This was the only way in which I could show my gratitude to my comrades in this desolate spot." It doesn't take a big act to measure the size of a man; a little test of thoughtfulness is enough.

—An Italian lawyer in Chicago has attracted the attention of The Inter-Ocean by adopting into his family four orphans—children of a fellow lodge member—although he already has four children of his own. The Inter-Ocean says this act is "not the first of Mr. De Stefano's quixotic impulses." A few years ago he paid out of his own earnings $20,000 to depositors who had lost money by the failure of his father's bank. If all this is quixotic, then may God give us more Quixotes. A world full of them would be a mighty good place to live in.

—Dr. Daniel Russell of Irvington, who officiated at the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, wrote to one of the New York City papers by editorial request a very interesting tribute to the bride. "Helen Gould," he says, "has taught a Sunday school class for years and has worked as faithfully in every society of the Irvington Presbyterian church as the most humble member." One of the sewing societies of the congregation sent her a letter of congratulation, saying: "We send this note to tell our love for you. You were with us every meeting after we organized, and your presence was a benediction." Dr. Russell notes that Miss Gould's institutional benefactions have practically always preferred agencies that are pledged to propagate the Bible idea of regeneration, and realize it directly in human lives. Dr. Russell says: "The deep secret of her life is that she has laid hold upon and aimed to live that faith which finds its most favorable expression in the tremendous affirmatives of the apostles' creed."

—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn, if he has any accomplishment in the line of song, might appropriately devote his voice to the old tune, "I Am Something of a Liar Myself." At least, he might claim that distinction by responsible proxy. During the past fall his press bureau sent out for country papers that take his "boiler plate" what purported to be a quotation from "Great Britain's foremost family paper," stating that Pastor Russell had been "inducted to the charge of the London tabernacle, known all over the united kingdom and thousands of miles beyond as the pulpit of the revered Spurgeon." In Brooklyn Russell calls his church "Brooklyn tabernacle" in the evident hope of making people suppose that he had succeeded Talmage, but he has never had the nerve to say that his church actually is the Talmage church. In regard to London, he feels a little more reckless, and is willing to print in uninformed rural regions at least the black-and-white falsehood of a claim that he has preached in Spurgeon's old pulpit.

—Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, having heard in Australia that the methods of American professional evangelists are being severely criticised in conferences of the evangelists themselves, writes home to say that he is persuaded there must be considerable correction of evangelistic habits in regard to vulgar expressions in sermons, high pressure methods to get professed conversions, the commercialism that has crept into the work and the disposition to attack pastors and assail the church. Dr. Chapman advises his fellow workers to "cease attacking other Christian workers simply because they do not agree with us, and leave the subjects of criticism, high or low, to the scholars—not one evangelist in a hundred knows about either." To preach a straight message of salvation by the death of Christ and be satisfied with a reasonable income obtained by unquestionable means are Dr. Chapman's cardinal advices for his fellow workers in evangelism.

—Of moral issues in Congress just now the bill to provide for suppression of disorderly resorts through the use of injunction seems to be the most urgent, and the most important for righteous citizens to insist on. It has already passed the house, and if it can be pushed through the senate in the next week, a large number of the worst resorts can be suppressed before the inauguration crowds flock to the capital. The slogan, "Clean up Washington in time for inauguration," has made a big public appeal in the capital, and citizens there will use the law promptly if they can get it. Letters and telegrams to Congressman Benjamin Johnson, the chairman of the District of Columbia committee in the house, have a chance just now of unusual effect. Send them in.

—Despotic as the papacy of Rome is, yet it oddly fails to secure obedience from its own priests to certain of its mandates. Even its highly honored prelates are sometimes "passive resisters." The Independent declares that in Cardinal Farley's great cathedral in New York the stringent papal order against charging admission fees to public worship is still violated in spirit, with but slight concession even to its letter. Admission money is no longer directly demanded at the door, but between the doors and the pews collectors stand watching beside tables that hold contribution plates, and those who enter on the middle aisle are "expected" to deposit 25 cents apiece, those who enter at the sides 10 cents.

—Dr. Wilbert W. White's Bible Magazine, established this year, proves a strong and impressive devotional magazine—certain to have a most wholesome influence. The February number has an eminently wise article on the "Basis of Biblical Authority," in which Professor Schodde concludes an illuminating discussion with these sound words: "It cannot be emphasized too much that these critical researches do not affect the standing of the Scriptures in the church at large to a noticeable extent, as the recognition of the authority of the word is based on other reasons than those drawn from learned study and investigation."

BY WILLIAM PIERSON MERRILL

Sin of Doing Nothing

IF CALLED UPON suddenly to answer the question, "What is sin?" you would be likely to answer, "Sin is doing something wrong." And, of course, the answer would be correct so far as it goes. But if you then should turn to your Bible to find out what sin is, studying with especial care the words and acts of our Lord Jesus, you would begin to see that your answer goes no more than half way, if indeed it goes that far. Over and beyond all sins of doing wrong there are the sins of not doing right. Robert Louis Stevenson, whose sense of spiritual values was almost as remarkable as his instinct for style, wrote once in a letter to a friend, "I am almost willing to say that the only sins which count are sins of omission."

That may seem to you an extreme and unwarranted judgment. But it comes very near to the point of view of Christ our Master; and it is he before whose judgment seat we must stand. When our Master came to the end of his sermon on the mount, with all its wealth of teaching for religion and life, he closed with an incisive and personal application to the conscience of every hearer. He told of two men, each of whom built a house. The one built on the rock and defied the storms. The other built on the sand and his house quickly perished. Now whom does he liken to the foolish man who built on the sand? The man who transgresses God's positive laws? Here is what he says, "Whosover heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not"—not "doeth something else"; just "doeth them not."

My friend, you may have read that story and thought of the foolish man who built on the sand as typifying irreligious people who never attend church. A man who does not attend church could not meet the conditions of the story. It means you and me, whenever we attend church or read a good book, and let the message we have heard make no actual difference in what we do. That is the sin which Jesus thought worthy of emphasizing by placing it at the close of his great sermon.

What one specific teaching of Jesus gives us most definitely his conception of the service we owe to God? I think we would all say, "The parable of the talents." The ending of that parable is among the most terrible of all the judgments in the Bible: "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." What awful wickedness has he done? Has he embezzled trust funds, maltreated his fellow servants, broken positive commands, caroused when he should have worked? Think, and you will recall that the only fault alleged against him is that he did nothing. He did not even lose the money intrusted to him. He kept it safe, in a napkin, hidden in the ground.

How that impresses on our consciences—so apt to rest content because we have done nothing very wrong—the tremendous lesson that God judges us and condemns us for not doing right. It is not only hidden sins and vices that bring upon us the wrath of God; it is hidden talents, virtues, abilities, kept out of service, left unused. Those severe words, "Thou wicked and slothful servant," were addressed, let us never forget, to one whose sole crime was that he did nothing.

Robbers No Worse than Those Who Failed to Give Aid

There is one parable which, better than any other, sets forth our service of man. Jesus was asked to explain the commandment of love to one's neighbor, and he told the matchless story of the man who went down a lonely road, and was set upon and nearly killed by robbers, and was rescued and cared for by the good Samaritan. But there are other characters in the story beside the robbed man and his rescuer. There are a priest and a Levite, who come to the spot, see the wounded man and pass by. Our indignation is aroused as we watch them. We feel, as Christ tells the story, how strong is his unspoken condemnation of the two priests. Yet what had they done?

They had not beaten the poor fellow, or robbed him. They simply came to where a man needed help, and did nothing. And yet as we finish the story, we feel that they are heartless villains. Even the brutal robbers seem less worthy of judgment than these two professed men of God, whose only crime is that they do nothing. The lesson is further emphasized by the figure of the good man in the story. What do we know of him? Very little. He was an alien in race, a heretic in religion. But he did the thing that needed to be done for God and man. That is all. And our Lord told that story to illustrate what it means to keep one-half the law.

Once our Lord drew aside the veil and showed us the great day of judgment. The Son of Man comes in his glory, with the angels; the throne of his glory is set, and all nations are gathered before him, and separated, the sheep on the right hand, the goats on the left. What a fearful saying it is that closes the scene, all the more weighty that it comes from the loving Saviour of men, "And these shall go away into eternal punishment." Who are they that are judged worthy of such a fate? Lawbreakers, murderers, adulterers, traitors? There is no hint of such crimes. For all you find in the picture, they may be respectable people, church attendants, even church members, free from gross vices and outstanding faults. "Inasmuch as ye did it not." That is all the Judge says; that is enough.

Once, I believe once only, did Jesus draw a definite picture of a lost soul in torment. It is a dreadful picture, the rich man in the flames, longing for water, begging for it only to be refused, repenting when too late. Who is this man whom Jesus selects as representative of the hopelessly lost, the only soul he ever pictured in hell? He is not Judas, the traitor; he is a man of whom absolutely nothing is told save that he, abundantly able to help, had a poor man lying at his door, and did nothing. Oh, how strong, how certain, is the conviction that forces itself upon us that to the mind of our Lord the great sin of sins is the sin of doing nothing; that even more serious than doing wrong is the failure to do right.

Only Positive Good Can Stand Before the Judge

We must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. And this is how he judges. It is not enough to avoid wrong; you must also do right, if you would stand before the Son of Man.

This truth has a mighty meaning for our personal life. We are too easily content with a negative virtue, a harmless life, a conduct free from reproach. We are so apt to think ourselves fit for God's presence if our robes are white and our hands clean, when all the time God would respect us far more if we came to him with our garments worn and stained and our hands soiled with honest work for him. The hands and feet of God's best beloved Son were worn and pierced.

Once a young man came running to Jesus, asking what he should do to win eternal life. Jesus reminded him of the laws of God, "Do not kill, do not steal, do not commit adultery, do not covet," and the rest. He said, "All these have I kept from my youth; what lack I yet?" He had done nothing wrong; yet he lacked something. And then the Lord pointed out a positive course: "Sell all that you have and come follow me." It is as if the Master asked, "What have you done?" "I haven't done anything." "Then it is time you did something; you can win eternal life only by positive living." Would not that be his message to us, to many a professing Christian? "You think you are a worthy Christian because you have never done anything that can be pointed out as inconsistent? It is time you did something positive. When God asks for the record of your life, it will not do to show him blank pages, however spotless and white.

Church Must Repel Criticism by Overplus of Service

There is food here for serious thinking about the place and work of the church in the world. What is the most grave charge that thoughtful men are bringing against the church today? Not that she is doing positively wrong things, such as the immoralities against which Luther protested. Not that the church is a detriment to society. The serious charge that we are hearing continually is that in the face of great social needs the church does nothing, that she does not count in movements that help and inspire and uplift the mass of people, that she is silent in the presence of social wrongs, inactive in the presence of social needs.

We may rightly protest that the charge is unfair, that the church says far more and counts for far more in social progress than her critics allow, that her contributions, though indirect, are real. But, if there is any truth in the charge at all, the church must make it a supreme aim—to which she gives her life, if necessary—to show herself a positive and victorious force for social good. Only so can she be worthy to bear the name of Jesus of Nazareth, who proved his divine authority not by staying at home and being good, but by going about doing good.

Our whole conception of religion and life needs to be moved up to this Christ plane out of the negative passive notion into the positive active ideal. There is nothing our common Christianity needs more just now than to be deeply convicted of this sin of doing nothing.

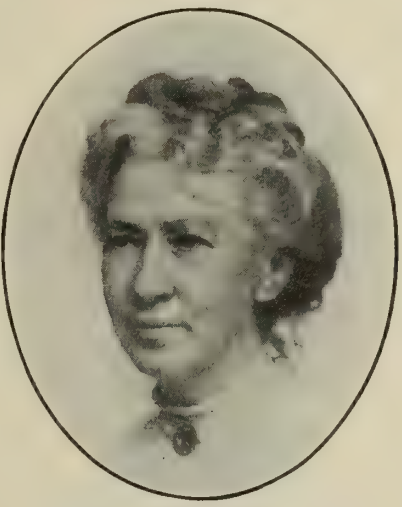
An Alaskan "Mush" to Presbytery

BY S. HALL YOUNG

NOW, IF I am to tell you this story, I hope you will rid your mind of all hardship-and-hero gush. There are fewer hardships in Alaska than in any other country I know. The people live an exuberant life there with wealth and all that goes to make up the externals of happiness. And as to the heroism, that is all nonsense. I am in Alaska as I write because I like it, because it is the most comfortable, pleasant land to live in and to work in that I know of anywhere and, however insane you may consider the statement, I would rather take a journey like that I am about to describe than go around the world or have a million dollars. I can read all about a journey around the world, and the million dollars would fill my life full of care and trouble; but I cannot read about the region I traversed last spring, and there is no anxious care in simply making your journey day by day, from roadhouse to roadhouse, or to a camp in the snow. Your blood leaps in your veins. The struggle, which Emerson says is the best thing in life, is yours, and the daily victory. Nature sings overhead and underneath and all around you. Pessimism and gloom and homesickness are impossible on the trail.

The time was last March, beginning with the 5th; the occasion was the meeting of presbytery at Cordova, on the coast. It was a very necessary meeting, for we must send a delegate to General Assembly. We must assert ourselves again as the biggest presbytery belonging to that body—in space I mean.

I was at Iditarod, 720 miles from Cordova. Dr. Koonce was at Cordova and Dr. Condit at Fairbanks, 442 miles inland from Cordova. There was no other way for me to get to presbytery but to take my dogs and "mush." To those ignorant people who do not know the meaning of that term, I will condescend to explain that the word "mush" is a corruption of the French marchez, which the coureurs du bois shout at their dogs as they urge them along. It is the word now universally used to describe a journey over the trail, and when we drive our dogs or wish to chase them out of the house, we shout "mush!"



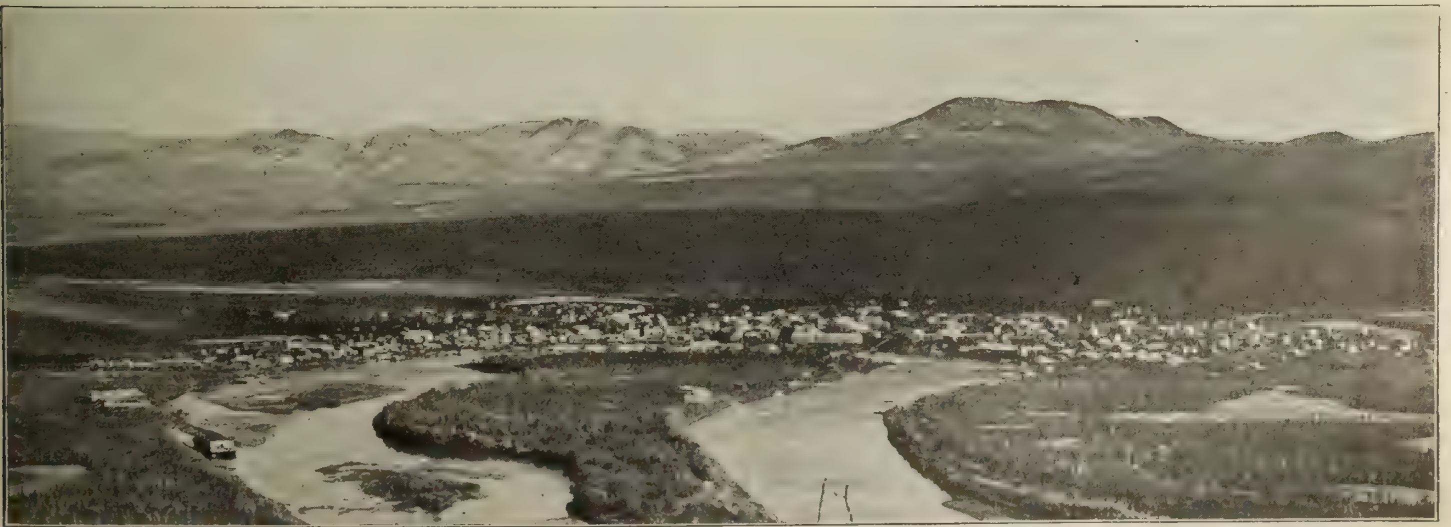
Mrs. S. Hall Young
She went 1,500 miles for a five days' visit with her husband

The journey is to lead across three high ranges of mountains and two great valleys, the Kuskokwim and the Susitna. The trail has been but recently laid out by the government and is little used, but there are roadhouses here and there at irregular intervals and we will take enough provisions with us for emergencies. As to its being an at all formidable undertaking, why, the prospectors, miners and hunters of Alaska take far harder and longer trips constantly and break the trail for their dogs the whole way in unexplored territory. I anticipate the pleasure of that trip across new country with keen delight.

A young Scotchman from the north of Ireland, William Breeze, known far and wide as an experienced "dog musher," is to be my companion. He is bound for Susitna, 300 miles from Iditarod, on a prospecting trip, and will take care of my dogs, boil their feed at night and do the heaviest part of the work.

And now let me introduce you to my team. It is one of the finest teams in all the North. They are five pups of the same litter now 6 cr 7 years old. They are a cross between the MacKenzie River husky and the shepherd dog, and have the long hair and hardy endurance of the former and the sagacity, intelligence and affection of the latter. Being brothers, they know each other and are taught to work together, although this fact does not hinder them from engaging in a general mixup now and again. However, if attacked by strange dogs, the whole five work together beautifully, centering their forces with Napoleonic strategy and beating the enemy in detail. The leader is black, white and tan, marked like a shepherd dog. He had been named "Nigger," but I have changed his name simply to "Leader." It sounds enough like the original to please him and set him going.

The sled is a basket sleigh with handle bars and brake at the back and a "gee-pole" in front, with an extra rope when we have to "neck it" to help the dogs. My wolf robe, given me by Third church of Pittsburg and my old church at Cedar Falls, Iowa, is spread on the floor of the sleigh for my accommodation in the brief intervals of riding. For "dog mushing" in Alaska does not mean luxuriously riding in your sleigh wrapped up in your fur robe while the dogs haul you along the trail. When Egbert Koonce sledded 1,200 miles from Rampart to Valdez in 1902 on his way to General Assembly, I told the Assembly of his feat. A good old doctor of divinity said: "It must be, after all, a really luxurious way of traveling, wrapped up in your furs and reclining in a comfortable sleigh behind your dogs." I turned to Koonce and asked him how much of that 1,200 miles he rode. He replied, "About two miles."



Iditarod, Alaska, Where Dr. Young Began His Long "Mush" to Presbytery Meeting

I shall ride more than this on my way to Seward, but there will not be many places where I can ride half a mile without getting out and running behind the dogs. The beauty of dog mushing is that you are compelled to work as hard as the dogs. You are not on a beaten boulevard, but are wending your way around trees and stumps, over hummocks, up and down hill, along the sides of the mountains, and must keep your hands on the handle bars, lifting the sled on the trail where it runs off and often breaking the trail ahead with your snowshoes. When the dogs are on fairly good roads, they swing along uninterruptedly and you run your best behind. If there are two of you, one holds the handle bars and the other sprints on alone, either in front or behind the sleigh. You will get pretty tired the first two or three days, but after your muscles become hardened and you get your second wind you can run at your keenest gait two or three miles at a time.

On the Trail Through the Wilderness

But let us get started. The trail is well beaten from Iditarod to Flat City, seven and a half miles, and I get aboard, Breeze at the handle bars. My huskies leap into the harness at the word and we make a flying start. I ride perhaps half a mile, then jump off without stopping the team and run ahead of the dogs up the hill. I soon find my fur "parkie" too heavy and discard it for the lighter one made of drilling, in which I do the rest of my mushing to the end of the trail. Moccasins are on my feet, for the trail must be taken flat-footed if one is to have reasonable comfort. A brief halt at Flat to bid friends there good-by, and off we go again.

Dr. Young, Ready to Hit the Winter Trail

After two or three miles we leave the broad road and strike the trail through the wilderness. We soon begin to labor up the first divide. No more riding now. The trail is hard enough to dispense with snowshoes, but heavy enough to make us both walk and labor. I strike the trail ahead, leaving Breeze to the handle bars. I begin to feel the joy of it. The keen, dry air is like wine. The trail winds through the woods, along the edges of gorges and then up a steep mountain. Now the timber ceases and we have rounded wind-swept summits. I leave the little dogs far behind, for it is heavy pulling up the steep. Their bells twinkle faintly from below. I gain nearly a mile on them before they round the summit. I strike my lope down the farther side, but soon hear the bells as they charge down upon me and pass me swinging on toward the roadhouse.

We make only twenty miles the first day, for it was nearly noon when we started, and we are glad to stop at Bonanza roadhouse when dusk is coming on. How good the moose meat tastes! How sweet the beds of hard boards and blankets! The luxury of rest we enjoy to the full. The dogs are fed, our moccasins and German socks hung up to dry and we crawl into our bunks with sighs of relief. There is no floor in the roadhouse, all the lumber has been whipsawed by hand, the funiture manufactured out of boxes and stumps and the utensils are the rudest. But the luxury of splendid meat and good sour-dough bread and coffee makes us feel that we have all that goes to make life desirable.

An early start is necessary every morning. We eat our breakfast by candle light, fill up our thermos bottle with hot coffee, take a big hunk of roasted meat for lunch and "hit the trail" by daylight.

Twenty-six miles today to Moore Creek roadhouse. Snow begins falling in the morning and soon the trail is obliterated by the fast coming feathery flakes. Now the snowshoes must be unstrapped and one must break the trail ahead. We take turns and swing along at a three and a half mile gait. This is real work, and we reach the roadhouse in the middle of the afternoon, really not so tired as on the preceding day.

These are samples of the journey throughout, but, oh, the variety—no two miles alike—and the panorama of beauty that unfolds before us! Notice the beauty of the frost sparkles on the trees. The wonderful law that gives its own distinct varieties of frost crystals to each species of tree; fir, spruce, birch, cottonwood or alder, is exemplified so plainly here that after the first examination you can tell the kind of tree under the frost crystals by the shade of silver. The mountains tower above you, wind-swept, waving snow banners. The vastness of that white hush awes and thrills you. A rough sound would be blasphemy in the solemn silence. The whole landscape is a poem.

The third day we make a "long leg," as the sailors say, from Moore Creek roadhouse to Big Creek, thirty-six miles, every foot of which we have to break trail with snowshoes. I strike ahead on my light "trailers" and Breeze wallows along behind. The fresh snow is so light and deep that it is difficult for him to keep the sled on the trail, and I often mislead by veering a little to right or left. When this occurs, down goes the sled in the deep snow beside the trail, and it has to be lifted up again and the dogs urged on. I get far in advance of him again and again. When I get weary snowshoeing, Breeze takes my place and I his at the handle bars. But in spite of the heavy trail and the weary work for dogs and men, we make the thirty-six miles.

The coming day we have but fourteen miles and a half to make to the village of Tacotna, but it is the hardest mush so far and it takes us nearly all day. The poor little dogs burrow through the snow like gophers. Sometimes from my snowshoes ahead or alongside I can see only their ears and the stumps of their tails. It is joy indeed when on approaching the wilderness village an old friend, Dr. Green, who combines the offices of postmaster, magistrate, physician, dentist and miner, comes across the Tacotna river to guide my tottering steps to his hospitable door, and Mrs. Green's roasted wild chickens are the best viands on earth.

Another hard mush of fourteen miles brings us to another dear old friend, or a pair of them, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Smith. It is a cheering fact that on this trail through the wilderness I only stopped at one roadhouse where the people were all strangers. There is nothing so fine in all the world as the fellowship of the wilderness. There is a bond between men who have conquered the same mountain difficulties, lain under the same blanket in the snow and helped one another over the trail, that is stronger than death. Elmer Smith used to lead the choir when I preached at Nome, and Mrs. Smith was superintendent of the Sunday school there. They are choice and refined people, fit for any society. Mrs. Smith is the only white woman in a radius of fourteen miles, but the happiest and cheeriest person you ever saw.

We are now in the valley of the Kuskokwim. The snow is deep. With Breeze double-tracking ahead, I work for four hours to get my dogs along seven miles. Then going suddenly across a divide, we strike shallow snow and hard trail and swing gayly into the Berry roadhouse, twenty-three miles from Tacotna. The Indian landlady cooks some grouse and caribou, for by this time we hardly touch bread or potatoes, eating vast quantities of wild meat. To those who have mushed along those trails and eaten this wild game it seems the most desirable food possible. The king of all the game is the ovis dalli, the white mountain sheep of Alaska. There is no other meat that compares with this.

From Berry's on, across the McKinley range of mountains 150 miles, we have pretty good roads, fine, clear, sunny weather and no fresh snow. Through the sparkling woods, along the river beds, we hurry, and over rounded and jumbled foothills covered with scraggly trees, the range of the caribou, up deep gorges where moose tracks are plentiful. We always steer a little to the right of majestic Mount McKinley, which lifts its mighty shoulder 20,350 feet in the sky, and the nearer Mount Foraker. We bend after three days down to the South Fork of the Kuskokwim, right under the twin mountains Egypt and Pyramid. Here we stop with a typical man of the wilderness, "French Joe."

He has built his log roadhouse with his own hands, whipsawing the lumber for the floor and for his tables. He is a hunter and trapper, and his walls are hung thick with pelts, all perfect and beautiful; silver, red and cross fox; lynx, wolverine, gray wolf, marten, mink and other furs. He is king of the wilderness and independent of the whole world. Native jams, cranberries and blueberries put up in sugar, currant wine, home-grown potatoes and turnips and a great variety of choice meat were spread in profusion before us. The banks of the world might all break, and its governments go to smash and its crops fail, but Joe would live at the foot of Mount Egypt his cheery, independent, carefree life. In spite of the strenuous mushing, I am gaining in flesh, my muscles hard as nails, my spirit buoyant.

Seized by Lumbago on the Trail

The day out from Joe's I meet with my first disaster. We have nineteen miles of absolutely clear ice on the south fork of the Kuskokwim. The river is full of air holes and open riffles. The dogs swing along at a ripping pace, digging their toenails into the hard ice, the sled slipping sideways and sliding dangerously near to open places. Breeze often has to run ahead at full speed to choose a route, for there is no trail on the ice. Half way up the river I "get gay," as Breeze says. I leave the handle bars to find a route, and fall down hard on the smooth ice. A sharp pang strikes through the small of my back as if from a spear thrust. I get up and go along, thinking the pain will cease, but soon I realize that I am in the grip of an old enemy—lumbago.

From this point on to Seward I cannot make a move without pain, sometimes so great that I gasp for breath. At night in the roadhouse I have great trouble getting into my bunk, and sometimes Breeze has to lift me out in the morning. Were I at home I would be in bed for a couple of weeks, with doctors and nurses fussing over me, but it is just as well that I cannot stop. I take the philosophy of an old fellow in the Rainy Pass roadhouse, near the summit of the range, who says the best cure for a lame back is to "keep on a-mushin'!" I think of Edmund Vance Cook's verse, and it does me more good than all the horse liniments they rub on me.

> "Did you tackle the trouble that came your way
> With a resolute heart and cheerful?
> Or hide your face from the light of day,
> With a craven heart and fearful?
> Oh! A trouble's a ton or a trouble's an ounce,
> Or a trouble is what you make it,
> And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
> But only, how did you take it?"

We drop into the canon of Happy River and here we have our famous moose hunt. Soon after we enter this gorge, we come upon its track—a big bull moose. Now here comes this big, blundering beast to poke our trail full of deep holes and excite our dogs. He is running ahead of us. The snow is five or six feet deep and he goes in almost to his back every step. The walls of the canon are sheer and he cannot escape up its side. The river turns and winds and here and there are little patches of level ground thick with large spruce trees.

For three miles we do not catch sight of the moose, but our dogs show that he is close ahead. In spite of my lame back I have to struggle ahead of them and bat Leader in the face with my cap. Breeze is standing on the brake to keep them from running away. The moose tracks fill our trail for a while, smashing it all to pieces, and then veer sideways to a little patch of woods, and the dogs will go pell mell in the moose's track, burying our sled out of sight in the deep snow. Then we have to haul them around and lift the sled on the track again and try to get them along the trail.

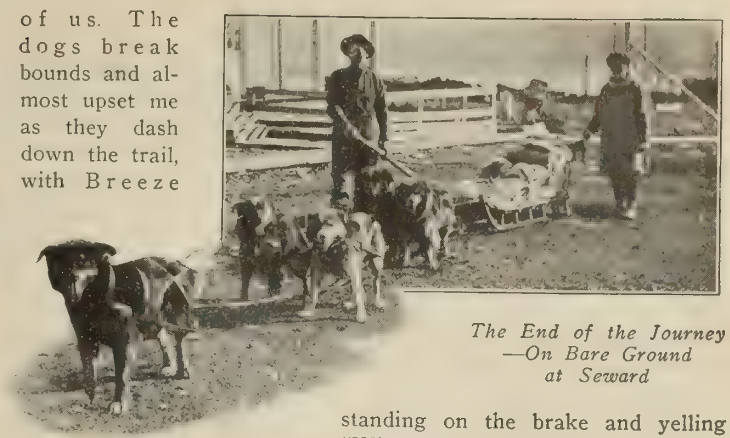
Trying to Overtake a Bull Moose

Three miles down the river we catch sight of the big moose and the dogs go wild. Being from Pennsylvania, I have the kindliest feeling toward this moose; I do not want to hurt him at all, but only, like Taft, wish he would keep out of the running, and like Woodrow Wilson, want to go by him. But our bells are jingling and our dogs barking and we are shouting at them and it is a fearsome thing to the bull moose, this animated machine that is charging down the river at him. So on he struggles through the deep snow, spoiling our trail and filling my companion's mind with blasphemous thoughts that occasionally break out in spite of his self-restraint.

Summit of Crow Creek Pass, "the Worst Mountain Pass of All," Over the High Alaska Range

Dr. Young and his companions struggled six hours to make five miles at this point

Four miles of this moose hunt, with the big brute growing more tired and we more anxious to pass him. Instead of our hunting the moose, he is haunting us. At last, around a little point of woods we see him lying down in the middle of the river right ahead of us. The dogs break bounds and almost upset me as they dash down the trail, with Breeze standing on the brake and yelling "Whoa!" The weary bull moose staggers to his feet again and makes the edge of the woods, but there lies down again. The trail veers right up to him. I run ahead and take Leader and Ring, one in each hand, and Breeze does the same with Teddy and Sheep. Mose is more tractable and we can control him with our voices. We drag the dogs, with the sled behind, pass the big brute, his long face not a rod from us, and then, setting Leader on the trail again, we urge them down five miles farther to the Happy River roadhouse.



The End of the Journey —On Bare Ground at Seward

Ben Atwater and the Wilderness Brotherhood

At Halfway roadhouse we catch up with old Ben Atwater. We have been hearing of poor old Ben all along the trail. He is an old miner and prospector whom I had known thirty-four years ago at Wrangell. He had been living on the Kuskokwim river not far from Tacotna. Three months before we found him Ben did a very foolish thing. He was hunting wild chickens and got up on a log to "view the landscape o'er." He rested his double barrel shotgun on the log, put the palm of his left hand over the muzzle and rested the wrist of his right hand over that. The butt of the gun slipped on the slippery log, the hammers caught, the gun went off and blew both poor Ben's hands off. At Iditarod, a hundred miles distant, we heard the news and promptly sent $100 to Ben's aid. Soon other streams of money began to pursue him. The Yukon pioneers at Dawson heard of it and sent an order by wireless for another hundred. Then $200 came from the Alaska pioneers of Fairbanks. But Ben had struck the trail before any but the sum from Iditarod could reach him. He could not dress himself or feed himself. He was helpless as a baby, but these rough men of the wilderness were caring for him. At one roadhouse and another they had fed and sheltered him, sometimes for days, and then hitching up their dogs, they would haul him on to the next roadhouse, fifteen to forty miles along the trail. Then another would pass him on. When I found him he was chipper as a cricket and told me that he had gained twenty pounds since striking the trail. He had still 150 miles to go, but was in the best hands in all the world. The kindly brotherhood of these men of the wilderness excels that of all other people, I think.

At Knik we find another warm welcome. We hoped to find a boat here that would take us to Seward. Knik is on a so-called arm of Cook's inlet, but it is only an arm of the sea for two or three hours twice a day, for the tides here are tremendous. A boat is daily expected, but it disappoints us. The second night here I gather all the people of the village into the roadhouse and have "church." I do not think that I ever took greater pleasure in a service than in this one. Knik has been a town since 1895. There are a number of families here and some interesting children among them, but they have never had a school, and I preached the first sermon that has ever been heard in all that region. There are eight or nine other towns and villages scattered around the head of Cook's inlet and many mining camps, but no preacher of the gospel has ever come to bring these strong people of the wilderness the word of life. Everybody turned out to the service. There were two Christian women in attendance, one of whom has been there fifteen years and the other ten, without having a chance to hear the gospel preached.

Finding that no boat is coming and the time for presbytery approaching, I must mush on. The worst mountain pass of all is before us—Crow Creek pass over the high Alaska range. Fearsome tales are told me of this pass, but there is nothing to do but to try it. Breeze leaves me here and I hire a young prospector, Fred Taulman, to take me to Seward. Were it not for my lame back I would go alone, but they all say that the pass is too dangerous to be traveled singly even by a strong and vigorous person. So on March 21 we hitched up our eager dogs, whose three days' rest

(Continued on page 227)

Let's Talk About Our Real Work

BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

To students of missions the name of Mrs. Montgomery is familiar. She has helped greatly in putting the mission work of women on a different plane. In the series of articles which she has written for Continent readers she is as refreshingly frank as in this one, when she intimates that many Christians are out of work, but that they can find it—perchance in the missionary society

IT IS INEVITABLE—we cannot help it if we would. All unconsciously our hourly talk is about our daily business. Not more surely does the merchant talk shop, the teacher school, the farmer crops, the lawyer court, than do women babble of the things that most deeply interest and engage them. Talk is a touchstone. Is our conversation most animated, eager, natural and unwearied about clothes, teas, theaters and bridge? Then in spite of protestations and subscription books these are our main concern and "busyness." Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh. So, being church women, missionary women, religious women, we are only following a natural law when we sit down to talk of our blessed, rewarding, never-ending work for Christ and his church.

Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery

I wonder if we are thankful enough that we have work to do. A few nights ago, as I hurried through the gathering twilight, I heard the note of exultation in the voice of a young fellow who called out to a friend, "Got a job, Tom." That meant to him the chance to keep his footing, to perform his part in the big world of men, to have his share in the making of things. When things go well in the world of industry everyone has his job; when men are out of work then life is out of harmony. Perhaps that is what is wrong with the church—too many Christians out of work. Yes, out of work, and many of them like the poor social derelicts, afraid to hunt for work too hard, lest they find it.

The Master never said, "Go engage a preacher to work in my vineyard"; but, "Go work." To become an applauding spectator or a passive listener is to lose the glow of the Christian life. We are not called to be "fans," but to "play ball," to "get into the game." Is not the same thought that twirls in these common phrases of the ball field shining in the splendid figure of the letter to the Hebrews? We are the runners who race for the goal in the long stadium; the spectators are the great cloud of witnesses who have run their race with patience and are seated in the heavenly places.

Never will the Master's work have good success and prosper until all his followers become active partners and participants in his divine enterprise; until the full conviction takes possession that Christianity is a layman's and a laywoman's religion, in which all are called to one holy calling of personal service. Converting sinners, comforting saints, winning the heathen, is not the work of ministers whom we support; it is our work, which they direct. We call them ministers, shepherds, bishops or overseers. Shepherds do not feed the sheep; they lead them to the pastures where they feed themselves. And it is the sheep, not the shepherds, who furnish wool to clothe the world. Overseers or superintendents do not build buildings or dig ditches themselves; they show workmen how to dig and build. The palsy in the church comes because so many of us feel that our work is done when we have supported the church by paying a minister, engaging a choir, employing a deaconess and attending morning worship. This sort of delegated service is never going to save the world. "I seek not yours but you," might well be the cry of the church to her children.

"Christ's Kingdom Awaits My Cooperation"

"I have a work, a personal work, a precious work for which I was born, and which no other can do for me," may be the inspiring conviction of every least member of Christ's church which is his body. To find that work, however humble, to render that service, however obscure, may glorify life with a new meaning. "Christ needs me in this tiny corner, me and not another. His kingdom waits my personal cooperation," is a conception of life that would work miracles, if only it could be widely accepted.

During the Jubilee movement of the women's societies there became current the true story of what one girl was able to accomplish in her own church by her own personal efforts. She was just an ordinary girl of moderate gifts, living in an ordinary home in modest circumstances, and belonging to the plain variety of church in the ordinary condition of tepid convictions on missionary matters that seem to characterize the common type. All this is told to show that what this girl did, any of us could do, if we tried. The girl was unusual in only one thing—she became tremendously stirred on the question of foreign missions, but please do not let this blunt the point of the story.

A Thousand Calls and 300 New Members

When she found that she could not be a foreign missionary she tried to see what she could do to help at home. She went to her pastor and got a list of all the women and girls in the church, with their addresses. There were 350 of them, but only fifty-eight belonged to the missionary society. After districting the city, and marking the address of every nonmember by a pin in the map, she began her self-imposed task of calling on every one of them. Before the year was over she had made more than a thousand calls, had added about 300 members to the society and raised the contributions from less than $200 to $1,200.

When the girl was asked to tell about this in a meeting in her home city she was very unwilling to do so, but her shy, simple telling of the story will never be forgotten by those who heard her. In reply to a question from the audience, how she alone had been able to do so much, she gave a recipe for Christian work that it would be hard to surpass.

"I didn't know very much," she said, "so I studied a good deal that I might have the facts to present. I knew that I did not have much tact, so I prayed that God would teach me what to say, and prepare the hearts of those to whom I went. I took leaflets and literature to leave with them, so that they might know, too. I never scolded, and I always spoke of the love of Jesus." Study, prayer, information, good cheer, not fault-finding, and the love of Jesus; could anything be better?

What we need in our missionary work is a new conviction of its urgency. A lukewarm, merely ladylike, presentation will win no converts. Correct little circles that meet in correct little meetings once a month are destined to remain correct and little. Devotional exercises, papers and "pink teas" fail to convince the world that foreign missions are worth getting interested in. "A life that is not passionate is not pure," said a great thinker; this is true also of missionary zeal.

We may well take a leaf from the history of the women's rights societies. For years they were in the "pink tea" stage of holding small monthly meetings, where the same old platitudes were dealt out to a group of the same rapidly aging women, of whom the only demand made was that they should believe in the cause and pay a dollar a year membership fee. During this period woman suffrage was not "news," and was not "interesting." But today women are so stirred that they are willing to make a house-to-house canvass, to sell suffrage papers on the street corners, to speak from their automobiles in cross country tours, to march in procession through the public streets. The big world, whether it agrees with them or not, is impressed with a sense of the reality of the cause that can command such loyalty; and recruits are won by the thousand. In four years after the new policy of aggressive and fearless propagating of their faith was adopted $200,000 was in the treasury of the English suffragists; more than had been given in the preceding fifty years of tepid advocacy. Now, if the suffrage is a cause to stir the loyalty of women so that they are willing to endure all sorts of discomforts and adverse criticism, what shall we say of our incomparably greater cause of worldwide missions?

Have we not belittled the cause by asking too little? "Won't you join our missionary society?" we have anxiously asked. "It will only mean a little time, one meeting a month, a few pennies a week and your interest." So women have given a little time, a little money, a little interest, and the causes that asked of them their money and their lives have gained their passionate devotion. There is many a woman who draws her check in four figures for the Y. W. C. A. who feels that she has done a noble deed when she gives $10 to missions. By our insistence on the little we have placed missions on her list of minor charities. The very story of the widow's mite we have degraded by a sort of cant.

"I can't do much," we sweetly say as we rustle out of a meeting, "but I will give my mite." The mite is given not by the well dressed and comfortable when they hand out a dollar or two, but by those who, like the woman of whom the Master spoke, out of their deep penury give all that they have, "even the whole of their living." We still teach our children to sing "Hear the pennies dropping," though in everything else but religion the child of today has as his unit of value not the penny but the nickel. He has a nickel for the moving-picture show, a nickel or dime for the ice cream soda fountain and a penny for his mission box. With the terrible logic of childhood he concludes as to the relative value of these commodities. The child who has only chance pennies to spend on himself is being educated to give when he drops a penny for missions; but the child who has quarters and dimes and nickels for self and pennies for God is getting ready to join later the great army of the uninterested. We love what we give for, what we sacrifice for, what we toil for with sweat of mind and body. If we would have a great awakening in missionary work let us set great ends before us, let us undertake things that we dare not undertake alone. Then will we be driven back on prayer and under pressure our faith and love and joy will grow.

Just supposing that each society should set for itself the task of doubling its numbers this year, or the bigger task of reaching every woman in the church by a personal, optimistic, prayerful, loving, tremendously earnest canvass. It can be done, it has to be done before the church can fulfill her mission—the whole gospel for the whole world, by the whole church. It means work, it means the recasting of our schedules of engagements, the cutting out of activities that are pleasant and wholesome, the giving up of pleasures, for Christ's sake, that are dear to us; but the King's business is urgent and demands haste. It is to our own Master that we must answer; and it is his service that has in it the fullness of life and joy.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters—Bradford Horton is working his way through Prestonbury Theological Seminary. A fellow student, Austin Sleighton, becomes his loyal friend; but Oren-Toole, a jealous fellow bank employee, attempts to involve him in a money theft, using as his tool an old beggar, Andrew Drum, who proves to be Horton's own father. Miss Elmore, daughter of the bank's president, to whom Horton is greatly attracted, believes in his innocence, which is finally proved. Oren-Toole and Drum, however, are incriminated. Drum dies before his trial, and Horton begs that the case against Oren-Toole be dropped. This angers Mr. Elmore, and he writes Horton a note which causes him to resign from the bank and to give up his position as tutor to Mr. Elmore's grandson. Mr. Elmore still believes Horton an impostor. Sleighton tries to persuade him to clear himself. This Horton refuses to do because of a last promise to Drum that he would not reveal the latter's identity as the man of whom, in his youth, Prestonbury had prophesied ill, and whose marriage was opposed by his bride's family. Horton, because of the president's hostility, declines the cashier's invitation to return to the bank. Finally Mr. Elmore, realizing the need of the young man's assistance and admitting to himself that his prejudice is due solely to the fact that he fears his daughter may succumb to Horton's manifold attractions, decides to apologize for his note and offer Horton the position of teller. Horton, accepting the apology, declines the position, also a handsome offer to sing in a New York City church. A note from Miss Elmore, however, changes his decision, and he not only goes back to the bank but again becomes tutor for Charlie Elmore.

CHAPTER XV.—Continued

JUNE COQUETTES with expectation often, but she was showing only her loveliest mood when Arthur Tappan turned in toward the porch where the first citizen of Prestonbury was sitting, enjoying an after-dinner cigar. The view westward was superb. Sunset hill was well named. Far away toward the low-lying blue hills beyond Icauga lake the sun was hastening, and long slant rays painted with opalescent radiance the rolling landscape. Patches of woodland were interspersed with yellow fields that spoke mutely of ripening grain; ribbons of road wound up and down the hills and valleys; columns of curling smoke arose from hidden farmhouses; a trailing line of white, close to the earth, marked the track of the evening express.

"Tappan, you're welcome," said the banker rising to meet his friend. "I've been feasting my eyes on that view. I never weary of it, and June shows it to perfection. Have a cigar?"

The two smoked in silence till Mrs. Elmore came out at the long French window.

"Mrs. Elmore," said the visitor, "I cannot conceive how it will be possible for you to find a view, a single little view, more beautiful than that outstretched yonder, even though you come across the old garden of Eden as you go round the world."

"I'm sure I do not know what we shall see," she answered, "but I know my moment of greatest happiness will be when, after it all, I see this view once more."

"Oh, grandfather!" There was a rush of a happy boy who came tearing through the yard from behind the house, and a shout, as all unconscious of a guest, Charlie Elmore went on, "Oh, grandfather, it's great! Mr. Horton's going to take me in Greek. He is, he surely is! I've been studying all the afternoon. I'm ready for tomorrow morning. Did you know he was going to take me, grandfather?"

"Yes. Here is Mr. Tappan, Charlie."

"How d'ye do, Mr. Tappan. Grandfather, did you get him?"

"No. Mr. Tappan will think you rude, Charlie."

"Beg pardon, Mr. Tappan. I didn't mean to be rude, but I'm just bustin'. Mr. Horton's going to hear my Greek, and that means Yale for me next fall. Say, grandfather, what made him do it?"

"I don't know. Last week, you know, he said he wouldn't take you. This morning he came and asked if he might have you. I don't know what changed him."

"I'll bet I do," declared the boy. "I wrote Aunt Lennie how mean it all was, and I just bet she wrote to him and asked him to take me."

"That's it, Elmore." Mr. Tappan did not notice his host's frown of annoyance. "The young people nowadays can do what we old ones can't. And the girls seem to know how to wind the young fellows round their fingers even better than they used to."

A figure appeared through the gathering dusk approaching the house, and Mr. Elmore rose to meet his daughter-in-law, giving her the chair beside Mr. Tappan. After a momentary lull in the talk, the latter said suddenly:

"Did I tell you that I saw your old teller in Albany recently?"

"No, but your Jack told Jickers, and he told Maxwell."

"Have you sent an officer after him?"

"No."

"Not going to arrest him?"

"No."

"What? Going to let him go?"

"Yes. We have the money. You remember we found $1,800 intact. The student paid the other $200."

"What? Did Horton pay that balance?"

"Yes, he paid it. It is not what you would expect, I know. But we talked it all over. It seemed better to let him have a chance to be a man. He'll never repeat the offense. How did he look?"

"Looked well. He was well dressed and alert as usual. I think he was uneasy at being recognized."

"He will not feel so again. Maxwell wrote him at once that we had dropped the matter."

As twilight deepened into night, Mr. and Mrs. Elmore sat alone in the peacefulness of June, their callers gone. "What are you thinking about, Richard?" she asked at last.

"About Drum. I can't understand him at all."

"I can," she answered. "Charlie is right. Eleanor has written to him."

"Absurd. If I knew it I would discharge him tomorrow."

"That would do no good. Caroline would reengage him as soon as we are gone."

(Continued on page 227)

THE HOME COUNCIL

Refined Speech in the Home

BY ALICE URBAN

SAVORING OF THE "other days" of careful speech is the announcement of a 5-year-old Bostonian concerning the "swearing" proclivities of her young brother. "He said 'ain't,'" she declared in tearful humiliation.

The little Puritan didn't know about the fine-print note in the grammar that reluctantly acknowledges "ain't" as the legitimate contraction of "am not," but she was a true adherent of good usage, and to her acute sense of propriety her brother's "I ain't, either" was a profanity to be blacklisted along with such illegitimate expressions as "He ain't, either," "She ain't, either," "It ain't, either."

In this day of exacting technique in the other arts, the neglect of technique in the English language is surprising. How seldom does one find in the home the serious practice of speech! Nor are we as a people unconscious of this neglect. We regret the limited vocabulary that keeps us to the level of the colloquial and welcomes the slangy phrase as a refreshing means of relief. And as parents, we shrink from such brusque rejoinders as "Cut it out" or such senseless interpolations as "Good night!" that fall from our daughter's lips quite as glibly as from the lips of her brother.

"Times have changed," we sigh. "We were brought up to speak grammatically." Our grandmothers saw to that—as did our mothers. "Why," says one mother sincerely troubled because of the careless speech of her daughters, "my grandmother never went to school a day after she was 9 years old, but no one ever heard her make a grammatical error."

"But," she was asked, "how was your grandmother able to speak correctly with such meager instruction?"

"By studying her grammar, her Bible and her classics," was the immediate answer.

Further discussion brought out the fact that this grandmother not only sought a refined expression but that she practiced the art of expression as well, and saw that those about her practiced it.

Until parents in the home insist as diligently on the practice of the English language as they insist on the practice of music and other accomplishments, we shall have talking-by-ear sons and daughters, grammatically imperfect and rhetorically rough. Rather to be desired is the pseudo-cultured state of that little Bostonian, to whom "ain't" was a "swear word," than that out-of-tune condition which carelessly accepts with equanimity from the rosy lips of our otherwise gently bred daughters the barbarous "He don't," "It's her," and—yes, the jarring "Now, what do you think of that?" the vulgar "Don't you think it!" or the alarming "Go chase yourself!"

"What are our schools doing?" complain the parents. "Why don't they teach the children, especially the grown boys and girls, to speak correctly?"

Is it because to the present-day teacher the spirit of simple expression is lost in the effort to bring out the so-called larger critical appreciation of literary form and motive? This explanation was suggested to one who recently listened to a critical analysis of a classic given by a high school pupil in the loose, slangy phrases of current everyday speech.

If our schools are passing through an ungrammatical period, as some claim, then doubly does there rest upon the parents the responsibility of preserving refined speech in the home.

Guarding Against Colds

It seems difficult for women to strike a healthy compromise in their clothes. They are too warmly or too thinly clad. Both methods are injurious, declares a journalist.

The woman who bundles up from October until April only softens the muscles and tissues of her body to such an extent that they cannot stand any accidental exposure. The body is so moist with the heat engendered by flannel and fur, by wool and leather, that it becomes impossible to keep warm under any healthy amount of heat. The woman who indulges in this seriously bad method finds that she is always cold, no matter how much clothing she puts on, and that the part of her that is not against the radiator is always freezing.

The girl who dresses too thinly nearly always has a blue look. She will vow that pumps on cold days do not give her a cold, and yet her bodily temperature will be affected and she will feel this lessening of her vitality seriously in after years. There are too many women who consider a sneeze and a cough the only signs of a cold.

All kinds of ailments are engendered and developed by keeping the body too warm or too cold. Either way lowers the vitality so that the body cannot resist disease vigorously.

The doctors agree that clothing of any appreciable weight is not good, and the manufacturers have met this dictum by making excellent fabrics and undergarments that have warmth without weight.

Union suits of Swiss cotton and linen mesh, from knee to chest, are considered more healthful than flannel of any kind. They protect the body because they cling closely. Wool is not allowable. Those without sleeves and low in the neck are right, because they are kept on in the house, which is too warm for a heavier garment. When one goes out into very cold air it is better to put on a Shetland wool undervest, which is thin enough to run through a bracelet and warm enough to keep out icy winds.

The wearing of lingerie and silk blouses is entirely healthful, as the body is sufficiently protected by a warm coat when one goes into the air, and the lingerie is sufficiently heavy when one remains in a steam heated room. The vital thing is to keep the body from getting moist.

One's clothing should be entirely determined by the temperature; and the old-fashioned idea that it is necessary to wear the same amount and weight of clothing from Thanksgiving to Easter survives only among the unenlightened.

Protecting the feet and ankles is far more important than protecting the neck and arms. The exposure of the ankles means more than most women know. No woman, however robust, should fail to wear high shoes from the first cold days to the first warm days, when she is out. She should never fail to wear carriage boots over satin slippers and silk stockings when she is going out in the evening unless she is riding from awning to awning.

Who Knows the Author?

One of the small but very real annoyances that occasionally beset us is the inability to attach the proper authorship to some cherished bit of prose or verse. One of our Home Councilors is in the grasp of just such a difficulty. Will someone come to the rescue? He writes as follows:

"Mrs. Weir recalls a very old composition in verse, which she learned in childhood, and considers it too good to lose. She would like to learn the author. Here it is, as she remembers it:

"'Thou must be true thyself
  If thou the truth wouldst teach.
Thy heart must overflow, if thou
  Another heart would reach.
It needs the overflowing heart
  To give the lips full speech.
Think truly, and thy thought
  Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and thy word
  Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
  A great and noble creed.'

"Possibly someone who knows the author will tell us. THOMAS WEIR."

BITS BY THE WAY

WOMAN'S DRESS A MENACE

We women folk generally believe that the "three D's" we hear so much about stand for "dress, disease and domestics." Ruskin, however, makes it "dress, diet and debt." Since in both interpretations dress is given precedence, the natural conclusion is that there is some particularly dreadful stigma attached to it.

Dr. Jenkin Lloyd Jones of Chicago certainly thinks there is. He styles woman's present-day attire "the scandal of modern society, the disgrace of our civilization and the despair of the industrial world. He declares that our aptitude for ornamentation, our liking for feathers and frills, are but survivals of a savage ancestry; that costly lace is only a development of the tattooing which decorated the primitive belles.

"I am persuaded," says Dr. Jones, "that morals and religion cannot be advanced much farther until ethics invades the wardrobe and morals overrule the dictates of fashion. The horrible extravagance, the perpetual restlessness and change represented by the 'dry goods' trade will defeat the clamor of the social reformer and neutralize the democratic demand for rights on the part of women, as it has in the past defeated the growth of democracy among men.

"Woman cannot be emancipated politically as long as she is bound hand and foot to the conventions which demand such an outlay of time, money and nerve. Kate Barnard of Oklahoma sounded a note essential to the enfranchisement of women, as well as to the salvation of the individual soul, when she said: 'God helping me, I will not wear a diamond while there is a starving woman or child in America.'"

But the particularly dreadful aspect of the dress situation is the lure fashion presents to the girl or woman of inadequate means. Woman has a natural craving for pretty things, and her desire to gratify it, sometimes at any cost, has become one of the potent causes contributing to her moral and social downfall. Store windows have started more than one girl on the road to destruction. It behooves all women to dress modestly, lest they cause their sister women to offend through ambition to keep up with the procession.

THE MODERN VERSION

A party of automobilists touring in Canada stopped one day in a sleepy little village to ask the way. Automobiles were infrequent visitors in that part of the country, and the small boys of the town swarmed about the big red touring car like flies about molasses. Barelegged and unabashed, they climbed over the sides, investigated the engine and munched the travelers' apples with moist abandon.

A good Presbyterian sister was one of the travelers and as she looked upon the unsuspecting, freckle-faced little visitors, a sudden inspiration seized her. Here was a chance to do some missionary work!

"How many of you go to mission band?" she inquired, when the apples were reduced to cores.

Young Canada apparently knew nothing of mission bands, so the G. P. S. tried another tack.

"Do you go to Sunday school?" she asked. That was a different proposition. Young Canada knew all there was to know about Sunday school, and so enthusiastic was the response that the G. P. S. ventured a third question:

"Who can say the golden text for last Sunday?"

There was a silence for a moment. Then a little red-headed chap, stuttering with eagerness to display his knowledge and get the start of the other youngsters, shifted from one bare foot to the other on the car step, and launched this bomb at the head of the G. P. S.:

"B-be sure your sins will help you out!"

The G. P. S. collapsed in her seat.

"The modern version," she murmured weakly, as she handed the small revised versionist a nickel. S. C. R.

YOUNG AMERICA

Benjy and Betty's Easter Plan

(Unfinished—Story Contest)

BENJY AND BETTY loved Valentine's Day, though to them it meant more than just the one day on which Feb. 14 fell. To Benjy and Betty Valentine's Day meant also all the days following Christmas during which they saved their spare pennies for what they called their "valentine fund." This fund they kept in a big red-apple bank, which was broken open when the time came to buy the valentines.

It is to be feared, however, that very few of Benjy and Betty's little friends would have been made happy on Valentine's Day if Father and Mother Bradford had not slipped an occasional coin into that apple. Benjy had a weakness for taffy which even prospective valentines couldn't seem to lessen. Betty loved peppermints—the large, round, thin, flat kind that burn your tongue and make your mouth feel so funny and cold afterwards. Taffy and peppermints kept a good many pennies out of the bank. But somehow there seemed always enough to buy the valentines the twins needed.

That was another reason they loved Valentine's Day—it was such fun to go shopping and hunt for just the valentines that would suit Jimmie Brown, and Daisy Hardy, and all the rest.

The third reason Benjy and Betty loved Valentine's Day was the excitement they had dropping at their friends' doors the pretty cards and the fancy, lacy valentines in their white envelopes. First, of course, they addressed them with inky fingers, trying to disguise their very wiggly writing. Then, after they got home from school, the next thing was to creep, unseen, up folks' steps, drop the valentines, ring the bell and run off without getting caught. It was very heart-beaty business. That was what made it fun.

On Valentine's Day Benjy and Betty always found beside their plates at breakfast two big gingerbread hearts, brown and soft and delicious, and decorated with pink frosting. These hearts were Sally's valentines to them, and were another reason why they liked Valentine's Day.

The fifth reason you have, of course, guessed—they loved the valentines that came to them.

There was just one person in the Bradford family who didn't like Valentine's Day, and that one person was Mother Bradford. Even Baby Margery loved it; and the gay valentines that came addressed to "Miss Margery Bradford" she insisted on taking to bed with her at night, even though her busy fingers had picked off many of the little blossoms and birds, and spoiled much of the beauty.

Perhaps, however, it wasn't so much the day itself that Mrs. Bradford disliked, as it was the day after, and the day after that, and the day after that. For, as she said, the house was "littered from one end to the other with valentines for mother to pick up." You see it always fairly rained valentines at the Bradfords. They came by mail, they were left at the door, they were received through the "box" at school and this year, to make bad matters worse, there had been a valentine party. It did seem as if one could hardly drop into a chair without sitting on a valentine. Betty even sat on her gingerbread heart. Of course being sat on wasn't very good for the heart, but Betty ate it just the same. Betty is not particular.

The morning after Valentine's Day Mrs. Bradford sighed as she looked at the heaps of valentines.

"What's the matter, mother?" asked Benjy.

"It's those valentines, Benjy," she said. "What are you and Betty going to do with them all?"

"Put 'em in the Fun Room," suggested Benjy.

"Dunno," gurgled Betty over her mush and milk. "Just keep 'em."

"You know what happens when they go in the Fun Room, Benjy," replied his mother. "You and Betty start out well. You pin the valentines up carefully all over the room, and they look very fine—for a while. Then somebody comes over to play and you must take down your favorites to show. They are carried into the other rooms—and left there! Then by and by the pins begin to come out of the others, and the valentines drop on the floor—and are left there! You and Betty never put them back. You don't care anything further about them after a few weeks. I pick them up and throw them away. It's really too bad to waste all those pretty things."

"I don't know what to do with 'em," he said, nibbling the top of his gingerbread heart. "Betty can think up something."

"Benjy must try to think up something, too," said Mrs. Bradford. "It isn't fair to leave it all to Betty."

"Girls know better about things like that," suggested Benjy, who was in a hurry to get off to school.

"B-Benjy Bradford," sputtered Betty, "if you don't help think I'll never, never, never——"

"Never mind, Betty; finish your breakfast," interrupted Mrs. Bradford. "Benjy will help—he always does, you know. When you come home from school this afternoon I shall expect you and Benjy each to have a plan for taking care of these valentines. We will talk it over then."

"Baby Margery loved pictures"

* * * * *

Benjy and Betty were late in getting in that night. A new, wet snow had fallen and there were many nice things to do along the way, such as snowballing and "hitching" on passing wagons. And just by way of adding spice to the fun, the twins had to wash each other's faces well with snow, and they burst into the house red-cheeked and merry and breathless.

When they had put on their slippers and settled down in their red chairs before the big open fire in the library, with Baby Margery close by, Mrs. Bradford again spoke of the valentines.

"Who has a plan?" she asked.

Benjy and Betty looked at each other blankly. They had forgotten all about the valentines, except to tell at school how many they had received. Finally Betty spoke up:

"Save 'em to give away next year."

"Not a bad idea," said her mother. "Your turn now, Benjy. Can you think of a better plan?"

Benjy leaned back in his little rocker and looked about the room, as if he were hunting for an idea. Suddenly his glance fell on Baby Margery, who sat, as she often did, in her tiny blue chair, with a magazine spread out on her lap, looking at the pictures. Baby Margery loved pictures. Benjy looked at her a moment, and then his face brightened.

"Benjy has a plan!" cried Betty. "I can see it coming. What is it, Benjy?"

"I—I guess it's a good one," ventured Benjy, looking hesitatingly at his mother.

"Of course it's good!" she encouraged him. "Let us have it, Benjy."

"It's about Easter," Benjy went on. "There's a picture in Margery's book that made me think of Easter. I'm going to take all my valentines, if Betty will, too, and——"

And then Benjy went on and told what he thought he would do with his valentines. Mrs. Bradford agreed that it was a fine plan, and a very nice way of giving happiness. Betty was delighted, too, and she and Benjy decided to start to work on the plan at once, since Easter was not so very far away.

WHAT DID THEY DO?

$3 to the One Who Will Tell

The Continent will give $3 to the boy or girl, 14 years old or under, who will write the best ending to this story, telling what Benjy and Betty's Easter plan was for disposing of their valentines, how they carried it out and what came of it. The second prize will be $2, and there will be three $1 prizes.

You know the conditions, children—stories to be written in ink, on one side of the paper only, and signed with your full name and address. You may use 400 words—fewer if possible. And, of course, you will remember that these stories are to be your very own, which means that you are not to receive a bit of help from anybody.

Now, as your stories will be published in the Easter issue, March 20, you mustn't dawdle over them, for they must be at The Continent office by March 5. That will give you about three weeks to get them written. Mark the March 5 on your calendar, so you will be sure to remember the date.

It's a number of months since you have had a visit with Benjy and Betty, and we hope you will like them just as much as ever and have something very nice to say about them. Good luck to you.

Rhymes to Remember

FEBRUARY

Oh, the dear, delightful sound
Of the drops that to the ground
From the eaves rejoicing run
In the February sun!
Drip, drip, drip, they slide and slip
From the icicle's bright tip,
Till they melt the sullen snow
On the garden bed below.
"Bless me! What is all this drumming?"
Cries the crocus, "I am coming!"
—Celia Thaxter.

Getting Without Taking

There was but one apple tree in the Browns' yard, and this year it bore just one apple. This apple the children were forbidden to pick.

Mrs. Brown looked up into the tree one day, and failing to see the apple, called her six children to the spot.

"Children," she said sternly, "I told you not to pick that apple!"

"We didn't pick it!" the children answered in chorus. And the oldest girl added, in an injured tone, "You can see yourself that it's still on the tree. I—I mean—the core is! We only climbed up an'—an' took a bite once in a while—we didn't pick it!"

Two Rights and a Wrong

"Jimmy," said Tom, "you can't spell three easy words I'll give you within twenty seconds."

"I can!" retorted Jimmy. "What are they?"

"Well, here goes," said Tom, pulling out his new silver watch. "Believe."

"B-e-l-i-e-v-e," spelled Jimmy.

"Receive."

"R-e-c-e-i-v-e," spelled Jimmy once more.

"Wrong!" said Tom.

"Why," cried Jimmy, "I've spelled the two words you gave me correctly. I know I——"

"Time's up!" exclaimed Tom triumphantly. "Why didn't you spell the third word—w-r-o-n-g?"

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

February 23, 1913—Abram and Lot

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 13:1-8. Golden Text, Proverbs 10:22: The blessing of Jehovah, it maketh rich; and he addeth no sorrow therewith.

The difference between men ancient and modern is largely one of time. Given similar circumstances and the results are essentially alike. Lot lived in a distant age, but his counterpart is no stranger to the present. He was a nephew of Abram and according to Jewish history his adopted son. The two were associated in business, and naturally became rivals in the pursuit of wealth. Their wealth consisted largely in lands, flocks and herds. This required a large force of employees, who in our day would be known as ranchmen. Their flocks and herds increased so rapidly that the land was not able to bear them, and the result was strife between the herdsmen of Abram's cattle and the herdsmen of Lot's cattle. Abram was the senior member of the firm—and also the patriarch of the family. He was a man of great foresight and readily perceived that the contention of the servants would yet extend to their masters. Family quarrels are always bitter. Blood is thicker than water in hate as well as in love. It is better to live apart in friendship than as neighbors in strife.

Abram and Lot Come to Parting of the Ways

Contention is often the result of conditions. England and America as two nations are friends, as one they were in constant strife. Neither Abram nor Lot was by nature quarrelsome, but no two men ever lived at peace in a house only large enough for one. The best way to remove an effect is to remove the cause, so Abram proposed an amicable separation. "And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdsmen and thy herdsmen; for we are brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou will take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou take the right hand, then I will go to the left."

The proposition was the crisis of Lot's life. It put him at the parting of the ways and compelled him to act for himself. Hitherto he had been dependent on Abram. Together as friends they had faced famine in a foreign country, but now on their return success threatened to force them apart. Prosperity is a most excellent interpreter of character. It brings to the surface the best or the worst. Success with Abram intensified his devotion to God. Wherever he went he built an altar and called upon his God. Not so with Lot. God held only a secondary part in all that he did. Lot is not alone in this. Many a modern Lot is just the same way.

Lot, Omitting God from His Considerations, Makes Evil Choice

Abram and Lot were dwelling near to Bethel in the land of promise. Lot must have known that the region about was rich in divine expectation, but this seems to have had no influence on him. His place of observation has been approximately identified just east of Bethel. An English writer says that "on three sides the view was not inviting to a shepherd's eye. The verdant valleys were mostly out of sight, and what met the gaze were bare hills, and summit after summit unclothed with trees, and sinking into the blue distance. On the north were the mountains that divide Samaria from Judea; westward and southward rose the bleak hills of Judea and beyond the slopes of Hebron. But eastward the prospect was different. Down the valley could be seen the tropical luxuriance of the river."

"And Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the Plain of the Jordan, that it was well watered everywhere . . . like the land of Egypt. So Lot chose him all the Plain of the Jordan." He and Abram had separated forever, one to dwell in the cities of the plain, one to dwell in Canaan.

The choice was fatal not only in results but at the beginning. That Lot should have made the selection he did was in accord with the logic of the situation. He was to be a shepherd, and the well watered plain of the Jordan was more promising than the barren hills of Judea. He acted on the appearance of things. Our modern Lots are no wiser. They leave God out of their motives and act from no considerations save those of self. Lot left behind more than he saw. The companionship of Abram was to be exchanged for the association of the wicked. He must have known that God had elected his family to be a people separate from those that dwelt in the valley, but to all this he was blind. The future of his children failed to move him. He would be rich, even at the expense of morals and of God. His tent was pitched toward Sodom. Possibly he had no intention of ever becoming an inhabitant of the city. No one ever made the journey from Bethel to Sodom in a day. The usual intention is to live for a time in the valley and then return to Canaan. But the Jordan is a precipitous stream. Its waters run toward Sodom. One gets used to strange things in the valley. They fit him for a residence farther on. This is as true of the modern Lot as it was of the ancient. An inhabitant of Sodom Lot became. His daughters were given in marriage to Sodomites and his apostasy was complete.

Abram Reflects God; Lot Begins and Ends in Self

But God did not forget Abram in his loneliness back there at Bethel. Once more the Almighty sought him out and renewed the promise which he made years before. Abram went on from strength to strength not only in wealth but in power with God. The two characters stand out in the widest contrast. Sin always destroys the better part of one's nature. Lot appears to have forgotten the patriarch and was content to live in the sight of sin. As for Abram, his interest in his nephew grew in proportion to his absence. Once he delivered him out of the hands of his captors, and at the last prayed that he might be spared at the destruction of the city. Each grew into the embodiment of his own choice. One reflected God, while the other began and ended in self.

Lot is more than history. He is born anew with every generation and keeps on acting the same part. The fascinations of the valley are ever luring our young men and women away from the teachings of Bethel. Once our tent is pitched toward Sodom the city is not far distant.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—The godly man loves peace and seeks it even at cost to himself. The man who seeks only worldly gain may not get even that, while he loses all else.

Lot shared with Abram the exile from his native land, but his faith was greater than his morality.

We must remember that we are studying lives that were lived four centuries before the giving of the decalogue, and nearly a millennium before Samuel, and as much before the advent of Christ as we are later than that event. We may certainly think of such a period as did St. Paul, as a period of ignorance from which God must at times avert his gaze (Acts 17:30).

Lot was the son of Haran, brother of Abram. He appears to have kept close to his relative in all the latter's wanderings, not only going with him into Canaan (ch. 12:5) but also into Egypt (ch. 12:10) and back again by the way of Philistia, the shore country, into Palestine again (ch. 13:1; 20:1). There are multitudes benefited by religion who refuse to be held by its principles, but are willing to share its "prosperity."

The Promises of God Dearer to Abram than Wealth

Verse 1—The return of Abram and Lot was to "the south." This phrase had early acquired for the Hebrews a fixed geographical meaning, as it has for Americans today. In whatever part of the world a Georgian may find himself, he will speak of himself as a "southerner." Massachusetts is to us "the East," and Maine is "down East." The wanderers came back to the better parts of Palestine when the drought was broken and found in the vicinity of their first stoppage excellent pasturage.

Verse 2—Abram and his kinsman had prospered in Egypt because of the favor of Pharaoh (ch. 12:16), who possibly saw in these migrants members of that same eastern Semitic family from which he himself was sprung. It seems probable also that at this time all southern Palestine was under the sovereignty of Egypt, so that it might have been greatly in his favor that Abram had made that trip to the land of the Nile and had Pharaoh for a friend.

Verse 3—Abram returned to pitch his tent upon his old camp ground (ch. 12:7-8), a few miles to the north of the present Jerusalem. Ai, or Hai, appears to have had a checkered history, now appearing strong enough to withstand a siege (Josh. 7:2), and now a mere ruin, as its commonly accepted name indicates. As a city it drops out of view from the days of Joshua to the days of Ezra (Ezra 28:2).

Wherever the Soul Meets Jehovah, That Place Becomes Holy Ground

Verse 4—To Abram the site was peculiarly sacred. He had upon this spot erected his second altar (ch. 12:8). In his thoughts he seems to have fixed upon it as likely to be the religious center of his race. Here was his Plymouth rock. It was identified with his early wanderings, his first revelations and his largest hopes. Happy the man whose past is studded with memorials of devotion. How greatly Abram was attached to this place may be seen from the fact that he was more than ready to give Lot the rich valley if he himself might retain the hill country which had become to him a house of prayer.

Verse 5—We read of Lot's herds, but we read nothing of Lot's altars. And now looking back over the nearly forty centuries which have intervened we see that Lot's race has never lacked a home and yet never has led the intellectual or spiritual progress of mankind. He appears to have been not a little of a military sheik, since his tents are especially enumerated. He had everything that was needed to make him rich and nothing that was necessary to make him great.

Verse 6—There is a proverb current among the French to the effect that "you never know a man until you have divided an inheritance with him." Lot and Abram showed different traits when it came to dividing the land, which, so far as pasture was concerned, appears to have been open to uncontested occupation. Lot was now more anxious to see his herds grow than to keep old friends or protect the morals of his children. Many a man who has outgrown his native village has at the same time outgrown his early faith and youthful conscience.

He Who Is Willing to Make Peace Can Always Have It

Verse 7—We are not told why the names of the contiguous heathen tribes are here introduced, but it seems to be a hint that Abram would not have his family troubles aired before them. As we say, he would not wash the family linen in public. St. Paul especially warns the early Christians, surrounded by the heathen, that a man whose household is disturbed by domestic dissensions is unfit to represent the religion of the Bible to the world (I. Tim. 3:4-5). Abram had the patience of the brave.

Verse 8—He did not wait for Lot to show his hand. He was not seeking a pretext for war. He knew that the only way to have peace in this world is to make it (Matt. 5:9). War makes itself, but we must ourselves make what peace we have.

Verse 9—Abram did not offer to arbitrate. He simply gave his adversary a free choice. He was not up in modern monopolistic high finance. He was willing to live and let live. And the outcome illustrated what our Lord meant by his beatitude that says, "The meek shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5).

Verse 10—The vicinity about Sodom before its destruction by volcanic fire was like the rich and fertile land about Vesuvius before its first eruption, a semitropical paradise. Lot coveted it, although its occupation would separate his family from the only godly influence in the valley. He literally "moved his tent as far as Sodom" (v. 12) and paid a bitter penalty therefor. So does any man pay who goes through this world seeking only worldly gain. The fruit he gathers turns to Dead sea apples, and he, too, finds no escape, though he may seek it diligently with tears (Heb. 12:17).

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning February 16, 1913

TOPIC—The house on the rock and the house on the sand. Luke 6:47-49.

This parable forms the conclusion of the sermon on the mount in the versions of both St. Matthew and St. Luke. And this is unquestionably the place where it belongs; for, as a conclusion to the discourse, it could not be surpassed in aptness and impressiveness.

—

Galilee is a region where the storms are sudden and fierce, and the gospels contain several references to the excitable nature of the blue lake that lies at the foot of the mountain. Where Jesus was sitting upon the hillside, close to the head of one of those narrow canons that lead from the highlands down to the shores of the sea, he would look upon ground seamed with watercourses, which just before a storm would be dry and empty, and shortly after the storm had broken would be filled with tumultuous, raging waters. But it would seem as though the watercourse referred to by Jesus was one that always contained some water. Both builders had the foresight to set their houses where they could obtain a regular supply; both were near the stream. And in the summer season, whether the house was on the rock or on the sand, it did not matter much.

—

In the Galilean region the rock and the sand are usually close together. The sand is the rich alluvium washed down from the hills around; and above every field and beside every stream is the wall of rock. Even though the rock lies too far aside from the watercourse to become a suitable building site, it is always possible to go down through the layer of alluvium to the inevitable bedrock beneath.

—

But the work of building upon the rock is always harder and costlier than that of building upon the sand. There are many builders who will choose the sand. Who are these men? Christ tells us: 'He that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that built a house upon the earth without a foundation; against which the stream brake, and straightway it fell in; and the ruin of that house was great.' There are three kinds of men to whom these words more particularly apply.

—

There are men who hear Christ's words and turn them into a philosophy to be discussed. They do not perceive that Christ's words are real, and are to be lived. With them Jesus Christ has ceased to be the King of kings, to whom the loyal service of the life is due; he has ceased to be the Saviour, to whom the heart's devotion is to be poured forth in one abundant act of consecration. To such he has become simply a sincere seeker after truth. They know his words and they will not keep them. Philosophy without obedience to Jesus is a house built upon the sand.

—

And there are other men, who, when they hear the words of Jesus, will frankly declare that they are impracticable in a world such as that in which we have to live. They declare that if they were to follow the requirements of the sermon on the mount they would be in bankruptcy within three months. "We are in competition with unscrupulous men," they say, "and we must play the game according to accepted rules, or be driven from the market." It may be so. But Christ said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." But to say that if men are honest they must fail has been proved the devil's lie. The awakening American conscience on matters of commercial honesty is with Jesus.

—

And there is a third kind of sand builder. He is the man who, in a formal way, holds tenaciously to a true creed, and, in his life, gives it the lie. He says that he loves God, and he fails to help his brother in the hour of his direst need. He has prayed unto God, and prophesied in the name of God, and given his money to God. But he has not done the common, simple duties of helping the little ones and the weak ones of Jesus, whom he is passing every day in the street, and with whom he is daily touching hands in the office or the store. His life is correct, but his presence creates a chill in the atmosphere. He does infinite harm to the work of Christ. He has never truly known Christ. He has built his house upon the sand.

—

There is a danger sometimes in our use of a great phrase—"the faith of our fathers." It may imply that we have no faith of our own. We may just as certainly live upon the spiritual capital of our fathers as upon their money, which has come down to us. We have never struggled for it, never made one sacrifice for it, and we have never truly entered into it. Only as it is enriched through our acceptance and discharge of our own duty is it safely ours.

—

But the man who builds upon the rock has gone deeply, spent heavily, wrought patiently. His house, when it is built, may look no better than the other man's; but it will abide. He has made a spiritual surrender to Christ; he will believe what he has revealed, and do what he has commanded.

—

Sooner or later come the storms to test all of us, and we shall be tried. For all men a judgment waits at the end of the way.

—

Christ does not say that the house built on the sand was essentially a bad house. The fault was with the foundation. This fault was out of sight as long as the sun was shining. It was revealed only in the day of storm. So is it with the various moral codes. They look very similar; but some are founded on self, and some on God.

—

After the storm is passed, and the sun again is shining, the one house is scattered in wreckage down the defile, while the other still stands, serene and safe. There is a quiet glory about that man who has been tried to the depths and found secure. He is full of courage before his fellows; and he walks humbly with God.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

February 23, 1913

THE DOCTOR AFIELD

TOPIC—Mission work, at home and abroad. II. Medical missions. Matthew 10:7-11.

A doctorless land seems incredible, yet in all the life of the Bedouins of Arabia and North Africa today there is not a single modern physician. Every tribe and village has its blind, because there is no help for the sore eyes which a modicum of modern knowledge would prevent. If one could do no more than distribute boracic acid amid the Arabs, and teach them how to use it, he would still achieve a monumental life work. Spear wounds and gunshot wounds get no antiseptic treatment. All diseases, from plague and smallpox to colds in the head, are permitted to ravage the people unchecked. I know no more about medicine than the average layman, yet with a traveler's medicine case I earned a reputation down the Tigris as a "hakim," or doctor, because of simple remedies I administered. My raftsman once brought me a man with crossed eyes, one of which had cataract covering it, and asked me to give him a pill to straighten the eyes! The medical ignorance of two-thirds of the human race is appalling. Into this abyss of physical suffering medical missions have gone as one of the noblest expressions of twentieth century Christianity.

—

When the antiforeign spirit was raging high in China a few years ago it was proposed in the provisional assembly at Hangchow that Dr. Mains, the famous medical missionary of that city, be asked to give up his property. Naively, one member arose and said, "But what if one of us should chance to break a leg?" That settled it. The embryo lawmakers might be willing to deprive the people of the helper who had so long served them; but they themselves could not dispense with his services, because, forsooth, one of their high and mightinesses might need him!

—

Certain old words are being interpreted more largely nowadays. Time was when some persons declared themselves in favor of evangelistic missions, but opposed to medical missions and educational missions. Now we see that, in a very real although broad sense, medical and educational missions are evangelistic. They interpret the religion of Jesus to communities and nations. Their ministry mirrors the mind of the Master. They are actually telling the story, in comprehensible terms, to multitudes who never hear the gospel from the lips of a missionary.

—

The great Physician surely counts as in the true line of succession to himself all who heal the sick, give sight to the blind and bind up the wounds of the body.

—

The usage in missionary hospitals is for dispensary patients to await their turn in the chapel before being treated. These rooms have Scripture texts and pictures about the walls. Tracts are also given out; and a native evangelist tells to those who are waiting for healing of the body the story of the Saviour who cures sin-sick souls.

—

There has just come to my hand, in a little paper from India, a story of the capital of Kashmir, and how a medical missionary cleaned it up. The Occidental has literally no conception of the filth of an Oriental city under pagan rule. To pass from the foreign settlement in Shanghai, or from Hongkong, under British rule, to Canton, is to get a lesson in the sheer sanitary worth of Christian civilization.

—

The University of Pennsylvania has opened a medical college in Canton to train doctors for new China, and Harvard has begun a similar work at Shanghai, while the "New Yale" at Changsha has a medical department. This shows the judgment which the men of the great American universities have concerning the worth of medical missions.

—

There are now practically no medical missions in Japan, although two of the foreign hospitals are still maintained. The need has been outgrown. Japan has her own medical science, along modern lines. And the need, and opportunity, for medical missions in other non-Christian lands will one day pass away.

—

It was Dr. Dugald Christie of the Scotch mission at Mukden, Manchuria, who led the victorious fight against the devastating pneumonic plague three winters ago. The Chinese government asked him to take practical charge of the city. Before this he had been decorated by the emperors of China and Russia and Great Britain, and given a grant for his work by the Japanese emperor, because of his distinguished services during the Chino-Japanese and Russo-Japanese wars. If any man is so ignorant as to sneer at foreign missions, point him to Dr. Christie of Mukden.

—

The magnitude of medical missions may be read by anyone with imagination into the figures reported to the Edinburgh conference. There are 550 hospitals and 1,024 dispensaries scattered all over the non-Christian world. During the year reported—and the figures are larger now—these cared for 164,245 in-patients and 4,231,635 dispensary patients. Add to these the 144,708 patients visited in their homes, and a staggering total of medical missionary work is presented. During the same year 120,829 minor and 36,826 major surgical operations were recorded. In addition, 111 medical schools were maintained and ninety-two training schools for nurses. And the staff that did this work totaled only 641 men physicians and 341 women.

Whether any particular day shall bring to you more of happiness or of suffering is largely beyond your power to determine. Whether each day of your life shall give happiness or suffering rests with yourself.—George S. Merriam

MISSIONARY WORK

Ninety-Eight Per Cent Increase in India

Advance sheets of the 1911 census of India were handed to Dr. J. J. Lucas of Allahabad, the venerable missionary of the Presbyterian Church who has labored so faithfully these forty-two years in Hindustan, and from them he made an interesting report to the conference of the Edinburgh continuation committee held in Allahabad in December, with Dr. John R. Mott presiding. Referring to the advance made by Christianity in the United Provinces, with their population of nearly 50,000,000, the government census superintendent says:

One of the most striking features of this census is the very large increase of Indian Christians. In 1881 the figures were 13,225, equivalent to 3 per 10,000. In 1891 Indian Christians numbered 23,406, or 5 per 10,000. The next decade witnessed an enormous impetus in missionary enterprise and the figures grew to 68,841, or 14 per 10,000. The impetus has been more than maintained and the increase since 1901 is only 1,200 short of the total figures of 1901, making a total of 136,469, or 29 per 10,000. The percentage of increase has been 98.2 since 1901, or 929.5 since 1881."

These converts are mainly of the lower castes. Dr. Lucas quotes chapter 4 of the census report as saying that their condition has been bettered. The superintendent, E. A. H. Blunt, writes: "I feel sure that the Christian of 1911 is in a much less unhappy condition than he was ten years ago, and the reason in large measure I put down to the fact that he himself is a better man. . . . There can be no question that year by year Christianity is becoming far more of a reality for those who adopt it."

Dr. Lucas closes by saying that Mr. Blunt thinks the increase should have been greater. His argument is this—the position of Christianity in India is very similar to the position it occupied in the first centuries. It commenced with the lower strata of society, the Galilean fishermen, the Roman slave and the pagan savage, and worked up to the higher. "With the example of what it achieved in the past before us," he says, "its success in India need not therefore cause surprise, and the important question for consideration appears to me to be not why it has been successful but why it has been no more successful."

Dr. Lucas also asked if the continuation committee could not call on the blind in Christian lands to organize a missionary society to bring light into the hearts and lives of the blind, the deaf and the dumb in the United Provinces. He cited the census returns as reporting 27,125 deaf mutes in the United Provinces, and 105,722 persons who are blind of both eyes; yet there are but two institutions in the whole territory which make any provision at all for these sufferers.

Editor of China's Foremost Newspaper

Rev. S. I. Woodbridge of Shanghai, one of the leading Southern Presbyterian missionaries in China, is remaining in this country for perhaps two months of recuperation from the heartbreaking strain attending the last illness and the death and burial of his wife. Mrs. Woodbridge, who was a daughter of the late Professor Woodrow of Columbia, S. C., was brought hurriedly home for an operation in Johns Hopkins hospital in Baltimore, but unhappily the operation proved vain and Mrs. Woodbridge succumbed soon after it. After her burial the bereaved husband was for a time the guest of his wife's cousin, President-Elect Woodrow Wilson, at Princeton.

In China Dr. Woodbridge is doing a work not paralleled by the labor of any other missionary on the field. He is the editor of The Christian Intelligencer, the Chinese paper established by joint action of the Presbyterian mission boards of New York and Richmond and published from the Presbyterian mission press in Shanghai. The paper combines both religious and secular material, and carries not only news of the churches but news of the world. At the present moment it has undoubtedly more native Chinese readers than any other periodical published in the new Oriental republic, and its influence is unbounded.

Associated with Dr. Woodbridge as the Chinese editor of the paper is a man of remarkable religious devotion and remarkable newspaper talent, Cheng Chun Seng. Mr. Cheng has worked with Mr. Woodbridge for twenty-five years, and is so devoted to The Intelligencer that he promptly refused a recent invitation to go to Canton and take charge of a new political newspaper there, for which local liberals have subscribed $20,000 capital. It is not known just what Cheng was offered by the Canton company, but it is certain that the salary which he refused would have been very much larger than the $37 a month which he is paid at Shanghai.

Chinese Demand English in Schools

At the last session of Shantung Presbytery, connected with the Chinese General Assembly, a very progressive and even revolutionary spirit was manifest. It was at this presbytery that the Korean committee was warmly welcomed and an unoccupied county set aside for the new Korean Board of Foreign Missions to work in. Presbytery voted to raise the salaries of all its teachers and of some of its evangelists. This does not mean, however, a proposal to draw more heavily on the mission treasury in the United States, but on the contrary is a definite pledge of the native congregations that they will contribute a larger percentage of school expenses than heretofore. It was also voted to throw out of the missionary schools the Chinese classics. Oddly enough, the missionary forces are at this point not ahead of but behind native progress. The elimination of the classics from the missionary schools is simply a measure necessary to make the mission schools conform to the government schools. The mission curricula are now to be identical with the courses of the government schools, plus the textbooks used to teach Christianity.

Into some of the mission schools this, remarkable to say, brings English for the first time, for the new courses prescribed by the republican reformers for the public schools always include English, which some of the conservative mission schools had not heretofore consented to accept. But Chinese demand for English has now become too strenuous to be longer resisted.

Converted by Professor Jenks's Book

During the first semester of the current academic year at the University of Nanking the prayer and conference meetings of faculty and students have resulted, without any formal evangelistic preaching, in the Christian conversion of fifty young men from the student body. The teachers are, of course, very happy for all of these converts, but are particularly gratified at the strong stand for Christ which was taken by Tao Wen Tsuing, the son of a prominent Chinese official. He is regarded as a man certain to exercise a large Christian influence in the future. His temper and disposition are well indicated by a testimony which he gave at a student gathering a few days before Christmas. Young Mr. Tao said:

"For about four years my heart has been a battlefield. Jesus Christ and Satan have been struggling for possession of it, and Jesus has won the victory. From this time forth I am a follower of Jesus Christ.

"I have not come to him because of some improper benefit which I expect to get from him. If there is anything I despise, it is the man who is always asking 'What can I get out of it?' I have come to believe in Jesus largely through a study of a book by Professor Jenks of Cornell University, entitled the 'Social Principles of Jesus.' I cannot go into detail as to what part of Christ's teaching is important, but I must say that that which has made me want to be a follower of Jesus is his teaching that we should love all men as ourselves. This principle is clearly brought out in the book I have just mentioned.

"In addition to this in my study of history I have taken notice of the great leaders, and their relation to Jesus Christ, and I have found that a large proportion of all the philosophers and scientists are firm believers in and followers of Jesus Christ and that those who were not owed their knowledge of philosophy and science directly to Jesus Christ, his teaching and his church.

"Again, what country today is the greatest republic on the face of the earth? You say, of course, the United States. Where did the United States come from? I see Washington as its founder; I see Lincoln as its saviour. What kind of men were these? Both men who gave themselves and all they had to their country in the name of Jesus Christ. They loved their country and their fellow men as Jesus Christ did, because they were close followers of him."

It is interesting to note that the book to which Mr. Tao attributes his conversion is from the pen of an author who has been invited to become a special counselor of the new Chinese republic.

Persian Boys Like Their Primer

Miss Jewett's Turkish tract primer is very much liked by the boys, writes Miss Grettie Y. Holliday of Tabriz after a sojourn in Moslem villages. They are pleased with the pictures, and those of them who know the alphabet ask for it, but the great favorite is the hieroglyphic page, where the nonreaders can give the names of the wild animals and the lamb, goat and calf from the pictures.

"Yesterday there was a Bahai at prayers," says Miss Holliday, "and in the afternoon he brought a middle-aged haji—one of the kind who talk all the time and are with difficulty prevailed upon to listen to the answers to questions. He began in the character of a Jew, who accepts only the Old Testament, but from time to time lapsed into that of the wild man from the mountains, who has no religion and wishes the proofs for the existence of God and a revelation. He occasionally forgot himself and said he believed in Mohammed, and he especially exulted in the fact that sixty millions of Americans had become Bahai. He informed me that I was descended from the aboriginal races of America who had been converted to Christianity by missionaries from Europe. His volubility flowed like a torrent, and was equaled only by the variety and quantity of his stock of misinformation. He wound up by professing me to be his mother, and I exhorted him as my son to make himself acquainted with the Old and New Testaments, so that when he came again he, having passed from the state of a wild man without religion and that of a Jew, should have reached the third step of the ladder and become a Christian. To talk with a man like this may not convince him, but the silent men and boys who sit by and listen see through things."

Summer School of Missions at Winona

The summer school of missions under the auspices of the interdenominational committee of the Central West for missions will hold its ninth annual session at Winona Lake, Ind., June 19-27. "The New America," by Mrs. L. C. Barnes, treating of the problems and possibilities of immigration, is the title of the new study book for home missions, and the book for foreign missions, "The King's Business," treats of increased efficiency for woman's missionary societies. Lectures will be given on both these books by well known missionary experts. There will be the daily morning call to prayer, classes in methods, helpful conferences and hours with missionaries. Missionary societies are urged to send representatives who would prepare themselves to be leaders of mission study classes. For further information address Mrs. C. W. Peterson, publicity chairman, 2449 Prairie avenue, Chicago.

—Mrs. Charles R. Murray of Resht, Persia, thus describes her first call, without anyone to interpret for her, six months after her arrival upon the shore of the Caspian sea: "The wife of my servant invited me to call on her. Soon after arriving imagine my astonishment in finding that about twenty women and children had gathered around me and were almost overwhelming me with questions, some of which were very personal. Finally I told them that I was not able to converse well with them, but if they would permit I would read. Some listened very attentively, while others smoked, drank tea or conversed. That was my first experience; the ones that followed were not so bad."

NEW BOOKS

General Booth's Valiant Life and Work

The Life of General William Booth, by G. S. Railton. This biography is made authoritative by the fact that Mr. Railton was General Booth's first commissioner in the Salvation Army, and that a preface is given to it by his son and successor, General Bramwell Booth. We hope it will be followed later by a more analytical work, which will be occupied perhaps more with the personal element in General Booth's life. His death last summer has not allowed sufficient time for a well digested statement of his character and labor.

This book is intensely interesting, however. It traces his career from Christian parentage, at times in poverty, through his lay and local ministry in the Methodist Church, beginning at 17, to the founding in London of the movement whose greatness he did not suspect, but regarding which his plans and vision were always widening. The book reveals some of the causes of this marvelous movement. Partly they lay in the marked distress of the times among common people, making them long for some relief; partly in the deadly chill and worse division among the churches of England, which the book somewhat exaggerates; but chiefly in the personality of General Booth and that of his equally notable wife. There was a combination of a great need, a great failure and a great force, and the Salvation Army resulted.

The story is one of downright Christian faith, expressed in incredible toil and daring. Perhaps it was wise frankly to avoid all explanations or even statements of the conditions which estranged three of General Booth's children from him; but his biography is incomplete for that reason. Some hint of the cause is found in the dominating personality of the leader, and in his habit of refusing all counsel, in the assurance that he had immediate divine guidance. It is always impossible to work with such a man; one must work under him. Regarding Bramwell Booth, the author speaks of "the continual faithful service of this slave of a son." Armies are not like societies, however, and it was this very trait of arbitrary authority which made the Salvation Army possible; but, of course, it had some bad consequences. We trust the book will be widely read. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.

Recent Works of History

On Hazardous Service: Scouts and Spies of the North and South, by William Gilmore Beymer. A feature of the civil war which is quite unfamiliar to the civilian, and which has not before been chronicled in any authoritative manner, is here exploited in a series of ten short but thrilling chronicles by Mr. Beymer. One of the most interesting tales of the collection is that of Miss Van Lew, a Richmond woman who acted as a federal spy and who, in fact, did the most important work of any spy during the rebellion. Hers was not a sudden, dramatic service, but a daily, hourly living through peril and suspicion; and that a woman should have sent out "the greater part of the military information received from Richmond" during the war by the army of the Potomac—information sent through a chain of five secret relay stations all established by her—is perhaps the war's one great exemplification of the courage, initiative and organizing ability of woman. The book is fittingly illustrated with colored drawings by Howard Pyle, while a number of reproductions of war time photographs add to its veridical appeal. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.80 net.

Parallel Source Problems in Mediæval History, by Frederic Duncalf and August C. Krey. Messrs. Duncalf and Krey, both of whom learned their history under Professor Monroe at Madison, have prepared this textbook by way of an introduction to some of the problems in the history of the middle ages. The coronation of Charles the Great, the capture of Jerusalem, and certain other important events are herein studied, each with a brief introduction and with somewhat extended quotations from two or more parallel sources. We have seen no book prepared for the use of the student which approaches the problem in so logical and practical a fashion. It should have a value far beyond that of its use in the classroom. It might well be the first of a series of monographs introducing the student to different epochs of the world's history. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.10.

Winning the Southwest, by Glenn D. Bradley. The author has chosen seven men, all heroes of the frontier, and has woven about their lives some of the conspicuous facts of the struggles in which the Southwest was won for the union. The seven empire builders, "the men who dared," are Kit Carson, the famous scout; Robert F. Stockton, who gained honors for the American navy in the conquest of California; "Uncle Dick" Wooton, who helped to found the cities of Denver and Pueblo, Colo.; Sam Houston, the hero of Texas; Stephen Kearny, who won New Mexico; General George A. Custer, whose achievements in the civil war and as an Indian fighter should not be overshadowed by the tragedy of the Little Big Horn, and John C. Fremont, the great "pathfinder," warrior and statesman—the first Presidential candidate of the Republican party. Anyone who is uninformed as to the romantic and adventurous history of the West and Southwest should by all means read a book of this kind. It is a stimulus to patriotism. [A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago. $1 net.

The Abolition Crusade and Its Consequences, by Hilary A. Herbert. The former secretary of the navy, who served bravely as a Confederate, here gives the conclusions of a long life's observation and study of the great question of the sixties. That the extreme radicalism of the abolitionists brought on the civil war, when a milder policy might have averted it and brought freedom to the negro, is an interesting hypothesis. That there are phases of the negro question that cannot be clear to one who has not lived where the race exists in great numbers is true. But the war is over and those who profess to know the negro best must accept the heaviest responsibility for his future. [Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $1 net.

Of Varied Interest

A History of Nursing from the Earliest Times to the Present Day, with Special Reference to the Work of the Past Thirty Years, edited, and in part written, by Lavinia L. Dock. These are the final volumes (III. and IV.) of a comprehensive history of nursing which ought to have immense value to the specialist. The profession is studied minutely in various countries, and the data presented ought to have the effect of creating a demand for more efficient education in the field. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $5 net.

A Valiant Woman: A Contribution to the Educational Problem, by M. F. Finding her inspiration in a loved and honored teacher of her childhood, who seemed to her the embodiment of everything wise and good, the author discusses the problems of education from kindergarten to high school. The reader upon finishing the book wonders at the great number of things that have received so extended consideration in so small a volume. The writer finds much to criticise in modern methods. Her complaint is that educators are too apt to be slaves to methods. She would exalt spirit above methods. The study of pedagogic psychology cannot take the place of sympathetic insight. Pestalozzi and Froebel have been misinterpreted. Illogical theories of teaching English make satisfactory results difficult to obtain. The purpose of history is misunderstood. To say that all the author's criticisms are fully justified would be to go too far; but, judged by their fruits, modern educational methods have many sins to account for, and at least some of them are brought to light in this book. But the critic herself is not beyond criticism. Even her English limps occasionally, though it is, on the whole, excellent English. The chapter on ethical teaching is in some respects weak. The author's ideas of the relation of religion to morality are decidedly mixed, and her assumption that desire of reward and fear of punishment are the only incentives to righteousness which religion contributes is too absurd for an intelligent person to make. But the book provokes thought and is worth reading. [Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York. $1 net.

The German Emperor and the Peace of the World, by Alfred H. Fried. Norman Angell supplies an introduction, cordially commending Mr. Fried as a leading German pacifist. The book is taken largely from the German and should clarify the minds of many regarding the emperor. He has been over twenty years on the throne and has encouraged no war. He is not a "war lord." The book traces his history, through his many addresses, as one of persistent pursuit of peace. Mr. Fried urges him to go farther and become a world peacemaker, and closes his book with these dramatic words: "The clock will not be put back. The hour will come when the emperor will throw off his fetters, when he will perceive that it is now time to carry out the promise he gave when he said: 'I only wish that European peace lay in my hands. I should certainly take care it should never be disturbed.' It now lies in his hands. The world and history await a deed!" [George H. Doran Company, New York. $2 net.

The Chicago Daily News Almanac and Year Book, 1913, compiled by James Langland. A new edition of this invaluable reference book, now in its twenty-ninth year. One wonders if any similar publication contains more solid information to the square inch than this one; for it presents nearly 700 pages of facts, including everything from Abyssinia to zinc oxide or the signs of the zodiac. The much-abused word "comprehensive" may be applied here without exaggeration. [Chicago Daily News Company, Chicago. 50 cents net.

Possibility, Purpose, Endeavor; and Patience, Perseverance, Endurance; compiled by Grace Browne Strand. Two helpful little volumes composed of brief but stirring quotations—incentives to growth and power. [A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago. Each 50 cents net.

Books Received

Electricity: Its History and Development, by William A. Durgin. A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago. $1 net.

Practical Reflections on the Figurative Art of Singing, by Giambattista Mancini. Richard G. Badger, Boston. $2 net.

Wireless Telegraphy and How to Make the Apparatus. Cassell and Company, New York. 50 cents net.

Telephotography, by Cyril F. Lan-Davis. E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 75 cents net.

Auction of To-Day, by Milton C. Work. Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Gospel Trumpet and The British Messenger. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.

The Open Hearth

[Writers of letters to The Open Hearth are reminded that excessive length of their contributions operates to shut out other participants in current discussions. Three hundred words is an acceptable maximum. Communications of greater length will be cut down, or will be returned if marked "in full or not at all."]

Equal Suffrage as America's Hope

A million immigrants arrive on our shores yearly, mostly from southern Europe. Few can speak our language, many cannot read their own. The majority are Romanists or infidels, socialists or anarchists. They come for a job of work at big wages.

This tidal wave of humanity flows into our great cities and gives us needed labor for our factories, but it is a peril, and the problem is, Have we the moral stamina and practical Christianity to assimilate this great mass and make it a clean and healthy part of the body politic? The recent dynamite outrages and conflicts with the Industrial Workers of the World show the magnitude of the peril.

On the other hand, notice that women constitute two-thirds of our church rolls and prayer meeting attendants. They average purer than men, and their equals in education and intelligence. Many of them are large taxpayers, and as the Boston boys said when they dumped the tea into the brine, "taxation without representation is unjust."

We men, such of us as are clean, are staggering under the burden of the saloon, the gambling hell, Sabbath desecration, the social evil and a breed of low and dishonest politicians, who fatten on these evils. Hadn't we better call up the reserves—the millions of pure and lovely women from our homes? Give them the ballot and this will solve the problem.

We are very glad that our American suffragists keep their heads level and refrain from the nonsense of the English militant suffragettes. At present we men have control, and don't like to be driven, but our mothers and wives, sisters and daughters can win us by bright smiles and loving words to do most anything.

When you get the ballot keep your heads level. Champion the real rights of your brothers and sisters and God will bless you and help you to raise America to a still higher level.

HENRY W. ADAMS.

"An Unkind Letter"

The writer in seeking a new field as pastor wrote to some of his brethren in the ministry concerning work in their particular locality. Two replies were insulting, to say the least. I have received letters signed and unsigned written by men of the world who had a desire to wound my feelings, but how a man whose duty and mission it is to cheer the heart, bring peace and good will to mankind and in all things fulfill the Spirit of the Master, could write a stinging letter to anyone is a problem that I cannot solve. My letters to these brethren in question were only for information; they knew nothing of me and my work, and for this reason they had no right to reply as they did. I see those two names often and, struggle as I may, I cannot keep from recalling the fact that "these are the persons who wrote those awful letters." An unkind word will not only hurt the person for whom it is intended but will hurt the one who utters it.

NEWTON CAVENS.

Resents Criticism of Masonry

It was certainly with surprise that I found The Continent had opened its columns to Rosalie B. McAdam, affording her an opportunity for an unwarranted attack on Masonry. Her statement that many good (?) Masons have told her that they did not consider it necessary to attend church, or be converted, because they believe that, being Masons, they will go to heaven, I question. As a Mason, it seems to me scarcely possible that there is a Mason so lacking in intelligence as to make such a statement.

The suggestion that Masonry is a recruiting ground for intemperance is false, being entirely opposed to the teachings of that body. That all Masons are not Christians is too true (would that they were!), but if Rosalie B. McAdam will take the trouble to enlighten herself as to who are the leaders in our churches, who are the men devoting their time, talent and money for the advancement of Christ's kingdom, she will immediately see that her statements are an unjustified attack on a body which embraces in its membership the flower of American manhood. ALEXANDER McCAUSLAND.

Strong Approval for New Catechism

I would like to say a good word for the new intermediate catechism. We have adopted it in our Sunday school and intend to give it a complete try-out. The need of something of this sort was, with us, beyond question, to give unity and definiteness to our teaching. The shorter catechism we gave up some years ago, principally because it seemed too abstract and doctrinal in parts and provoked discussion and questioning beyond the powers of the teachers.

As the minister, I was looking for a new catechetical statement both for general work in the school and specific teaching in preparation for church membership. The new catechism is admirable in nearly every particular—the questions vital, consecutive and comprehensive; the answers simple, sound and sufficient. They are easy to memorize and retain. In our school we take a question and answer each Sunday, reciting aloud during the opening and closing exercises. The teachers go over the same in the class. We have not had time to test the work as a whole, but so far it is very satisfactory.

I fear the catechism is too long, and that is the only fear I have. That was one fault of the "shorter" catechism. Very few could remember it as a whole. For real practical use and to retain in the mind, a catechism should not go beyond fifty-two questions and answers. It would be difficult to say offhand what should be omitted. Perhaps it is not necessary to print the ten commandments in full. They can be memorized at another time. At any rate, it should be reduced, even at a sacrifice. Surely the essential truths of the Christian faith can be stated in a year of Sundays.

I say this because the catechism is not in its final form, and the committee, I am sure, should welcome suggestions. It is certainly a very fine piece of work and should not fail of its purpose by reason of this fault. Perhaps it will not, and I am prepared to say right now, after a partial test, that its effect, so far as clarity and force of statement are concerned, is all that could be desired. I hope many ministers and schools will give it a trial. They will find it decidedly worth while.

OWEN D. ODELL.

Second Church, Indianapolis.

He Thinks British Strike Ethical

I am sure The Continent does not wish to mislead its readers as the English railway strike comment in your paper of Jan. 2 did. That strike was fought and won on the ground maintained by the men that Engineer Wilson was wrongfully condemned for being drunk and disorderly by the magistrate, and so wrongfully dismissed, or rather reduced to a lower position. The home secretary had his case investigated, found that the men were right—that he had not been drunk and disorderly—and so got him restored to his position.

The ethics of the men in their action were commendable. The remark that men had a right to get drunk when off duty was made by Keir Hardie, I think—a mere exaggeration. The men had no connection with the remark. Therefore your statement of the case is not correct. Your inference of "vastly more ethical" must find some other ground to rest on. Current events might naturally suggest a quite different inference. D. D. McLEOD.

The president of the College of Montana, Dr. Henry R. Fancher, has resigned to take effect at the close of the school year. Dr. Fancher went to Deer Lodge from a successful pastorate in Batavia, N. Y., and in the five years of his administration has built up a college department of high standard. Money has been secured for a new gymnasium and a $50,000 pledge obtained for an enlarged endowment.

Ways of Working

Parishioners All Put to Work

Horton, Kan., church used a plan for special work last month. The entire parish was divided into six districts. Two leaders in each district divided the membership. In each district they made a house to house visitation, tabulated information for future use, invited to church services, held worship in the homes where advisable and urged acceptance of Christ where any seemed at all serious. They got acquainted with the parish and the people, who change a great deal, because this is a shop town. A cottage prayer meeting was held in each district every Tuesday evening of January. All the members assemble at the church each Thursday evening for prayer, reports and conference. A special committee of laymen hold a meeting in a near-by schoolhouse each Sunday afternoon.

Heretofore the pastor, Rev. M. J. Crocker, has held special services following the week of prayer. This year a personal work campaign, bringing the people more directly into service, seemed the better plan, and the interest with which they took it up promises fruitful returns.

Outline Pastoral Qualifications

Very often when a new pastor is to be selected the usual practice is for the session to meet and appoint a committee, which in due time reports to the congregation. Central church, Des Moines, Iowa, whose pulpit was recently made vacant by the resignation of Dr. G. P. Magill, went at the matter in a little broader way. The brotherhood of the church devoted its regular meeting to a consideration of the sort of pastor the church should have.

Assuring Money in Advance

The pall cast over many meetings called to reorganize clubs or other church organizations was banished by a little planning by the men of South Park church, Chicago. The men's club had died several years ago. Preliminary to an effort to revive it ten men promised to give $5 whenever called upon to pay expenses. With the financial support assured it was easy to get the men into line.

Tells Good Things in Papers

For the purpose of cheering and heartening people who consider too much the gloomy things of life, Rev. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of First church, Atlanta, Ga., has introduced a new feature in the weekly prayer meeting by calling attention to "the good news" published in newspapers.

Flowers to Distinguish Guests

At a recent reception in honor of the seventy-eight new members of First church, Pueblo, Colo., each guest was given a flower so that older members might easily become acquainted with the newer ones.

Good Things in Annual Reports

A woman's missionary society was organized at Hedrick, Iowa.

The basement of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, church has been made into a gymnasium.

One young woman from First church, Woonsocket, R. I., volunteered as a foreign missionary.

First church, Warren, Pa., during the year has paid an $18,000 debt on additions to the church.

There were fifty-one additions to Anderson, Ind., First church last year. Rev. B. F. Brundage recently completed his first year there.

Newton, Ind., Sunday school during the year increased its contributions 90 per cent, and in addition raised $100 for the Gary Neighborhood house.

The congregation of Frederick, Okla., church has shown its appreciation of the services of the pastor, Rev. C. A. Harris, by increasing his salary $200 a year.

The woman's society of Westminster church, Devil's Lake, N. D., raised $1,000 during the past year in addition to a large offering by the missionary society. Rev. Albert Torbet is pastor.

Bartlesville, Okla., church, Rev. C. E. Alexander pastor, received many members during 1912 as the result of quiet, steady work, no special services being held.

The flourishing Christian Endeavor society of Bainbridge, N. Y., church recently raised $150 to repaper the interior of the church. Rev. Henry D. Smith is pastor.

The women's society of the church at Greenwich increased its gifts from $60 last year to $400 this year. There has been strong development of interest in missions. Rev. Frank M. Carson is pastor.

Central church, Joliet, Ill., spent $2,200 for repairs and paid all other bills, in addition to reducing the debt $1,000. Women raised all but $500 of the cost of repairs. Rev. C. D. Jacobs is pastor.

An Alaskan "Mush" to Presbytery

(Continued from page 217)

has put them in high spirits, and hit the trail again around the head of Knik Arm. Over dangerous ice, sometimes through the salt water that covers it, with now and then a stretch of good trail, we come to Old Knik. It is only a seventeen mile stretch, but my back is so bad that when I arrive at the roadhouse I am in convulsions of pain. A hot drink and hot applications soothe me, but there is little sleep for me that night.

A Five-Mile Advance in Six Hours

Now hard climbing up a steep road to the base of the pass at Raven Creek roadhouse. A storm is blowing. The snow banners on the mountains that overlook the pass and the fast falling snow make it impossible for us to go on, so we spend a day at this fine roadhouse, kept by three men who are hunters, prospectors and hotel keepers as occasion requires. The second morning they hitch up four big dogs as large as Shetland ponies to supplement our five smaller ones, and a sturdy mountaineer with "creepers" on his feet comes to pilot us over the summit. From daylight until noon we struggle before reaching the summit, making only five miles in six hours. The descent from the summit is almost sheer for 2,000 feet.

I have vivid recollections of the trip down that steep place. We turned the dogs loose to follow after the sled. Then two men tied ropes to the back of the sled, and with their creepers hung on behind to let the sled down. They started it gingerly over the edge of the summit, and I, looking on from above, saw a confused jumble of men, dogs and sled rolling and tumbling down that path, the snow gathering around and on top of them until when they reached a more level spot they were out of sight in the body of the avalanche, not so deep but that the men emerged laughing and waving their hands.

For myself, it took me an hour to get down to them. I would take my snowshoe, strike the end into the snow ahead of me, and slide down against it, a foot at a time, repeating the operation again and again. Sometimes coming to too steep a place, I would have to edge along some distance with great care for fear of stumbling over the precipice and wrenching my poor back. But when at last I got to the sled, it was righted and we went gayly on our journey. Not long before we passed this summit two men had lost their lives there, taking chances on a stormy day. One avalanche that would have buried us under fifty feet of snow had it got us thundered into our trail an eighth of a mile behind us.

Down to the town of Glacier on Turnagain Arm we come at nightfall. Here we bargain with a boatman to set us across the next morning to the old town of Sunrise City, twelve miles away, on Kenai peninsula. Another hard day's work brings us to a roadhouse up this river, and then, a cold night hardening the crust of the snow, we swing gayly over another high summit, that of the Kenai range, and down to the Seward railroad and along it to a roadhouse twelve miles from Seward. I had telephoned from Glacier to Rev. Mr. Pederson, the Methodist pastor at Seward. At 9 o'clock in the morning of the 28th Brother Pederson, just starting out to meet us, greeted us with a shout as we swung up in front of his house.

The trip of 520 miles had taken me twenty-three days, but four of those I was lying in camp. I had broken trail with snowshoes over a hundred miles. I had tested my mushing powers and had not found them wanting. I had seen two great valleys for the first time and had prospected them for agricultural possibilities, game, lumber, mining resources and human souls. In spite of my lame back, I never took a journey that afforded more of instruction and inspiration or more of true enjoyment than this one.

A few days' rest and I took a steamer 200 miles farther to Cordova, where Brothers Koonce and Condit were awaiting me with their wives, and we had a joyful meeting of presbytery.

Mrs. Young, whom I had left a year before at Seattle, greeted me at Cordova, having traveled 1,500 miles to have a five days' visit with me. For I must hit the trail again the Monday after my arrival and mush on to Fairbanks, 442 miles inland, holding the fort there until Dr. Condit returned from the General Assembly.

The Joy of Service in the Big, Broad Land

If the Presbyterian ministry could see Alaska as I have seen it, and know it as I know it and the joy of service there, the Home Mission Board would be besieged by applications for that service. We are not to be commiserated but to be congratulated. With joy I again turn my steps back to—

"The great, big, broad land 'way up yonder,
  The forests where silence has lease,
The beauty that thrills me with wonder,
  The stillness that fills me with peace."

Dr. Young, who was general missionary of Alaska, has been named by the Board of Home Missions as its special representative in making known the needs and possibilities of that great territory to the churches of the states, as told in The Continent Jan. 23 on page 117.

William Mather Lewis, head master at Lake Forest Academy, has resigned to take effect in June. He expects to travel and study abroad.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 219)

Yes, I suppose she would. Oh, women——" He stopped abruptly.

"Oh, women what, dear?"

"Nothing, Emily. Only I wish they were all like you."

* * * * *

Eleanor Elmore was at home but two days after her graduation. The house on Sunset hill was closed, and father, mother and daughter were off for a trip of two years and a half. Running across to Caroline Elmore's for a farewell visit, the girl found time to sit for an hour with her sister-in-law on the porch, where Bradford Horton encountered her as he left at the close of Charlie's lesson. Touching his hat, he was hurrying by when Mrs. Elmore stopped him.

"Let me make you and Miss Elmore acquainted, Mr. Horton," she said.

He stopped. "I have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Horton," said Eleanor quickly, "but I am glad to renew the acquaintance." Their hand clasp was cordial.

"Mrs. Elmore tells me you are to start for your long tour tomorrow," said Bradford. "Let me wish you bon voyage and good-by."

"Oh, shan't I see you tomorrow?" she answered. "Joe Jickers and Jack Tappan are coming to the train to see the last of me. Couldn't you join them?"

"Thank you," he said, his face lighting. "I should enjoy that. But for fear I should be prevented, let me say bon voyage and good-by once more."

She offered her hand again. "Good-by," she said. "Don't let Charlie fail."

One month from that day the Elmores were in Yokohama, and Bradford, by invitation of young Mrs. Elmore, was settled as a member of her household for the summer.

Those were three strenuous months for Charlie Elmore, but he reached the goal. Mother and teacher helped the boy settle his room, and left him, one September day, under

Three Daughters
OF THE MANSE

Three daughters of a Presbyterian minister, in loving remembrance of their girlhood home, recently sent five hundred dollars each toward the endowment campaign of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation. If you are the son or daughter of a minister and have been prospered in this world's goods could you find a more fitting memorial for your parents than such a contribution to this fund as your gratitude prompts and your prosperity permits? If you are interested consult your pastor or address the elms in the park where the two old churches stand. The heart of the mother was heavy. She would never again see just the same boy that she was leaving behind.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF AND SUSTENTATION
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

"I shall be very lonely in my house this winter, Mr. Horton; the more so because it has been so full of life this summer. I wish you would remain as my guest."

That would be delightful for me, but I fear inconvenient for you, Mrs. Elmore."

"Inconvenient for me? Don't mention it. It would be quite the contrary."

"But, pardon me, Mrs. Elmore, I could never repay you for the obligation under which you would place me. I hope you understand."

"Obligation? I am putting you under no obligation. On the contrary, I am rather selfish in the matter. I shall have to have someone with me in the house. I would feel safer if I knew you were within call. And repay? You repay me? Why, I am trying to find a way by which to express my gratitude for what you have done for Charlie. And then, what will you do without the piano?"

He stayed. What else could he do? In his room, as he packed for the move, he said to himself, "This Elmore coil seems to be tightening round me. But I'll be safe out of Prestonbury, preaching somewhere, before Antigone is back again." (To be continued)

Cooperation in the Country

Denominational lines are not as rigid in the southern part of Holt county, Neb., as they are in some rural fields. At an afternoon service at Bethany Presbyterian church, seven miles in the country, Rev. Samuel Light, superintendent of missions for the northeast district of Nebraska, received twenty people into membership. For a long time the church has been without a regular pastor. The accessions were largely the result of a series of meetings conducted in this church by Rev. T. H. Evans, a Baptist clergyman of a near-by town. He urged converts to join the Presbyterian church—the only one easily available.

On the evening of the same day Rev. Ralph H. Houseman of Omaha, who supplies this information, attended a Methodist Epworth League meeting in the inland town of Chambers. The leader of the meeting was the superintendent of Kellar Presbyterian Sunday school, five miles away. The organist was a young man who also furnished the music at the Presbyterian church in the morning. Kellar church has no evening service and the members unite with the Methodist and Baptist churches in the town. On this evening these two churches held a union service in the opera house and without previous notice invited Mr. Houseman, who is educational superintendent of Presbyterian Sunday schools in Nebraska, to speak.

A DIFFERENCE

It Paid This Man to Change Food

